Chen Ge came to the door and saw a fatty standing in the lobby. He had a chef's hat on and was arranging many pieces of cake on the dining table.

"That is the hotel's chef. He's crazy, but I've never seen him kill anyone," Fan Chong whispered. Chen Ge nodded as he controlled Xiao Bu to stay away from the chef. However, whenever she neared the entrance, the chef would walk her way.

After wasting a few minutes at the lobby, Chen Ge tried to click on the chef with the cursor, and the chat box appeared—"The tapping continues. It's midnight, time for supper at the hotel."

After the chat box disappeared. The old man, the woman, the student, and the hotel owner came out from the guest rooms. The police officer was nowhere to be seen. The owner stood next to the chef, and adjacent to them were four chairs. There were nine pieces of cake on the table.

After everyone came, four options appeared—"Please pick a seat."

1. Sit between the chef and the old man.
2. Sit between the old man and the woman.
3. Sit between the woman and the student.
4. Sit at the end of the table.

There was finally no ignore and sleep option, but Chen Ge did not know how to pick. "Why would the game suddenly ask me to pick a seat, and what's the meaning of different seating arrangement?"

Chen Ge did not get it. For the sake of safety, he chose four and sat at the end of the table alone. After he made the choice, the other characters also took their seats. When Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to take her seat, the chat box appeared—"The chef placed the knife on the table. He and the hotel owner looked at the guests with bright smiles and posed a question: How do you split nine pieces of cake evenly among four guests with just one cut of the knife?"

"Four people sharing nine pieces of cake? Cut three pieces down the middle? That won't work—the request is equal sharing." Fan Chong and Fan Dade were deep in thought. Neither of them realized that Chen Ge, who saw the sharp knife, was completely excited!

"This should be the owner purposely making things difficult for the guests. No matter how you slice it, there can't be equal sharing." Fan Dade was a chef, and he could not come up with a solution.

"That's right, no matter how you cut it, the icing on the cake will stick to the knife somehow. There can't be an equal in this situation." The brothers were discussing it when they saw the old man, woman, student, and Xiao Bu that Chen Ge controlled reach for the knife at the same time!

They were all different distances away from the knife. Xiao Bu was furthest, and the old man was closest.

"This is bad!" Chen Ge saw the old man pick up the knife, and he immediately controlled Xiao Bu to run away!

"Why are you running?" Fan Chong and Fan Dade were confused. "Aren't we supposed to answer the question? Why are you running?"

Xiao Bu ran without even turning back. On screen, the old man who held the knife slashed at the woman next to him with his full strength!

"How do you share nine pieces of cake among four people with one cut? Simple, cut the four people down to three!"

The old man's knife came at the woman's neck. Before the knife fell, the woman quickly evaded, and the knife fell on her shoulder. Blood splattered on the dining table, and the old man, the woman, and the student got into a physical altercation.

The old man wanted to kill the woman, but the woman resisted. The student tried to grab the knife. Since the old man did not kill the woman with one cut, he had already failed, so it was now his chance.

Of the four guests, only Xiao Bu stayed away. "They're really a bunch of crazies. If we could just sit down and talk this over, even if the owner has a gun, we would still have chance of survival. Such a shame."

The owner and the chef watched happily as the three guests tried to kill one another. Chen Ge made use of this chance when their attention was distracted to walk to the entrance and click the cursor madly on the door.

He let the female ghost holding her head in. "This hotel can operate at night, so there has to be a dark secret hiding at this place. When the ghost chased Xiao Bu to the hotel, she hesitated for a long time before coming in. This means that she felt threatened."

Standing in the dark street, the ghost who knocked her head against the door for a long time was filled with anger. When she saw Xiao Bu, she rushed directly into the hotel.

"What did I do to deserve such resentment? Could her death be related to Xiao Bu's step-father? Since the man has already died and her resentment cannot find any release, is she channeling it toward Xiao Bu?" Chen Ge felt like the female ghost's presence was more like a game mechanism aimed to make sure that the player did not stay in one place for too long.

Moving the mouse, Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to run deeper into the hotel to introduce distance between them. He calculated the distance between himself and the hotel entrance. If there was a change to the situation, he would leave immediately. Three gunshots shattered the background music—the hotel owner fired at the female ghost.

“Fight, have fun fighting among yourselves.” Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to hide in the corner. The female ghost’s head rolled on the ground as it chased the group of crazed murderers.

“Boss Chen, what should we do now? Leave the hotel now?” Fan Chong’s reasoning had really improved that night. After seeing Chen Ge work the controls, he had realized that there were different ways that the game could be played. The originally quiet hotel was now a mess, and Xiao Bu, who Chen Ge controlled, was the source of that mess.

“You told me earlier that the old man is the owner’s father, and he has the spare keys to the hotel, right?” Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to lean against the wall and moved toward the guest rooms.

“Our plots are completely different. When I arrived at the hotel, the old man was already shot dead, and I found the keys in the drawer inside his room.”

Chen Ge used the cursor to click on the drawer, and the chat box appeared—‘You saw a rusted key, many human teeth, and an old notebook.’

“The old man has the weird habit of collecting people’s teeth?”

Chen Ge clicked on the notebook, and the chat box scrolled down.

‘1st March, my husband has gone mad. He trapped me inside the hidden room behind the kitchen refrigerator and only gave me three pieces of bread and one glass of water each day. He forbade me from leaving and forbade me from interacting with the guests. He has lost his mind.

‘2nd March. The chef is making something tasty. I smell meat. So hungry. The mad man is purposely torturing me!

‘1st April. I’ve been hungry for so long. I need to escape this place. Right, I’ll sneak out tonight.

‘2nd April. I was discovered, and we had a fight. The madman is so scary when he’s angry. Like a crazed brown bear, he tackled me and pulled out my teeth.

‘5th May. So hungry. I’ll be tortured to my death if I stay here. I must find a way to leave!

‘6th June. Who can save me? My husband is a devil. He tried to pull out all of my teeth, this insane man!

‘1st November. I will never taste meat again. So hungry, so hungry...’

The content of the notebook was very weird. On the surface, it recorded the madness the old man when he was young, but after reading it closer, Chen Ge realized that things were not so simple. However, before he could figure it out, another gunshot went off again. Then three options appeared on screen—‘You finished reading the diary of the old man’s view and found out the hotel’s biggest secret. Please choose one of the following to bring with you, the item that you think is most important.’

1. You choose the rusted key because you believe that this is the spare key to the hotel entrance.

2. You choose the human teeth because you believe they are valuable mementoes.

3. You choose the notebook because you believe it is hiding an important clue.

Looking at the options, Chen Ge frowned. “Fan Chong, have you been given these choices before?”

“Yes, these three options pop out after you open the drawer. Back then, I chose the hotel key because you can enter and leave the hotel whenever you want with it even if it’s locked.” Fan Chong thought about it before shaking his head. He had a feeling that he might be thinking the same thing as Chen Ge this time.

“Looks like we can remove option one.” Chen Ge seemed to be talking to himself. The cursor alternated between option two and three.

“Let’s choose three. The notebook probably has its unique usage. I’ve seen many scary movies, and the notebook usually contains a message left behind by the murderer or victim.” Fan Dade could only use his own life experience to make the choice.

“The notebook is indeed important, but haven’t we already read its content?” Hearing what Fan Dade said, Chen Ge shook his head and chose the second option.

“The teeth? What use could they have?” Fan Dade and Fan Chong were confused, but they did not dare challenge Chen Ge openly, so they just whispered among themselves.

“It should be the teeth,” Chen Ge explained. “When the options showed up, the question also attached the statement, ‘you finished reading the diary of the old man’s view and found out the hotel’s biggest secret.’”

“But what can that prove?” Fan Chong still thought the key was the most important.

“The biggest secret at the hotel is about the old man’s wife. In other words, the reason the hotel has become like this is because of his wife.” Chen Ge used the cursor to click on the notebook to read it again.

“The old man’s wife should be innocent.” Fan Dade also could not understand Chen Ge’s choice. “Both her husband and her son are maniacs. She was captured, detained, and had her teeth pulled out. She was tortured; she was just a victim.”

Chapter 524: Clearing the Game with One Life!

“The birth of a murderer has plenty to do with his living environment. The hotel owner and the old man have such a cavalier attitude toward human lives—there has to be a reason, and that reason should have plenty to do with the old man’s wife.” Chen Ge’s eyes darkened. “Pay attention to the notebook’s content. On the first of March, the wife was captured. She said that her husband had gone insane and would only give her three slices of bread and one glass of water each day. For a normal person, that’s enough food to live; the old man was probably purposely trying to limit her food intake.

“Then, you pay attention to the later content. The wife’s diary circulates around the topic of food. The way the old man tortures her is not by breaking her limbs but by pulling out her teeth. This proves that he hates that she was consuming food.

“In a normal family, why would the husband hate his wife eating? Did the wife have an eating disorder? On the first of march, when the wife was captured, the husband stopped the wife from approaching other guests—why would he do that?

“On the sixth of June, the husband pulled out all of his wife’s teeth. What could she have done to deserve such a punishment? What did she eat to make her husband commit to such a crazy act?”

What Chen Ge said made Fan Chong and Fan Dade fearful. “Could the wife be a cannibal? Did she consume a guest on the first of March?”

“That’s possible.” Chen Ge pointed at the last entry on the notebook. “On the sixth of June, all of the wife’s teeth were removed, and the wife took down her last entry on the first of November. She said that she could not have meat anymore, and she could not survive a day without meat since the first of November, so she committed suicide.”

“Suicide?”

“Yes, the wife’s death is the start of the change in the hotel.” Chen Ge did not say everything. He predicted that the wife had turned into a Specter after her death, and the old man and the owner were made twisted to fulfil the ghost wife’s wish.

“But what does that have to do with you choosing to bring the teeth?” Fan Chong was still clueless about that.

“You’ll see.” Chen Ge had great experience dealing with ghosts. He knew that most ghosts had something that they would attach their spirit to. The wife had loved eating meat when she was alive, and even if she did not possess the teeth after her death, they would mean a lot to her.

“There has to be a reason that these teeth are hidden inside the old man’s drawer.” Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to run toward the kitchen. “The fact that the hotel dares to operate at midnight means that they’re not afraid of normal ghosts. That confidence probably comes from the wife.”

When Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to head into the kitchen, the bloodied man was crawling his way to Room 1. The other guests and the chef had been consumed by the Red Specter. Right now, she was chasing after the hotel owner.

“Sure is scary.” Chen Ge did not waste any more time. He headed into the kitchen and stood before the refrigerator. “Inside the notebook, it said that the old man initially locked his wife inside the hidden room behind the fridge.”

“Based on what you said, the old man’s wife has already turned into a ghost. After you sure you want to attract her attention while you already have a female ghost on your back?” Fan Chong held the coke in his hand, and he found it difficult to calm down.

“Don’t be afraid. She’s the key to us solving this problem tonight!” Chen Ge used the cursor to click on the fridge. The door opened, and the back of the fridge was carved out. It was hiding a monster with thin limbs but a large stomach.

The monster had its mouth that was toothless fully opened. Its eyes were closed, waiting for people to feed her. Seeing the monster, both Fan Chong and Fan Dade nudged backward, feeling very uncomfortable, but Chen Ge acted differently. He moved the mouse to adjust Xiao Bu's position to make the girl look right at the monster. After noting the red outfit that the monster was wearing, a satisfied smile appeared on his face, and he mumbled something weird, like only a Red Specter could deal with a Red Specter.

"She should be able to wake up after replacing her teeth." Chen Ge clicked the backpack but did not put the teeth back immediately. He controlled Xiao Bu to run to the kitchen door and silently watched the female ghost chase after the hotel owner. After all the murderers in the hotel were taken care of by the ghost, Xiao Bu returned to the fridge.

When the teeth fell into the monster's gaping maw, the monster's eyes flew open and zeroed in on Xiao Bu. At the same time, the female ghost holding her head also spotted Xiao Bu.

The atmosphere was weird. Be it the two female Red Specters in the game or Fan Chong and Fan Dade in real life, every person and ghost remained still.

"She probably did not expect to run into her." Chen Ge moved his fingers. Before the two Specters came to, Xiao Bu ran away. The girl's movement caused the two ghosts to make their move.

The ghost holding her head had just killed the fridge ghost's husband and son; their fresh bodies were still on the ground. The fridge ghost's eyes were red as she charged at the enemy. The two Red Specters fought among themselves. Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to run away. He sneaked to the owner's dead body and clicked on it madly. "Where's the gun?"

There was no message on the screen. Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to run to the dining table and pick up the knife used to cut the cake. "This should work."

Under Chen Ge's control, the cute and innocent Xiao Bu was like the darkest boss. She held the knife in her hand and stood at the entrance, watching the fight between the two Red Specters.

Probably because she had consumed more souls, the fridge ghost was more powerful than the ghost holding her head. Soon, the latter was overwhelmed, and the former swallowed the ghost holding her head.

"It's time to leave." Chen Ge was satisfied with this result. "After the ghost holding her head is taken care of, the residential area should be safe. There's a place that I can spend the night."

Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to leave the hotel and even kindly closed the door for them. Then she charged back home. When Xiao Bu returned to her room, the dark sky in the game slowly turned gray. Dawn was breaking.

“That was fun. The game was not as difficult as I thought.” Chen Ge stretched lazily and realized Fan Chong and Fan Dade had moved far away from him. “What’s wrong with the both of you?”

“Nothing, nothing. Don’t mind us.” Fan Chong looked at Chen Ge, and his face twitched. This man before him could no longer be described in terms of strong or weak. He had first had a murderer kill the other murderer and then had the murderer provoke the neighbor ghost before using the female neighbor ghost to kill the murderer and lure the ghost to clean up a whole hotel of murderers. Finally, he had used the ghost at the hotel to murder the neighbor ghost.

Not only had he survived a whole night, he had created a safe space and even managed to obtain a knife in a pure puzzle game!

Chapter 525 - Taking Them Down in Real Life

Chapter 525: Taking Them Down in Real Life

After the dawn came, the chat box came up with three more options —'With your impressive luck, you managed to survive the first night. You were gripped by uncertainty and fear. You started to hesitate, not knowing whether to stay and look after your mother or return through the dungeon and leave this place.'

1. You feel at home in this place. You like the atmosphere of this small town and decide to stay to experience it for one more night.

2. You miss your mother a lot, but you feel like you're already at your limit. You decide to leave.

3. You are conflicted and in so much pain. Everything here is different from the real world, but you decide to stay until you find your mother.

The cursor moved between the three choices. As a player who wanted to know more about the world, he was leaning toward the first choice, but if he was choosing for the sake of Xiao Bu, he had to choose the second choice. Xiao Bu would grow up safely after leaving this scary world.

After a long silence, Chen Ge moved the cursor to the third choice. "The first choice is the most stable, the second is best for Xiao Bu, and the third is probably what Xiao Bu would have chosen."

Not leaving until Xiao Bu's mother was found... if Xiao Bu's mother was harmed, then Xiao Bu would never find the person she was looking for, and she would be trapped there forever. Chen Ge clicked on the mouse, choosing the third one. "If we need to seek salvation for Xiao Bu, we mustn't lie to ourselves even in-game."

After confirming his choice, there was a new save point in game. The original save point was Xiao Bu's home in real life, and this new one was Xiao Bu's home in the other world. "With this new save point, I can get Fan Chong to explore the other side quests without worry."

Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to get to the rooftop. The sky was low and gray like a fog covering the whole town.

“I wonder how many stories this place is hiding. Solving it in one night is impossible.” Chen Ge was clear that the method that he had used that night would not be repeated every time. “I’m curious... if everything did happen in real life, how did Xiao Bu survive until the end?”

“Boss Chen, I don’t think you should think too much of it. Just play it your way.” Fan Chong looked at Xiao Bu, who glanced at the town holding the knife, and realized that the game had truly changed.

“The new save file has appeared. The tempo of the game will probably slow down. I don’t think I’ll be able to clear the game tonight; I’ll leave that in your capable hands.” Chen Ge narrowed his eyes like he was coming up with a plan.

“Leave it to me?” Fan Chong rubbed his hands. After seeing Chen Ge play the game, he was too embarrassed to take up his mantle.

“It’s alright, just relax. But you have to remember one thing. Record every death and case that you come across, and try to explore every inch of this map within these few days.”

“Every inch of the place?” Fan Chong’s lips moved, and he added softly, “Then that means I’ll die so many times... Isn’t that a bit too cruel?”

“Try your best.” Chen Ge worked his fingers, and his eyes glowed. He was no longer satisfied with exploring the town in a game; he prepared to bring all his employees and find this town in real life. The game was reflecting real life, and with the knowledge of the potential danger, Chen Ge decided to strike first and conquer this small town with his power.

“It’s dangerous to go out at night, so you have Xiao Bu stay at home when night falls. Keep the exploration mainly to the day.” Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to leave the residential area. The town looked peaceful under the sun. The blood on the ground had been cleaned, and the signs of the terror from the night before had been swept away.

Xiao Bu found the key to the dungeon inside her mother’s pajamas. After entering the dungeon, she came into a town that was completely different from the real world. The strange thing was, whenever Xiao Bu died in the town, the game would load at Xiao Bu’s room in real life, and she would be lying in her bed like everything was just a dream.

Chen Ge thought about it for a long time and came up with a possibility.

The game world mirrors Li Wan City. Before Doctor Gao's death, he said that the door that had gotten out of control is at Li Wan City. Combining the content of the game, could it be taken that Xiao Bu opened the door at her friend's dungeon? She entered the world behind the door, so is she the door-pusher?

Controlling Xiao Bu to wander aimlessly down the street, Chen Ge's mind turned. If Xiao Bu is the door-pusher, what has she seen at her friend's dungeon? What allowed her to push the door? Why was she wearing her mother's pajamas?

Chen Ge wanted to summon Men Nan and ask him. After all, Men Nan was almost the same age as Xiao Bu, and they were both door-pushers, so there might be connection between them.

Xiao Bu must have some secrets as well if she was able to survive in such a dangerous environment. That secret could be that she is the door-pusher.

Looked at the innocent, cute girl who was holding a sharp knife in the game, a feeling formed in his heart—it felt like pity and care.

“Perhaps I understand the message of the game after all. It should be trying to tell the gamers that Xiao Bu is actually the most innocent victim.” Chen Ge suddenly commented, and it frightened Fan Dade and Fan Chong. They could not catch up to Chen Ge's thought but were too embarrassed to say that, so no matter what Chen Ge said, they would concur.

Making use of the daylight, Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to walk around the city. He ran into many murder cases and saw many crazed murderers and ghosts, but beyond that, there was no other discovery.

The day in the game passed by quickly. Before the day ended, Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to return home. The sky darkened, and the second night arrived.

The street outside rang with a curious laugh and approaching footsteps. Chen Ge controlled Xiao Bu to close the door and sat beside her step-father's body while holding the knife. “The Red Specter at the hotel shouldn't come after me, but we have to be careful. After she consumed the ghost next door, she will need time to digest it. When she's hungry again, she will slaughter and consume as she mows down the road. After all, her feeders have been killed."

"Then, won't it be dangerous in a few days?" Fan Chong was worried. Chen Ge decided to leave the responsibility to him, and he did not want to disappoint Chen Ge's trust.

"You'll be fine. The ghost at the hotel will need at least a week to digest the Red Specter. By then, you should have been able to fully explore the map." Chen Ge stood up. He glanced at the time; it was 2:30 am.

“Sorry for disturbing you tonight, rest early.” Chen Ge had been so focused on the game that he did not realize it was already so late.

“Are you really going now? Why don’t you stay here for one night? There’s more than enough space on my bed.” Fan Chong moved the wrinkled clothes on his bed away.

“Thank you, but I still need to open my Haunted House for business tomorrow.” Chen Ge rejected the kind offer and prepared to leave. “I remember you saying that there have been some weird happenings when you played the game. You felt like the thing in the game has come out, right?”

Fan Chong and Fan Dade shared a look. The two were confused as well. When they were playing, even after they turned the background music off and moved as far away from the screen as they could, they would still be scared. But when they saw Chen Ge play, the source of fear had moved from the game itself to the person who was playing the game. This had happened for the first time for them.

The brothers did not know how to explain, and it was Fan Dade who moved the topic away. “It’s probably a psychological thing. Now that I think about it, how could something from the game come out into real life?”

“It never hurts to be careful. There is indeed something off about this game, so I suggest you only play it when there’s daylight.” Chen Ge told Fan Chong a few things and left after making sure that there were no more problems.

“Boss Chen, it’s hard to get a taxi here, how about I drive you home?” Fan Chong chased after him. Chen Ge’s gaming ability had greatly impressed him, and he had many things that he wanted to ask Chen

Ge.

“Thank you, but I’ll be fine.” After playing the game, Chen Ge’s relationship with the Fan brothers had improved a lot.

“There is no taxi at Li Wan City at night—you’ll need to walk to Eastern Jiujiang Business Center to get car service.” Fan Chong took out a key from his drawer. “Why don’t you take my e-bike? I plan to visit New Century Park tomorrow, so you can return the bike then.”

Chen Ge did not reject it this time and accepted the key from Fan Chong. “Then, I shall thank you.”

Opening the door, Fan Dade and Fan Chong walked Chen Ge down the stairs. The whole area was dark, and only Fan Dade’s home had light.

“How come there are so few residents at this residential area?” Chen Ge thought back to Fan Dade’s neighbor, who had a mirror on the door to ward away evil spirits.

“This place is too isolated, and traffic is not convenient. Those who can afford to move have already moved.” Fan Dade led Chen Ge to the e-bike. “Be careful on the road, see you tomorrow.”

Chen Ge inspected the electrical meter and thanked the brothers again before leaving. After a while, the lights in Fan Chong’s home went off as well, and the whole area plunged into darkness.

Eastern Jiujiang sure is creepy. Chen Ge turned back to look. Shall I go visit the places pointed out in the game tonight?

After thinking about it, Chen Ge gave up on the thought. I should do this with more of a plan. After Fan Chong pinpoints out all the dangerous zones, I can start to look for the door that has gone out of control.

Driving out of Li Wan City, it took him almost one and a half hours to reach New Century Park. Chen Ge’s taut nerves finally relaxed after he walked into the Haunted House. Resisting the urge to sleep, Chen Ge found the backpack at the staff breakroom and opened the steel door to enter the underground scenario.

Sitting inside the last classroom, Chen Ge activated the recorder and then flipped open the comic to release Men Nan. The boy who was just slightly taller than Chen Ge’s knees crawled out from the book and looked at Chen Ge with some resentment.

Chen Ge coughed from the embarrassment. "How are things?"

"When are you going to let me go back! If no one fixes the broken window of the door in the Third Sick Hall, many scary things will happen!" Men Nan talked like an adult, but the cute face looked at Chen Ge seriously.

"What will happen?"

"The door in the Third Sick Hall already has the symptoms of going out of control. During the period when I was unconscious, the world behind the door was slowly overlapping with the world outside the door! They are influencing each other, and if we leave them be, the door will never be closed again. The negative emotions behind the door will overflow into the real world." Men Nan tried his best to explain the severity of the problem to Chen Ge.

"The negative emotions behind the door will overflow into the real world?" Chen Ge thought of the scenarios that he had seen inside the game. The small town was filled with ghosts and crazed murderers—everyone had gone mad.

"Yes, if the door is left open for too long, it will slowly affect everything around it." Men Nan crawled onto the chair. He hated talking up to people. "Those who are within the vicinity of the 'door' will be affected. First, it's a small change to the psychology like a person turning silent and losing interest in life. Then, one's habits will change; for example, they might have liked ninety percent cooked steak in the past, but now, they prefer thirty percent cooked and later completely uncooked steak."

Men Nan described how a normal person might slowly become insane.

"Can this process be undone?" Chen Ge knew that the door in Li Wan City had already gotten out of control. This time, he was facing not only ghosts but also people who had been corrupted and monsters from behind the door.

"The best method that I can think of is to make sure that the door doesn't lose control. Of course, you can find them a good therapist to help counsel them one by one." Men Nan was dropping hints. He was desperate to return, but he could not beat the ghosts that Chen Ge had in a physical fight. This made him feel conflicted like he had been cheated to leave the Third Sick Hall.

"A door that has lost control cannot be closed anymore?" Chen Ge had his own plan, and he maintained his calmness at all times.

“You have to be certain about the sequence of events. A door is said to have gone out of control because it cannot be closed,” Men Nan answered sadly.

“Even the door-pusher cannot close it?” Chen Ge leaned against the chair. He was rather sad. His original plan had been to find the door in Li Wan City, enter the door to find Xiao Bu, and use a reasonable method to convince Xiao Bu to close the door.

“The door-pusher might have the power to close it, but that is different for each pusher because everyone has different strengths and weaknesses.” When Men Nan said that, his eyes darkened further. The reason that he did not sneak away was because he was not a fighter type. Even if he was inside the door in the Third Sick Hall, he was no match for Zhang Ya, so he had been staying obediently inside the comic.

“I’ve told you everything I know. Even if you ask me more, I can’t answer you.” Without waiting for the question from Chen Ge, Men Nan looked at him openly and said, “It’s really scary if a door goes out of control. I have to return soon. Without me behind the door, Western Jiujiang will eventually become like Eastern Jiujiang.”

“Western Jiujiang will eventually become like Eastern Jiujiang? You know about Eastern Jiujiang?” Chen Ge was surprised. In their conversation, he had never once brought up the words ‘Eastern Jiujiang’.

Chapter 527: Dream

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

With that slip of the tongue, Men Nan knew that could not fool Chen Ge anymore.

“What’s the difference between Eastern and Western Jiujiang? On the surface, Eastern Jiujiang appears to be more peaceful, and the public security there is better; this is observable from the working state of the two police stations.” Chen Ge knew that Eastern Jiujiang was dangerous, but the danger was hidden. Until now, he had not caught a glimpse of the enemy.

“My advice is for you to not go to Eastern Jiujiang anymore.” Men Nan hesitated for a long time before saying that.

“You have to give me a reason, right? The night before last, at the fresh water plant, both you and Xu Yin came out to stop me. Is that shadow really that scary? Are neither of you Red Specters his match?” Chen Ge had been meaning to ask Men Nan that.

Shaking his head, Men Nan looked at Chen Ge’s shadow and worry crossed his eyes. “That night, if not for the person inside your shadow, it would have been over for all of us.”

“Zhang Ya got into a fight with the shadow? How come I had no idea about that?” Chen Ge did not even realize that.

“The guy was too unlucky. He planned to take over your shadow and make you his puppet, but he did not expect the most powerful Red Specter to be living inside your shadow. Due to his carelessness, he was injured by the Red Specter inside your shadow.” Men Nan did not dare call Zhang Ya by name because he was scared. Any normal ghost would be scared when they saw Zhang Ya.

“Then, was Zhang Ya injured?” Chen Ge was worried. He was familiar with Zhang Ya’s style; she was the kind who left no prisoner. However, that night, after the match with the shadow, Zhang Ya did not show up.

"The Red Specter inside your shadow was already injured before the fight started. One of her arms was filled with cracks."

"Cracks?" Chen Ge thought back to the fight between Zhang Ya and Doctor Gao. No one knew what had really happened between them as the surgery room had been smothered by Zhang Ya's hair.

"Your biggest reliance is injured and is currently resting, but that shadow is just a shadow. As for whose shadow it was and how strong the actual body is, we have no idea, so you'd better stay away from Eastern Jiujiang." Men Nan reached out and climbed onto the table. Finally, he did not need to look up to Chen Ge anymore.

"Could the body be a presence greater than a Red Specter?" Chen Ge thought about it for a long time. The question sounded like it was for Men Nan but also a question for himself.

"No one knows what is above a Red Specter, or rather, no one has managed to survive to tell the tale." Men Nan did not know the answer, but he did not deny the possibility that such a presence might exist in Eastern Jiujiang.

"All who have met one have died?" Chen Ge thought about Doctor Gao, who had committed suicide to become a ghost. The madman had once controlled three doors so that he could reach the limit of a Red Specter after death.

"Chen Ge, I'm just saying this for your own good. Eastern Jiujiang is different from Western Jiujiang. Haven't you realized that none of the patients from the Third Sick Hall dared venture to Eastern Jiujiang?" Men Nan tried his best to explain; he was really afraid that Chen Ge might drag him to Eastern Jiujiang again. "The danger in Western Jiujiang is visible like the patients from the Third Sick Hall.

"The scariest thing about Eastern Jiujiang is that we do not know about the potential danger. You can read through Jiujiang's local news. There are few cases coming from Eastern Jiujiang, but of the annual disappearance around Jiujiang, ninety percent happened in Eastern Jiujiang. This data is more than enough proof to show the danger of Eastern Jiujiang."

"I know Eastern Jiujiang is dangerous, but I have to go. Before my parent's disappearance, they once showed up in Eastern Jiujiang." That was the reason that Chen Ge had started this adventure.

Since this was to find his missing parents, Men Nan was careful with his words. “I’ve only heard about the things in Eastern Jiujiang from the mental patients. If you really want to know about the place, you can ask them.”

“I also wish to ask them, but the key is that they do not seem like they have gotten used to their ghost identity.” Chen Ge had the patient’s list of the Third Sick Hall, but those spirits refused to communicate with Chen Ge.

After chatting with Men Nan some more, Chen Ge finally relented to the boy’s pleas and decided to send Men Nan back. Chen Ge was actually worried about the door in the Third Sick Hall going haywire as well.

“The theme park and the Haunted House can only grow without worry if Western Jiujiang is safe.” Chen Ge pulled Men Nan back into the comic and walked out of the last classroom. “Eastern Jiujiang is such a mess, but the futuristic theme park decided to open there—they sure are lucky.”

Exiting the underground scenario, Chen Ge entered the staff breakroom and slept.

Chen Ge was woken up by the alarm at 8 am. After brushing his teeth, he started to clean the Haunted House. A new day was beginning, and the park opened at 9 am. The visitors swarmed in, and Chen Ge could feel the popularity of his Haunted House rising.

“The capacity of my Haunted House is still lacking... if only I have more scenarios.” Standing at the door, Chen Ge suddenly noticed a few familiar faces. “He San? Why is that boy here today?”

He San also saw Chen Ge, and he waved his hands. “Boss, long time no see!”

“You’re still as loud as ever.” Chen Ge asked Uncle Xu to help him with the tickets, and he walked into the crowd.

“Boss, this time, our school has made all the necessary preparations and selected the most courageous students from each age group. Today, there is only one purpose for us being here, and that is to clear the game!” He San pointed behind him, and there was a group of people.

“Are they all from your school? Did you all skip class today?” Chen Ge had no idea what was wrong with Western Jiujiang Medical University's students—so many of them had come that day. "Clearing the scenario is one thing, but don't abandon your studies."

Chen Ge's real thought was: if this was found out by the doctors in the underground morgue, things might get really scary.

"Don't worry, we didn't skip class today," Yang Chen grumbled darkly beside He San. "Even our president knows about your Haunted House now."

"Even your president knows about this place?" Chen Ge felt weirdly ashamed.

"Yes, it's a weird story actually. Our president had the same dream for four consecutive nights. His teacher from when he was young scolded him while standing inside your Haunted House. There was no way he could have defended himself." He San lowered his voice. "Our president was scolded for four days, and now, whenever he closes his eyes, the old teacher will appear before his eyes; he couldn't suffer it anymore."

"Your president had the same dream for four days?" Chen Ge felt like laughing. "Was his former teacher someone called Wei Jiuqin?"

"Yes, that's the old man's name! How did you know?" He San was surprised. "Our president then had some discussion with the staff, and someone said that the old teacher was telling him in his dream that our students, who should not be afraid of dead bodies, are scared witless inside your Haunted House, and that is too embarrassing."

"So, your president allowed you to come visit me today, huh?"

"That's basically it. The president said that a qualified medical doctor has to be calm no matter what. Even if the sky is falling, we shouldn't panic. He encouraged us to come to your place to test our courage whenever we're free. If we cannot conquer a Haunted House as medical doctors, how are we going to survive in our career in the future?" He San mimicked the way that the president spoke, and he had a knack for it.

"Your president probably misunderstood the old gentleman's meaning." But since they were there, Chen Ge was not going to chase them away. All he could do was to use his power to give the students one last piece of advice. "You can visit any scenario that you want, but remember to stay away from the underground morgue."

This was not the first time that the students of Western Jiujiang Medical University had dealt with Chen Ge. They knew for a fact that those who did not follow Chen Ge's advice would end up in a horrible state.

"Don't worry, we're planning to challenge the Coffin Village scenario this time, and we have done plenty of preparation before we arrived." After He San said that, he retreated into the crowd and several of his seniors came forward.

"It should be fine as long as you stay away from the underground morgue, but be careful when you're in there. If you see anyone coming toward you wearing a medical uniform, wave at the camera for help immediately, and I will help you," Chen Ge reminded them and led them personally into the underground scenario. The students were all returning customers, and their president was so kind. So, this time, Chen Ge did not make things difficult for them. He used normal background music and did not send out the trio to go in with them.

"Have a good time down there."

About forty minutes later, there was chaos at the resting hall; the place was boiling with excitement. On the screen that showed the score, the scores of the students from Western Jiujiang Medical University soared as they became the first batch of visitors to clear Coffin Village.

When Yang Chen walked out from the village with the wedding dress, he had the urge to cry. Only God knew what he had experienced in the past forty minutes. All nine of his seniors had 'sacrificed' themselves, and they had placed their hope in him to escape the village with the wedding dress that carried the lingering spirit of the female bride.

"We did it!" Coffin Village was a three-star scenario, and clearing this scenario was different from clearing Mu Yang High School. This meant that the visitors had the capability of clearing three-star scenarios. Even though this was the first time, it was also a beginning. With more guides and inside scenes leaking on the internet, more and more people would clear it. Seeing the joy on the visitors' faces, Chen Ge was full of smiles as well. He enjoyed this feeling a lot. It was his goal to provide the best service to his visitors.

The completion rate of Coffin Village was only seven percent—the ghost in the well is still alive, and the scenario is lacking. In terms of scariness, it's only just slightly scarier than Mu Yang High School.

At Chen Ge's Haunted House, the two scariest scenarios were the Third Sick Hall and the underground morgue, and they had completely different styles.

I have the patient's list for Third Sick Hall. If I can control these patients to help me scare the visitors, the scare level will definitely increase a lot.

Chen Ge had never underestimated his visitors. It had been a month since he had obtained the black phone, and the visitors had already managed to clear a three-star scenario.

I need to update the Haunted House often to keep up the mystery so that the visitors will be interested.

After taking out the black phone, Chen Ge looked at the four-star Trial Mission—School of the Afterlife.

I should wait. Zhang Ya is injured, Xu Yin is missing his heart, and Bai Qiulin has not completely digested Xiong Qing's soul; it's still too early to challenge a four-star scenario.

Chen Ge decided to collect more power first.

I only need to unlock the School of the Afterlife before the futuristic theme park opens for business. With this four-star scenario as my trump card, no matter what the futuristic theme park does in the future, it will not affect me. Now, I should focus on dealing with Eastern Jiujiang. At the very least, I have to obtain that last bus before moving onto something else.

Seeing someone clear Coffin Village, the other visitors were excited. Those who did not dare challenge the three-star scenarios before started to have the urge. The day soon passed. When the Haunted House closed at 6:30 pm, there were still plenty of visitors outside. In the end, it was the park workers who advised them to leave.

“The peak season is coming; I can consider opening the Haunted House at night. Then again, few people will dare to challenge that.” Chen Ge and his two employees cleaned up the place, and Chen Ge allowed them to go home.

Returning to the staff breakroom, Chen Ge called for a take-out. He leaned on his bed. “I should call Captain Yan to ask about the update for the case at Ming Yang Residence. Not to mention the progress Fan Chong has made with the game as well as keeping an eye on Huang Ling’s husband, Jia Ming...”

After dinner, Chen Ge called Lee Zheng.

“Inspector Lee, did you manage to find the remaining parts of the female body at Ming Yang Residence?”

“Not yet, according to our analysis, the girl’s body should be hidden among the four buildings, but even after a long day with the police hounds, we found nothing.” Lee Zheng’s voice was hoarse like he was not feeling well. “However, we discovered something else. The forensic doctor compared the body with our internal data, and the girl’s identity has been confirmed. Her name is Bu Yi. Five years ago, she had an operation at the People’s Hospital due to a car accident.”

“Bu Yi? Her surname is Bu?” This was the first time that Chen Ge had heard of someone with the surname Bu.

“Yes, the child disappeared from Eastern Jiujiang three years ago. Who would have thought someone would do such a cruel thing to a mere girl?” Chen Ge could hear the anger bubbling under Lee Zheng’s voice.

“Ming Yang Residence was built eight years ago. Jiang Long’s family was painted on the ceiling of Room 104, and Bu Yi’s left arm was hidden inside Room 104.” Chen Ge tried to line up all the clues. “Inspector Lee, do you know when the date of Jiang Long’s car accident was?”

“There are three investors for Ming Yang Residence. The first investor got into an accident six years ago. The second investor, Jiang Long, met his end three years ago, and the third investor committed suicide at the building site two years ago.” Lee Zheng had memorized all the data.

“The year that Jiang Long got into the car accident, Bu Yi disappeared.” Chen Ge held the phone, and a question was stuck in her mind—could this Bu Yi be Xiao Bu?

Chen Ge remembered the scene in the game where he controlled Xiao Bu to go to her friend's home to open the dungeon. When she was on the second floor, she noticed the certificate on the wall. The recipient was Jiang Xiaohu, who was Jiang Long's son. This meant that in the game, Xiao Bu and Jiang Xiaohu were friends and classmates.

"Other than that, Jiang Long has another layer of relationship with Bu Yi." Lee Zheng's team had done a thorough investigation. "Bu Yi's father died when she was very young. Later, Bu Yi's mother became Jiang Long's mistress to support her family."

Hearing that, the image of Xiao Bu wearing her mother's pajamas to find the dungeon flashed across Chen Ge's mind.

"Then where is Bu Yi's mother now?"

"Before Bu Yi disappeared, her mother disappeared. If not for Bu Yi's school reporting the girl's disappearance to the police, we would not have known that about her mother." Lee Zheng was flipping through the old case file, and the content was harrowing.

"Bu Yi's mother disappeared, and Bu Yi disappeared after she went searching for her mother." That matched the game that Chen Ge had played perfectly. His hands tightened, and the image of Jiang Ling's family of four biting the girl's four limbs appeared in Chen Ge's mind.

In the game, Xiao Bu found the key to the dungeon inside her mother's pajamas. However, the entrance to the dungeon was not at her own home but that of her classmate, Jiang Xiaohu. The thing that worried Chen Ge was that Xiao Bu seemed to have opened that door at the dungeon inside Jiang Xiaohu's home.

Only when one had lost all hope could one open the door. Then what had Xiao Bu seen and experienced in the dungeon?

"Inspector Lee, do you have any information on Jiang Long's family?" Only Jiang Long's family would have information about the things that happened inside the dungeon, and Chen Ge wanted to know that.

"Why are you asking that?" From Lee Zheng's perspective, Jiang Long's family had nothing to do with the case.

"I feel like Bu Yi's murderers could be Jiang Long and his family. Do you still remember the painting on the ceiling of Room 104? Jiang Long's family's names were written on it." Chen Ge dropped some hints for Lee Zheng. If he could get police cooperation, his life would be easier.

"The killers wouldn't be so dumb as to carve down their names at the crime scene." Lee Zheng had been a police officer for at least a decade, and he had not seen something like that. "Leaving their own names at the crime scene to purposely announce to the world that they're the culprits?"

"That painting could have been carved by someone else, or it might have some ritualistic significance." Chen Ge knew that as a police officer, Lee Zheng could not reveal certain information to the public, but he tried the best he could.

On the phone, Lee Zheng was silent for ten seconds before continuing. "Actually, we've already investigated Lee Zheng's family. His family situation is a bit complicated.”

Chen Ge’s heart had a bad omen. “Don’t tell me his whole family has disappeared...”

“Before Jiang Long’s car accident, Jiang Long’s wife took their two kids to visit a therapist. Then, within one week, Jiang Long died in the car accident, and Jiang Long’s wife, Zhang Chuyu, and their eldest daughter, Jiang Bai, disappeared. Of the family of four, only Jiang Xiaohu remains.” Lee Zheng hesitated like he was not sure whether it was wise to reveal this information or not.

“Jiang Xiaohu is still alive? Where is he staying now? I wish to ask him a few questions in person.” Chen Ge had a feeling this boy could be the key.

“The child has gone insane. He stabbed his therapist, and sometimes, he acts like a deranged beast. There is no way he can communicate with anyone. If you have to see him, then go to Jiujiang’s Mental Asylum. We met him there this morning.” The police had investigated everything that Chen Ge could think of, but they had failed to get any useful information from Jiang Xiaohu.

Hearing what Lee Zheng said, Chen Ge immediately thought, Could the boy be pretending to be mad?

He would not underestimate any adversary even if he was a child.

“Inspector Lee, can you get me to meet the boy?” Chen Ge pleaded for many times before Lee Zheng relented.

After he hung up, Lee Zheng called back immediately. “I’ve notified the asylum. We’d better go early; they do not allow visitation after 9.”

“Thank you, Inspector Lee!”

“Chen Ge, listen to me, I have something that I need to warn you about.” Lee Zheng’s tone was off. “Take care of your safety. Remember to stay a safe distance when you’re conversing with the boy, and be careful of getting harmed when he’s acting up.”

After that, Lee Zheng hung up. With the murders at Eastern Jiujiang, the man was very busy.

“Why would Lee Zheng warn me about that boy?” Chen Ge sat up in bed. He grabbed the backpack and inspected the content before leaving the Haunted House in a hurry. Jiujiang's Mental Asylum was a government hospital. Different from the Third Sick Hall, it was closely monitored. If they were too late, they might not even get to enter the building.

At 7:20 pm, Chen Ge hailed a cab to get to the mental asylum. He gave Lee Zheng's name to the guard, and then a doctor in a white coat came out to greet him.

"You're Chen Ge, who Inspector Lee mentioned, are you?" The doctor was tall and thin. He wore black-rimmed glasses. The man was quiet like the kind that did not like to talk. "My full name is Pei Jiaoyang, but you can call me Doctor Pei. The patient has already been brought to the interrogation room that was used in the morning. Considering the issue of safety, the conversation has to end before 9."

"Okay." With guidance from Doctor Pei, Chen Ge entered the mental asylum. This place was so different from the Third Sick Hall.

"This is the room. The workers and I will accompany you, so you don't need to worry about safety."

"Thank you." Chen Ge realized how useful the police's name was. If he had come alone, he probably would have been shown the door.

"Human lives are involved, and it's our duty to cooperate with the police." Doctor Pei entered the room and pointed at the boy on the bed. "He's Jiang Xiaohu. Later, people will send in his information."

The room was simple with just a bed and three wooden chairs. The boy was sitting on the bed. His limbs were tied up with ropes, and his gaze was blank. Even if people went near him, he would not acknowledge them.

"Do you mind removing the ropes?" Chen Ge sat on the chair next to the bed. He noticed that the ropes had already cut into the boy's flesh.

"Those are for your safety. When he acted up this afternoon, he bit whomever he saw. We expended a lot of energy before we could detain him." Doctor Pei sat next to Chen Ge and added, "Don't be fooled by the boy's appearance. He looks innocent and harmless, but when he acts up, we'll need two adult males to apprehend him."

When Doctor Pei was speaking, there was knocking on the door. A female nurse came in with a document. "Doctor Pei, the patient information that you wanted."

Doctor Pei accepted the document and handed it over to Chen Ge. “Jiang Xiaohu came to us three years ago. The document contains all of his diagnoses from then till now. Take a look at it yourself. You can ask me if you have any question.”

Chen Ge looked through the document. He noticed that the doctor who had counselled Jiang Xiaohu three years ago was Pei Jiaoyang, and later, Doctor Pei also became the boy’s principle therapist.

“Three years ago, you counselled Jiang Xiaohu?” Chen Ge had found the person whom he was looking for. He desperately wanted to know what had happened three years ago. “Can you tell me more details about that?”

The room suddenly became quiet. Doctor Pei did not answer immediately. The diagnosis three years ago seemed to be a memory that he did not want to remember.

“I noticed that Jiang Xiaohu’s initial diagnosis was bipolar disorder, but then, it was changed to schizophrenia, and finally, it was edited to say that the patient’s personality was rather stable and had sufficient self-cognizance, that there was no sign of mental illness. How could one person have three different results from three diagnoses?” Chen Ge put down the document and looked at Doctor Pei. “What happened three years ago? And why would Jiang Xiaohu’s family send this boy over to the mental hospital over and over so many times?”

After a whole full minute, Doctor Pei finally spoke. He looked at Jiang Xiaohu on the bed, and his expression was curious.

“From how I see it, the whole family is sick, and I don’t mean it in a demeaning way—that’s just my professional prognosis.” Doctor Pei stood up and walked around the bed. “Three years ago, Jiang Xiaohu’s mother came with his sister for his illness. I can remember that day like the back of my hand. His mother’s name is Zhang Chuyu. She was very pretty, and she wore a thick mist of perfume.

“From head to toe, there were many branded clothes, but I couldn’t feel a trace of happiness. She was thinking about something because she kept spacing out during our conversation. After a brief conversation, I had a rudimentary understanding of the family’s situation.

“The sister, Jiang Bai, suffered from paranoia. She felt like everyone was out to kill her, like everyone was a murderer.

“Jiang Xiaohu’s illness was rather curious. He would often do things that were very dangerous like turning on the stove on his own, splashing water on the electrical socket, playing with fire, and so on.

“Zhang Chuyu had scolded him more than once, but it did nothing to stop the boy. After her husband, Jiang Long, found out, he beat the boy several times, but the violence did not improve Jiang Xiaohu’s condition. If anything, it only exacerbated his condition.

“Reckless, irritable, and often getting into fights with his classmates. Sometimes, it felt like he was possessed as he tried his best to harm the people around him. That was my first time running into a patient like that. Considering his young age, I did not write a prescription for Jiang Xiaohu but encouraged his parents to communicate more with him.

“I was only being concerned for the child’s future, but Zhang Chuyu disagreed with me. She was adamant that since her child was sick, he needed the medication. There was a disagreement with the treatment method. As a psychiatrist, we’re always misunderstood, so I did not mind that.

“The change in a child’s personality often has much to do with his environment. From how I saw it, Jiang Xiaohu’s illness had plenty to do with his parents. To treat Jiang Xiaohu, I had his mother and sister leave the room so that I could communicate with the boy on my own. From our conversation, I realized something incredibly creepy and scary.”

Doctor Pei did not show concern for Jiang Xiaohu, who was within earshot, and he continued. “When I was talking to Jiang Xiaohu, the boy accidentally revealed some information to me—his mother was lying.”

“Lying?” Chen Ge was confused. “The mother lied to send her child to an asylum? That’s unlikely. Perhaps it was Jiang Xiaohu who was lying.”

Doctor Pei shook his head. “I also could not tell the authenticity of his claim at the time, but after Jiang Long got into the car accident and passed away, I realized that perhaps Jiang Xiaohu wasn’t lying to me.”

“What did he tell you?”

“Jiang Xiaohu told me in confidence that he did not want to do those dangerous things. He had been forced to do those things by his mother to create the impression that he had gone mad!”

“The mother forced her boy to do dangerous things?” Chen Ge got even more confused. “Then what was her purpose for doing that?”

“The purpose was to kill Jiang Xiaohu’s father—Jiang Long.” Doctor Pei looked at Jiang Xiaohu, and his eyes were swirling with complicated emotions. “The boy told me that the one that had gone crazy was his mother, Zhang Chuyu. After his mother found out that the husband had a mistress, she planned to create an accident to kill the father, collect the insurance premium, and consume Jiang Long’s company.”

“Yes, I had the same thought as you.” Doctor Pei leaned against the bedside, and his eyes were dark. “I didn’t think a boy could understand so many things, and perhaps someone told him to say these things. In this family of four, the father spent most of his time working outside, and the mother couldn’t have implicated herself, so the most possible candidate who could teach these things to Jiang Xiaohu was his sister, Jiang Bai.”

Chen Ge did not interrupt and allow Doctor Pei to finish.

“Then, I called Jiang Bai in to have a private talk with her; the result was unexpected as well.

“Jiang Bai told me that the real madman was her father—Jiang Long. After Jiang Long invested in the Ming Yang Residence project, she felt that her father had changed. He would often return late and do things that she could not understand. The way that he looked at his family had changed as well.

“One time, after Jiang Long got drunk, he got into an argument with the mother. Jiang Long, who had always been a gentle spirit, raised his hand to hit Zhang Chuyu and then ran into the kitchen to grab a knife.

“He waved it in the air and scolded at a spot where no one was standing. He was like a completely different person. After that, Jiang Long returned home even less. No one knew what he was up to. He even bought an apartment for himself in Eastern Jiujiang’s Li Wan City and moved out to live on his own.

“If that was all, Jiang Bai would not have thought that her father had gone mad, but something happened later that made Jiang Bai fearful of her father.

“It happened one month before they came to me for treatment. When Zhang Chuyu was pouring water for herself, Jiang Xiaohu accidentally ran into her, and they were both injured by the hot water. Jiang Bai sent both of them to the hospital. She called her father on the phone, but there was no answer. Then she ran to Jiang Long’s home in Eastern Jiujiang to see him in person.

“When Jiang Long heard that Zhang Chuyu and Jiang Xiaohu were injured, he grumbled a few words before saying that he was busy, so he wouldn’t be visiting them. Jiang Bai was angry when she heard that. She stayed at Jiang Long’s house and would not leave until her father agreed to come with her to the hospital. That night, Jiang Long received a call and left in a hurry, leaving Jiang Bai alone at his place.

“After midnight, Jiang Bai heard movement inside the house. She thought that it was mice. She followed the sound and found a secret room behind the closet. Entering the place, she saw a steel cage, and there was a large doll trapped inside the cage!

“There appeared to be someone sewn into the doll. The person couldn’t speak, and the body was weak. When the person heard the door open, they started to curl up in the corner due to primal fear.

“Jiang Bai did not go in. She was spooked. She closed the closet and ran back to the hospital that night. She told her discovery to Zhang Chuyu and Jiang Xiaohu.

“Jiang Xiaohu was too young to understand anything, but Zhang Chuyu’s reaction was weird. When she heard there was a large doll trapped inside a steel cage, she laughed happily.

“Based on Jiang Bai’s description, both her parents were mentally unstable, but here is the problem. Zhang Chuyu said that Jiang Bai suffered from paranoia, so everything that she saw was just her imagination.”

Doctor Pei finally finished the story. “In any case, that’s the situation with the family. The mother said that the brother and the sister are both crazy, the brother said the mother is crazy, and the sister said the mother and the father are crazy. I’m not afraid of you having a bad judgment of me, but even today, I cannot tell for sure who was really lying.”

Chapter 531 - Get All the Red Spectres

Chapter 531: Get All the Red Spectres

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

After hearing to Doctor Pei, Chen Ge went into silent contemplation. Jiang Long's whole family was something else; anyone would think they were crazy, but after some close studying, Chen Ge realized that perhaps none of them were crazy.

They just had different perspective due to their difference stance. Thanks to Fan Chong's game, Chen Ge had plenty of inside information.

Of the family of four, the brother, Jiang Xiaohu, was probably the most innocent. He was just a boy whose worldview had not matured, and everything that he had done was on someone else's order. The person urging him to do those things could be Zhang Chuyu or Jiang Bai.

The sister, Jiang Bai, was probably not suffering from paranoia at first. The giant doll that she had found in her father's house in Eastern Jiujiang was probably Xiao Bu's mother. She was not lying, but her mother, Zhang Chuyu, had said that she had trouble with her mind.

As a mother, Zhang Chuyu's action was really unreasonable. She had personally sent two of her children to the mental hospital and insisted that they suffered from mental illnesses. Chen Ge thought about it and felt like the reason Zhang Chuyu did that was because she wanted to hide something. After Jiang Bai told Zhang Chuyu about the doll, she had laughed happily. This was not the reaction of a normal person. Perhaps she had been doubting her husband, but after hearing that, she had understood that her husband did not betray her and was merely plotting something.

"Why would someone trap an adult inside a doll?" This should be the source of all the tragedy. Jiang Long died, and Zhang Chuyu and Jiang Bai went missing. Of all the victims and culprits, only Jiang Xiaohu was alive. Chen Ge sat on the chair and looked at the clean bedspread.

Ming Yang Residence's curse started eight years ago, but Bu Yi disappeared three years ago—that is a contradiction.

If she's the door-pusher, then the door that she pushed appeared three years ago, but the weird things in Eastern Jiujiang happened way before that. In other words, other than this door that has gone out of control, there are other things hiding in Eastern Jiujiang.

When Chen Ge was small, his parents had told him many times to stay away from Eastern Jiujiang.

The door in Li Wan City had already gone under Doctor Gao's control, but for some reason, it went out of control. Could this be the doing of those things in Eastern Jiujiang?

Chen Ge was familiar with Doctor Gao. To make a psychologist who was powerful enough to own several Red Specters take a step back, the threat in Eastern Jiujiang had to be very powerful!

He sure left a big problem for me.

The door in Eastern Jiujiang had already gone berserk. If he let it be, no one would know what will happen.

Before Doctor Gao committed suicide, he gave me a look at a picture. It was taken in Li Wan City, and it captured my parents standing with a girl in a red dress. That girl was most likely Xiao Bu. In the picture, my parents didn't go after the girl; they weren't in a hostile relationship.

Chen Ge's mind started to turn. He was not one with preconceptions.

Be it Men Nan or the well ghost in Coffin Village, all the door-pushers saw the door as their property. It should be the same for Bu Yi as well. Now that door in Li Wan City has gone out of control and the ghost behind the door have run all over the place, Bu Yi probably does not want to see that.

The world behind the door was formed from the door-pusher's memory. It reflected the door-pusher's most authentic heart and was a nightmare that would not dissipate.

No one would want their inner world splayed open like that for the whole world to see, so the door-pusher probably doesn't want the door to go out of control.

Chen Ge felt like the reason for the rampage in Eastern Jiujiang was due to the interference from other ghosts. After confirming that, Chen

Ge had a thought.

Perhaps I can work together with Xiao Bu to vanquish the ghosts in Eastern Jiujiang and close the door in Li Wan City!

A normal person would not think of cooperating with a Red Specter. Even if they did, they would not know how to do that. However, Chen Ge was different. He had plenty of experience interacting with Red Specters from various age groups. He had confidence that he could convince Xiao Bu.

There have to be more secrets to the death of Xiao Bu and her mother. After the truth comes out, I'll seek justice for her.

The more that he thought about it, the higher the confidence Chen Ge had in the plan.

The hardest part of this plan is not to convince Xiao Bu but to find her.

Narrowing his eyes, he looked so scary that the doctor and workers did not dare speak openly.

Other people might not know where Xiao Bu is, but I have an advantage. If I continue to clear that weird game with Fan Chong, I'll definitely get a clue to Xiao Bu's location.

The character that he and Fan Chong controlled was not simple data but a young soul who had experienced the bottomless despair again and again.

Men Nan also said that to fully close a door, the simplest way is to find the door-pusher.

Chen Ge had a draft in mind. He was to work together with Xiao Bu and all the Red Specters to clean up Eastern Jiujiang.

There's a Red Specter at White Dragon Tunnel, a Red Specter at the bus stop for Route 104, and a Red Specter in Coffin Village. Perhaps they can lend me their strength.

Chen Ge had already interacted with the Red Specter at the tunnel. He had even almost carried the woman home. His touching words had managed to break down her defense.

The Red Specter in Coffin Village had a good relationship with Fan Yu. Chen Ge could prepare a time to bring Fan Yu into the mountain to go search for her. With Zhang Ya awakened as well as Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin, there was no telling who might survive Coffin Village.

“The female ghosts at the village and tunnel can be persuaded, but the key is the woman in the red raincoat. I’m not familiar with her, but I’ve promised to find her child within a week. Three days have already passed, but I still have no idea what her child looks like.” Chen Ge really did want to help her, but he did not know where to start.

Chen Ge mulled over the choices and eventually chose to try his luck at the bus stop at night.

Temporarily, that’s the only thing that I can do.

With the plan in mind, Chen Ge turned his gaze back to Jiang Xiaohu.

Weirdly enough, when other people looked at him, Jiang Xiaohu had no reaction, but when Chen Ge’s eyes fell on the boy, his expression changed. His body leaned backward until the ropes that tied his limbs became taut.

How come it feels like the child is afraid of me?

Chen Ge walked forward and sat down on the bed. “I know you can understand me, and I know you’re harboring many secrets in your heart. Why don’t you talk to me? Perhaps I can help you.”

Jiang Xiaohu obviously did not want to get too close to Chen Ge, but his limbs were tied down, so he could only watch as Chen Ge sat down beside him.

“You look so nervous—is it because there are too many people in the room?” Chen Ge looked at Jiang Xiaohu with concern. “Relax, we’re all here to help you.”

Then he turned to look at Doctor Pei. “Do you mind if I have some alone time with him? The child doesn’t seem like he’s used to being surrounded by so many people.”

Doctor Pei had difficulty written on his face. Honestly, he did not think that Jiang Xiaohu’s anomaly was because of the crowd. “I don’t think that’s wise. Jiang Xiaohu has the record of harming others, and if we leave you here alone, I’m afraid...”

“It’ll be fine. There’s no need for you to worry about me.” Chen Ge put down his backpack. The bag looked so heavy, but no one could tell its content. “The child just lacks a chance to communicate. There’s a kind-hearted side that is hiding within him.”

The nurse and workers turned to Doctor Pei. When the police came to investigate Jiang Xiaohu, even they did not have a request like this. Doctor Pei wanted to deny the request, but considering Lee Zheng’s introduction and the number of lives that were involved in the case, after thinking about it again, Doctor Pei nodded. “We’ll be just outside the door. If the boy suddenly acts up and comes after you, you only need to call, and we’ll rush in to save you.”

The workers at the asylum filed out of the Room 1 by one. Seeing their departure, Jiang Xiaohu became more nervous. He made a weird throaty noise like an injured animal sensing danger. The door closed. When the doctor and workers left, Chen Ge took the recorder out from his bag and activated it. The sound of static filled up the room; it felt like the sound could crawl into one's mind to play with one's nervous system. "Don't you feel better with a little relaxing music?"

Chen Ge looked at Jiang Xiaohu, watching his every move. Ten seconds later, he suddenly said, "You should have seen a ghost before, right?"

Jiang Xiaohu's pupils shook as he tried to get away from Chen Ge.

"Based on your reaction, I suppose I'm correct. Let me think. Did you see her dead body in person but she came back to life several days later and appeared somewhere else?"

The sanity of Jiang Xiaohu aside, based on Chen Ge's question alone, if Doctor Pei was present, he would have thought that Chen Ge was crazy as well. The ropes were pulled tight, and Jiang Xiaohu was agitated.

"Whether you're real crazy or fake crazy, I hope you understand one thing—you are the only one who survived not because you're lucky but because she allowed you to live."

When Chen Ge was playing the game, he had a question in his heart. How did Xiao Bu know about the dungeon at her friend's home?

Initially, Chen Ge had thought that there was a message left behind by her mother, but what her mother did was not exactly something to be proud of, and she should not tell that to her young daughter. There was a detail in the game worth noting—Xiao Bu found the key inside her mother's pajamas, but upon closer inspection, why would someone who was trapped have the key to the exit inside her pajamas?

After meeting Jiang Xiaohu, Chen Ge had a speculation. Could it be this boy who stole the key and handed it over to Xiao Bu's mother?

Xiao Bu could get into the dungeon probably because Jiang Xiaohu told her about it. After all, they were classmates.

"I will not side with either party. I just want to know what happened back then." The static sound grew. The lights in the room flickered, and the room darkened. A red shadow materialized next to Chen Ge. Jiang Xiaohu was really scared. He could not control himself anymore and started to scream.

“You can sense his presence? Are you reminded of something?” Chen Ge had summoned Xu Yin not to scare Jiang Xiaohu but to have Xu Yin inspect Jiang Xiaohu’s body to see whether he was possessed or not. Jiang Xiaohu’s face was frozen in fear. He mumbled incoherently as he pointed at Chen Ge.

“Has he lost his ability of speech after a long period of zero communication, or has Xu Yin scared the boy?” Chen Ge turned off the recorder. Xu Yin had not found any signs of ghosts on the boy; he was just a normal child.

The static disappeared. Chen Ge grabbed Jiang Xiaohu’s hands that were tied by ropes. “I’m helping you and helping her in the process. I know that there’s a shadow in your heart. Tell me, treat me as someone that you will never see again. I can guarantee what you tell me will never be revealed to a third person.”

Several minutes later, Jiang Xiaohu slowly calmed down. His head was covered with cold sweat as his chest rose and fell, clambering for air. Chen Ge had just summoned a Red Specter; an adult would have been scared witless, much less a child.

Placing the recorder on the bed, Chen Ge said seriously, “If you don’t tell me, I’ll probably come back every day until you tell me the truth.”

Jiang Xiaohu finally relented and opened his mouth to speak. “What do you want to know?”

“Let’s start with your father. Why would he capture a living person? And why did accidents keep happening at Ming Yang Residence, which he was overseeing?”

“I don’t know what happened, but I remember that Jiang Long once said that the project at Ming Yang Residence was a faux. Someone forced him to do it. The four buildings weren’t for human tenants but for ghosts.”

He stuttered endlessly, and Chen Ge took a long time before he understood what Jiang Xiaohu said, “Who would force him to do something like that?”

“At the very beginning, Jiang Long said that someone was watching over him. He went to many doctors, and they all said that it was his work pressure, but his symptoms worsened. Eventually, he started to ramble nonsensical stuff. He said that he saw his shadow come alive. He believed that his shadow had its own consciousness and could communicate with him.”

“How did your father’s conditions get under control?”

“I’m not sure. Starting from one morning, Jiang Long suddenly became energized, but it was from that day onward that he became someone else and gained many weird habits...” Jiang Xiaohu paused and hesitated. “I stopped calling him father from that day because I had a feeling there was another person living inside him. I suspect he was taken over by his shadow.”

“Taken over by his shadow?” Chen Ge was reminded of the shadow at the fresh water plant. The monster had been laying seeds all over; it was an enemy that was more difficult to deal with than he had expected.

“Regarding the capturing of living person, that was his idea; it has nothing to do with my family. A few years before Jiang Long’s accident, he appeared to be doing that constantly. He would lead people to Li Wan City to torture them both physically and mentally to drop them into despair. I don’t know why he would do that. Perhaps it was his personal hobby.”

Jiang Xiaohu’s childhood experience had matured him. After he was done, he sneaked a glance at Chen Ge before going silent again.

Chapter 533 - Li Wan City West Street

Chapter 533: Li Wan City West Street

“Purposely lead people to Li Wan City to be tortured?” Chen Ge felt that had to do with the ‘door’. They needed someone to open the door in Li Wan City, but that would lead to a question. Why would the ghosts in Eastern Jiujiang be so insistent on this door in Li Wan City? How was it different from the other door?

Jiang Long had captured Xiao Bu’s mother and trapped her inside the doll. Chen Ge had no idea what had gone on in detail, but he could make an educated guess. However, even until her disappearance, the door was not pushed open. Instead, it was Xiao Bu who opened the ‘door’ after witnessing what happened in the dungeon; this was probably something that had escaped the ghosts’ expectation.

“Do you have any other questions?” Jiang Xiaohu interrupted Chen Ge’s thoughts. “If there’s nothing else, can you take this away?”

He pointed at the recorder with fear in his eyes.

“Since you knew that your father had committed a crime, why didn’t you call the police?” Chen Ge put the recorder back in his bag. He smoothed down the bedsheet like he had not taken the thing out.

“My sister did plan to call the police. Mom tried to stop her, but it was to no avail. When I woke up the next morning, my sister had already disappeared. Mom said that sister’s condition had suddenly worsened and she needed to be sent for treatment.” Jiang Xiaohu gripped the bedsheet by both hands. “Mom also told me that if I didn’t act obediently, I’d be sent for treatment as well.”

“You were threatened by your mother? Looks like she might be involved in the whole incident somehow.”

“Jiang Long is dead, and both my mother and sister are missing, so what’s the point in asking these questions now?” Jiang Xiaohu raised his head to look at Chen Ge. He seemed to have realized something, and his tone softened. "When the police came earlier, I said the same thing. I've told you everything I know."

"You've told me everything you know?" Chen Ge looked into Jiang Xiaohu's eyes. A normal lingering spirit would not be able to hold Chen Ge's gaze, much less a child. Just as Jiang Xiaohu turned his head away out of guilt, Chen Ge asked the last question, "I saw a painting on the ceiling in Room 104 at Ming Yang Residence. In the painting, your family of four was biting a little girl's four limbs. Perhaps you and your sister were dragged into this, but in that painting, you're all killers, or at least that's the perception of the painter."

"Painting?" Jiang Xiaohu was startled. "I don't know anything about that."

"You said that Ming Yang Residence was made for ghosts, so the painting was probably done by ghosts as well." Chen Ge had a feeling that Jiang Xiaohu was still hiding something from him. He was about to continue the interrogation when the boy's eyes suddenly rolled backward, and his limbs started to spasm. His lips whispered pleas of help like he was about to die from asphyxiation.

Hearing that, Doctor Pei and the workers rushed in immediately. He held onto Jiang Xiaohu's limbs and gave him a sedative shot. The spirit went out of the boy's eyes, and he slowly stopped struggling before losing consciousness.

"Mr. Chen, did the boy hurt you?"

"It's fine. I've already asked all that I need to. Thank you for your help." Chen Ge stood up to thank Doctor Pei.

"I'm glad to be of help. If you need any help in the future, don't hesitate to ask." Doctor Pei was just being polite, but Chen Ge treated it seriously. He beckoned Doctor Pei, and the two left the room together.

"Mr. Chen, do you have something else to ask me?"

"It's not suitable to ask this in there. I wish to ask you a few questions privately."

"Are you afraid that Jiang Xiaohu might overhear us?" Doctor Pei thought Chen Ge was being a bit too cautious. "Based on our diagnosis, the boy does suffer from mental illness..."

“Sometimes, mental patients are cleverer than normal person. I know several examples.” Chen Ge walked further away before he sighed in relief. “Doctor Pei, you said earlier that Jiang Xiaohu’s sister went to Jiang Long’s place in Li Wan City and found a hidden room?”

“Yes, Jiang Bai told me that in person.”

“Then, have you been to Li Wan City to confirm her statement?” Chen Ge was more curious about that. If Doctor Pei had told the police that, then the police would definitely have gone for a follow up, but in his conversation with Lee Zheng, the man did not bring up anything about a hidden room.

“I’ve not been there myself, but the police have.”

“Did they find anything?” Chen Ge’s heart raced because the ‘door’ should be in that room. If nothing went wrong, the police should have found something.

Doctor Pei shook his head. “I heard them say it was just a normal home. There was indeed a hidden room behind the closet, but there was no iron cage or large doll. There were instead several safes with business documents and cash.”

“Cash?”

Doctor Pei saw the change in Chen Ge’s expression, and he explained patiently, “The police took some pictures. Apparently, that’s Jiang Long’s inheritance, and he was planning to leave them to Jiang Xiaohu.”

“Do you mind telling me the house’s exact location? I just want to go there in person to check it out.” The map of the game was very similar to Li Wan City three years ago, but it was only a similarity; it was a reconstruction of Li Wan City based on Xiao Bu’s nightmare. Therefore, it was Li Wan City in Xiao Bu’s eyes, so there were differences compared to real life.

“His father stayed in the first residential area on Li Wan City’s West Street. First floor, Room 1. The building looks rather old. When the police went to the place, they were surprised that Jiang Long would buy an apartment in a place like that.”

When Chen Ge heard that, it hit him immediately. That was the same place where Fan Chong and Fan Dade lived. It looked like there was a reason that Fan Chong would happen upon that game. Looks like I have to go back to Fan Chong's home again and return the e-bike.

Realizing that Chen Ge was preparing to go to Li Wan City, Doctor Pei reminded him, "Mr. Chen, I suggest you go in the morning. It's not safe to go there at night. I have many patients from Eastern Jiujiang here. From talking to them, I've realized that they all saw something or heard something at night, and that caused problems to their mental state."

"There's something like that?" Chen Ge realized how serious the condition in Eastern Jiujiang was. The monsters were lawless and had seeped into every corner of the place.

"Just take an example from the patient that came to me yesterday. One month ago, he went to the airport to fetch his wife. It was a midnight flight. The couple drove back to Eastern Jiujiang.

"Based on his explanation, when they passed a junction, the buildings on the side suddenly became strange and unfamiliar, and the streetlights dimmed.

"They continued driving, and then, in the rear-view mirror, the driver saw an approaching bus. It was already midnight, so why was there a bus on the road? He not only saw the bus but also all the passengers waving at him, and he heard unknown voices calling his name."

“He was spooked, so he quickly turned the car around. But the road seemed unending like there was no way for him to go back. Just as he was about to give up, his phone suddenly rang. His grandmother was worried about him, calling him to ask for his location. He told her what had happened, and the strange thing was that while he was talking with his grandmother, the car for some reason drove out of Eastern Jiujiang.

“After he hung up the phone, he realized with a shock that his grandmother had passed away at home last year. He had been caught up at work, unable to return to see her on her last journey.”

“His deceased grandmother saved him?” When Chen Ge heard the story of the bus and the changing buildings, he believed that this patient was not crazy; he was telling the truth.

“Instead of saying that his grandmother saved him, it should be the good memory that he had of her in the subconscious of his mind saved him. From the perspective of psychology, he has been harboring guilt because he did not return to visit his grandmother at her death bed, and this guilt enabled him to retain his rationality when his mental state was flagging.” Doctor Pei stuck his hands into the coat. “I used this example because he was lucky, but there are many more patients here that were not as lucky. I’m telling you this because there are many weird happenings in Eastern Jiujiang, so be careful when you do your investigation. I know it’s strange for me as a doctor to tell you this, but I still hope that you’ll be careful.”

“Doctor Pei, do you have more patients like that driver here?” The more he listened, the more Chen Ge felt like he had come to the correct place. “Can you tell me more about them?”

“There are so many stories, but they will affect your worldview. Plus, this is the patient’s privacy. Even if you’re with the police, I’m not allowed to reveal their information to you without a warrant.” Doctor

Pei rejected Chen Ge's request.

"That's fine. I still need to thank you for your help." Chen Ge thought that Doctor Pei was a good man, at least compared to the other psychologist that he knew. After leaving the asylum, Chen Ge called a cab to return to New Century Park. He looked at the time; it was only 9 pm.

This is roughly the time for the last bus on Route 104 to arrive. Maybe I should go and try my luck tonight?

When Chen Ge returned the previous night, he had recharged the electricity in Fan Chong's e-bike. He had been afraid that there might not be enough fuel when Fan Chong came to fetch his vehicle. However, Fan Chong did not show up in the morning, probably because he had something else to do.

I can follow Route 104 tonight to wait for the bus. Whether I run into the woman in the red raincoat or the bus, it'll be fine. If it's already too late when I arrive in Eastern Jiujiang, I can just stay the night at Fan Chong's place.

Chen Ge plotted out the schedule in his mind.

It's getting closer to the date that I've promised the woman in red raincoat. That is the most important mission; if I have time after that, I'll send Men Nan back to the Third Sick Hall.

After inspecting his backpack, Chen Ge rode the e-bike to the gate of New Century Park. He greeted the guard. The guard was used to Chen Ge going out at night, and he never asked him any questions. It was worth noting that Chen Ge shared a good relationship with the guard.

When Chen Ge's parents disappeared, Chen Ge had moved into the Haunted House. After the visitors and workers left, only the guard and Chen Ge would remain at the theme park. Sometimes, the guard would come to get help from Chen Ge. When he was in a particularly good mood or bad mood, he would secure two bottles of alcohol and have Chen Ge follow him into the cafeteria at night to 'borrow' the kitchen to cook supper.

When Chen Ge had been at the lowest point of his life, many people at theme park had reached out to help him, so when theme park faced its trouble, he would help it back without hesitation.

"Xiao Chen, you're at least a boss now. Riding an e-bike is not that suitable with your current identity.” The aged guard held a cup in his hand. Even over the distance, Chen Ge could smell the alcohol.

“We’ll talk about that later. I haven’t even gotten my driver’s license. I swear the people at the driving school are prejudiced against me. They keep saying my driving style is too wild.”

“It’s too late to change now. In the future, I’ll just hire a driver to ferry me around.” Chen Ge rode the e-bike out of New Century Park. After his exchange with the guard, he noticed a problem.

If I really do get the bus, I’m afraid I’ll only be able to ride it around the countryside; going to the city is still not that convenient. But I hear the number four subway is haunted, so perhaps I can go check it out in the future.

Riding the bike, Chen Ge rushed to the nearest stop for Route 104. He stood in the cold wind and waited for half an hour. There was no sign of the bus or the woman in the raincoat. “Does it need to be raining?”

Chen Ge did not give up; he followed the route and rode to Eastern Jiujiang. Chen Ge reached Eastern Jiujiang at 11 pm. He could feel the change in the air. There were suddenly no cars on the road.

“When I came last time, there was still the occasional taxi on the road. Is it because of me that even taxis don’t come here at night anymore?” Chen Ge shook his head. He felt like he was not that powerful; something else scary had probably happened in Jiujiang.

“Perhaps it’s not destined for me to meet them tonight. This is not my fault.” Chen Ge would stop at every bus stop. Initially, he had hoped that the bus would show up, but he slowly gave up hope as he neared Li Wan City. The condition of the road worsened. At 11:30 pm, Chen Ge felt a cold caress on the back of his neck. He reached out to touch it, and rain drop as soft as silk fell on his hand.

“It’s raining?” Chen Ge took out his phone and looked for the weather forecast. It said that it should not rain in Jiujiang for the few days.

“But rain is a good sign. The gathering of Yin energy means a higher chance of running into ghosts. The woman in the red raincoat might show up.”

Putting his phone away, Chen Ge looked around. Even though he had been to Eastern Jiujiang several times, he was still unfamiliar with the cityscape. The streetlights showered dim, yellow light. The light was barely powerful enough to banish the darkness.

“I’m still currently on the bus route for Route 104. Should I wait for it at the bus stop?”

The changes to his surroundings were similar to the description provided by Doctor Pei. Chen Ge had a feeling that the bus hearse might show up that night.

“Xiao Gu said that the woman’s child is on the bus. I only need to help her save her child and show it to her.”

Chen Ge had his own plan. He was only going to show the child to the woman in the red raincoat. He did not plan to return the child to her. He had only promised to help her find her child—whether he would return the child or how was he going to return the child, that was a completely different issue.

Chapter 535: The Hearse

The night sky was like a thick cloth, smothering all the light. Chen Ge sat on the e-bike and held his arms open. The rain fell into his open palms as he murmured, “Looks like the rain is picking up.”

The buildings on the side looked rather blurry. It was not that late yet, but there was already no light in the neighborhood. “Do people in Eastern Jiujiang like to sleep early?”

Chen Ge had already noticed the anomalies. He parked the bike by the bus stop and took out his phone to look at the time.

“Not yet midnight. Normally, those things become active after midnight.” Chen Ge had not brought a raincoat or umbrella, so he was worried of getting the comic wet. “Should I stay here and wait or continue moving before the rain picks up?”

After some thought, Chen Ge decided to keep moving. “If the rain gets too heavy, I’ll find a place to hide from it. I cannot waste the whole night waiting for the bus to appear. The main mission for the night is to go to Jiang Long’s apartment where Xiao Bu’s mother was supposed to be trapped.”

Chen Ge was a quick thinker and would move after he came to a decision. His bike was the only vehicle on the road, but he did not panic.

“Route 104 is the longest route in Jiujiang, and it has the most stops. Other than that, it is also the only route that goes from Western Jiujiang to Eastern Jiujiang. Back then, the city council opened this route to better connect Western and Eastern Jiujiang.

“Thinking back, of all the routes, the ghosts only targeted Route 104. This means that the culprit wished to use the bus to transport the ghosts and spirits between Eastern and Western Jiujiang.”

Chen Ge was unclear what the culprit was up to, but it felt like they were preparing to make Eastern Jiujiang into a paradise for ghosts. They had even built a home for these ghosts at the fringe of Li Wan City.

“Eastern Jiujiang is more dangerous than Western Jiujiang; I have to be careful.” The deeper he travelled into Eastern Jiujiang, the dimmer the streetlights became. The twisted light failed to provide him warmth and safety, but it made him even more nervous. The buildings by the road were things that one could see normally, but there was something off about them like the tenants were not living humans but something else.

When he passed a T-junction, Chen Ge stopped. He stood next to a bus stop. He looked at the forks of the road. He tried to comb his memory, but he could not remember which turn to take. After completing so many missions given by the black phone, Chen Ge had cultivated the habit of memorizing the routes so that he could have a quick escape. After visiting Li Wan City so many times, he had memorized the routes, but when he tried to follow the direction in his memory, he realized that this path was something that was not in his memory.

“Did I remember incorrectly, or have I entered the territory that is influenced by the door?” He took out his phone and opened the GPS. It took a long time before telling Chen Ge it failed to capture his location. “Looks like I’ve run into the situation that Doctor Pei mentioned.”

However, Chen Ge did not repeat the patient’s mistake. He parked the e-bike by the road and picked up his backpack to walk to the nearest shop and slammed heavily on the curtain door.

“Such a rapid hammering at midnight, but no one came out to check the situation, huh?” Chen Ge turned back to look. The buildings in the distance were receding into the darkness. The darkness was like a beast, preparing to swallow everything including Chen Ge.

“The longer the door is left out of control, the greater the overlapping of the despair and strangeness of the world behind the door and the real world.” Chen Ge had gotten this information from Men Nan. He had not witnessed this before, so he could not tell for sure.

“Never mind, it’s not the time to think.” Chen Ge opened the zipper of his bag. He was about to take out the hammer to test the reaction of the citizens behind the door when something suddenly moved through the inky darkness. The broken appearance said plenty about the lack of maintenance. Instead of a bus, it looked more like a mobile coffin.

“Congratulations, Specters’ Favored! You’ve triggered a two-star Trial Mission—The Hearse!

“Would you like to accept this mission?

“Warning! If you give up this mission, the scenario will never be unlocked!”

Seeing the message, Chen Ge accepted it without hesitation.

“Mission Requirement: Take the bus on Route 104 to Li Wan City after midnight and disembark it safely.

“Mission Hint: After completing this mission, a new Trial Mission will be unlocked!”

After two seconds, Chen Ge put the black phone away. The mission information confirmed his speculation. “Of the few Trial Missions given by the black phone initially, the Hearse should be the key linking Western and Eastern Jiujiang! After completing this mission, the black phone should update me with more difficult missions from Eastern Jiujiang!”

Chen Ge carried his backpack and returned to the bus stop. He looked at the bus that was slowly coming in like a coffin, and his eyes narrowed. “There should be something above a Red Specter in Eastern Jiujiang. After completing this mission, the black phone will probably provide a four-star Trial Mission.”

Taking a deep breath, Chen Ge was ready. He stood in the dark alone, and his expression was serious. “In a way, this is a new beginning, so I must be cautious.”

The wind fluttered his sleeves, and the rain wet his hair. Chen Ge looked at the approaching bus, and his one hand reached into the backpack. The rain continued to fall. The eerie bus on Route 104 entered the bus stop, and Chen Ge's heart started to race. He heard the machine voice report the bus' arrival.

"It's finally here."

Chen Ge looked at the passengers inside the bus who had their heads lowered. He walked forward, but before he left the platform, the bus drove away. It picked up speed and sped into the darkness. Watching the bus scurry away, Chen Ge only came to after a long time.

"Is it not allowing me to get on the bus?"

The black phone's mission requirement was for him to take the bus to Li Wan City and get off safely, but the bus did not plan to let Chen Ge get on at all. If he could not get on the bus, then the mission would naturally fail. This was something that Chen Ge had not anticipated.

To prevent the mission failure, Chen Ge hopped onto Fan Chong's e-bike and started to race down the street to chase after the bus.

"Wait, you left a passenger behind!"

Chapter 536: Road Rage

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

The thick layers of cloud filled up the sky. There was no light shining through. The darkness fell, and there were shadows flashing within the buildings by the road. Many vicious eyes were spying on the road in the dark. In the empty city, a man rode an e-bike to chase after the bus.

“You’ll need to stop at the next station, so why not stop now?” Chen Ge hissed through gritted teeth. This was his first encounter with the hearse, and the enemy did something out of his expectations.

“Does the bus only allow entry to dead people and ban living people from entering? But that doesn’t seem right. How come no one stopped Huang Ling and Xiao Gu when they stepped onto the bus?”

The e-bike had limited fuel. At most, Chen Ge could chase for four stops before he needed to use human power to propel him forward. He was so caught up in the mission that he ignored the directions. All those precautions that he told himself to take were tossed to the wind as he chased after the bus like his life depended on it. “I’m going to need a reason when I catch up to you on why you refuse to let me on the bus!”

It was hard to use an e-bike to catch up to a bus. However, that was not impossible. Perhaps because the bus itself was too old, or maybe there was some other reason, but its speed was quite slow. Chen Ge chased after it relentlessly but could not close the gap between himself and the bus. He could only hope that the bus would stop at the next station.

The buildings on the side receded into the background. The rain soaked Chen Ge’s shirt. After a long time of chasing, he finally saw the next bus stop.

“Someone is waiting for the bus?” Chen Ge clearly saw that there was a middle-aged man standing at the next stop. He was wearing a winter coat, a scarf, a hat, and a mask to cover his entire face. The bus pulled up to the stop and started to decelerate. Before it parked fully, the door opened.

The driver seemed to wave at the man, telling him to get on the bus. The middle-aged man looked confused but got on the bus after hesitating for a moment. This little interaction enabled Chen Ge to drastically close the distance between himself and the bus.

“This is my chance! The purpose of this hearse seems to be to transport the special passengers waiting at the bus stops to a certain place, so if there’s ‘someone’ waiting at the platform, it will stop.” The middle-aged man was still confused after he got on the bus. The bus had continued moving toward the next stop.

The cold rain hit Chen Ge’s face. The buildings on the side turned unfamiliar and strange. The rain became heavier, but none of that was going to stop Chen Ge. Ever since obtaining the black phone, he had not failed a mission.

“If this was any other mission, I might have given up already, but this is related to the unlocking of the other missions in Eastern Jiujiang, so I have to succeed!” Chen Ge was placing his life on the line. Riding an e-bike to chase after a hearse at midnight, a normal person would never do something like that.

After crossing several junctions, Chen Ge saw the next stop. There was a strange figure standing there. His body movement was extremely uneven, giving off the feeling that he might topple over at any moment. The bus decelerated as it flew into the platform, and the doors opened.

The strange figure who was squatting on the ground noticed something and was hesitant. The atmosphere inside the bus was strange, so he did not hop on immediately. A passenger opened the bus window to wave at him, but the strange figure could not understand it. This short hesitation made Chen Ge’s day. He stepped on the pedal and rushed forward. After a short interaction, the strange man eventually got on the bus.

The driver seemed to have noticed the approaching Chen Ge. He skipped the broadcast inside the bus, closed the doors, and sped away.

“Soon! If there’s a passenger at the next stop, I should be able to catch up to it!”

Chen Ge pretended not to notice the fuel and gave it his all. Several minutes later, the third bus stop appeared in the distance.

A couple was standing at the platform, their bodies glued tightly together. The bus pulled up to the stop, and the doors opened. The driver shouted through the door. The man prepared to get on the bus, but the woman stopped him. She tried her best to make him stay and even started crying.

There was conflict between the two. Earlier, they had been sweet as honey, but in the blink of an eye, they started to argue. The man said something like, it was already the seventh day, so they had to leave. He gripped the handle on the door, but the woman refused to let him go and even started to bite the man.

"This is my chance!" Chen Ge saw this from afar and became excited. There was not much fuel in the e-bike. If he missed this chance, it would all be over. The couple was still arguing. The driver inside the bus felt like he was about to go insane. He glared at the couple and started to yell at them.

Seeing that Chen Ge was not far away, he decided not to wait anymore and directly closed the doors. However, this time, the man was determined to get on the bus, and he used his body to stop the door from closing. The woman yanked him out, but the man held onto the handle inside the door and refused to let go.

The driver grew agitated. He almost stood up to give the man a kick. The couple continued to tussle, the driver screamed, and the other passengers' expressions all changed. They could feel something.

The man blocked the door, but the driver could not wait anymore. He started the engine, but at that moment, everyone inside the bus heard the sound of electric whirring. It did not come from inside the bus.

"Finally, I caught up to you!" A growl came from outside the bus. Chen Ge rode past the bus and parked the e-bike before the bus. His palms were wet with sweat. The fuel was running out, and he had almost failed the mission.

Standing by the door, Chen Ge did not waste his energy arguing with the driver. He reached into his bag to take out the hammer.

The arguing couple saw the scary weapon and immediately turned docile.

“Don’t worry, it’s because of two of you that I could catch the bus, so I will treat you well.” Chen Ge raised the hammer and looked at the driver, who was sweating. “Are you going to open the door on your own, or do you want me to open it for you?”

The driver’s Adam apple moved and unwillingly opened the bus’ front door.

“You’re driving a public bus, and everyone has the right to take public transport, so why are you discriminating against me?”

Under the watchful gazes of all the passengers, Chen Ge picked up the e-bike and told the man, “Brother, do you mind lending me a hand?”

The man was rather confused, but he still followed Chen Ge’s order and hauled the e-bike into the bus.

“You two, hop on as well.” Chen Ge told the couple.

The man wanted to reject, but Chen Ge grabbed his sleeve. “Don’t worry. With me here, the driver will not dare bully you.”

The man's body was glued to his girlfriend, and Chen Ge pulled on his sleeve. He stood before the front door of the bus and uttered with some regret, "How about you give me some time to think about it?"

"You've helped me a lot tonight, and I'll need to thank you personally." Before the man could say anything, Chen Ge pulled him and his girlfriend onto the bus. The door closed, and the bus continued to move. Hearing the robotic and cold announcement, the man and his girlfriend felt equally chilly.

After dropping in the fare, the couple shuffled to the back of the bus under the driver's venomous gaze. However, Chen Ge held the e-bike and stood next to the driver. He turned his head to look at the man but did not say anything.

Cold sweat slid down the driver's face. He was wearing an old uniform. His hands gripped the steering wheel so tightly that the back of his palms were pulsing with green veins.

"Are you okay? You don't look so good."

"I'm fine, it's just an old illness." The driver avoided Chen Ge's gaze and kept his eyes on the road. "Er... please move to the back of the bus. Our company has a rule that prohibits the driver from talking with passengers when the bus is moving."

"The company has a rule to prevent you from conversing with the passengers? Then does your company have rules that stop you from accepting passengers at night?" He had almost failed the mission. Chen Ge had chased the bus for three stations before he finally got on, so he was still irked at that.

The driver thought about it and forced out an excuse. "I saw you on the e-bike, and I thought you were rushing to the bus stop to hide from the rain, so I didn't stop."

"That does sound reasonable." Chen Ge silently shoved the hammer back into his bag. He looked at the driver and nodded meaningfully. "What's your name?"

"Tang Jun." The driver had a feeling that he had been targeted, and his legs kept shaking.

"Not bad." The driver treated his passengers well, and his mind was active. He had a great sense of self-preservation. Was this not the type of ghost that Chen Ge was looking for?

Chen Ge did not trouble the driver anymore and moved to look at the other passengers on the bus.

Other than the couple who sat at the back and Chen Ge himself, there were eight other passengers on the bus. One was the man who was smothered in thick clothing. He was wearing a hat and a mask, so only his eyes were revealed. Sitting next to the man was the person who had gotten on at the previous stop. His limbs were uncoordinated like a toy that had seen better days.

Other than those passengers whom Chen Ge had seen get on the bus, there were four women in patients' garbs. They sat next to the window and had their heads lowered. The long, black hair covered their faces, and they looked quite scary.

Chen Ge scanned them with his gaze, and his eyes eventually fell on a middle-aged woman who sat on the third row. The woman looked so ugly and so fat. She was holding the hand of a young boy who sat next to her. The boy looked around four or five. He was leaning against the woman. No matter how much the bus shuddered, he did not open his eyes.

He doesn't look like he's asleep but feels more like he's unconscious.

This was Chen Ge's first time on the bus. The situation inside the bus was different from what Xiao Gu had described. He did not see any high schooler or men who were drenched. The only one that matched was the middle-aged woman.

Is the boy next to her the red raincoat woman's child?

Chen Ge was not sure because the description provided by Xiao Gu regarding the child was different from this boy.

Could the woman have kidnapped another child from Eastern Jiujiang?

That thought flashed across Chen Ge's mind. He parked the e-bike nicely and walked to the back of the bus. The couple hid far away from him, but they did not expect Chen Ge to come to them. The couple nudged deeper into the seat awkwardly, and their bodies did not once separate from each other.

"This is a public space, why don't you act more normally?" Chen Ge sat down next to the man like he could not see the other empty seats on the bus. "Brother, thanks for your help earlier."

The man did not know what Chen Ge was up to, so he smiled at Chen Ge politely.

Once he got a closer look, Chen Ge realized that there were burn marks underneath the man's neck, and the scary scars were a huge contrast to his smooth skin and handsome face. Xiao Gu seemed to have run into this couple before, but back then, they did not get on the bus.

"What's with the two of you?" Chen Ge asked. "You were so sweet at the station, but once the bus showed up, you started arguing."

"I wanted to move to Eastern Jiujiang, but she didn't want to, so we started arguing." The man's voice was hoarse like his windpipe had been scorched by flames.

"What is so good about Eastern Jiujiang? It's far more comfortable to live in Western Jiujiang. Once you've tried living there, I swear you'll fall in love with it." Chen Ge stared at the other passengers and did not let his guard down too much. The Hearse was a two-star scenario, so the difficulty was similar to Mu Yang High School. Even though there was no Red Specter, it was still quite dangerous for Chen Ge.

"Western Jiujiang?" That was not an option within the man's plan, but he was too cultured to deny Chen Ge's suggestion, so he said absent-mindedly, "I'll definitely go take a look if there's a chance."

"You won't regret it." Chen Ge revealed a kind smile. "If you don't mind me asking, what do the two of you do for a living?"

The man lowered his head slightly like he did not want to talk about it, but the woman next to him said, "He was my violin tutor. My dad hired him from overseas with a high payment."

“You know how to play the violin?” Chen Ge’s eyes lit up immediately. This was a talent!

The man touched the woman to stop her from talking, but the woman seemed to have been reminded of something sad and gripped the man’s hand tightly, refusing to let go. Her nails had cut into the man’s flesh, but the wound did not bleed. “Compared to the violin, he’s better at lying and cheating.”

“What are you talking about?” The man’s voice turned severe. “I’ve never lied to you; I just wanted you to give me more time.”

The woman looked the man in the eye. She moved her gaze away after a while. “It doesn’t matter anymore. After all, now we’re finally together, and no one will be able to separate us again.”

Chen Ge listened patiently. He preferred a storied life. A conflict-filled experience would give birth to a different relationship, and a strong relationship would be able to touch other people.

Taking out his phone, Chen Ge searched for the news in Jiujiang. The keywords were ‘couple’ and ‘fire’, and he soon found what he was looking for.

After the last investor for Ming Yang Residence killed himself, his only daughter committed suicide with her violin tutor at Li Wan Mall. The police originally suspected that it was the company worker who committed this crime. This had been big news at the time when it happened.

Reading the message on the phone, the way Chen Ge looked at the couple next to him changed. Ming Yang Residence was built for ghosts, and all three investors died; there had to be a bigger secret behind it. Chen Ge even suspected that the three investors were possessed by the scary shadow. That was the only explanation for them focusing on an abandoned site at the fringe of Li Wan City.

The deaths of the three investors probably have something to do with the shadow. The shadow will stop at nothing to reach its goal, and he killed off all the people once they outlived their use; this shadow sure is cruel.

After discovering the couple's identity, Chen Ge saw them in a new light.

The man insisted on getting on the bus and prepared to head to Li Wan City probably because he had overheard some news, but the woman refused to get on the bus. She probably had her own reasons as well. They had different thoughts, but their bodies were joined together when they committed suicide, so the conflict caused them to stay at the bus stop. If not for Chen Ge, they probably would not have gotten on the bus.

This couple will help me understand Li Wan City and Ming Yang Residence better. Looks like I'll need to treat them more than just simple employees.

For the time being, Chen Ge was more interested in the other passengers.

Tonight, I'm destined to get away with plenty of reward.

Chen Ge liked to challenge this type of low difficulty mission. They could just sit around the table and solve the problem, how nice. The couple argued among themselves, and Chen Ge carried his bag to leave the last row. He sat down next to the man with uneven coordination.

“Brother, how are you doing?” Chen Ge hugged his backpack and looked at the man.

The head turned awkwardly, and the man paused for a long time before realizing that Chen Ge was talking to him. He raised his hand to gesture for a while. Seeing the confusion on Chen Ge’s face, he pointed at his mouth and then waved his hands.

“A mute?” Chen Ge did not expect such a passenger, so he bowed slightly. “I’m sorry.”

The man waved his hands again. The tip of his finger touched the back of Chen Ge’s arm—it was warm.

The hand is harm? This is a living person?

Narrowing his eyes, Chen Ge used his Yin Yang Vision. He failed to capture anything off about this man. He should be someone who got on the bus accidentally like Xiao Gu and Huang Ling.

However, after thinking about it, Chen Ge realized that his assessment was not so accurate. The bus arrived at the station at 11:30 pm—who would wait for a bus at a time like that?

Chen Ge stared at the man for a long time and slowly noticed the problem. The man’s IQ seemed to be stunted. His throat could make noises, but he did not know how to speak. A mentally-challenged person taking a hearse to go to Li Wan City at night, was he really dumb or faking it?

Taking out his phone, Chen Ge opened his contact page. “It’s very dangerous for you to be alone outside at night like this. Where are you heading? Why don’t I go with you? This is my phone number.”

The man did not quite to get what he was saying; he only knew how to shake his hands. Chen Ge looked at the man’s attire. His clothes looked unwashed, and his trousers were ragged. This image really did not fit a murderous culprit.

Unable to communicate, Chen Ge tried several times before giving up. He planned to finish the Hearse’s mission and followed the man to Li Wan City to see what he was up to. If he was problematic, then Chen Ge would detain him immediately. If he was just a normal person, Chen Ge would follow him as well to prevent him from being ambushed by ghosts.

At night, Li Wan City would be hiding many things. Under the influence of the door, the town had become the place where the two worlds overlapped.

Standing up, Chen Ge walked down the aisle. The passengers looked at him, but none said anything. The driver did not breathe a word, only focusing on driving to the last stop. Stopping next to the man in many layers, Chen Ge studied the man. “Aren’t you hot from wearing so much?”

The man raised his head to look at Chen Ge. Then he lowered the rim of his cap and said coldly, “I’m fine.”

He was covered up by thick clothes. With the cap, gloves, and mask, only his eyes were revealed.

“Are you sick?” Chen Ge used Yin Yang Vision, and he realized that this man looked like a living person as well.

How come the humans act more strangely than ghosts?

Chen Ge sat down next to the man. He could sense coldness coming from the man, a coldness that radiated from his body. Chen Ge had seen this situation before. In Coffin Village, the body temperature of the old lady who had been the well ghost’s friend for several decades had dropped over the years, and in the end, it was only with the ghost’s help that she managed to maintain her body temperature.

Did this mean the man had constant interactions with ghosts?

Chen Ge could not get a good look of the man’s face. He was unable to tell anything from just the eyes and voice.

When they got on the bus, the driver did not stop them. This means that the driver did not sense any threat from them. Even if they have a trump card, it’s not stronger than Zhang Ya.

Realizing that, Chen Ge relaxed and leaned against the chair. He kept glancing to his side, and he noticed some useful information from certain clues.

The scarf around the man’s neck was knitted from wool. The edge of the hem was messy. The end was coming loose. Normally, just like knitting a braid, the edges should have been brought back into the hem. Chen Ge had done something similar when he made the clothes for his mannequins at the Haunted House. They looked flawless.

But the scarf was obviously less than perfect. The person who had knitted the scarf was probably an amateur. From the design of the scarf, this was probably from at least ten years back. Furthermore, even on the bus, the man did not take the scarf off. This thing was very important to him—this normal-looking scarf was something special to him.

Lastly, the man's voice when he spoke. Chen Ge believed that the man to be around forty. He likely had a wife who loved him a lot, and his wife had probably died, perhaps in a car accident. The man's body was cold. Like Chen Ge, he had probably stayed with a ghost for a long time.

Combining all the clues, Chen Ge believed that the man had a ghost who accompanied him always, and that ghost was his wife.

Chen Ge was only speculating since he did not have actual proof, but compared to the man's identity, he was more curious about why the man was going to Li Wan City at night.

Most of the ghosts I've met in Western Jiujiang were trying to consume each other. The ghosts in Eastern Jiujiang seem to be different.

Being stared by Chen Ge for a long time, the man tightened the collar of his jacket and coughed lightly. “Do we know each other?”

His voice was clear and full of stories like he had witnessed many things in his life and had already seen through the vicissitudes of life.

Chen Ge did not expect the man to suddenly speak. He paused for a beat before answering the man’s question. “You look very much similar to a friend of mine. The presence is almost the same. Have we met somewhere before?”

The man turned his head away. There was a trace of tiredness in his eyes. “You’ve probably got the wrong person.”

This was Chen Ge’s first meeting with the man; he said these things only because he wanted to chat further with the man to obtain more valuable information. The man was silent for quite some time. He looked at Chen Ge, and after another bout of hesitation, he raised his hand to remove the mask from his face.

He had a tall nose. His skin was pale and lips purple. After the man took off the mask, he coughed heavily. “You’ve got the wrong person; I’m not the person you’re looking for.”

Then, he put the mask back on. There was a pool of indescribable emotions in his eyes when he added, “That is because I have no friends.”

The man was not afraid of Chen Ge. He was a passenger who had gotten on the bus, and he was still breathing. He did not know what was hiding inside Chen Ge’s shadow. Perhaps in his eyes, Chen Ge was no different from the other passengers. Chen Ge wanted to get to the bottom of the events in Eastern Jiujiang and also wanted to bring all the ghosts on the hearse back to his Haunted House. However, out of his expectations, there were two living passengers on the bus that night.

He did not want to expose his secret, so he did not do anything that was too out of line in front of the two living passengers. Therefore, he had a change of plan. He was going to keep a good profile. After they arrived at Li Wan City and the two surviving passengers got off the bus, then he was going to have a good chat with the other passengers. He sat in his seat obediently. Chen Ge moved his eyes away from the man and looked out the window.

The rain fell on the glass. The buildings on the sides were already blurred beyond recognition. They were surrounded by darkness. The bus that they were on was like a small island floating on a piece of dark sea.

The car suddenly became very quiet. The man realized that Chen Ge had stopped talking after he conversed with him, and he thought that he had misspoken and offended Chen Ge. He placed both of his hands on his knees and suddenly asked Chen Ge in a whisper, "Did you take this bus to find that friend of yours?"

Chen Ge's eyes started to focus. The expression on his face started to change like the man had guessed the secret hiding in his heart. There was some uncertainty, some pain, and some self-blame. Nodding slowly, Chen Ge turned to look at the man next to him. "How did you know that?"

"All the passengers on this bus have their own story and secret, or else we would not have purposely taken this bus after midnight."

"Listening to your tone, it sounds like this is not the first time you have taken this bus." Chen Ge's lips moved to reveal a smile that was similar to the one that he had when he got on the bus. However, there was a deep pain in his eyes, and those who saw it would feel sorry for him.

"I took this bus on Route 104 to go to work every day for almost twenty years." The man talked very slowly like he had not spoken to someone for a very long time and needed time to get used to using his voice. "At the time, the unit that I worked at was rather busy, and there were not enough people to go around. I always had to work late, so I would always take the last bus home. Initially, I quite liked taking the last bus. There would not be too many people, so it was very quiet. But after some time, looking at the darkened buildings by the roadside, the loneliness within my heart started to grow.”

“Unit? What was your occupation in the past?”

“I was a doctor, a doctor at the burn unit.” The man stressed the term ‘burn unit’. A ripple crossed his eyes like he was reminded of something.

“Burn unit?” Chen Ge had only interacted with psychologists in the past, so he was not familiar with the burn unit.

“Surgery, skin transplantation, recovery, those are our job,” the man said in a casual tone, but Chen Ge could hear the heaviness behind his words. The man also noticed the extreme pain in Chen Ge’s eyes. He seemed to see his own shadow reflected in Chen Ge, and he subconsciously treated Chen Ge as a kindred spirit.

After that brief conversation, the two became quiet again. After some time, Chen Ge opened his lips to ask, “Since you’re taking this bus, are you also looking for someone?”

The man nodded slightly, and his gloved hands fell on the scarf.

Finding the opening and asked in a nonchalant manner, “Was it your wife who knitted you this scarf?”

Hearing that, the man halted for a moment. He moved his hand away from the scarf before slowly shaking his head.

“It’s not from your wife?” The reality was not as Chen Ge expected. Now he was curious. “Do you mind telling me your story?”

The rain increased in intensity and fell on the window, creating a crescendo. The man was silent before removing his mask to take a deep breath. “The patients at a burn unit are different from other units. They lack skin, a face, and even the shape of a normal human being. When I was doing my residency, I really thought I’d entered hell. However, I slowly got used to the horror, the stench, and the decay.

“At the time, I really thought that I’d become desensitized to everything, and when I faced the patients, I would not get too emotional.

“That was true until I was thirty and ran into a patient who was fourteen. She was still a child, and her back had been severely scalded. I used half an hour before I could separate her clothes from her skin. The girl was very quiet, and she did not make any noise or even cry.

“To prevent possible complications to her growing brain, I did not apply full sedation. When I was operating on her back, the girl just opened her eyes and looked at me. Her back and her face were like two extremes. I consoled her just like how I consoled my other patients.

“After dealing with all the wounds, I went in search for the adult who brought her to the hospital. There were some follow-up details that I needed to tell them, but after some asking around, I realized that it was the neighbor who brought her to the hospital. The wounds on her body were not because of an accident; it was her parents who did that to her.

When the man spoke, he would cough occasionally. His physical condition was ailing.

“The girl’s father had serious violent tendencies. Her mother was a deaf and mute; she could barely take care of herself. The police detained her mother for a month. In the end, it was her mother who went to the police station to beg for mercy. After all, the whole family depended on her father for survival.

“During the period of her recovery, I accompanied her daily. The child was like a wild flower blooming by the roadside. Being by her side, I, someone who had gotten used to the ugliness of the world, felt a sense of happiness and joy.

“About two months after her discharge from the hospital, I received a phone call from an unknown number. It was her voice on the other end. Unable to withstand her father’s actions after he got drunk, she decided to run away from home. I took her in, hiding that fact from the police and her family.

“I know that it was wrong of me to do so, but I couldn’t imagine what would happen to her if I sent her back.”

At this point, the man paused. Seeing that the expression on Chen Ge’s face did not change, he continued. “When she was twenty, she confessed to me. At the time, I was thirty-six. We skipped the romance; we did not register at the necessary department. We held a small wedding, for just the two of us.

“The five years that followed was the happiest period of my life, but the pressure that came was immeasurable.

“When I was forty-one, her parents found her. Humiliation, beating, and scolding came. They created chaos at her school and at my hospital. Life suddenly changed. Rumors are a very scary thing. I was able to withstand it, but she gave up.

“When I took the last bus home that day, I called her several times, but no one answered. I reached home and opened the door; the dishes that she had cooked were laid out on the table. Beside them was a long letter that she had written for me. In the end, I found her inside the bathroom. Her body was soaked inside the water, and she was already gone.”

The man’s face was startlingly white, and the coughing became more severe. Chen Ge reached out to pat him on his back.

“Thank you.” The man did not put the mask back on. The tiredness in his eyes could not be hidden anymore. “Actually, all the passengers on this bus have their own stories. In the morning, everyone is busy, so the stories are well-hidden amid the hustle and bustle. At night, these helpless, pained, and despairing people take this bus to head to the last stop.”

From the way that the man told the story, he did not seem to realize that the other passengers were ghosts, or perhaps he already knew that but treated them as people.

“Do you know anything else?”

“I know too much. Like that mute next to us. I’ve met him before.” There was a pity in the man’s voice. “He is mentally challenged and doesn’t know how to speak. He was a worker at a supermarket. He often gets bullied by others but smiles back at them, thinking they’re saying good things about him.”

“Then why would he get on this bus? An innocent person wouldn’t get involved with these negative things.” Chen Ge was confused.

“He’s going to the last stop to find his daughter.” The man did not have the heart to continue anymore. “Due to a certain reason, someone reached out to a gang of ruffians to bully his daughter. They scorched her palms with cigarettes and pulled out her hair, and the camera even caught them doing worse thing to the girl. The girl did not tell her father because she did not want to worry him. However, in the end, the pressure was too much for the girl to bear, and she ended her life.”

“School bullying?” Chen Ge’s eyes darkened. These things really did happen; he had personally witnessed it before. “Did he call the police? How did the police handle this?”

The man next to them was mentally challenged, and his limbs were uncoordinated. He would even trip on himself when he was just out walking. Someone needed to help him fight for justice.

“Call the police?” The man smiled darkly. “The man who is mentally-challenged, the mute, the man who has trouble even walking, knocked out the bunch of the ruffians and the culprit and dragged them to an abandoned building in Eastern Jiujiang. Then, he doused the place with fuel and burned them all in a large fire.”

“He’s not physically capable, and he’s mentally challenged. How did he manage to do all that?”

“The police had the same question, so even today, the case is still open. The murderer has not been found.” The doctor and Chen Ge turned to look at the man at the same time. He sensed their eyes on him, and the man turned around to smile blankly at them.

“Using violence to stop violence, it will only lead to more problems. The heart that is already broken from pain will have trouble resisting the pressure that comes after taking revenge. He might go from one extreme to another.” Chen Ge could not judge the father’s actions. If he put himself in the father’s shoes, he could not guarantee what he might do.

“An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. I think it’s quite fair. Let’s not talk about him anymore. I’ve seen more serious cases on this bus compared to him” the doctor said. “There was one night when it was raining heavily. After I got on the bus, I saw a young man in a well-made suit get on. He looked so energetic and bright. He stood out easily from the rest of the passengers, but underneath that surface hid a very broken mind.”

“What is the story about him?”

“The young man was once a wedding host. He was very popular, and he had hosted several hundred weddings even though he had only worked in the field for a few years. Finally, it was his turn to get married. He dressed up nicely to welcome the bride, but they got into a car accident on their way back from the wedding.

“The bride died on the spot. Even though he survived, his face was ruined. The company politely requested him to quit. After that, he changed field to become a funeral designer. When his service was needed, he would help people design the funeral, and when he was free, he would look over the graveyard.

“That’s quite normal, but in our conversation, he accidentally revealed some information. When the night was quiet and there was no one around, he would help the dead bodies connect the dots and help them with Minghun, and of course, he would be the host.”

The story told by the man was rather scary. “He came on the bus to find his wife, and then he prepared to finish the wedding that he was owed.”

After hearing the story of the doctor from the burn unit, the mentally-challenged father, and the wedding host, Chen Ge realized the bus on Route 104 was different from what he had imagined. The bus seemed to have become a route for the living humans in Jiujiang to use to enter the darker side of the city. People from all walks of life used it to find their last hope.

Chen Ge did not know how to tell the doctor from the burn unit that while everyone treated this bus as their last hope, they were destined to fail. This was because the last stop of this bus was made from the deepest pain and despair.

Chen Ge even suspected that the culprit in Eastern Jiujiang made this bus to collect despair and various negative emotions.

The ghost stories society created so many ghost stories to collect despair and negative emotions; the thing behind the door needs stuff like this. Other than that, only those living with extreme pain and despair can become vessels for ghosts.

There were humans and ghosts on the last bus. They sped toward the last station with the last piece of hope, but the world that welcomed them would be one of endless despair.

I cannot allow this to continue anymore. Looks like I'll need to drive this bus away. Perhaps I can use this to open a new path that leads directly to the Haunted House.

The strange living passengers on the bus reminded Chen Ge of the game that he had played at Fan Chong's home. Inside the game, other than Red Specters and other ghosts, there were many crazed murderers. Chen Ge now suspected that these murderers had once been living passengers on this very bus heading down Route 104.

The whole town will be filled with baleful spirits and crazed murderers. The culprit in Eastern Jiujiang is much crazier than the ghost stories society.

After hearing the doctor's stories, Chen Ge understood that every passenger on the bus had their own sad past. They had secrets buried inside their heart, and the last stop that the bus was heading toward in the middle of the night was for that last piece of hope. This was a bunch of sad people—Chen Ge wondered if he should tell them the truth.

If he did not, they could still try to survive with that bit of hope, but if he did, these passengers might collapse from losing that last hope.

The final destination of the hearse is Li Wan City, the place that is influenced by the world behind the door. It is filled with evil and despair. All their effort is destined to be in vain. I cannot allow them to sink deeper into this abyss. These people deserve to be treated better.

Telling them the truth might cause them to collapse, but if he also provided them with new hope, then things would be different. After giving it some thought, Chen Ge decided to use his own method to help them.

The doctor noticed that Chen Ge had started to space out, so he asked, "What are you thinking about?"

Chen Ge did not answer. His brain was turning and the stories of Wang Qi, Xu Yin, and even Doctor Gao appeared in his mind. He could fool them easily by taking these people's experiences as his own.

"It's fine if you don't feel like sharing it. Perhaps we might see each other again on this bus." The man's eyes scanned Chen Ge, and his lips moved slowly. "This is your first time on this bus, right?"

"Yes." Chen Ge nodded.

The doctor nudged closer to Chen Ge and lowered his voice. "When you arrive at the place and someone asks you to choose between giving and accepting, remember to choose accepting.”

“What do you mean?” Chen Ge noticed the problem easily. “I just want to find my friend, and I need to give or accept something? Brother, what is really at the last stop?”

The doctor turned his head and looked around before he spoke. “There is a ghost apartment in the small town. You can hear the voice of the person you’re looking for inside the building. If you wish to meet them, then you have to give up something.”

Chen Ge memorized what the doctor said in his heart. He had revealed some important information—there was a ghost apartment in Li Wan City. He answered back in whisper, “Brother, I just want to see my friend. Do I need to give up something for that?”

“There is no free meal in this world. If you want to meet your friend, then you have to either accept something or give up something.” The doctor was a kind-hearted person. He removed the glove and pulled up the sleeve. There was a red thread around his wrist. “This is to ward against evil. Whenever I enter the ghost apartment, I choose to accept. Every time I leave, there is a certain heaviness on my shoulders like something is on my back, following me out.”

Chen Ge knew what kind of acceptance the doctor was referring to. No wonder the doctor was radiating coldness and was so weak. The culprit used these despairing people to feed the ghosts, to use them as vessels.

This was similar to the members of the ghost stories society, but there was a small difference. These passengers had no idea that their bodies had become homes for ghosts and that their emotions had become food for ghosts. They had no power to control the ghost and could only accept everything passively.

“Then what happens when you choose to give? Why won’t you let me pick that?”

“That’s what the father next to us chose. Initially, you only needed to give up your nails or hair, but as time progresses, the things that you need to give up become worse, like teeth, fingers, your conscience, and the kindness in your heart.” The doctor’s voice was low. If Chen Ge did not have Ghost Ear, he would not have been able to hear it.

“Even the conscience can be given up?”

“They will have to go to the small town to do some things like stealing, mugging, or killing some things. After you choose giving, you’ll realize that you’ll slowly become someone that you cannot recognize.” The doctor saw how curious Chen Ge was, and the lad did not look the least afraid, so he did not want to explain anymore. “You only needed to remember that those who chose to give, after they have given everything, will stay inside that building.”

“Meaning, in the end, they will give up themselves?” Without heart, humanity, and memory, they had lost their identity. Chen Ge realized that these people whom the doctor mentioned were similar to the crazed murderers inside the game. They were cultivating darkness and highly aggressive.

If the game represents the world behind the door in Li Wan City, then those who chose to give probably end up being sent into the door.

Those who chose to accept became vessels for monsters and were slowly being consumed; those who chose to give eventually became monsters behind the door.

Chen Ge compared the methods of the culprit in Eastern Jiujiang and the ghost stories society. The society had people control the ghosts to investigate how to take control over the ‘door’, but the situation in Eastern Jiujiang was completely different. The culprit had the ghosts control the people and then continued to feed the ‘door’ nutrients—this made the already open door more chaotic in nature.

If Doctor Gao was the epitome of both rationality and madness, then the culprit at Eastern Jiujiang was a complete monster. They no longer viewed human beings as human beings and tried their best to ruin everything that was good about humanity.

This sure is a scary enemy. Chen Ge understood many things from his conversation with the doctor, and he slowly calmed down. The shadow at the fresh water plant managed to cross swords with the healing Zhang Ya. Could the shadow’s body really be an existence above Red Specter?

Chen Ge would run every time that he saw a Red Specter before this, but with Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin’s growth, he had overcome his fear of Red Specters. However, something scarier than that had appeared soon after.

He had no idea how powerful the enemy was. Thinking about the fact that his parents had disappeared in Eastern Jiujiang, Chen Ge suddenly felt unsettled. He looked at the e-bike parked in the middle of the aisle, and he grumbled to himself, “Have I been a bit too high profile recently?”

The woman in the raincoat was a Red Specter, and she knew that her child was on the bus, but she still did not dare get on the bus—this went to show her terror due to the culprit. I’ll need to reassess the enemy’s ability since they are able to scare a Red Specter.

Chen Ge grumbled to himself. The doctor next to him thought he was spooked by the stories he scared so he consoled him. “You’ll be fine if you choose to accept. Perhaps you’ll be able to see her before the burden becomes too much.”

The doctor’s wish was really simple. Chen Ge did not want to see the kind man walk step by step into the darkness, and he decided to use his own method to save these people. “Actually, I know another way that you might be able to meet them, and you don’t need to pay such a horrid price.”

“What kind of way?” The doctor’s brow rose. He was interested.

Turning around to look the doctor in the eye, Chen Ge said, “Have you heard about the ghost stories society?”

“What is that?” The doctor frowned. From the name alone, he felt like the society was not that friendly.

“A support group that is formed through mutual support. The members are people like us, people with stories.” Chen Ge wanted to say that it was a support group for mental patients, but he realized how that sounded, so he changed his mind.

“I’m not used to crowds.” Various rumors had forced his lover to her death, so ever since then, the doctor did not like to communicate with other people. The only reason that he talked so much to Chen Ge was because he was the one who had approached Chen Ge, and he felt the passengers on the bus might have worse stories than he did.

The doctor denied the offer. Chen Ge did not force him. After all, anyone would be suspicious when they were invited to join a strange society.

“If you ever find yourself unable to carry the burden anymore but you still wish to see your wife, you can call me.” Chen Ge left his phone number with the doctor. The doctor thought that he was weird, but he still memorized Chen Ge’s number.

“Brother, you mentioned the ghost apartment at Li Wan City earlier, can you tell me more details about it?” Chen Ge wanted to find out more information from the doctor. This was also a way to help the doctor.

“You need to search for the building on your own when you arrive at the city. Sometimes...” The bus suddenly lurched to a stop. All the passengers leaned forward, and it also interrupted the doctor.

The e-bike leaned to the side and knocked into a woman who wore a patient’s garb with her head lowered. The black hair covered her face fully. After the bike knocked into her, she maintained her pose,

“I’m sorry. Did it hurt you?” Chen Ge quickly moved the bike back. He looked at the four women in patient’s garbs, and he tilted his head to the side and slowly squatted down. He wanted to see the four women’s faces to confirm their identity. With one hand on the bike and another on the back of the seat, Chen Ge adjusted his angle, but he still could not see the woman’s face. Hair seemed to grow out from the women’s entire head. However, Chen Ge still got away with a clue. He saw the name of the hospital from the woman’s garb.

It was a hospital with four characters, but the first character was blocked. The last three words were ‘Xin Yi Yuan’¹.

Chen Ge cross-referenced with the local hospitals in Jiujiang—the more famous ones were Central Hospital, the People’s Hospital, and Jiujiang’s Female and Children’s Hospital. He could not figure out which hospital had the word Xin in its name.

Why did they leave the hospital in the middle of the night?

These four women were definitely not living humans. When Chen Ge approached them, his hair stood on end on reflex. He had even gotten used to this feeling.

Four ghosts sitting in a row, but why are they heading to Li Wan City? Chen Ge already understood why living humans went to Li Wan City, but he still did not understand why the dead were going to Li Wan City.

I’m already so close to her, but how come they still haven’t responded in the slightest? At least give me a glance.

Ghosts were different from normal humans; he could not just drag any ghost back to the Haunted House. He needed to understand them and observe them for a long time before he felt comforted enough to allow them to reside at the Haunted House.

When Chen Ge wanted to get more information from the four female patients, the announcement rang—they had arrived at the next stop. The doors opened, and the wind carried the rain into the bus. It fell on Chen Ge’s back.

Why is it raining so heavily? How come the weather forecast was so far off?

Chen Ge turned around. He only glanced at the bus stop, but he found himself unable to move his eyes away. The rain fell like the heavens had opened up. A woman in a red raincoat stood alone in the middle of the bus stop. The rain slid down the rim of her cap and wetted her hair.

“Were you the one on the phone with me that day?” Chen Ge stood inside the bus and looked at the woman outside the bus. Hearing this familiar voice, the woman slowly raised her head. A pair of strange-looking eyes looked at Chen Ge through the gap in the hair.

“I promised to find your child within a week, so I risked my life to get on this hearse. I have not forgotten the promise that I’ve made you.” Chen Ge sounded confident and trustworthy. The way that the woman looked at Chen Ge was different from how she looked at Xiao Gu. She stood where she was and did not nudge forward.

The announcement began again. The driver, Tang Jun, saw Chen Ge conversing with the woman outside the bus, and cold sweat slid down his face. He pressed the button to close the door. He hurried to the next station.

“Wait!” Just as the backdoor was about to close, Chen Ge used his backpack to block the door. “I have something I need to do.”

“This... is not so good. Everyone has right to ride the public bus. We can’t ask the whole bus to wait for you alone, right?” The driver was worried that Chen Ge might do something stupid. Whenever he heard Chen Ge’s voice, he would panic.

“You still remember that this is public transport, huh? Then why didn’t you stop to let me get on earlier?” Chen Ge walked toward the front of the bus. He did not argue with the driver anymore but stopped next to the middle-aged woman. The whole bus was looking at Chen Ge, waiting for what he was going to do.

“What do you want?” The large middle-aged woman moved deeper into her seat, and her voice dropped. Chen Ge did not waste time with her; he was not one to drag things out. Since the woman in the red raincoat had shown up, he could not delay the things with her child anymore.

“Is the boy next to you yours?” Chen Ge rarely used this type of tone. It was devoid of emotion and chilling.

“Ye... yes.” The woman placed herself between Chen Ge and the boy to stop Chen Ge from getting closer to the boy.

“I’ll ask you again, is the boy yours?” Under the shocked gaze of the other passengers, Chen Ge took out the hammer from his backpack. The middle-aged woman looked around the bus with a pleading look, but none of them dared say anything.

Her lips opened, and after a long hesitation, she said, “This is my relative’s child. They are working in Jiujiang, and they’re so busy, so I was asked to look after him.”

“So now, he’s your relative’s child?” Chen Ge swung the hammer. “Wake the boy up. I have a few questions to ask him.”

The commotion was so loud, but the boy continued to slumber; he showed no trace of stirring. The middle-aged woman’s face was conflicted. She pushed the boy, but he gave no response. “He’s quite a heavy sleeper...”

“He’s a heavy sleeper, or have you slipped him some drugs?” Chen Ge held the hammer with one hand. “Let me take a look at the child.”

The middle-aged woman’s face slowly lowered. Her expression was changing. She seemed to know that there was no escape. She reached into her pocket to grab something.

“Xu Yin!” Chen Ge did not give her the chance. When he noticed the change of expression on the woman’s face, he immediately summoned Xu Yin. “I’ll repeat myself one last time, give me the child!”

Chapter 542: Get On

The space inside the bus became cold and oppressive like something was standing next to Chen Ge, but he could not see it clearly. The middle-aged woman slowly removed her hands from the pocket, and her body was shaking. Without waiting for another order from Chen Ge, she moved the boy to the seat next to the aisle.

Chen Ge picked up the boy from the seat. He still had some warmth, and Chen Ge could hear the heart beating. The boy was alive.

Why would the woman bring the child to Eastern Jiujiang? Is it because they believe a child has an easier time to become a door-pusher?

Having witnessed many tragedies in Eastern Jiujiang, Chen Ge had noticed that the main characters of these stories were mostly children, but he still had not figured out why yet.

Chen Ge walked to the backdoor. He did not get off nor did he hand the boy over to the woman in the raincoat directly. He had heard Fan Chong say that one of the endings of the game was Xiao Bu being taken by the woman in the red raincoat. The woman was not Xiao Bu's mother, but she had still taken Xiao Bu with her and treated Xiao Bu as her child's replacement.

Chen Ge was unsure whether this ending was good or bad. Compared to death, it was better, but this was unfair to Xiao Bu. This situation that he was facing then was similar to the game. The boy was unconscious, and no one could tell whether he was the woman's child. If he handed the boy to the woman in the raincoat, she would not reject it and would probably treat the boy as her child's replacement.

Touching the boy's face, Chen Ge asked the woman outside, "Is he your child?"

The woman's gaze softened. She did not answer Chen Ge's question but took one step forward.

“Looks like he’s not.” Chen Ge had been staring at the woman. A mother who would stand in the heavy rain to wait for her child would definitely not act so calmly if the child that she had lost had been found. Chen Ge took one step back and placed the boy on the seat next to him.

When the woman in the red raincoat saw that, her mouth that was sewn shut by red threads started to growl. The gentleness in her eyes disappeared instantly, and blood poured out from her eyes. It looked scary.

“I only promised to help you find your child—I did not say I would give you another person’s child.” If this was one month ago, Chen Ge definitely would not have been brave enough to tell a Red Specter off, but things were different now. He was on the hearse, and he had Xu Yin. Even though Zhang Ya was injured, she was not asleep. She could be summoned anytime.

“You don’t look that happy.” Chen Ge held the hammer and looked the woman in the red raincoat up and down. “I’m curious, since you know your child might be on the bus, then why don’t you come in to inspect it yourself? What are you afraid of?”

The lips that were sewn together could not speak. The lips moved, and the blood started to twist. The woman’s emotions were agitated. Chen Ge could see her pain and anger.

“You’ve been standing at the bus stop to look for your child, so did you get separated from him at the bus stop? Your body is injured. After you lost your child, what happened to you when you were searching for him?”

Chen Ge’s words reminded the woman of the past, and the painful images flashed across her mind. The rain fell on her body, and the droplets turned into blood when they hit the floor. In the rain, the woman stood alone at the bus stop, and blood pooled around her.

A dark blood vessel was popping on the pale face. The woman lifted her head. She wanted to open her mouth, and the threads on her lips were slowly being pulled taut. Her face was torn by the action. She took deliberate steps toward Chen Ge. Standing at the door, Chen Ge stood in front of the boy, and he looked at the woman silently. “You’re afraid—I can see the fear in your heart. It’s not that you don’t want to get on this bus, but you’re afraid to do so. You’re fearful of the real owner of this bus, aren’t you?”

A living person was speaking to a Red Specter so calmly about the fear in her heart. This was a very scary thing for the other passengers. The woman ultimately stopped before the door. She knew that the bus belonged to something else, and stepping onto it would be a violation of that something's rules.

"Your child disappeared on this bus, but for some reason, you lack the courage to even step on this bus. How do you expect to find your child like this?" With the other passengers watching him, Chen Ge extended his hand toward the woman. "Get on, we'll look for your child together."

The blood soaked the platform. The woman stopped at the door, and her expression was conflicted. She was a Red Specter in Eastern Jiujiang. If she got on the bus, she would break the contract that she had with another being, and they would end up in an opposing situation. Chen Ge could see the anxiety and pain within the Red Specter; he took a step forward and placed his hands lightly on the woman's shoulders.

The rain drenched his clothes, but he ignored it. He looked right into the woman's eyes. "Stop hesitating. I'm sure when your child wakes up from his nightmare, the first person that he'll want to see is you."

The driver stared at the backdoor through the rearview mirror. His heart raced as he watched the interaction between Chen Ge and the Red Specter. His leg was hovering over the gas pedal. If they got into a fight or Chen Ge left the bus, he would leave this place immediately. However, what happened next was outside his expectations.

The Red Specter, who was losing her control, started to calm down. She raised one hand to reach into the bus; this was something that had not happened before. The Red Specter had been watching outside the bus, and she had never once touched the bus before.

"Another one is getting on?" The driver's Adam apple shook. He suddenly realized that the lives of all the passengers were on his shoulders, and the pressure was huge.

Under Chen Ge's persuasion, the woman finally made a decision, but just as her hand was about to reach into the bus, the sound of children crying came from both sides of the road. Hearing this, the woman seemed to be reminded of something incredibly scary. The hand that reached out immediately pulled back. Her bloodied eyes looked at Chen Ge. She stopped for several seconds before turning and leaving the bus stop.

The door closed, and the bus continued to move. Chen Ge looked at the empty bus stop and felt quite confused.

He walked to the driver's seat while dragging the hammer. Before he said anything, the driver quickly said, “I don't know anything, I'm just the driver. I swear!”

Since the driver had said that, Chen Ge did not give him more trouble. He put the hammer back into his backpack. He hugged the boy and took his seat next to the doctor.

Well, at least the relationship between the woman in the red raincoat has improved.

Chen Ge turned and saw the doctor looking at his backpack with fear, like he had not recovered from the things that happened earlier.

Chapter 543 - The Disappearing Bus Stop

Chapter 543: The Disappearing Bus Stop

"I'm out and about in the middle of the night by myself. I have to bring something to protect myself in case of danger, right?" Chen Ge gave his explanation.

"You have a point there." After a brief moment of hesitation, the doctor asked, "The members of the society that you mentioned earlier, are they all like you?"

...

"Compared to them, I'm the more rational one."

"You're the more rational one?" The doctor coughed. His body was failing him.

"Yes, call me if you have the time. We can sit down and discuss this slowly." Chen Ge felt like he had good rapport with this good doctor, and the feeling seemed mutual. The bus moved in the rain. It soon arrived at the next station. Chen Ge stood up to glance out the window and did not see the woman in red raincoat.

Where has she disappeared to? Did something happen to her? There were children crying at the previous stop, and I heard that sound at Eastern Jiujiang Fresh Water Plant before. Did the shadow show up earlier?

When the shadow showed up, Men Nan and Xu Yin had appeared to stop Chen Ge. This went to show how scary the shadow was.

I hope that woman will be alright. Chen Ge was worried about the woman in the red raincoat, but he soon traced the thought back to himself. This bus connects Eastern and Western Jiujiang to collect all the despairing souls from the city. The woman merely attempted to break the rules, and something happened. If I drive the whole bus away, will the culprit show up directly?

Chen Ge thought about it and figured the chance of that happening was very low. The culprit is probably busy with something else, or else he would not have used his shadow to handle everything. Then again, there's also a possibility that the shadow itself is the culprit. It has no body, or the body is seriously injured, and everything it's doing is trying to fix its body.

Chen Ge was not going to risk it. He decided to drive the bus away to test the enemy's reaction. Even if it's an existence above a Red Specter, it won't have come to Western Jiujiang to seek me out for no reason, right? If it really comes to that, I'll just hide myself inside the Haunted House until Zhang Ya is fully recovered.

As someone who was optimistic, only a personality like that enabled him to survive against the wave of complicated scenarios. The bus passed several stations before it reached the final destination—Li Wan City.

The bus stop was next to the mouth of West Street. It was very simple. The bus stopped, and to Chen Ge's surprise, the woman in the red raincoat showed up again. However, she looked rather winded like she had just experienced a horrible battle.

The bus stopped at this last bus stop for three minutes, but none of the passengers moved. Three minutes later, under the watchful gaze of the woman in the red raincoat, the bus drove into Li Wan City. The situation was similar to what Chen Ge had experienced in the game. After struggling loose from the woman in the red raincoat's assault, Xiao Bu had gotten onto the last bus and headed into Li Wan City. The blurry buildings became clearer, and the bus trundled down the deserted street. The whole city felt empty; there was no light or sound.

"We've already passed the bus stop. Where are you taking us?" Chen Ge held his backpack and walked to the driver.

Now, whenever he heard Chen Ge's voice, the driver would be scared. "The last stop is inside the town. We haven't reached it yet." He just wanted to finish the route and drop Chen Ge off. However, weirdly enough, he drove around the city for a long time but failed to find the bus stop.

"Are you lost?"

Hearing the annoyance in Chen Ge's voice, the driver started to explain, "I'm not lying to you. There was a bus stop here—it's the last stop—but that place disappeared today." The driver pointed at an empty space next to the junction. "How is it going to benefit me by lying to you? I also wish for all of you to get off my bus as soon as possible, but we have a rule that we can only stop by bus stops, or bad things will happen.”

“If there’s no stop, do you plan to continue driving aimlessly around town?” The doctor stood up. He had been silent because things had nothing to do with him, but now that the bus could not stop, he was unable to get to the ghost apartment to hear his wife’s voice.

“I also want to stop, but I just stop anywhere—something special will get on the bus!” The driver turned the car around. “The only idea that I have now is to return to the earlier stop and park there. If you want to enter Li Wan City, you can walk there.”

The driver glanced at Chen Ge when he spoke—he was worried that Chen Ge might have a different opinion. Reality proved that his worry was founded.

“Just stop here.” Chen Ge pointed at the empty space. In the game, the bus taken by Xiao Bu had stopped there. Everything so far matched the game, so the place where the bus stop should be a piece of empty land.

Once Chen Ge said so, the driver did not even resist and park the bus. “We’ve reached the final stop. Please get off now. I cannot stay here for too long.” Then, he turned to look at Chen Ge with a polite smile. He sighed like a great burden had been lifted. “Have a good journey.”

“Thank you.” Chen Ge held the bag with one arm as he turned toward the driver. “Since we’re here, why don’t we get off together?”

“Together?” The smile froze on the driver’s face. “My job is to transport you all here safely. I still need to drive the bus back, so I can’t accompany you.”

“Just park the bus here, there’s no need to rush.” If there were no living people on the bus, Chen Ge would have taken out his comic and started a massacre. Seeing the persistence from Chen Ge, the driver relented and cursed his back luck internally. He realized that compared to angering Chen Ge, it was better to just follow his orders.

“Fine, I’ll get off with you.” The driver pressed the button, and all the doors opened at the same time. Just as that happened, the four women in patient’s garbs who had been so silent throughout the journey suddenly went mad and rushed out the backdoor with incredible speed. Chen Ge was standing by the driver’s seat, so when he recovered, the four had already disappeared into the dark city.

It was too late to give chase, but Chen Ge did not mind it. Have fun running. After all, I've already found out the name of your hospital. There's nowhere else you could have run off to.

He had Xu Yin look after the backdoor to prevent an accident from happening again. Chen Ge allowed the mentally-challenged father and doctor to get off first. Then he closed the bus doors.

Don't worry, we will have many chances to see each other in the future.

Chapter 544 - The Story of the Driver Ghost

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

After the living humans left, Chen Ge took out his comic to summon all his employees. He did not explain that much and strode directly to the back of the bus. The crowd of ‘people’ swarmed the tight space. The couple was scared. They did not expect to run into something like this. “It will get dangerous here. You should come with me for now.”

Chen Ge did not ask for the couple’s opinion and had Yan Danian pull them into the comic directly. The couple was just stronger lingering spirits—they were similar level with Duan Yue and Ol’ Zhou—so Chen Ge was not worried about them creating trouble.

After dealing with the couple, Chen Ge led his people to surround the driver, Tang Jun.

“Speak, why wouldn’t you let me get on the bus at the bus stops?” The driver did not expect Chen Ge to be so resentful and would not forgive him after they had reached the last stop. The driver cowered into himself, sensing the pressure coming from all sides, and he uttered softly, “Red Specters are not allowed on the bus. The bus is only for despair-filled people and spirits.”

“How did you know that I have a Red Specter with me?” Chen Ge glanced at the driver, but he did not dwell on that and instead asked, “Who asked you to drive this bus?”

“I don’t know,” the driver answered carefully. He had not been surrounded like this before. Without waiting for Chen Ge to ask, he told him everything, “I was just a normal bus driver; I used to drive the last bus on Route 104. Our company had many ghost stories related to this last bus, saying it would run into many strange things, so many people refused to drive it. In the end, the leader had no choice but to offer extra money for those who were willing to drive it. I was rather brave, so I took up the offer.”

“Then, what happened to you?” Chen Ge looked at the driver’s face.

The man was probably not lying.

“Route 104 is very long; it cuts through Jiujiang, joining Eastern and Western Jiujiang. When I reported for work on the first day, the old driver who got off his shift gave me a few pointers.” The driver looked at Chen Ge, and regret overwhelmed him. “He told me, whenever I reached a bus stop, regardless of whether there was anyone on the bus or at the bus stop or not, I have to open both the doors and wait several minutes. Other than that, he warned me from stopping at any place that doesn’t have a bus stop sign and told me to not stay at a bus stop for more than three minutes. The last tip, which was also the most important, was to drive as slow as I can on rainy days.”

The sweat collected on the driver’s face. He kept using the towel on his shoulders to wipe it, but it was no use. After a while, Chen Ge realized that it was not sweat but water. As the conversation continued, the driver’s face paled. His skin started to bloat like it had been submerged in water for a long time.

“I remembered the pointers by heart. For the first few weeks, I followed his orders to the tee. No matter what, I would stop the bus and wait at the bus stop. It was not until one month later that things changed. It was raining that night. After entering Eastern Jiujiang, no one got on the bus.

“I was the only one on the bus. I followed the old driver’s advice for the first few stops, but after a while, I thought, if there was no one on the bus and the bus stops was empty, why should I open and close the doors? It was a waste of time.

“The day was similar to today. The rain continued to pour, and I was in a rush to go home, so when I passed the later bus stops and saw that they were empty, I would drive past them. When I passed the bus stop for the fresh water plant, I suddenly heard someone talking inside the bus. I couldn’t tell for sure what they said, it sounded like they were telling me to stop.

“The world outside was so dark, and I was nowhere near a bus stop, so I did not stop. After driving for a while, I realized that something was wrong. There was no passenger on the bus! So, where did the voice come from?”

At this point, the driver’s shoulders started to shiver. He lowered his head, and his hands gripped his hair. The ‘sweat’ from his forehead slid down his face. “I felt like my whole body was frozen. I raised my head to look at the rearview mirror, and I saw someone standing behind me. His skin was white and bloated; his eyes were popping out of their sockets.”

The driver slowly raised his head. His skin was blanched, and his eyes were popping, similar to his own description.

“In my panic, I turned the steering wheel, and the bus flew into the river.” The driver had a talent for story-telling. After he finished, he glanced at Chen Ge, he realized that Chen Ge did not go on the offensive, so he continued, “I saw myself fall into the water. Then after who knows how long, when I opened my eyes, I realized that I was still on this bus. There was a shadow standing next to me, and it told me that I would get my freedom after ferrying one thousand passengers.”

“The shadow was my size, it felt like my own shadow had come alive. I could not describe its voice, or rather, I forgot all about it after hearing it.” Based on the driver’s tone and expression, he did not seem to be lying.

This ghost sure is something else. It’s much more cunning compared to the other ghosts I’ve faced.

“If you want to investigate that shadow, I can provide you with one extra piece of information.” The driver’s face was expanding and scary—he had shed his disguise. “But you have to promise me one thing.”

“What is it?”

“Let me go.” The driver looked at Chen Ge expectantly. “My family must be worried about me. I want to go back to take a look at them.”

“I will definitely accompany you to go back home. Tell me if you have any other wish, I will do my best to help you fulfill them.” Chen Ge’s attitude softened aplenty; he already treated the driver as one of his own.

“You will follow me home?” The driver had no idea what Chen Ge was up to. He had a feeling that this man before him might go after his family. After a long hesitation, the driver sighed and gave up on his struggle. “I once asked the shadow why it needed me to transport the passengers to Li Wan City. It told me it was rearing something there, and it needs a constant supply of pain and despair.”

“Making a door lose control and sending all the pained souls from Jiujiang to this place just because he’s cultivating something?” Chen Ge remembered what the driver said. He asked a few more questions before pulling the driver into the comic.

The middle-aged woman was the only passenger that remained. She had witnessed Chen Ge’s ‘acts of violence’, and she was shivering like a leaf.

“Don’t waste my time. Tell me everything you know.”

Having seen the passengers disappear one after another, the anxiety in her heart grew.

“I was only responsible for sending the children to Li Wan City; I don’t know about anything else!”

...

“You don’t know about anything? Then I have no reason to keep you around.” Chen Ge had Xu Yin and the other employees surround her. The woman screamed, and her ugly face started to shift. The clothes that looked so old-fashioned started to leak out with blood. They formed into small children’s handprints.

“Let me off the bus!” The voice was hoarse, and the woman’s body creaked and cracked as she expanded in size. Seeing the changes, Chen Ge and the surrounding passengers were calm. They were like visitors watching the beast roar from outside the cage.

“If you want to get off the bus, then you just need to tell me where all the children have been taken.” Chen Ge had promised the woman in the red raincoat to find her child within one week, and three days had already passed.

The woman did not appear to hear Chen Ge’s voice, and she continued to lash out at her surroundings. Interestingly enough, Chen Ge did not seem to be able to witness the changes on the woman. He kept his voice calm and even. “It was you who kidnapped all these children, wasn’t it?”

He pointed at the boy who was still unconscious with an innocent-looking face. The woman seemed to realize that Chen Ge was the center of all the ghosts. Chen Ge had just placed the hammer inside his backpack, and he was empty-handed. She did not hesitate. Her venomous eyes focused on Chen Ge, and she charged forward!

Chen Ge looked at the woman who charged at him, but he did not even pretend to evade. “A half Red Specter, looks like you’re the strongest presence on this two-star mission.”

The woman stopped in the middle of her charge. Her body was frozen due to fear. There was someone else that appeared between her and Chen Ge. The red on the clothes fell like rain. Without an order from Chen Ge, Xu Yin already appeared before him

“The last bus on Route 104 is a two-star scenario, and the strongest enemy here is a half Red Specter. Now that I think about it, there should be a similarly strong presence at Mu Yang High School.” Chen Ge was still hung up on the old headmaster. Considering that he might be a half Red Specter, Chen Ge’s interest heightened. After having Xu Yin detain the woman, Chen Ge did not kill her directly; he planned to hand this woman over to the woman in the red raincoat. “Karma always catches up to you.”

The woman had no idea what Chen Ge was thinking, but seeing the smile on Chen Ge’s face, terror gripped her heart. After putting the other employees away, Chen Ge picked up the unconscious boy and got off the bus. When both his feet touched the ground, the black phone vibrated.

“The mission has been completed?” Chen Ge turned back to look at the bus. The whole bus was empty. At the end of the mission, he had been the last passenger to descend.

“With my current capability, I should be able to challenge a more difficult mission.” Chen Ge was familiar with the changes to his ability. A few months ago, a two-star mission would have been a struggle to even survive, but now, things had completely changed.

“Looks like all my effort so far has paid off.” Chen Ge took out the phone and clicked the new message to read.

“Mission completion rate is one hundred percent! Congratulations for obtaining the hidden item—The last bus on Route 104!

“Last bus on Route 104 (A hearse signifying misfortune and tragedy, it’s involved in many accidents. It can only go on the road on the morning after a rainy night).

“1: Unlock the scenario ‘The Hearse’ inside the Maze of Horror. After unlocking this scenario, the hearse will be unable to leave the Maze of Horror!

“2: Keep the hearse, the vehicle that can only go on the road on the morning after a rainy night. When you pass a bus stop, there’s a chance to attract special passengers.”

After reading the message, Chen Ge chose the second one without hesitation. There would be plenty more scary scenarios but only one hearse, and the special power matched Chen Ge’s desire perfectly. A specific chance to attract special passengers. Once such passengers got on Chen Ge’s bus, there was no chance that they were going to leave the bus after that.

After making his choice, the black phone vibrated again.

“Two-star scenario ‘The Hearse’ has been completed. The Castle of Nightmares will now unlock new Trial Missions!

“Twin Water Ghosts (Big sister tied the rock to my feet, and as my body sunk, I saw a lot of dark water grass dancing in the dam. Scream Factor: 2 stars).

“Ghost Fire (There are constantly weird noises coming from the neighbor’s home, but the place is supposed to be vacant. Scream Factor: 3 stars).

“End of the Tunnel (What is at the end of the tunnel? Scream Factor: 3 stars).

“Ghost Town, Li Wan City (Mummy, I’m Xiao Bu... Scream Factor: 3.5 stars).

“Ghost Fetus (One day, I will become you! Scream Factor: 4 stars).

“The Game of Curse at Xin Hai’s Central Hospital (There’s a game of curse and death going on at this abandoned hospital. Scream Factor: 4 stars. It will only be unlocked after you complete the preceding missions).”

The black phone updated with six new Trial Missions, and the easiest one had a two-star difficulty. The thing that made Chen Ge frown was that the only two-star mission seemed to be underwater.

He knew how to swim, but it was still inconvenient. The mission is called Twin Water Ghosts, so there should be more than one enemy. Also, the mission description is weird—is the water grass that ‘I’ saw actual grass or the hair of dead people?

The difficulty of the missions had increased drastically, and of the two newly unlocked three-star scenarios, he had just heard about the Ghost Fire for the first time while the End of the Tunnel should be related to his previous Nightmare Mission.

Chen Ge had met the Red Specter at the tunnel once, and he felt like this should be the easiest mission. If there’s a chance, I should go and complete this tunnel mission first. Perhaps my Haunted House will be able to welcome a new Red Specter.

It was worth noting that the mission that Chen Ge was currently doing, The Ghost Town, Li Wan City was 3.5 stars. Chen Ge predicted that this was due to the door that had gotten out of control.

After the door went out of control, the difficulty increased to 3.5 stars. Then again, this also means that the situation at Li Wan City was not as scary as a four-star mission!

The last two missions were both four-stars—Chen Ge did not expect that. Eastern Jiujiang was much more dangerous than he had thought.

Now, there are three four-star mission on the list. There’s no need to rush; I need to prepare first.

Chen Ge was calculating the opening date for the new futuristic park. He wanted to do a four-star mission and come out with a big announcement right before the new park opened.

Chapter 546: Persuasion

After the hearse connected Western Jiujiang to Eastern Jiujiang, Chen Ge did not expect the black phone to unlock two 4-star scenarios and one 3.5-star scenario.

The few missions are probably related, and the culprit in Eastern Jiujiang might be hiding at one of the scenarios.

Chen Ge looked at the mission information on the phone and had a hard time calming down.

Xin Hai Central Hospital, I have not heard of this place. And the ghost fetus, there's no way I can tell the mission content from the name alone.

Conflicted, Chen Ge thought about the situation. The previous three-star scenario had led him to face a weird individual like Doctor Gao, then the four-star scenario might have a presence more powerful than a Red Specter. Chen Ge was familiar with the difference between a normal spirit and a Red Specter.

Similarly, the ghost above Red Specter would be far more powerful than a normal Red Specter. Even a top Red Specter like Zhang Ya might not be able to fight them. Chen Ge thought back to all the ghosts that he had encountered since obtaining the black phone to try to speculate the power of a ghost above Red Specter.

Lingering spirits cannot be communicated with—they're just a thought that refuses to leave. They are even afraid of people with too much Yang energy.

Normal baleful Specters will not appear in broad daylight, and they normally possess a certain object for survival. However, rare-type Specters are completely different. Each of them possesses a special power, and even though their spirit might be limited, they are able to toy with human beings with their power.

Above that will be a half Red Specter—these are baleful Specters that have the potential to become Red Specters. All of them are cruel and violent monsters. After finding their heart, half Red Specters will become real Red Specters, and they can control these weird blood threads along with many other weird powers.

I've seen the way Zhang Ya fights people—it was similar to other Red Specters, but the only difference is that her black hair appeared endless, like once touched, you'd be dragged into an endless blackened sea of despair.

Zhang Ya was undeniably the strongest Red Specter that Chen Ge had currently; however, her attack method was still quite singular. She was merely the strongest among the Red Specters, and there was no tactical change about her.

The black blood stain that the ghost stories society obtained from behind the door seems to be useful to Zhang Ya. However, Zhang Ya became obviously more ruthless after she consumed it. If she continues to consume those black blood stain, she might one day run amok.

Regarding this top Red Specter that lived in his shadow, Chen Ge really did not know what kind of attitude he should use to face her.

There's no use cracking my head over it now. I'll think about it when I chance upon the black blood.

Li Wan City's mission was 3.5 stars—it was half a star more difficult than the underground morgue. Zhang Ya was injured, and Xu Yin still had not found his heart. Chen Ge thought about it and decided that it was not yet time to start this mission.

I should try to finish the first few three-star missions first and come back to this mission after I obtain more Red Specters.

Chen Ge looked at the empty space where the bus was parked. The driver had said that there was supposed to be a bus stop there, and he had seen it in the game. However, in real life, the bus stop had disappeared. This went to show many things. The ghosts that were hidden deep inside Li Wan City were probably cautious of Chen Ge as well.

The driver said that his mission is to send living humans to Li Wan City because the shadow is rearing something at Li Wan City. The culprit is probably afraid that I might show up to ruin his plan completely.

The plan had been started several years ago, to siphon all the despair to a small town and then purposely make a door go out of control. To commit to such a large scale, this was definitely more than cultivating a Red Specter.

Chen Ge was suddenly reminded of the many children who had met grisly ends in the game at Lin Wan City. His eyes moved to the four-star Trial Mission—Ghost Fetus. “These two missions are probably related—could the ghost fetus be the thing that the shadow is cultivating in Li Wan City?”

The ghost fetus was rated a four-star mission by the black phone, so there had to be something scary about it. However, Chen Ge currently had too little information to come up with a useful hypothesis.

I need to find Xiao Bu first! Before clearing the game, I shouldn't start the trial mission in Li Wan City.

The game reflected reality, and the plot in the game reflected the actual murders that happened in real life. Chen Ge believe that by completing the game and mastering all the side quests, it would be greatly helpful when he tackled the mission in Li Wan City in real life.

But I'm still lacking power.

His heart was unsettled. The appearance of two four-star scenarios made Chen Ge feel a sense of danger.

I cannot give up any chance to improve the Haunted House's power.

Reminded of something, Chen Ge picked up the unconscious child to return to the bus. Sitting at the driver's seat, Chen Ge tried to operate the bus. He realized that the bus was seriously outdated like it could crumble at any minute.

Stepping on the pedal, Chen Ge turned the bus around. The large Li Wan City had no trace of light. Chen Ge drove the bus alone down the road. He drove the bus to the entrance to Li Wan City. There was a singular red shadow standing at the bus stop by the roadside.

The bus stopped, and Chen Ge had Xu Yin escort the middle-aged lady off the bus. Once the middle-aged lady was carried off the bus, the woman in the red raincoat's eyes turned red immediately, and she almost lost control.

“If you kill here, the clue to your child's location will be lost.” Chen

Ge stood before the woman, the desire to kill that radiated from the woman overwhelmed Chen Ge. "She sent your child into Li Wan City, so we need her to give us the exact location."

The woman slowly calmed down. Her eyes moved from the middle-aged woman to fall on Chen Ge.

This was the first time that Chen Ge had seen the woman's face up close. There were small nicks on her cheeks and neck. Her lips were sewn shut by blood threads, and they would tear whenever she wanted to speak.

"Life sure is hard for you as well, and I sincerely want to help you. I will leave you to deal with this middle-aged woman—I hope you can get the location of your child from her." Chen Ge sighed. "I know that you have your own reason for not entering Li Wan City, but if you wish to find your child, you will have to enter it. I don't ask that you listen to my command—I just want to tell you that I will accompany you to help you find your child."

The woman in the red raincoat was shaken, and Chen Ge added while the iron was hot, "After you get your child's location, you can come find me at Western Jiujiang's New Century Park. I promise you in the capacity of the chairperson of the ghost stories society, no matter how dangerous Li Wan City is, I will accompany you into the city to help you find your child."

After that, Chen Ge had Xu Yin hand the middle-aged woman to the woman in the red raincoat. "I'll wait for your news."

He did not stay at the bus stop but led Xu Yin back onto the bus. The woman's screams came from the bus stop. Blood pooled around the raincoat, and it crawled into the middle-aged woman's body like snakes. Hearing the cries for mercy from the woman, the lady in the red raincoat did not appear happy. Her red eyes looked at Chen Ge on the bus, and the emotions in them were complicated.

Chen Ge did not use the middle-aged woman as a bargaining chip to force her to do something but handed her over to her directly. This action made the woman in red raincoat's impression of him improve by a lot.

The bus left the stop and headed directly for Fan Chong's home. The rain started to lighten, and Chen Ge carried the e-bike from the bus and up the building. After an eventful journey, Chen Ge arrived at Fan Chong's place at around 2 am. He was afraid that Fan Chong would already be asleep, so he sent him a message first. After some time, Chen Ge's phone started to vibrate. Fan Chong called him directly after seeing his message. "Boss Chen, are you downstairs?"

"Yes, I hope I didn't wake you up. I guess you aren't sleeping yet."

"It's raining outside! I'll come get you immediately."

"There's no need. I came today to ask you some things."

The phone hung up, and Chen Ge placed the e-bike at the parking lot and then entered the building with the keys. He reached the top floor, and the door to Fan Chong's place was open.

"My brother is sleeping in the other room; he needs to work tomorrow morning." Fan Chong was excited when he saw Chen Ge. "Boss Chen,

I got a few other endings. The game has quite a few Easter eggs ¹ .”

“This time, I’m not here for the game.” Chen Ge had not forgotten what had happened at Jiujiang’s Mental Asylum. He wanted to go take a look at Jiang Long’s apartment. In the game, after Xiao Bu opened the door behind the closet in her classmate’s home, the style of the game changed. If the game was a reflection of real life, then the ‘door’ that had gotten out of control in Li Wan City was probably in Jiang Long’s home. Chen Ge wanted to see the difference between the door that had gotten out of control and a normal door.

“You’re not here for the game? You came so late at night just to return the e-bike?” Fan Chong was confused.

“That is one of the reasons. Let’s go in first, and I’ll tell you.” Chen Ge stood in the corridor, and he had a bad feeling about the place like something was eavesdropping on them. After closing the door, Fan Chong handed Chen Ge a towel. “You’re so soaked. Why don’t you change into some of my clothes first?”

“Thanks, but it’s fine.” Chen Ge cut right to the chase. “Fan Chong, you have played the game before. Did you realize that the building where Xiao Bu’s classmate lived was very similar to the first building of your residential area?”

Initially, that did not even cross Fan Chong’s mind, but once Chen Ge brought it up, his eyes slowly widened. “Now that you mention it, the residential area where Xiao Bu’s classmate stayed is rather similar to the layout here.”

“I plan to visit Xiao Bu’s classmate’s home tonight.” Chen Ge stood. Because his clothes were wet, he did not want to stain the furniture.

“Xiao Bu’s classmate’s home? In real life?” Fan Chong had trouble following Chen Ge’s thought.

“I’ve already contacted the police. Xiao Bu’s classmate is now a mental asylum patient, and I know his home’s exact location.”

With that, Chen Ge confused Fan Chong even more. “Boss Chen, aren’t you a Haunted House operator? Why would you have a relation with the police?”

“Don’t worry, I didn’t reveal anything about the game, and the connection to the police is due to a dismemberment case.”

“Dismemberment case?” Fan Chong’s face paled immediately.

“Yes, the murderer is still currently on the loose, but I already have a few suspects in mind.” Chen Ge did not consider Fan Chong’s feelings when he said those things. He forgot how terms like murder, dismemberment, and killer might affect a normal person.

Fan Chong also got nervous hearing what Chen Ge was up to. “What do you need from me?”

“Based on my previous investigation, I confirmed that Xiao Bu’s classmate’s home was this residential area’s first building’s first floor, and first unit. You and your brother have stayed here for so long already, did you notice anything weird?”

The first building was just opposite from Fan Chong’s building—he only needed to pull back the curtain to see it.

“I don’t think there’s anything weird about the place, but now that you put it that way, it does look quite creepy,” Fan Chong answered with a bitter smile.

“There’s no need to hurry, give it time to think. When your brother wakes up tomorrow, you can ask him as well or ask the other old tenants at the area.” Chen Ge did not expect to have a result on day one. “This is the key to your bike; I’ll place it on the table. Your bike was the MVP tonight.”

Fan Chong did not know what Chen Ge was talking about. He thought about it and then waved at Chen Ge. “Come with me. I’ve thought about it and realized that there was something weird about that building.”

The two entered the bedroom, and Fan Chong pulled back the curtain.

“Li Wan City is the easternmost side of Eastern Jiujiang, so the traffic here is very inconvenient. Many people have moved away because of that, and the tenancy rate here today is only one third.” Fan Chong pointed at the building opposite. “When we first moved here, we planned to stay at the first building because the rental there is much cheaper compared to the three other buildings. However, our current landlord told us that the place is not safe, and many tenants that moved into that building would disappear due to mysterious circumstance.”

“Disappeared?” Chen Ge was immediately reminded of the ‘door’; he suspected that these people had entered the ‘door’.

“Yes, we saw people move in, but one day, they stopped appearing. No one knew whether they had moved or something else happened.”

“Did no one call the police?”

“It’s no use calling the police. Eastern Jiujiang is near the countryside, and most of the people here are not locals, so they move about a lot. The police would come to check whether it was a big case like murder. They realized that there was no sign of fighting inside the home, and everything looked normal, so they left. After this carried on for a while, everyone sort of got used to it.”

“Other than that, what else happened?” Chen Ge looked at the first floor of the first building. All the windows had tape seals on them. “Was it the police who put those seals up?”

“Yes, there was once someone who lived on the first floor. It was an old lady who lived alone. She often said that there was a little child standing outside her window at night. The people around her knew that she was not a liar, and they even came up with a group to ambush the child who wanted to scare the old lady.”

“And then what happened?” Chen Ge was intrigued. The mention of the child connected his thought to the ghost fetus directly.

Fan Chong shook his head. “There was no child. The old woman was probably too old and confused. The people squatted there for a whole night and saw no child. In the end, they entered the old woman’s room to inspect and realized that the window in her room was caked with grease and grime, so standing inside, there was no way she could have seen anything that was outside.”

“Couldn’t see out the window?” Chen Ge thought about it and asked, “Could it be that the child has been standing inside the room?”

Chapter 548: The Room

The bedroom suddenly became quiet. Fan Chong looked at Chen Ge's face, forgetting what he was going to say.

"No, that can't be right..." After a long time, Fan Chong forced a smile. Every time he was with Chen Ge, he had to remind himself to be quiet and calm, but he often found himself being stunned by the words that left Chen Ge's lips and the things that he did. "The door and windows of the old lady's place are unharmed, and the child wouldn't have shown up inside the room."

"Could it be that the child sneaked into the room when the old lady was out and had been hiding inside the room? And he'd only appear after the old lady crawled into bed and fell asleep."

"How come you're making it sound so scary?" Fan Chong could not catch up to Chen Ge's train of thought. He did not think that this would be that scary, but once Chen Ge gave his thought, his heart quivered.

"I just stated the most possible scenario with the limited clues."

"Even so, what was the child doing at the old lady's home at night? Prank? To steal stuff?"

Chen Ge looked at the building opposite, his eyes focusing on the tapes. "It's quite a heartless for a child to prank an old lady. The chance of it being a thief is bigger but not by much. By the way, was the child that the old lady saw a girl or a boy?"

"Is that important?" Fan Chong combed his memory. "It should be a girl."

"A girl?" Chen Ge turned around and looked at the game that was playing on screen. "Could it be that Xiao Bu has returned?"

The leap in Chen Ge's thought was big. Before Fan Chong could get it, Chen Ge continued. "The first floor of the first building was where Xiao Bu's classmate's house was. If the game reflects reality, then Xiao Bu would show up there. After all, that is the door's location."

He did not hesitate. "I wish to go over to the building to take a look. Do you want to come with?"

"Now?" Fan Chong shivered. "You're going there at 2 am?"

"There are too many people in the morning, and that will limit our actions. It's better at night."

"Boss Chen, it's not that I'm a coward." Fan Chong took up the cola from the table and took a sip. This seemed to be the way the man calmed himself down. "The old lady passed away soon after she saw the girl—she died from a sudden heart attack. When the ambulance arrived, they were already too late."

"At the time, I was also there. I heard the medical people say that the old lady was too old, and the sudden heart attack meant that she shouldn't have been able to make the emergency call. I didn't think too much of it at the time, but after what you told me tonight, the more I think about it, the more confused I am. The old lady stayed at her place alone, so when she lost her mobility due to the heart attack, who was the person who called the emergency number for her?"

"Didn't this show that the child did not have any intention of harming her? Perhaps she was just passing by."

"Brother, aren't you being a bit optimistic?" Fan Chong shook his head. "I don't feel that safe going there now."

"Never mind then, you can stay here. We will keep in contact over the phone. If you see anything weird from the window, remember to tell me on the phone." Then Chen Ge picked up his backpack and headed out. Fan Chong tried to stop him, but looking at his back, he did not know what to say. Chen Ge stood alone in the darkened residential area.

Li Wan City's difficulty is 3.5 stars. The final enemy is more powerful than Doctor Gao. If I can find Xiao Bu and combine the help of all the victims, the success rate of this mission will drastically increase.

From how Chen Ge saw it, it was just a coincidence that Xiao Bu opened the 'door'. Even though the door was ultimately the reason Li Wan City had become how it was, the culprit was not Xiao Bu—she was technically also a victim.

Chen Ge reached the first building. The first floor had two rooms, one on the left and the other on the right. The old lady's home was the one on the west side, and Jiang Long's was on the east side. Studying the rusted door, Chen Ge opened the backpack, activated the recorder, and pulled out his phone to call Fan Chong. "Fan Chong, I've entered the building. Now I have a question for you."

"What is it?"

"Are there still tenants living in the first building?" Chen Ge gripped the hammer. If this place was already abandoned or all the tenants were on the top floor, then he was going to rely on violence.

"A few days ago, I ran into the mother on the third floor at the market. There are still tenants but probably just two or three families." Fan Chong's answer disappointed Chen Ge. He released the grip on the hammer and zipped up the bag.

"Why did you ask that?"

"If there are still tenants, I have to be more careful." Chen Ge walked toward the window. He held the bag, leaned against the window, and looked in.

"Boss Chen, it's 2 am. You're leaning against the window. What if someone sees you? How are you going to explain this?"

"If you keep this up, I'm going to hang up." Chen Ge's pupils narrowed. He used Yin Yang Vision to look inside the room. The place had two rooms and one living room. It was probably around eighty meters wide, and the decoration was very simple, but there were many handcrafted art pieces. It was very stylistic, and the people who lived there seemed to have a passion for life, happy people. The decoration was different from the story that Chen Ge knew and did not fit Jiang Long's identity.

"To open the door, one has to be completely wrapped in despair, from the heart to the body." Chen Ge felt like when Jiang Long first met Xiao Bu's mother, he probably promised something to make Xiao Bu's mother fall in love with him. When the woman was feeling the haze of happiness, he changed into a different person, lavishing her with endless cruelty and despair. Chen Ge moved his gaze and saw the closet in the living room.

The world outside the closet was filled with happiness, but behind it was torture and torment. This contrast was just like Xiao Bu's game. Before the style changed, it was filled with color and sunlight, but once the style changed, the game became filled with ghosts and murderers.

"The 'door' should be here." Chen Ge walked past the few windows. He noticed the window at the bathroom was cracked. It had probably been hit by the children when they were playing with a ball.

"I can get in through here." Chen Ge used the hammer to make the hole bigger. He reached in to open the lock of the window. He jumped into the room. He summoned Xu Yin to follow behind him as he entered the living room and pushed the closet aside.

"It's similar to the game."

Underneath the closet was a wooden board that shared the same color as the tiles around it. After lifting it up, there was a hidden passage that led downward.

"The space underneath here is quite big."

Chen Ge studied the wooden board. He felt like this probably was not the door that Xiao Bu opened. He prepared to enter the hidden dungeon to take a closer look.

Chapter 549 - The Missing Door

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Having Xu Yin lead the way, after making sure there was no danger, Chen Ge entered the place. He followed the wooden stairs to get to the bottom of the room. Chen Ge ended the call and used the flashlight function on his phone. He bent down and crawled forward. After three or four meters of walking, there was a steel door with police tape.

Probably due to the moisture underground, the door was covered with red rust. Chen Ge tried to push the door and discovered something surprising. The door seemed to have grown into the surrounding soil and formed a whole entity. No matter how hard he pushed, the door did not budge.

Is it locked?

Chen Ge inspected the door. There was no even a keyhole, so the possibility of it being locked was zero.

Looks like I have to use another method.

After taking out the hammer, Chen Ge did a quick calculation between the tunnel and the surface.

If I start working here, I don't think the tenants above will be able to hear me.

He took several steps back and raised the hammer to hit on the edge of the door heavily.

The impact caused the rust to fall, and dust from above him fell on his shoulders. It gave him the sensation that the place was caving in

BANG! BANG! BANG!

When Chen Ge ended Fan Chong's call, he had already been prepared. He swung the hammer multiple times before the door was cracked open. Clots of soil fell out, and Chen Ge felt the ground under his feet move. The place was dangerous, but since he was there, not going in to look was not Chen Ge's style.

He looked at the door that he had cracked open, and he reached out to touch the edge. At the place where the door was connected to the soil, there were many plant roots that looked dried and dead. Most of them were gray, but some were blood red.

Are these the blood vessels that crawled out from behind the door? What's the difference between a normal door and one that has lost control?

The longer Chen Ge inspected the door, the more confused he became.

The whole door was encased into the tunnel, and it was hard to open. An adult like myself had a hard time opening it, much less Xiao Bu.

Chen Ge suspected that this door was not the door that Xiao Bu had opened but was one that was added on later by the police to prevent people from trespassing into the dungeon.

The door had a police seal, and there was no keyhole. Instead of a door, this was more like a partition to block people's way. If this door was installed by the police, then where is the real door to the dungeon?

Studying the edge of the steel door, Chen Ge soon discovered something. Inside the steel door, somewhere further away was a wooden door frame that was bright red. However, weirdly enough, while the frame was there, the door itself had disappeared.

There should be a second door to the dungeon, so where is the door? Did the door disappear after going out of control, or have the police taken it away as evidence? Did they discover something on the door? Chen Ge thought to himself. He raised his phone, and when the light fell on the space behind the door, his heart skipped a beat.

There was a hidden room around thirty meters behind the steel door. There was a large cage in the middle of the room, and inside it was a mound of wooly doll's clothes. Right in the middle of the doll's dresses stood a little girl.

"Xiao Bu?" Xu Yin did not react, and Chen Ge walked closer with the hammer. He moved one meter forward, and when he was close enough to the 'girl', he realized that it was a mannequin. The mannequin's face was scrawled fully with the name 'Jiang Bai'; it looked quite scary since the marker used was red.

Jiang Bai is Jiang Long's daughter. Why is her name written on the mannequin's face?

The iron cage was not locked, and Chen Ge soon made a new discovery. All the doll's clothes had the name 'Zhang Chuyu' written on them with color pencils. Chen Ge was familiar with this name as well; that was Jiang Long's official wife.

Did Xiao Bu have Zhang Chuyu put on all the doll's clothes and trap her inside the cage for revenge?

Xiao Bu had pushed the door open, and there was no chance of her surviving behind the door with her young age. Based on Chen Ge's speculation, when Xiao Bu exited the door, she was already a Red Specter.

From the Jiang family of four, Jiang Xiaohu was sent into a mental asylum, Jiang Long died in a car accident, and the wife and daughter went missing—was all that Xiao Bu's doing?

Red Specters were normally made from the intensification of a particular feeling, often pain or resentment. They were more powerful than normal ghosts, but they were still limited by emotions. They would act more recklessly and crazily. Chen Ge was not surprised by what Xiao Bu had done, but he was confused about one thing—how did Xiao Bu lure Zhang Chuyu and Jiang Bai to Li Wan City?

Unlike normal Specter, Red Specters did not need to possess something to survive, but they could not leave their place of origin. For example, Zhang Ya had been trapped at Western Jiujiang's Private Academy until Chen Ge won her love letter. The only reason she could wander about was because she had made Chen Ge's shadow her home of sorts. In other words, Chen Ge was her vessel, and that was the reason she was able to follow Chen Ge to wander all around Jiujiang.

Did someone help Xiao Bu drag Zhang Chuyu and Xiao Bu here?

From his experience dealing with ghosts, Chen Ge knew that ghost could sometimes communicate with one another. He now suspected that the culprit had a deal with Xiao Bu. They would sacrifice Jiang Long's family to Xiao Bu, and in return, they needed Xiao Bu to do something for them.

The ghost stories society once controlled the door at Li Wan City before. According to Doctor Gao, they even pushed some of the stuff the society has collected behind the door. Could it be that Xiao Bu cooperated with them?

Chen Ge thought about it, but the chance of that was low.

The ghost stories society was probably tricked by the shadow. The door here is different from the Third Sick Hall. This one was purposely created; it was one of the shadow's plots.

From the perspective of an outsider, Chen Ge could see the situation clearly.

The society limited its activity to Western and Northern Jiujiang, but they happened to chance upon this door in Eastern Jiujiang. Perhaps it was the shadow who was behind this—he probably wanted to swallow the society whole.

At its prime, the society had many normal ghosts and several Red Specters. Other than that, they had Wu Fei, the mad genius, and Doctor Gao, the maddest of the madmen. But even so, they had the rug pulled out under them by the shadow. This made Chen Ge even more cautious of the culprit in Eastern Jiujiang.

Before Doctor Gao's death, he mentioned the door in Eastern Jiujiang. Looks like this place left a huge impression on him. He probably fought the monsters here before but did not get a victory.

Chen Ge actually wanted to borrow Doctor Gao's power, but since the man was barely a human now, he thought about it and abandoned this dangerous idea.

The soil at the ceiling continued to peel. This place appeared very unsafe, like it could fall at any moment. With no other discovery, Chen Ge prepared to leave.

The door that connects both worlds often appears for a minute after midnight. I wonder if this door retains that property. Perhaps I can find the time to come back to look.

...

The police had sealed the door and did not discover the secret of the door. It was probably because they had missed the opening. After all, the police had regular working hours, and no one would go back to the crime scene for no reason at midnight.

Calling Xu Yin, Chen Ge exited the tunnel, closed the door, and replaced the closet. Looking at the art pieces inside the room, and thinking about the dolls' clothes inside the iron cage, Chen Ge's mood began complicated.

Despair is something natural, and life is already hard enough. Why are they doing something as meaningless as this?

Chen Ge checked the room again, but he came up with nothing. He jumped out from the window and then closed the window that had lost the glass.

I've completed the mission for The Hearse, returned the e-bike, and inspected the secret room at Jiang Long's place—that's everything that I set out to do. Guess it's time to go home.

Looking at the time, Chen Ge realized that it was 3 am, the time when the night was darkest.

I'd better drive the bus back before the sun comes up. If I run into any traffic police, so much trouble will follow.

The black phone had said that it was best to use the hearse after midnight on a rainy night. Chen Ge remembered that closely—he did not want the police to tow his bus on his first day on the road.

Fan Chong's home was on the top floor. Chen Ge found it too troublesome to climb up again, so he used the phone to call Fan Chong down instead. The phone rang once before it was answered. "Brother, why did you break the man's window! Didn't you say you just wanted to go take a look?"

"I checked the surroundings—there was no surveillance." As Chen Ge stood by the building, the rain began to ease up.

"No, how is that related to surveillance?"

"I also wanted to clear the murder case; the family of the victim need their justice. And most importantly, the murderer is still on the loose, and new victims might soon appear. Think about it, you're living in this type of danger every day, aren't you afraid? Furthermore, if I break one piece of glass to save one or more lives, compared to human lives, is a simple pane of glass more important?"

Fan Chong did not know how to counter Chen Ge. He thought about it and somewhat agreed with the man.

"By the way, before I cracked the glass, I ended the call, so how did you find out about that?" Chen Ge was one who paid attention to details. It was the reason he had managed to survive so many Trial Missions.

"I've been watching you from upstairs. If something happened to you, I was ready to call the police."

When Fan Chong said that, Chen Ge lifted his head to look up. The room that was on the leftmost side on the opposite building had a faded light coming from the window. Fan Chong was standing next to the window, and he held the phone in his hand. When he saw Chen Ge look up, he even waved at him.

"Boss Chen, I'm really impressed. You dared to jump into a cursed home at 2 am," Fan Chong said and waited, but there was no reply from Chen Ge. He looked down. Chen Ge had the phone beside his ear, but the man looked petrified. He stood where he was with his head tilted upward.

"Boss Chen? Why aren't you saying anything?" Fan Chong noticed the anomaly about Chen Ge, and he started to panic. “Don’t scare me! Are you alright? F*ck! I told you not to go to that place already!”

“Stop talking for now.” Chen Ge’s voice came from the phone. Perhaps it was psychological, but Fan Chong felt that Chen Ge’s voice seemed different from before.

“What’s wrong?”

This was the first time that Fan Chong had heard Chen Ge use such a stern tone, and he promised quickly. “Okay, I will not turn back.”

He said so, but his heart could not resist the urge to turn back. Fan Chong felt a chill run up his spine, crawling right up to his brain.

“Boss Chen, is there something behind me?”

“You’re fine. Now use your hand that is holding the phone and slowly reach behind you.”

“Like this?”

“Yes, go a bit further. Perfect. Maintain that posture, don’t move.” Chen Ge stood under the building, and his eyes were narrowed as he kept his gaze on Fan Chong’s room. The weak light came from inside the room, and Fan Chong stood at the window. He gripped his pajamas with one hand, and his other held the phone that he had extended behind him. Not far away from his phone was a girl in a red shirt.

The black hair fell on the red shirt. The girl did not have any clear facial features but several dark holes. She had no eyes, nose, or teeth. Her limbs were covered by the shirt. There was no way of telling her age, appearance, or height. Everything about her about was a mystery.

“Red? Boss Chen, what’s going on? Don’t scare me! I promise that I will not tell anyone about your trespassing!”

“Stop talking! Let me try to communicate with her.” Chen Ge arranged his thoughts. The Red Specter that had suddenly appeared in Fan Chong’s room was probably Xiao Bu. Chen Ge already had the suspicion that the child was hiding at the deepest part of the game.

“All the children in the game are called Xiao Bu, and all the tragedies happened to Xiao Bu—there has to be a reason for that.” Chen Ge took up the phone and stated his stance. “Don’t act recklessly. What do you want? What do you desire? You can tell me.”

In the bedroom, neither Fan Chong nor the Red Specter behind him moved. Time seemed to have stopped. Realizing that the girl did not have any intention of harming Fan Chong, Chen Ge continued. “I have not experienced your pain before, so I cannot say I can understand you fully, but I beg you to give me a chance. Perhaps we can sit down together and talk this out.”

Fan Chong’s body was shaking. He listened to Chen Ge on the phone and felt like either he had gone mad or Chen Ge had gone insane. “Brother, who are you talking to?”

Chen Ge ignored Fan Chong. He would not dare stay in the same room with a Red Specter without help, but Fan Chong had done that.

“I’ve seen many children like you, or perhaps their experience was nothing compared to yours, but with my help, they found a new direction in life.” Chen Ge had played Xiao Bu’s game before. He looked through his backpack and found an old phone and called out the phone spirit, Tong Tong.

“Can you see the boy beside me? His story is included in that game, so you should know about him. I helped him fulfilled his wish and helped punish those who hurt him. You can ask him to confirm these details.” The phone spirit understood what he was supposed to do. He nodded and tried to smile, but probably because he had not smiled for a long time, the smile was rather ugly.

Listening to Chen Ge, Fan Chong looked at the empty space next to Chen Ge. “What do you mean? How come there’s another one? How many people are in my room?”

The girl seemed to have met Tong Tong before. She tilted her head to the side. After a moment of consideration, she lifted her sleeve. There was no hand. One could only see her sleeve wave several times at the window.

Minutes later, blood started to leak on Fan Chong’s window, and the blood slithered to form words.

“You will die if you come back to Li Wan City.”

The blood letters surfaced on the window. Both Chen Ge and Fan Chong saw it. However, their reactions were completely different. Chen Ge frowned slightly, but Fan Chong's legs weakened, and he collapsed to the ground.

"I will die?" If the Red Specter was really Xiao Bu, then she was not a normal Red Specter but a Red Specter who was also the door-pusher. In that case, she would be able to sense Zhang Ya's presence.

"Even with Zhang Ya and Xu Yin, I will still die, huh?" Chen Ge did not reveal his trump card to the girl. His real plan was to bring along Men Nan, the woman in the red raincoat, and the woman at the tunnel—five Red Specters in total.

Hearing Chen Ge's voice on the phone, the girl waved her sleeve again, and a new sentence appeared.

"He has already discovered you. If you come back to Li Wan City, you will die."

"He?" Seeing the sentence on the window, Chen Ge caught onto the important information. The culprit was a male, or perhaps he had been male when he was alive. The blood letters disappeared soon after. Chen Ge wanted to ask the girl more questions—he tried several times, but Chen Ge soon realized that no matter the question, the answer from the girl was the same.

"Come back to Li Wan City, and you will die."

It was devoid of emotion; the girl was merely stating a fact. Chen Ge tried to get some more information from the girl, but it was to no avail.

Several minutes later, Fan Chong, who was on the floor, finally could not resist it anymore. His arm was completely frozen, and his mind was blank. Just as he moved his body, his neck turned instinctively around. The girl did not seem like she wished to be seen by more people. Just as Fan Chong turned his neck, she disappeared and went into hiding.

“Boss Chen, did you see something in my room? How come I can’t see anything!” Fan Chong had been given quite a fright. Initially, he had thought Chen Ge was purposely trying to scare him, but once the blood letters appeared on the window, he had entered full panic mode.

“Stay inside the room. I’ll be there in a minute!”

“Okay, er, can you not end the call? I’m rather afraid.”

Chen Ge did not hear what Fan Chong said. He charged up the stairs at one go. “Fan Chong, open the door.”

The door finally opened after a long time. Fan Chong held onto the wall, and his steps were uneven.

“Boss Chen, what was behind me earlier? You didn’t tell me anything, but it only makes it feel much scarier with my imagination!” Fan Chong was technically a witness, so Chen Ge thought about it and decided to tell him the truth. “There was a very cute little girl standing behind you earlier. I suspect that she is Xiao Bu from the game.”

“Xiao Bu?” Fan Chong was stunned. “She came out from the game?”

“What time is it? Who cares about that anymore! Tomorrow, we’re going to move!” Fan Chong was really spooked. He had fainted at the Haunted House, but at least he could still tell himself that everything there was fake. However, this was his home. In the future, he would think about this every time he closed his eyes.

“Don’t panic, let’s talk about this first.” Chen Ge led Fan Chong into his bedroom. Everything looked the same. Chen Ge walked to the computer to look at the game—there was nothing different about Xiao Bu in the game.

“Boss Chen, you don’t need to advise me anymore; I have to move. This is too scary, and I will stop playing the game. Take it with you. In fact, I’ll gift you my whole computer setup.”

“The key point is that she is a ghost!” Fan Chong sat down beside the computer table. Then he was reminded of something, and he nudged the chair back.

“She doesn’t mean you harm. If she did, you would have been injured a long time ago.” Chen Ge looked at the game. “How many tenants are there here?”

“Most of the tenants have moved away, so I’d guess, about two hundred people remain.” Fan Chong was confused. “But why would you want to know about that?”

“The area has around two hundred people, so why did the girl choose you?” Chen Ge looked at Fan Chong with suspicion.

“Because I’m unlucky, that’s why. Mocked, dumped, and fired. I’m a complete loser in life.” The flesh on Fan Chong’s face jiggled.

“Help me?” Fan Chong slowly calmed down.

“Tell me in detail what happened during the time you came into contact with this game. There has to be a reason the girl chose you.” Chen Ge felt weird. How did Xiao Bu in the game come into contact with Fan Chong?

Fan Chong gripped his hands together. He thought about it for a long time before saying, “Okay, but you have to promise me that you won’t tell my brother. I don’t want him to worry.”

“Actually, I was in deep despair quite some time ago. I’d been at work for several years already, but the work wasn’t going well. I’m probably the type of person who is destined to never shine. From school to work, I was always isolated. A few weeks ago, my boss came to me to ask about my real passion, something that was not related to work. I got the hint that he was hoping that I would quit, and I agreed.” Fan Chong finally told the truth and revealed his secret to Chen Ge.

“When I got home, I called my girlfriend. I complained to her on the phone. She listened to me patiently, and when I was done, she told me calmly that she wanted a break-up. She said that she was tired of listening to me talk about such things. She lost the ability to even act interested in my life.

"I apologized to her and tried many ways to salvage the relationship, but no matter what I did, she did not forgive me. I bought a present and waited for her at her company, and I saw her leave the place with a man who was very tall and handsome.

"I asked her colleague, and she did not seem to know about my existence. She told me that my girlfriend had been with the guy for a long time already, and they were apparently discussing marriage."

His face was squeezed together, and Fan Chong's grip tightened. "I have no idea how I got home. My thoughts were a mess, and I hated people, but more than that, I hated myself. At the time, I thought about leaving.

"I went to the roof and stood there for three hours. Whenever I thought about making that step, I would hear someone call my name. I stood there from afternoon to dusk. My stomach growled, and suddenly, I missed my brother's cooking. I turned back and went back home.

"Then, I found this game. I locked myself in the game, and I've dedicated myself to clearing the game ever since."

"It will get better." Chen Ge attempted to console him. "I believe I know why Xiao Bu found you. It was probably Xiao Bu who pulled you back from the edge of despair. Perhaps from her perspective, you are both people cut from the same cloth, so you should be able to understand her situation."

“If not for her, you wouldn’t be here anymore. It is because of her that you survived. She lent you a hand when you most needed it, so why would you be afraid of someone like that?” Chen Ge’s voice was warm and calm—it seemed to possess a unique power.

Fan Chong thought about it for a long time. He suddenly felt that Chen Ge had a point. “You have nothing after death, not even the chance to chase after happiness. You’re right, I should thank her.”

“Actually, when you told me the old lady’s story, I was instantly reminded of Xiao Bu. The old lady stayed next to Xiao Bu’s home, so the girl that she saw was probably Xiao Bu.” Chen Ge looked at the little girl on screen who wore her mother’s pajamas. “The old lady lived alone, and when she suffered from heart attack, with none of the neighbors clued in, someone called the emergency line. Who do you think made that call?”

“Xiao Bu?”

“Who else could it be? From this, we know that the child still knows the difference between good and bad.” Chen Ge pushed Fan Chong’s chair back to the computer. “So, you can continue playing the game. Xiao Bu will not harm you for no reason. She reached out to you with this game probably because she wants to share her story with you.”

“It’s just that? Even ghosts have the need to share their stories?” Fan Chong kept his voice low. He sat before the computer and still had a hard time getting used to this.

“This should be one of the reasons she made this game. With regards to other reasons, we will know once we clear the game.” Chen Ge noticed that Fan Chong was not that worried anymore, so he sighed. “Good luck, the child is probably trapped at the deepest part of the game, surrounded by pain and despair. She has saved you, so now it’s your turn to save her.”

“She’s hiding in my computer?” Fan Chong’s gaze slowly focused. He placed his hands back on the keyboard and mouse. “I understand. I will try my best to clear this game.”

Then he exited the game and cleaned up the partitions of his computer. “By the way, Boss Chen, you saw the blood words that showed up on the window earlier, right? Were those written by Xiao Bu?”

“Should be.”

“Then why would she warn you away from Li Wan City? Is this place that dangerous?” Fan Chong seemed to be afraid that Chen Ge might misunderstand him, so he added, “I’m worried about my big brother. He’s a careless person and is often spacing out.”

“At the moment, Eastern Jiujiang is rather complicated. Try to stay at home at night, but it should be better in one or two weeks.”

“One or two weeks? Okay.” Fan Chong had no idea how Chen Ge knew that, but he chose to believe him.

“If something happens, remember to contact me. I won’t be coming to Li Wan City for the next few days.” Xiao Bu’s message had attracted Chen Ge’s attention. He was a cautious person and would not risk his life for no reason. After that, Chen Ge left. He wanted to get the bus back to New Century Park before dawn.

He got on the bus and saw the boy that he had left on the last row. The boy was still unconscious. He checked the boy and confirmed that he was not injured. Chen Ge sighed in relief. “The boy’s parents must be worried. After I drive the bus back to the park, I should send the child to Western Jiujiang’s police station.”

The bus on Route 104 had come from Western Jiujiang to Eastern Jiujiang, so the middle-aged woman had probably snatched the boy from Western Jiujiang. “The surveillance in countryside is not that comprehensive, but I can’t be too careful.”

Chen Ge opened the comic to summon the driver ghost, Tang Jun. “So, what is your decision?”

With the ‘brain-washing’ from Bai Qiulin, Ol’ Zhou, and the other ghosts, Tang Jun’s attitude became much better. He was not an evil ghost, and his death was due to a car accident. There was not much resentment in him, and the only emotion that he had was the connection to his family.

“I don’t mind it. After all, it’s just driving. It’s the same no matter who the boss is, but if you allow me to meet my family, I will swear my loyalty to you.”

“Where is your home?”

“Why?”

“You drive, and we’ll go there now.”

...

Twenty minutes later, Tang Jun walked out from an old residential area. Probably because the desire in his heart was not that intense, his body became much more faded, like he was about to disperse.

After he got on the bus, his body started to recover.

“So soon? Aren’t you going to stay with them longer?” Chen Ge was reading the information on the black phone. Tang Jun had taken less three minutes.

“I didn’t go upstairs. I just stood outside the building.”

“Don’t you want to see them in person?”

“I thought about it, but no.”

“It’s fine. If you want to come back in the future, just tell me in advance, and you can come back anytime.” Chen Ge was always kind to his workers and treated them as his family. “But you have to remember, when the desire that kept you alive disappears, it will also be time for you to disappear.”

“Hmm, understood.” Tang Jun gripped the steering wheel and started the bus. The bus arrived at New Century Park at 4 am, when the sun was coming up. When the guard saw Chen Ge come back with such a large vehicle, his eyes almost popped out of his face. After asking Chen Ge many times to confirm that he did not steal the vehicle and that it was just a prop, the guard finally allowed Chen Ge into theme park.

“A public bus is indeed a bit too eye-catching.” Chen Ge pulled Tang Jun back into the comic and parked the bus in the empty space behind the Haunted House.

“Let me see... what else have I forgotten?” Chen Ge opened the door and looked at the boy lying on the back seats. When they were coming home, the boy’s lashes had been flickering, and his lips moved.

“You’re awake, aren’t you?” The boy was clever. He had probably woken up when the sun rose, but he had been pretending to be asleep. When he realized that his trick had been exposed, the boy climbed up from his seat shyly. He did not speak but looked at Chen Ge silently.

“Don’t be afraid—I’m a good person. I saved you from the bad guy yesterday.” Chen Ge held the boy’s hand as they walked down from the bus.

It was 4:30 am, four hours from the opening of theme park. Chen Ge calculated and thought that there was enough time. He led the boy out of the New Century Park and took a cab to the police station. “The boy’s parents must be worried. This cannot wait.”

Chen Ge arrived at the station around 5 am. He walked into the place with the boy. When the officer saw someone walk in, they did not pay him much attention, but when they saw who the man was, they became awake immediately.

Chapter 553: Another Draw!

Being recognized by the officer on duty, this was something that Chen Ge did not expect. He coughed once and explained himself immediately. “When I was on my way to Eastern Jiujiang, I happened across a child kidnapping case. You know about the kind of person that I am; I have a strong sense of justice. So, after a dangerous bout, I finally managed to rescue the boy.”

“Those with real justice will never say that they have justice.” The three officers at the police station had all gathered. One of them had aided Lee Sanbao when they handled the murder at Mu Yang High School and had an impression of Chen Ge. “I cannot make a decision about this. Our superintendent and Inspector Lee said that as long as the case involves you, we have to inform them before we can make a decision.”

“It’s not even a murder this time; it shouldn’t that serious, right?” Chen Ge still had something else to do. His original plan had been to drop off the boy and leave immediately.

“In your eyes, only murder cases are serious, huh? That’s a very dangerous way of thinking.” The officer called Inspector Lee, and two officers remained. One led the boy to the other side of the room while the other stayed with Chen Ge on high alert.

Several minutes later, the officer who called Inspector Lee walked out from the office, and he looked at Chen Ge strangely.

“What did inspector Lee say? Can I go now?” Chen Ge had not slept all night, and the theme park was opening at 9 am—he wanted to rush back to catch a little sleep.

“I’m afraid not.” The officer dropped the file on the table. “Yesterday at 9 pm, a pair of young parents came to report their son’s disappearance. The picture of their boy is similar to this boy that you found.”

“Isn’t a good thing? I’ve saved your time; you can just return the boy to his family.” Chen Ge was confused. “Is it because the parents want to thank me in person? There’s no need for that.”

“No, we wish to get your cooperation.” The officer opened the file. There was information of several children. “These are the children who have gone missing from Western Jiujiang over the last few months. There is a similarity in all these cases—they all happened on a rainy night. We’ve been following this case, and through our investigation, witnesses said that they saw a middle-aged lady around the crime scene. Last night, when the boy disappeared, someone saw the same lady around the area.”

“Many cases?” Chen Ge knew that these cases were related to the culprit in Eastern Jiujiang, but he wondered why the culprit needed so many children.

“Yes, these cases are horrible, and around the area where the disappearance happened, there is such a story. According to the story, whenever it rains, a middle-aged lady carrying a basket will appear. Due to her natural deficit, she is unable to carry a child, so she was chased out of the family by her family. From then on, she hated men and children and would use many different ways to lure children into tunnels and then take them away.”

“Doesn’t that sound like typical urban legend? They’re rarely real.” Chen Ge did not expect the officer to suddenly bring that up.

“Sometimes, local story and urban legend are based on real life event. We cannot believe them fully, but we cannot brush them off either.” The officer looked at Chen Ge. “There are seven cases of child kidnappings, and this boy is the only one who has been found. You’re the only one who has interacted with the suspect, so I need you to stay.”

“Fine, I will try my best to cooperate.” Chen Ge knew that he would be unable to leave, so he poured a glass of warm water for himself and sat down. “Then again, it’s one thing for me to cooperate, but you can’t keep asking me to do free work. At the beginning, when I provided the key clue to solve the murder at Ping An Apartment, at least the city awarded me with 50,000. Now, I don’t even get a medal or certificate, much less money, isn’t that a bit wrong?”

Seeing how shameless Chen Ge was, the officer did not even know how to respond. “Don’t worry, all you’ve done will be recorded by the department. In the future, we might award you the title of best citizen or one of the top ten youths in Jiujiang or something like that.”

“Are you for real? Then, does it mean I can get on the television?”

“No problem, but when the time comes, you have to help me deal with the reporters. If they have to interview me, please do it at the entrance to my Haunted House. That is a kind of promotion,” Chen Ge said seriously.

Half an hour later, Inspector Lee arrived, and Chen Ge gave him the story that he had prepared. He said that he had ridden an e-bike alone to Eastern Jiujiang. When he passed a bus stop, he saw a middle-aged lady hugging a child, looking like she was waiting for someone. He was worried about them because of how dangerous it was for a mother and a child to be waiting alone at night.

He stopped and offered to give them a ride home. During the conversation, he noticed how weird things were. The boy was not asleep but unconscious. He prepared to call the police, but coincidentally, his phone had no battery.

Then, the middle-aged woman escaped because she knew that she had been exposed. Chen Ge chased her for a while before returning to the boy because he thought that the boy’s safety was more important. The boy had been unconscious when he was on the bus, so Chen Ge was not worried about being exposed by the boy.

When he was done, the officers were in disbelief. He went to ride his bike, and he came across a child kidnapping case. This man before them, from a certain perspective, could not be viewed as a normal person anymore.

After giving a description of the middle-aged woman, Inspector Lee agreed to let Chen Ge go. He knew that Chen Ge had to operate the Haunted House in the morning. At 7 am, Chen Ge was sent back to the New Century Park in a police car. When the guard saw Chen Ge walk toward him, he forgot how many times he had seen Chen Ge that day.

It’s almost the park’s opening time; I don’t think I can sleep anymore.

Following a cold shower, Chen Ge changed into a set of clean clothes and gave the place a brief clean. When he was done, Chen Ge took out the black phone to study the Trial Missions.

These new Trial Missions are in Eastern Jiujiang; I have to go there if I want to expand the Haunted House.

Xiao Bu's advice warned me away from Li Wan City, but she did not say I cannot go to Eastern Jiujiang. This means the best solution is to avoid Li Wan City for now and only go there after I finish the other three-star scenarios and gather all the 'people'.

Even with Zhang Ya and Xu Yin, Xiao Bu still thinks I have no chance. Looks like my ability is still lacking behind compared to the culprit in Eastern Jiujiang.

Chen Ge thought about ways to make up the difference.

I have to unlock Yan Danian's last ability as soon as possible. There's also Bai Qiulin—he has consumed Xiong Qing and gained a dyed heart, but the increase in power is not obvious. He needs to consume more ghosts.

After going through all the members of the Haunted House, Chen Ge realized that, not counting Zhang Ya, he was even less powerful than the ghost stories society. If Zhang Ya and Xu Yin were held back, he would be in mortal danger.

The number of workers that I can depend on is still too little.

Chen Ge thought about it and opened the black phone. He looked at one of the options.

I can get new Specters from spinning the wheel, but the problem is, if I win another two Specters, then my title will be upgraded.

With Xu Yin and Zhang Ya by my side, normal Specters don't pose much threat to me. It befits my current Specters' favored title. I can approach them and communicate with them.

But if this title upgrades, does that mean I will attract more dangerous existences to me? What if Zhang Ya and Xu Yin are unable to handle it? Doesn't it mean I'll return to a life of cowering in fear and terror?

Chapter 554 - Phone Number That Is Kissed by the Dead

Chen Ge thought back to when he drew Zhang Ya. At the time, he had still been ignorant about the difference between a normal Specter and a Red Specter. Because of his blind courage, he had used his sincerity to slowly calm Zhang Ya down.

Being hated by Zhang Ya will get me killed; being loved by Zhang Ya will get me killed. I have to seek a middle ground. It's already scary enough to have this one with me, if I attract something even more dangerous, will it be too much for me?

After his title leveled up, more out of control things might happen, and this was what Chen Ge refused to see.

After winning two more Specters, the title will be upgraded, but from the perspective of probability, the chance of that is very low, and I have two more chances...

Chen Ge was rather interested. He looked at the Wheel of Misfortune on screen and slowly raised his finger. If he was being serious, the Wheel of Misfortune was a very important feature provided by the black phone. Zhang Ya, Xu Yin, and Yan Danian—the three Specters that he had won from it—had been immensely helpful to Chen Ge. Without them, Chen Ge would not have survived until this day.

There are two ways to improve my ability—completing Nightmare Missions or winning something useful from the Wheel.

Although he had obtained the black phone quite some time ago, the things that he had won from it were either Specters or items related to Specters. This was rather discomfoting to him.

Perhaps when I won Zhang Ya from the wheel, the plot was set on a path of no return.

From the lack of sleep, Chen Ge's head was heavy.

Maybe I should try it once. After all, the title will only increase after winning two more Specters.

Chen Ge lit a cigarette and walked around his Haunted House. He had done everything that he could to get something good from the wheel. He had tried to make the draw during noon or during dawn, and he had tried biking to somewhere one or two kilometers away from the park, but reality proved that those efforts were rather useless.

Perhaps I should try going the other way, or should I wait until midnight, the time of day when the Yin energy is the strongest, and then start the wheel at the deepest part of the Haunted House?

After some consideration, Chen Ge abandoned that plan.

I should ask the Pen Spirit.

He entered the underground scenario and planned to combine the powers of both the Pen Spirit and the Weeping Statue to see whether he would win another Specter. Pushing the door to the female dormitory open, Chen Ge saw the ballpoint pen that was covered with plastic tape drawing circles on the paper out of boredom.

"Long time no see." Probably spooked by Chen Ge, the pen toppled over and rolled away from Chen Ge.

"Why are you running? I have something important to ask you." Chen Ge gripped the pen and asked whether he would win a Specter from the Wheel. To his surprise, he was halfway through his question when the Pen Spirit should the sign of collapsing. He immediately stopped. Then he tried the same question with the statue. The result was the same. As long as it involved the black phone, the powers of those ghosts would go on a rampage.

This sure is strange. The phone left behind by my parents is not normal.

Unable to cheat, Chen Ge stopped hesitating. He entered the toilet to wash his hands and ran into the bus. When he calmed down fully, he clicked the wheel on the phone.

As the wheel slowed down, Chen Ge's heart raced. The screams that he had gathered were enough for him to play the wheel five times. If he did not win a Specter, he would continue until he ran out of resources. With a click, the wheel stopped as did the needle.

“Invitation to the Cursed Game: Curses and deaths both play their role at this hospital. No one knows where the limit of humanity is.”

An Invitation? Chen Ge read it many times to confirm that he did not win a Specter. Is my luck changing? Everything's coming up Chen Ge. Even though the invitation is nothing good, at least it's better than upgrading the title.

Sitting on the bus, Chen Ge felt the bus could bring him good luck. As long as there are no baleful Specters... Now, this is what I call normal.

Chen Ge sighed in relief and turned the wheel again. The needle slowly stopped, and with Chen Ge watching, a new message popped up on-screen.

“The police discovered that, before they died, every victim called this number.

“Fourth win of a baleful Specter! Congratulations, user. When you win the fifth Specter, your title will automatically be upgraded!”

When Chen Ge saw the phone addressing him with his title, Specters' Favored, he had a bad feeling in his heart.

The phone number that is kissed by the dead? The chance of winning is five in one thousand—that is lower than Xu Yin and Yan Danian, second only to Zhang Ya, so this is probably another Red Specter!

Chen Ge looked at his hands in shock. He had won another Specter. To be honest, he was rather afraid of himself already.

Is the wheel broken? Are all the probabilities given fake?

Several minutes later, Chen Ge calmed down and leaned back in the seat.

If I win another Specter, the title will upgrade. Should I give it another shot?

The changes that might happen after the title upgraded were an unknown.

When I first obtained the black phone, I started to interact with this shadow world with its guidance. Until now, I dare not say that I've fully understood this world. Or rather, the more I know about this world, the more I understand how scary it is.

With that thought, Chen Ge put the black phone away.

I should continue spinning the wheel when Zhang Ya's injury is healed. Without her being at full health, I feel weirdly unsettled.

Chen Ge headed to the Prop Room. He found two things inside the wooden box left behind by his parents. A piece of crumpled paper with a phone number written on it. It started with 010 and ended with 000.

“This note looks like it has been tightly gripped in someone's grasp before. Was it a struggle before death? Why is this number called a number that is kissed by the dead? Will I meet a Red Specter if I call this number?”

The theme park would be opening soon. Chen Ge planned to try it when the park closed. He folded the paper and put it inside his pocket. He turned to look at the other object. It was a booking form with the seal of Xin Hai Central Hospital. Details like the room number, booking fee, and name were all empty, but in the box for the date, several numbers were written in bright red ink with slanted handwriting.

Chapter 555: The First Victim

This is the invitation to the cursed game at abandoned hospital? It looks quite new, but it is less scary than the documents at the Third Sick Hall.

One of the newly unlocked four-star scenarios by the black phone was at Xin Hai Central Hospital. Chen Ge felt like this cursed game's invitation should be related to that.

I'll keep this for now. I'll probably have need for it in the future.

Chen Ge was not that interested in the cursed game. All he wanted was the four-star scenario. If anyone dared to curse him, then he would immediately use the Pen Spirit and the Weeping Statue to find out the person's location and then charge the place with his Red Specters. He was an open person and never relied on underhanded tactics. Putting the invitation and phone number away, Chen Ge walked out from the Prop Room.

When he reached the door, Xiao Gu and Xu Wan had arrived. Chen Ge helped them with their make-up and returned to the Haunted House. He found an isolated place and summoned Ol' Zhou and Duan Yue. "Both of you have shown incredible talent at dealing with sudden problems, and you've proved yourselves to me. Today, I need you to help me with the visitors. Of course, I will not have you work for free. Just tell me if you need anything."

"It's my honor to work for the boss, and I like staying with the visitors." There was an eagerness in Ol' Zhou's eyes.

"Don't push it too far. I only need you to help usher the visitors into the scenarios. Today, your roles are not actors but pure service workers." Chen Ge was afraid that the two did not understand him and would scare the visitors before they even entered the scenario.

"Service workers?" Both Duan Yue and Ol' Zhou appeared rather disappointed.

“If you think it’s too boring, you can give the visitors a little surprise when they leave the scenarios.” Chen Ge had spent quite some time with Ol’ Zhou’s group. He knew their limits and personalities, and this was why he was willing to get their help. This was an unprecedented event.

“I know that your body will be injured if you appear in daylight, so this counts as work injury. If you have any wish, you can tell me, and I’ll treat it as compensation.” Chen Ge was always kind to his workers.

“As long as I can work with her, I have no other wishes.” Ol’ Zhou tried to grab Duan Yue’s hand but was slapped away. “Go stand over there, I’m just acting with you.”

Chen Ge stood there and felt like a third wheel. “Are you feeding me dogfood? Please mind the attitude when you’re working, or I’m afraid the other employees will have something to say.”

He found two outfits that would not show their faces from the changing room for Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue. “If possible, try not to speak, and don’t expose yourselves. If there’s any issue, call me.”

“Don’t worry.” Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue were good at customer service—Chen Ge had noticed that quite some time ago. With them around, no matter what happened, they had the ability to handle it themselves.

After giving a few more orders, Chen Ge returned to the staff breakroom. “If all the ghosts were like Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue, things would be so much easier.” He set an alarm and fell asleep. Chen Ge was woken up by the alarm when it was almost noon. “Time for lunch.”

Stretching his arms lazily, Chen Ge exited the room. Duan Yue and Ol’ Zhou did not disappoint. Everything was running smoothly. Since Duan Yue had a beautiful voice, she was responsible for communicating with the visitors while Ol’ Zhou ushered the people into the scenarios. To quell the nervous atmosphere, Ol’ Zhou even made a few jokes to liven up the situation.

“Thank you. You can go rest now.” After sending Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue back into the comic, Chen Ge ran to the surveillance room to check the recording to make sure that they did not cause any problems.

“It feels like they’re more suitable for this job than me.” Chen Ge walked out from the Haunted House to greet Uncle Xu.

“You’re quite honest today. The visitors have very good feedback. A few foreigners came to visit, and they said that you were able to communicate nicely with them. Why haven’t you told me you have a good grasp of English?” There was a smile on Uncle Xu’s face. Actually, he did not have many requirements—he was satisfied as long as Chen Ge did not create trouble.

“One should never stop learning. I’ve even learned painting and violin. If there’s a chance, I’ll show you.” Chen Ge looked at the long lines before the entrance and felt happy. He entered the resting hall to see the visitors’ progress.

Currently, Coffin Village had been cleared twice—the visitors had found the way to clear this scenario. The maximum number of visitors for a three-star scenario was fifteen visitors, so they would find all fifteen people before entering. Then they used the fastest time to find the wedding dress and carried it out in turn.

Once a visitor was scared until they fainted by the lingering spirit inside the dress, the people next to them would pick up the dress and continue the marathon. The abandoned member would be given up, and by the power of cooperation, the wedding dress would be sent out of the scenario. With suitable background music, the scene looked rather inspiring.

Since the visitors have found a method, the difficulty of the scenario has been greatly lowered, and the number of people who have cleared the scenario will only increase.

Fortunately, Chen Ge was not worried. When the visitors were combing their mind to clear the other two three-star scenarios, Chen Ge already started to plot for the 3.5-star and four-star scenarios.

I cannot wait for the day that the visitors enter the four-star scenario. The popularity of my Haunted House will probably witness another rise.

The Haunted House closed at 6 pm, and the last batch of visitors was sent away at 6:30 pm.

After cleaning the place, Chen Ge waited until Xiao Gu and Xu Wan left before returning to the staff breakroom.

“With the earlier nap, I don’t feel that tired.” Chen Ge took out the paper from his pocket. “It’s time to go fetch this new employee. The chance of winning this is smaller than Yan Danian, so it should be a Red Specter.”

Taking out his phone, Chen Ge studied the number many times before calling it. It was 7 pm. All the workers at the park had returned home, so the place was quiet. The dial tone echoed in his ears. The number was still in use, but no one answered it.

“Nowadays, not many people use landline anymore. What is the hidden meaning of this number?”

When it rang for the fourteenth time, the call was finally connected. Chen Ge held his breath. He did not say anything but focused on listening. There was a strange sound coming from the phone—it sounded like something was burning.

Combustion from alcohol and gas would have a quiet flame. Only when the fuel was of wooden material that it would have this crackling and popping sound.

“Hello? How can I help you?” Ten seconds later, Chen Ge realized that there was still no one speaking, so he tossed out this question as a probe. A bottle fell to the ground, and it sounded like its content splashed out and caused the fire to burn even stronger.

“Hello! Is anyone there?” The phone was answered, so this meant that someone had to be near the phone. “Is this a fire? Are you okay? Please tell me your location immediately!”

Chen Ge was getting nervous, and he screamed loudly. The fire was still burning, and then a different voice cut through the roaring flame.

“Can I talk to you for a moment?” The man’s voice was nice but rather hoarse.

“Sure, since I have nothing to do at the moment anyway.” Chen Ge had been afraid that the other party would refuse to communicate. As long as there was communication, he could get useful information. “Then what do you want to talk about?”

After a long time, his reply came. “I don’t know.”

The person spoke slowly like he was constantly thinking. Chen Ge could hear the tremor in the person’s voice. He was unstable. Chen Ge did not dare to randomly run his mouth lest he provoked the man.

“Shall we talk about something happy?”

“There are many happy things. Everyone is happy, and I know I should be happy, but for some reason, I am unable to be happy.”

“Just relax, then how about we share some of our best memories?”

“Memories?” The man went silent again, but the sound of fire burning became clearer and clearer. “When I was young, my parents kept arguing for the sake of living.”

When he heard that, Chen Ge knew that something was wrong. This was not a happy memory—he wanted to interrupt the man, but the man on the other end of the phone did not appear like he was going to stop.

“My mother was very strict with me because she wanted the best for her son. I’ve always been an obedient child. A bit shy and didn’t like to talk. When I was at primary school, I was quite good at my studies, but unfortunately, throughout the six years, I only got three good student award.

“During secondary school, my English was very bad, and my result was average. During the third year, my mother found me an English tutor for one-on-one tuition. I had to attend classes after school until 9.30 pm. When I reached home, it would be around 10 pm.

“The tutor was a very good teacher. I got ninety-five marks on my English, but I did not get similarly good results for Math and Chinese, the subjects that I was supposed to be good at. However, overall my result was still at the front of the class. If I remember correctly, the total mark was about 560 marks or so. With that result, I could apply for all the high school other than Si Yi High.

“Actually, I really don’t understand why we need to label children. Si Yi High was the best high school, and I was missing the mark by twenty plus marks. If I wanted to enter Si Yi High, I had to fork out tuition, which was 18,000 RMB.

“The monthly salary of my parents was four thousand RMB. To give me a better head start, they scrounged up this money to send me to Si Yi High.

“Should I be thankful?

“I don’t know. Perhaps it was the sense of guilt, but I worked so hard for the first three months I entered the school. I was afraid of being exposed, afraid of other people finding out that I didn’t get in there with my own results but because of money.

“Actually, other people might not even have cared about that, but perhaps I’m just someone who is naturally prideful or perhaps I don’t want to be the same as them. For the first exam, my results were higher than average, and I was happy. I worked even harder. But for my middle year exam, my result slid down to lower average.

“I couldn’t find the reason. Perhaps it was my method of studying or perhaps I just wasn’t putting in enough effort. What else could I do but push forward?

“When the result for the last exam came out, my result dropped even further to the bottom of the class. A good student became the worst student—the identity had changed, but the mind needed a time to get used to the situation. When my mind also adapted to this change, then I’d change from a normal student to a bad student.

“I’m a strange fella, the type that has a strong sense of pride and arrogance. When we were called to pick the stream that we wanted to focus on, I had a crush. It was something that is difficult to explain, but I felt happy whenever I saw her.

“She was the good student type and also very hardworking. She would show up for class early in the morning. The key to our classroom was with the monitor, so I woke up early every morning just so I could arrive at school before the monitor and jumped into the room through the classroom window to help her open the door.

“There were many similar things. When she went to the canteen to buy lunch in the afternoon, I would take my English textbook and study it while leaning against the corridor. I wanted to see her, to see her walk back from the canteen to the classroom.

“Actually, it’s quite embarrassing because even though I studied the textbook for the whole semester, in the English exam, I only scored in the thirties. The exam results became worse and worse. I was constantly one of the worst ten students in the class. During the third year, when all the students gave it their all and fought like there was no return, my interest was reading and writing.

“I read all type of books, not related to school. Web novels, magazines, sci-fi novels, and thrillers both locally and overseas. After reading so much, a world would be constructed in my mind, a world that was my own. That was also the first time that I opened a writer’s account for myself online and started to try to write some things.

“There was still over one hundred days to the high school exam, but even the friends that stayed at the internet café started to retreat to focus on their study. However, all that I focused on was my story and my writing.

“During one of the school assemblies, the headmaster was standing on stage. I stared at him and thought about the books that I liked, the authors that I admired. I wanted to be like them, to construct a world that many people would appreciate.

“The exam was over, and there were two ways to understand this.

“One was exam was over, and the other was my life was over.

“I scored just enough for vocational school. Compared to those who wanted to give the exam another go, I decided to grasp this last chance to confess my love. But until today, I did not say it because that day I saw the girl whom I liked got together with the monitor.

“I went to cut my hair until I was bald. As the only student from Si Yi High to go to a vocational school, I had to have my own style, walk my own path. I planned to cut myself off from my former classmates, probably because the greater the pride, the more one dislikes pity from others.

“Even if I was a bad student, I was a bad student with a dream. After I got to the school, writing became my life. I planned to write an epic that combined all the elements of the great writing that had come before me. I had read many books, so I knew a bit of everything. I put the manuscript that I wrote on the internet.

“That was when I received my first contract. My work was more than 300,000 words, but no one was reading it. Then, I tried to give them my other stories, but they were all rejected. During the latter half of the third year, some of the students started to focus on moving to actual university or studying to become teachers. I went to someplace far away from home to start my internship.

“The factory where my father worked closed down. The old CEO was sent into jail for ten years due to illegal activities, so only my mother’s salary was keeping the family afloat. She earned less than two thousand a month.

“For the internship, I chose the place furthest from home because the salary was the highest, and it was close to the ocean. About thirty-three people from our school chose to have their internship at this company. Since it was a frontline worker and it was factory work, there was constant interaction with gas and copper sludge. One month later, only sixteen people remained.

“Due to professional reasons, I was moved to another department. The work wasn't easy, but it was still acceptable. Slowly, I got used to the lifestyle. The leader thought that even though this child did not like to speak, he was honest and serious, so my internship ended sooner than others, and I became an official worker.

"I worked eight hours daily with one day of rest every week. After I got used to this, I started to ask myself, am I going to work like this forever? How can I have no dreams for myself?

"I started to write again. After an eight-hour shift, I would write four thousand words a night, without any readers or any support. Even those comments mocking me wouldn't total up to four thousand words. If I didn't write, nothing would change. Writing was tiring, but I liked to write.

"Perhaps the gods had mercy for the hardworking. There were few readers, but the crush I had from high school suddenly contacted me through internet. Way back when I was at university, I heard from another friend that she had broken up with the monitor; however, I had been too focused on writing to care about it.

"Then, we started to reconnect. During the annual break, I went to visit her and her university. Vocational school and university were not that different, or at least I did not think it was that different. However, when she continued to study for her masters and doctorate, then I thought the difference was quite huge.

"I forgot what I said on the day of confession. I couldn't even remember the date, but the conclusion was that we were not compatible. I couldn't say that I was disappointed.

"I threw myself back into work and writing. Finally, the book was contracted. There were still no readers, and I got just over six hundred for my writing every month. Six hundred of that was from constant writing instead of popularity.

"Then, I searched for my book online and found it on many aggregator websites. I was so pissed. I begged and reported. I tried my best to find the people who stole my writing. The website had a forum for readers, and it was even more lively than the official forum. After I friended the person online, I told him to remove my book immediately, or I would have to resort to legal actions.

"He ignored me.

"I found other aggregator sites and realized that the uploader used the same account, so I tried to reason with him. He still ignored me. Finally, for the first time in my life, someone as prideful as I am begged him.

“I was the official writer, but I had to beg this aggregator. I told him that I didn’t even demand that he removed the book—I just asked that he did not update the same time as I did. Could he please wait for three days after I uploaded the official version? If he could not do three days, could he give me one day? I was pleading with him.

“I even started a thread on the forum, telling them that I only earned six hundred per month, and if people really liked the writing, I’d hope for them to support the real author. The replies said that I was manipulating their feeling, calling me names. A real author would not have cared about these things, no wonder I was not popular.

“The person who opened the aggregator did not reply to me, and I did not reply to the readers. I exited the web browser and started writing my four thousand words for the day.

“Every day, four thousand words, and I had to update daily to gain the reward money of six hundred—that six hundred was all the reward that I got for my hard work.

“After a week, when I was working, there was a malfunction at work. I broke the middle finger of my right hand. The bone snapped, and only two layers of skin were connecting the finger.

“The accident happened at 2 pm, and I left the hospital at 8 pm. I returned to bedroom. I opened the computer and continued typing with nine fingers. Daily four thousand words, only by updating daily would I be able to earn six hundred this month.

“Halfway through the chapter, with only three thousand words written, I suddenly collapsed. I collapsed onto the keyboard and cried like a dog. What was I doing?

“Then holiday came. I returned home. The girl asked me out for dinner, and after dinner, we went for a movie. The movie was a love story. The male character gave up his life for the female character, but the female character still ended up with the second male character. I seemed to see myself on screen, and I gave up everything.

“I placed the present that I had specially picked up for the night on the bridge and I squatted by the road until midnight. The people who passed by must have thought that I was very weird. I got home. The next day, I flew to Zhu Hai.

“Work, writing... I cannot honestly tell you what was keeping me alive back then. I started to write a new book, and another half a year had passed. Like what I said earlier, God has mercy on the hardworking, and I had the best period of my life.

“I ran into a female reader who was five years younger than me. At the time, she was still studying while I was working, and the distance between us was half of China.

“When I went to meet her for the first time, a tornado came, and the plane couldn’t fly. Coincidentally, before this tornado left, another tornado was coming. I sincerely couldn’t believe my luck.

“At the time, she told me, if I couldn’t make it that day, then it meant that we could not be together. And then, a miracle happened. There was a short period between the two tornadoes when the plane was allowed to fly.

“That was my first real romance. Everything that we did was my first. My first time holding someone’s hand, first time going on a date, first time going to theme park, first time walking past a Haunted House, first time taking the subway together, first time kissing...

“I did not worry her too much and hid my many weaknesses away from her like the finger that I had lost, my education background, and the book that was not as good as I made it out to be.

“I had many things that I wanted to tell her, and we matched each other. I was very happy when I was around her.

“Then I wrote a supernatural web novel, and it became surprisingly popular. Heaven was finally smiling at me. The days were glowing—the sweetness had arrived after years of bitterness. My dream was about to come true.

“I could see the bad student standing at the assembly looking at the people on stage, he walked out from the memory to thank me.

“Thank you for not giving up. Finally, you are standing alongside those authors that you admired.

“This was the happiest moment of my life, but the happiest moments are always the shortest.

“Every year, the website had a competition to pick the best newcomer. With my result, I thought my place was guaranteed, but I ran into a cheater.

“With a landslide victory I won the award, but I had to spend around 400,000 RMB to win it. Around 100,000 RMB was from donations from fans, but the remaining came from my own wallet. I sold my own house for this.

“I’ve figured everything out before I made that decision. If my book was reported, I would go find the cheater, kill him, and then light a fire and burn everything up including myself.

“Thankfully, the book was not banned. However, after winning the award, I suddenly felt that my world had darkened. It was supposed to be a celebratory event, but I couldn’t smile.

“Everyone was happy, so I tried my best to smile. My dream came true, but I felt like something was lacking.

“When I communicated with people, I would see their mouths widening, and I would fall into them like they were black holes. I stayed with people that I loved, but they would reject my concern and feelings.

“Something must be wrong.”

The sound of fire grew, and something like a dresser was knocked over. The man’s voice went further away from the phone, and the last thing that Chen Ge heard was. “This fire sure is bright...”

“Hello? Hello! Where are you now! I can help you, I can help you!”
Chen Ge screamed into the phone, but his only answer was the sound of fire burning. “Calm down, you have to calm down!”

He gripped the phone tightly and kicked the door open, rushing to the highest office building inside the park. He ran with all his might up to the roof. He stood at the highest part of the park and looked down over Jiujiang.

There were lights from neon signs, from buildings, from street lights, and from cars, but he could not see any fire. However, on the other end of the phone, the flame was rising and engulfing everything, causing the sound of crackling to keep coming through. The fire was spreading.

“Hello, I don’t know whether you can hear me or not. I just want to tell you that I can help you. There are people in this world who are willing to help you.”

The line was filled with static. It appeared as if the fire had burned the phone line. There was no reply, and the call ended. Hearing the busy tone on the other end, Chen Ge was feeling rather unsettled.

The last declaration by the author had probably been his own imagination. His determination and perseverance did not lead to a reward—after the dream collapsed, his mental state probably collapsed as well. Holding the rail on the edge of the building, Chen Ge looked toward the horizon.

Several minutes later, with some remnant of hope in his heart, he called that number again. He knew that the chance was not big, but at least he wanted to give it a try. The dial tone began beside his ears again, and Chen Ge had no idea how long it would go on. Chen Ge sighed to himself, and just as he was about to hang up, the call was suddenly connected.

“Hello.” It was a completely different voice that came from the other end.

Did I dial the wrong number? Chen Ge glanced subconsciously at the number; all the digits were correct, but the crackling fire had disappeared, and in its place was an eerie silence. The same number but a different sound. Chen Ge started to calm down. He thought back to the introduction that the black phone had given this number. The police discovered that, before they died, every victim called this number. There is more than one victim!

After realizing that, Chen Ge swiftly adjusted his thoughts, changing his voice and tone. “Hello, is there anything that I can help you with?”

Since he had no idea what the other person’s experience was, that was the only thing that Chen Ge could say in the circumstances.

“You want to help me? That’s not necessary, thank you.” The voice on the other end sounded weak like they were falling asleep.

“You don’t sound that well.” Chen Ge felt weirdly anxious. The person was too calm, and this reminded him of the author from before.

“Then, do you mind telling me where you are now? If you want to find someone to talk to, I can get over to you immediately.”

“There’s not enough time.” The man spoke very slowly. “If you really want to help me, can you tell my landlady that the payment for the utility bill is placed on top of my luggage?”

“Landlady? Then how can I contact her?” Chen Ge listened to the man, and it sounded like he was leaving behind his will. He understood that the landlady was the best opening that he had to find the man’s location.

“She lives at the residential area that is to the left of Fairytale Theme Park. The sixth building and first floor.” The man sounded tired and weak like even speech was something that was very exhausting for him.

“Fairytale Theme Park?” The location of the park flashed across Chen Ge’s mind. It was located at the southern part of Jiujiang. It was a theme park that catered specifically for children, but it had later been closed for some mysterious reason. “Then, do you have her contact number? I’m afraid I’m unable to find her place.”

Chen Ge headed toward the exit of the building without wasting any time. He was ready to go to Southern Jiujiang personally to take a look. A human life was on the line, so he did not hang up and tried to extend the conversation. "Listening to your voice, I feel like you're very sleepy. Did you not sleep well last night?"

"I've not had a good night's sleep in a very long time." The man laughed. "I don't know why, but I can't seem to operate in the morning; however, at night, my mind starts to wander to strange places. I toss and turn in bed, unable to fall asleep."

"I understand your pain; I have trouble sleeping at night as well. I often spend the time wondering all over the city at night." Chen Ge could share in his pain, and technically, he was telling the truth.

The man seemed to have found a kindred spirit from Chen Ge's sincere words. "Do you also suffer from insomnia?"

"Yes, my parents disappeared about six months ago, and even now, there have been zero leads. I spend my daily life in pain and anxiety. I can only rely on others to find some semblance of comfort for my heart." At this point, Chen Ge's tone suddenly changed. "But I will not give up. When I find them, I will loudly tell them the anger and worry that I have in my heart and then run forward into their arms."

"I hope that you reunite with them soon." The man's voice softened, but his condition sounded worse and worse like he could collapse at any minute.

"Can you tell me your story? Just treat me as a stranger who is passing by." Chen Ge realized that it was about time, so he tried to ask this question.

"My life is quite boring." The man thought about it and replied with this answer.

"Life is boring and meaningless. The homework for everyone is to apply one's meaning to it so that life will not be so meaningless." Chen Ge already ran out of the office, and he was running toward the park entrance.

"Perhaps. My birth was an accident; it was my father who raised me. He worked very hard and had a small salary. He was just like any random guy you see on the street, a very normal person." The man's voice dwindled, but the speed of his words did not change much.

"I was a weak child from the moment I was born, and for that, I gave him plenty of trouble. It only got worse after I got into primary school. I was a stupid boy and couldn't do anything well. I was unable to focus in class, and no one wanted to be my friend."

The man took in a deep breath before continuing. "Initially, the teachers thought that I was just a silent boy, but in fact, I just don't like the company of people. However, one day, the teacher called my father to the school, and they suggested that he take me to see a doctor."

"See a doctor?"

"Yes, the analysis result was that I suffer from Nobita-Giant Syndrome. It's an interesting name, and when I heard it for the first time, I thought it was quite amusing."

The man laughed, but Chen Ge could not hear any joy from it. Chen Ge also heard this illness for the first time. Giant and Nobita were characters from a certain comic, were they not? "What are the exact symptoms for this illness?"

"Other countries call this illness ADHD or attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. The Nobita represents attention deficit and is the symptom that I suffer from."

"At the time, I knew nothing of this illness. When I went back to school, the other students only knew that I was ill, but they did not really understand what kind of illness it was. Actually, when people want to isolate you, anything is a good enough reason, and having a mental illness was the perfect excuse for them."

When the man said these things, he sounded so calm like he was unrelated to the person that he was describing.

"After finishing high school, I stopped my education because I felt guilty toward my father. I found many jobs, but I always got fired due to my illness. I started to be afraid of people, and my sickness exacerbated. In the end, it escalated to serious depression, and I was sent to an asylum to seek treatment. At the time, I was just over twenty. I was not only unable to help my poor father, but instead, I was like a leech, sucking him alive. With the many circumstances, I thought about it for a long time and eventually decided to leave."

"I uploaded everything that I want to tell my father online and set it as a delayed post." The man took in a deep breath. "If I had left behind everything that day, perhaps the tragedy later wouldn't have

“Do not have that thought! You’ll only have hope if you’re alive!”
Chen Ge had already hopped into the taxi and told the driver to get to Southern Jiujiang as fast as possible.

“I was saved, but during my coma, the words that I had set were released online. It was the first time that I received so much care and concern; I was overwhelmed. After I made my recovery, I went online to do some clarification. I apologized to everyone for creating the trouble. Many people comforted me, telling me that as long as I’m fine, they did not mind the trouble, but I also saw many private messages.

“Why are you still alive?

“Why are you still here?

“I was planning to light a joss stick for you, so please die.

“Suicide via sleeping pills is not a good method. Listen to me, if you’re really serious, you should try rat poison.

“Couldn’t you have died off silently?

“I was confused. I didn’t know those people, so why did so many of them wish for me to die? Would my death bring them happiness?”
The man’s voice came and went.

Even Chen Ge felt disgusted listening to those comments. “You shouldn’t let them have the satisfaction. The more they wish for you to die, the more you have to live a happy life. Live your life with a smile and show them that they’re wrong!”

The man on the other side laughed lightly. “You’re an interesting person. Honestly, I admit that I was conflicted for a period of time, but I saw the light after having a chat with my father. He did not care about my sickness and did not mind that I was slowing him down—he only wanted me to be alive, saying that I could always depend on him.

“At the time, I was twenty-two. My father’s words gave me the biggest encouragement. I wasn’t useless; I could make it. I cooperated fully with the treatment, and three months later, I was discharged from the hospital.

“Father knew about my condition—he knew I would be nervous around people—so he went around to find me a job that I did not need to interact with people. He had me pretend to be a giant cartoon character at a children's theme park.

“On my first day of work, a theme park worker brought me to the warehouse and told me to pick from the mountain of cartoon costumes.

“The Doraemon ¹ costume caught my attention immediately. It had a large head, and inside it was a small fan. The main reason was because I was diagnosed with Nobita-Giant Syndrome, and I felt like Doraemon could always bring good luck to Nobita.

“After some simple training, I was sent to work. Every day, my job was to put on the Doraemon costume and play with the children that came to the theme park. I even had candies and little presents hidden inside my pocket to share with the children.

“I liked that feeling. Seeing the smiles on children's faces, I would smile involuntarily. Hiding inside the costume, I gained a sense of security. I stopped being afraid of people and even actively went to approach the visitors. I thought that the job was custom made for me. I told you, Doraemon would always bring Nobita good luck.

“I worked there for a long time. Occasionally, my father would silently come to visit me. Actually, I knew it every time, and whenever he was around, I would be extra serious because I didn't want him to feel like his son is a useless person.”

The man's voice was shaking. He yawned and yawned like he was very sleepy.

“When I was twenty-five, my father came to me. He told me he was proud of me. I had not been beaten down by life, and I was already much better than many other people.

“He believed that I had the courage to continue this life, and then he told me that this meant that he felt good enough to leave me and work elsewhere. His friend had introduced him quite a lucrative job. At the time, I didn't question anything. Every week, I would talk to him on the phone, but gradually, I realized that there were changes to his voice.

“One day, I asked for a day off from the theme park. I went to this place and found his friend. However, the man said that he did not introduce my father to any job and that my father was not there.

Returning home, I looked for a long time and finally found him at an old rented apartment.

“The place reeked of Chinese medicine. He looked so thin and fragile. It was not until then that I knew he was suffering from leukemia. He had been silently fighting it. Since he had no money for treatment, he had to rely on traditional medicine. He found the excuse of going off to work because he did not want to worry me.

“My father eventually left. I felt like I was such a useless son. The sole reason that I powered on back then was to have my father enjoy a leisurely life, but I failed to do even that.”

There was no emotion to the man’s voice, but Chen Ge’s heart did not feel so good.

“I understood my father would have wanted me to carry on, so I tried my best to survive. However, there was something missing. When I was twenty-seven, the theme park had to close down due to various reasons. I tried my best to hold onto everything, but ultimately, I was just a Nobita, not a Doraemon.

“Actually, the cartoon costume was very uncomfortable; it was very hot in the summer, and I had to wear another layer inside or else the fur would get stuck to the skin. However, once I had to take it off, I found myself missing it.

“Wearing it, I was Doraemon in the children’s eyes. I had endless candies and presents in my multi-dimensional pocket, but after the costume was shed, I became nothing more than a Nobita.

“After so many years, I realized that I had not actually changed. Every day, I was fighting with myself, but I never really won. This year, I am thirty, and I don’t want to be so tired anymore. I just want to sleep peacefully.”

The man’s voice became lower and lower until Chen Ge could not hear it anymore.

“Hey! Don’t fall asleep yet!” Chen Ge was worried that once the man fell asleep, he would not wake up anymore. The taxi drove on the highway—Chen Ge was still a distance away from the man.

“Please don’t sleep! I’ll be there in a minute!” Chen Ge’s voice grew, but the response from the other side dwindled. It felt like the man really had fallen asleep. Chen Ge did not dare hang up, and he urged the driver to drive faster. Half an hour later, he finally reached the place that the man had mentioned.

Chen Ge ran into the building and knocked on the landlady's door. After some time, the door finally opened.

"Hello! I'm looking for a man, around thirty, is rather shy..." Chen Ge gave all the information that he had managed to get from the phone. However, he was only halfway through when the expression of the woman who opened the door dropped.

"Why are you looking for him?"

"Where is he now? His situation is very dangerous!"

"Huh?" The woman looked at Chen Ge strangely. "The man is already dead. He found a cartoon costume and ran into the closed children's theme park alone. When the police found him, it was already too late."

"When was this?" Chen Ge had not hung up—the phone was next to his ear.

"Several months ago. The man liked to be alone and had no friends. He left very suddenly. He didn't even pay his utility bill." The woman took a step back and started to close the door.

"Then, I'll go to theme park to take a look." Chen Ge nodded, and he was reminded of something as he was about to turn. "By the way, that utility bill, you can go and look through his luggage—it should be there."

"Luggage?" The woman's eyes on Chen Ge became even weirder. "Who are you? What is your relationship with him?"

"I'm his friend." Chen Ge ran back out the corridor and toward the abandoned children's theme park.

The rusted door was tightly close. Chen Ge removed the sign that announced the park as closed and entered the abandoned children's theme park. The rainbow door that was peeling, the fountain with no water, and the merry-go-round that could not turn anymore... no one had stepped into this place for a long time already. Chen Ge moved around and finally stopped at the entrance to the warehouse. Inside the room that smelled of mold and mildew was a Doraemon costume that was old and deserted.

"Hello? Are you still there?" Chen Ge had not hung up yet, but there had been no reply from the other end of the line. He walked into the warehouse and picked up the character costume. He held the costume's head in one arm. "I'll look after the costume for you for now. Take a good rest—you deserve it. I will wake you up when the sun climbs over the horizon."

Chen Ge found a large bag in the warehouse and placed the costume inside it. When he was folding the costume, he discovered that there was a photograph placed inside the costume's pocket. It seemed to have been taken at the hospital. A very young father was captured talking with the doctor, and there was a young boy as thin as a stick hiding behind the young father.

After putting away the photograph, when Chen Ge turned back to check the phone, he realized that the call had already ended.

"Forgot to ask for his name." Chen Ge combed through his mind, and he realized that neither the article online nor the landlady had referred to the man by name. He appeared to exist only within the character costume. People only knew him as the Doraemon at the children's theme park who loved children a lot.

Holding the phone, Chen Ge looked at the phone number. He had called the number twice, and he had been told two different life stories from two different victims.

What is the meaning of this phone number? Why would the victims call this number before they died? How do I find this baleful Specter that I've won from the Wheel of Misfortune?

Chen Ge thought about it, but he found no answer. He decided to continue calling the number. He held the large bag with the character costume in one hand and used his other hand to call the mysterious number.

From the perspective of probability, the baleful Specter that I've won this time should be more powerful than Ol' Zhou and Uncle Yan.

The dial tone rang for several seconds before the call was answered. With his previous two experiences in mind, Chen Ge directly asked, "Hello, how can I help you?"

The other side of the phone was very busy, and Chen Ge could hear the sound of trains passing by the tracks. After the sound of the trains disappeared, the phone became quiet again, and in the background, it sounded like children were reciting something.

"Hello?" Chen Ge held the bag as he exited the children's theme park. He called a taxi and told the driver to just leave the park for now. He would give him the exact address later.

The sound of howling wind came through the phone. He did not urge the other person—he waited patiently. After who knew how long, there was suddenly the sound of serious coughing.

"Are... are you okay? Are you sick?" Chen Ge's voice was soft and gentle, giving the listener some support and strength. "Do you need any help from me?"

"Thank you, but I'm fine." The man's voice that replied sounded like he had a lump of coal in his throat. The voice was very harsh, and he would cough every time that he spoke.

"You don't sound so great. I advise you go back home and don't stay outside anymore, or you can tell me your current location and I'll bring you to the hospital."

For the previous two calls, Chen Ge had arrived at the scene after the phone call was ended. This time, he prepared to find the person on the other side of the line before the call ended.

"Thank you for your kindness, but there's no need for me to go to the hospital; there is no cure for my sickness.” The man regained his breath after coughing for a long time. He moved slowly forward, and the wind picked up. “It’s already too late.”

“Yes, I’ve stayed at the hospital for a long time, but the illness is still the same. In fact, I feel like it’s not a sickness but a part of my body.”

Chen Ge was confused by the words that the man said. “Brother, do you mind telling me what kind of illness this is?”

The man sounded like he was saying something ordinary, but Chen Ge’s heart fell once he heard that. “Then why are you outside alone? Where are your family members? I’ll drive you home—it’s very windy out there.”

“It is indeed quite windy here.” The man kept coughing. He sounded very weak and fragile like he could collapse at any moment. “I escaped without my family’s knowledge.”

A patient with late stage lung cancer running out without his family’s knowledge, Chen Ge was reminded of the two characters from his previous phone calls, and a very bad feeling arose in his heart. “What you’re doing is very dangerous. Can you please tell me where you are now? I will not interfere with whatever decision you might make—I just want to accompany you and go on a walk together. How does that sound?”

“It’s alright, I can walk on my own. Actually, after I found out I have this lung cancer, I’ve been wanting to go to a certain location.”

“The place is built on a very high location. To get there, one has to climb many steps.”

“You want to go to Jiujiang World Trade Center? Why do you want to go there?” Chen Ge rarely visited the city, but even he knew that the World Trade Center was the tallest building in Jiujiang, and standing at the roof, one could look over the entire Jiujiang.

Realizing that, Chen Ge immediately gave the driver the signal to tell him to drive to Jiujiang World Trade Center.

The man did not answer Chen Ge's question. He just kept on coughing. Even through the phone, Chen Ge felt uncomfortable and pained for the man.

"Brother, why don't you just stay where you are? I will come help you."

"There's no need." After another series of coughs, the man became silent. Then, he probably thought Chen Ge was a good person, so he added, "You're very similar to my former attending physician, be it the way you speak or the way you do things. Or are you actually my attending doctor?"

"Attending doctor?" Chen Ge was serious considering whether to pretend to be this character so that he could have an easier time to get information from the man. He was familiar with how problematic this number was because all the victims had called this number before they died. If Chen Ge gave it further thought, the last person that all the victims would interact with could be a doctor, so this number might belong to a doctor.

"I hope you won't get offended; I'm just making a casual guess." The man did not have much of a sense of humor. His laugh was awkward, but even so, Chen Ge could hear how much it pained him to even laugh.

"Brother, can you tell me your story? If you keep it to yourself for too long, it'll turn bad and fester within you. You'll feel better if you share it with someone." Southern Jiujiang was not that far from the World Trade Center, so Chen Ge had confidence that he would be able to make it this time.

"I don't have that much of a storied background. I was just a normal person, but probably due to my smoking habit, I found out that I had lung cancer last year." The man's voice was even. Other than the coughing, there was no change in his emotions.

"I went for three sessions at the cancer hospital and then went home to prepare to enjoy that period of time that I had happily. I wanted to enjoy it while it lasts. I'm not a coward, so I've tried my best to fight it, but it's a very hard battle. I gave it my all and used my happiest memories to try to defeat it, but it has been trying to use fear and pain to counter.

"This war that took place on my body was long and hard. I swore to never give up and never surrender, and it tried many different tactics to make me kneel before it. My breathing became difficult, and there was constant pain and aching all over my body. Other than that, there were also the fevers.

“My body weight kept dropping, and the ache eventually got so intense that I could barely move my limbs. Every cough felt like my whole body was shaking, but I resisted the urge to take a painkiller.

This was the second time the man had stressed that.

Chen Ge did not ask why. He merely nodded and replied, “I understand.”

The man seemed to sigh in relief. “About one month later, there was a swelling around my neck. The lymph node was bulging. You could feel it with your fingers. At the time, I thought that I was unable to breathe; it was a labor just to drink water.

“After seeing the doctor, they said the constant bloody coughs caused the throat to expand, and that led to the swelling of lymph nodes. The consequence of that is that the intestine was affected.

“Before I could beat the previous enemy, a new adversary arrived. However, I still would not admit defeat.”

The man was a stubborn man, just like how he kept insisting to Chen Ge, who was a stranger, that he was not a coward.

The wind grew to such a scale where the sound of children’s recitation could not be heard anymore. The man was still moving.

“Brother, can you please tell me where you are now? How about I come get you?” Chen Ge was honestly quite worried about the man. He hoped that if he rushed over at that moment, he would be able to change something, as insignificant as that change might be.

“I’m climbing a long flight of stairs.” The man wanted to say that with a laugh, but whenever he opened his lips, he could not stop the cough from happening.

“You’re on the stairs?” Chen Ge heard the howling wind that was coming true, and he felt like something was wrong. Stairs that were on the outside of the building? Could he have gone up to the roof? Was he at the top of the World Trade Building?

Chen Ge had been to Jiujiang World Trade Building before; the place did not have an exterior staircase. It was then that he realized that he might not be heading to the right place.

“I’m stepping on the stairs, going toward my destination with one step after another. I should be able to reach the place soon.”

When the man spoke, the sensation of pain was obvious, and every cough was a torment for the man.

Chen Ge told the rather impatient driver to stop and park the taxi by the sidewalk. He held his phone and started to study the man’s words, start from the beginning.

Stairs, the destination is at somewhere high...

In the man’s voice, Chen Ge could hear the pain, both conspicuous and inconspicuous. The man kept stressing that he was not a coward, and he did not avoid the horrendous fight with his illness. Why would someone like that escape from home without his family’s knowledge?

He is already so physically weak, so why does he insist on going somewhere high?

Chen Ge listened closely. The man’s body was failing him, but his steps were even and slow; it did not sound like he was climbing any steps.

A staircase that is built on the ground... is there a place like that?

When Chen Ge was thinking, something flashed across his mind. When the call was first connected, he had caught the sound of a train!

The train tracks!

There were wooden boards at constant intervals on the train tracks, and in a way, that could be described as a staircase that was laid flat on the ground. If seen from this perspective, the man was not really heading to the World Trade Center.

He was seeking death!

The end of this staircase was death, the place where all his pain and misery would end.

It was because he had given up that he kept insisting to Chen Ge, a veritable stranger, that he was not a coward. Realizing that, Chen Ge started to search online.

Earlier, he had also heard the sound of children reciting poetry. There were two traditional Chinese schools in Jiujiang, and one of them was situated right next to a train track.

Chen Ge told the driver to take him there. After doing all that, he tried his best to console the man, to try to buy as much time as he could.

“Before illness, man will appear very small—that is something that I have come to understand recently.”

The man kept coughing. It seemed his body could not carry on any longer. “Before this, I was an easily-angered individual, but the illness has slowly worn my edges away. After my battle with it, I’ve realized how fragile humans are.”

“Please stop walking. Why don’t you stop and rest? I’ll arrive at Jiujiang World Trade Center soon. If you have anything to share, why don’t we do that in person?” Chen Ge lied about his location. He signaled at the driver to tell him to drive faster. According to the internet search, the school that was next to the train track was close to Southern Jiujiang, not far from where he was.

“I stopped moving a long time ago. It’s time to continue moving forward.” The man’s voice was shaking. The pain from his cough was hard to describe. “I know that you’re only thinking about me, but I want to go and see other scenarios, and that is why I am heading to this very tall place.”

Chen Ge did not know how to comfort the man. After all, he was not a professional therapist.

“If you die, you’ll lose everything. Calm down first. Think about the unfinished business that you have in your memory, think about the people that care about you—they’re still waiting for you. Every second that you’ve spent with them is an important, treasured memory for them.” Chen Ge spoke fast. He was feeling the pressure and kept waving his hand at the driver.

The driver was a clever person. He knew the severity of the situation from the words that came from Chen Ge’s mouth, so he drove faster.

They passed the entrance to the children's theme park and headed toward Southern Jiujiang's countryside.

Eastern Jiujiang was the largest district, and Southern Jiujiang was the smallest, so it had a very good public transport system. The man's voice continued. He seemed to treat Chen Ge as his last listener and told Chen Ge many things about himself.

The taxi raced on the road. The buildings on the side became smaller, and the number of pedestrians decreased. Sitting inside the car, Chen Ge talked to the man on the phone while he kept his eyes on the road and compared the map to look for the traditional Chinese school.

The coughing of the man on the phone became more drastic, sounding very much like he was going to cough his lungs out. This was not an exaggeration. Just from the sound alone, Chen Ge could tell how much pain the man was in.

"Hang in there! I'll be there in a minute!" Chen Ge was agitated. The sound that came from the phone was so real that he believed that there was still a chance to salvage the situation.

"It's okay, I'm used to it." The man said that after a long silence. His voice was mixed with a type of release, unwillingness, and freedom. He tried to explain himself clearly even though it would injure his swollen neck and throat. "I'm already very happy that you're willing to talk to me for so long. Go back home. I'm not where I told you I am. You don't need to come to see me. I can walk the rest of the distance on my own."

The wind grew, and Chen Ge held his breath. He was afraid of hearing the sound of the train. When the sound arrived, most likely, the man would have reached his destination.

Several minutes later, the driver reached the place. There was a nicely-preserved building at the end of the street—it was the old home for a scholar at Jiujiang, and the school was next to this building. The driver did not interrupt Chen Ge's conversation with the man. After he parked the car, he pointed outside the window and then at the meter.

Chen Ge was in a hurry to find the man. He grabbed some random notes from his pocket and tossed them to the driver. Following which, he pushed the door open, grabbed his backpack, and jumped out.

On the other end, the man's consciousness was flagging. He could barely finish a whole sentence, and his sense of logic was fraying.

“You have not finished your story. Earlier you were telling me about how you met your wife. What happened then?” Chen Ge did not dare let the man stop talking and tried to make the man continue the conversation. Not far from the street were the train tracks. The tracks were shielded on both sides by rails. However, part of the rails had been taken down. Most likely, the local citizens had taken them down for the sake of convenience.

Where is the man?

This was the place that combined the sound of train and the sound of children recitation. The phone call was still ongoing, so Chen Ge did not dare make too much noise. He ran down the rails, and the wind cut through his ears. In the dark, the train tracks were like a staircase that led to another world. They had no end, reaching into the dark.

“This staircase will not lead you to heaven...” He had no idea when the next train would arrive. The only thing that Chen Ge could do was find the man and then get him to safety. Chen Ge had no idea whether he was doing the right or wrong thing, but he wanted to try his best to make the man reconsider.

With one hand on the phone and the other holding the bag, Chen Ge ran down the side of the tracks alone. “Calm down, you have to calm down!”

Chen Ge had been unable to rescue the previous two victims, but he was not going to fail this time. The coughing began anew. The man’s physical condition seemed to have reached its limit. He stopped moving.

“I’m about to reach that place already,” the man’s voice said. “If there’s any regret, I should have spent more time with them.”

When the man spoke, Chen Ge’s pupils narrowed. Using Yin Yang Vision, he saw a human shadow quite a distance away. The man was sitting in the middle of the train tracks, and before him extended the tracks that cut right into the darkness.

Is that him?

Chen Ge ran toward the man, and gradually, there was light coming through the darkness. The wind picked up, and the man said, “I can already see the destination that I’m heading toward. It’s bright, a light that is slowly approaching...”

“Quick! Get away from there!” Chen Ge knew what that light was—the train was coming! He dropped the bag and charged toward the shadow. Through the phone, the sound of the train grew as Chen Ge got closer and closer to the shadow. He ignored everything else—there was only one thought in his mind then, which was to pull the shadow away.

Chen Ge saw the approaching train. He bit on his lips until they bled, but he forced himself to continue moving forward. If there was a third person, it would have looked like Chen Ge was actively running toward the incoming train.

“Get out of the way!” In the blink of an eye, Chen Ge had reached the black shadow. Before the train came, he reached out toward the shadow. His palm was touched by a chill. Before he could understand what that meant, Chen Ge grabbed the thing, and they both rolled away from the tracks.

The train flew past them, just a few seconds after they had been on the tracks. His whole body was soaked by cold sweat. Even when facing a Red Specter, Chen Ge had never been this afraid. The wheels of the train trundled over the tracks. The sound was heavy. Chen Ge only sighed in relief after the train left.

“Are you okay?” He quickly looked toward the black shadow that he had grabbed earlier. When he lifted his head, he realized that the black shadow was standing on the other side of the tracks, keeping his distance from Chen Ge.

“Why would you save me?” The voice made by the shadow was similar to the one on the phone.

“Do you need a reason to save someone?” Chen Ge retorted. He ended the call and walked toward the shadow. As he approached, the facial features of the shadow became clearer. Blood soaked out from his skin to slowly dye his shirt red.

The atmosphere froze, and Chen Ge stopped where he was. The train tracks separated the man and the shadow into different sides. Facing normal lingering spirits or ghosts, Chen Ge was already not afraid, but there was still pressure when facing a Red Specter. To save the man, he had abandoned the bag with the Doraemon costume and his backpack. This meant that he was defenseless.

Chen Ge was unsettled as his hand tried to grab something. The night was like a cover smothering the moonlight and stars. The changes to the black shadow were continuing. The weakened body slowly straightened itself. The lines on the edge of the eyes were smoothed out, and blood leaked out from the forehead. It painted a strange pattern on the face, which looked like a birthmark or a red tattoo.

Chen Ge stood across from the man. He looked at the man and did not dare wander too close.

A birthmark?

This was the first time that Chen Ge had seen a ghost like this. The blood would form a pattern on the face. Upon closer inspection, he realized that the thing that looked like birthmark seemed to be formed from innumerable human faces. They dominated half of the man's face. In other words, one half of the man's face was his own, and the other half kept shifting.

This presence is even more powerful than Xu Yin's. No wonder it's a Red Specter that's only weaker than Zhang Ya.

Chen Ge swallowed and looked behind him. The backpack was dropped at quite a distance away. It would be too late for him to run for it.

Standing there, Chen Ge told himself to calm down. As if he was unable to see the changes that were happening before him, he used a natural tone to ask, “Are you the one who has been on the phone with me tonight?”

The man looked very smart. In fact, he could be described as pretty. His eyes were not big, but there was a wealth of knowledge inside it. They were like tidepools that could pull you in if you looked at them for too long. It was truly the first time that Chen Ge had come across such a Red Specter. The feeling that he got from the Specter was very weird. There was no cruelty and viciousness that he sensed from a normal Red Specter—it was a feeling that he could not describe, like the silence and chill of a moon on a cold night.

“I’m here to help you.” Chen Ge did not know what to say. He had no idea how powerful the Red Specter was, so he did not dare act recklessly. The two looked at each other for a long time, and the strange man spoke for the first time.

“These people’s life and death have nothing to do with you. Why would you try so hard to save their lives?”

“Why are you still hung up on that question? I’m not a saint, but if I happen across someone that needs my help, then naturally, I have to help them to the best of my ability,” Chen Ge said sincerely. “Even if I know they will seek death after my intervention, at least I’ve tried to help them gain one chance to reconsider.”

It was unclear which of Chen Ge’s words had touched the man. The blood on his face stopped flowing, and his expression softened. He looked down the train track that led into the darkness and sighed. “If I was half as clever as you are, perhaps he would not have died.”

“He? Who would not have died?” Chen Ge was confused. “What do you mean? I ran into these victims after calling a number. Have you called that number before, or is that your number?”

The reward that he had gotten from the black phone was the Phone Number That Is Kissed by the Dead. Every victim called this number before they died. Chen Ge was worried because he had called that number many times tonight.

The man heard Chen Ge, and he pulled his gaze back. He was on the thin side, and his skin was pale. He looked gentle and weak, but half of his face was covered with the scary-looking blood tattoo, creating a strange contradiction. However, strangely enough, this contradiction felt fitting for the man. The man did not answer Chen Ge’s question.

He stood on the other side of the track and looked down a different direction.

“Did you notice a similarity about these people?”

“Similarity?” Chen Ge thought about it. “Every one of them met something tragic when they were still alive. They could see no escape, so in the end, they chose to leave the world their own way.”

“Then do you know why they would call that number before they bade farewell to this world?” The man’s voice was emotionless. It was unclear whether the man was naturally devoid of emotion or had lost all hope. Chen Ge had come up with a lot of different theories since he obtained this number, but he had vetoed them all. The purpose of this number was merely to communicate with the victims, to hear their story.

It was not evil and did not mean the victims any harm. Shaking his head, Chen Ge had a guess in his heart, but he did not voice it.

The man seemed to expect that. He stood beside the track and went down memory lane. His face twitched with pain and self-recrimination, but the most powerful emotion was confusion. “When I was still a student, I saw a classmate commit suicide. At the time, I was standing at the window, and he was standing at the roof of the opposite building.

“I waved at him and smiled, but he did not reply—he looked like he was possessed. I felt that something bad was about to happen, so I called his name loudly. Yet, in the end, I failed to save him.

“That was my first encounter with death. It happened right before me, just less than ten meters away.

“People say that those who study psychiatry either want to treat themselves or they’re saints who want to treat other. I believe that I’m the former.”

Hearing that, Chen Ge blurted out, “So, you’re a psychiatrist?”

He actually did not want to interrupt the man, but he had seen so many doctors lately, like Doctor Gao and Doctor Chen. Both of them were top doctors of their field, but they had failed to cure themselves, instead dropping deeper and deeper into the abyss. This explained Chen Ge’s caution around this particular profession.

“I am in the counselling field, but I’m not an actual doctor. Have you heard of an occupation called suicide prevention hotline operator?”

“Suicide prevention hotline operator? Can you tell me the actual job scope?”

The man was a Red Specter, but he could communicate freely with Chen Ge. This type of Red Specter was often exceptionally brilliant but physically weak, like Men Nan.

Chen Ge had more experience dealing with such Red Specter. He needed to communicate with them using reason and empathy.

Chen Ge called Zhang Ya’s name silently. In front of an unknown Red Specter, he did not dare act too confidently. If the situation changed, then he would adopt a different strategy.

Zhang Ya...

Silently calling her name, Chen Ge was slightly unsettled because he got no response. He turned to look behind him. The night was so dark that he could not see his own shadow.

...

“What are you doing?” The man noticed Chen Ge’s strange action, and he commented in a low voice, “You don’t look so good.”

“This is the first time I’ve heard about a suicide prevention hotline operator. What do you do daily?” Chen Ge did not lose his footing. He immediately adjusted his emotions and led the topic away.

“There are more than a million people who die from suicide annually. This number far exceeds homicide, but this topic is seldom brought up due to taboo and shame. Actually, we should tackle it head on. When someone shows any suicidal tendencies, we should help and cure them, not isolate and blame them simply because we cannot understand them.

“No one is dumb enough to make light of their own life. When one is really pushed to that state, only they can understand the pain that they’re experiencing.” The man seemed to be reminded of something and looked into the horizon. “I was a suicide prevention hotline operator. Every day, I reached out toward those who were walking into the abyss. My wish was to tell them that there are people who are willing to help them in the world. I could not pull them back from the abyss, but the least I could do was to share with them the beauty of this world.”

“That number is for a suicide prevention hotline?” Chen Ge nodded. “No wonder the tone of the people who talked to me was so weird.”

“They’re not weird. If you experienced the same thing as them, then perhaps you might be similar to them.” The man turned around to look at Chen Ge. “Actually, those who have the firm desire to die will not call our number. Those who would call it have a love for this world buried deep in their heart. Their difference, their uniqueness, is actually a manifestation of them asking for help.”

“Yes, suicide is not a spur of the moment thing. The reason will be buried in their heart since a long time ago. Then suddenly, one day, due to a certain trigger, in that instant, the person will be overwhelmed by negative emotions. Many suicides are premeditated, but people around them rarely notice it. If they paid a little bit more attention and made some changes, so many lives could be changed.”

The blood on the man’s shirt was slowly fading. Even the tattoo on his face was lightening. This was the first time that Chen Ge had happened across something like that. The Red Specters that he had met before, no matter what happened, the blood on their appearance would barely change. The Red Specter before him seemed to be very different.

The man did not mind Chen Ge’s eyes on him. He probably just wanted to find someone to talk to. “I’ve heard many reasons for suicide. A factory owner owed too much money after he tried to keep his factory running. At the last moment of his life, he did not have the courage to go home to face his family. When I accepted the call, the man who was around fifty kept on crying. His only wish was to see his children, but he couldn’t do that. There were many similar situations. Whenever it was midnight, humanity would become incredibly fragile. Midnight to 3 am is the time when we would be the busiest. That is also when I failed to save someone for the first time.”

With the track between them, Chen Ge and the man had not moved from their positions.

“Do you still remember the first number that you called?”

“Yes.”

“The author once called me when he was still alive. I could hear the madness in his voice, but I had underestimated his resolution. I thought that he just wanted to share his story with someone because he sounded so calm, and I could not hear anything strange during our conversation—he just sounded a little bit down.” When the man spoke, the blood tattoo on his face slowly shifted to become the face of another person.

"I remember it clearly. That was my first failed intervention. Even now, I can recite word for word our conversation that night." The man's voice was pained. "I read about him the next morning in the newspaper. I was swamped by regret. He had handed me his last hope, but I had ignored him. I was responsible for creating that tragedy.

"From then on, I would be extra careful when I talked to people, but the situation did not turn for the better.

"One month after that, I failed again. It was the man's thirtieth birthday. He purposely chose that day and wore his work outfit to bid farewell to the world at the place that was most meaningful to him." The man should be talking about the patient with Nobita-Giant Syndrome.

"A living man's life disappeared before my eyes, and I didn't stop it." The blood tattoo changed again. Chen Ge realized that whenever he talked about someone, the tattoo on his face would change. From his experience dealing with Specters, the lingering spirits of those who had committed suicide had probably entered the man's body. In other words, the man was shouldering the pressure of all the lingering spirits alone.

"My third failure happened the next day. I was planning to personally visit the previous victim." For the first time, the man's tone changed. "He was really a very kind person. I once asked him what his wish was. The answer that he gave me was that he was worried that the landlady might not be able to rent the place if he died there, so he purposely sought someplace else. He had left the utility fee on his luggage, but he had no friends, so he hoped that I would help him inform the landlady and pass the money to her.

"I had a long chat with him that night until he fell asleep. I should have called the police, but I had no idea where he was.

"Before this incident ended, I had another caller. He suffered from cancer and was ravaged by illness. Different from other callers, he called me in the morning. He had planned this for a long time." The man turned to look at Chen Ge. "My job is to pull one from the depths of despair, but that day, I did not do something like that. Perhaps it was the pressure, or maybe it was the multiple failures, but that day, I did not talk him away from suicide but chose to respect his choice."

Whenever the man mentioned the victim, the blood tattoo on his face would change.

“I didn’t do the job that I was supposed to, but have I done something wrong?” The man’s emotions were running wild. “All the calls that we received at the center were recorded, and it was no different for that call. I have no idea what happened later, but not long after his incident, the last conversation that he had with me on the phone was revealed to the public.”

Chapter 562: Unique Red Spectre

“After that, the first person who found me was my teacher. It was 5 am, and I was resting in the breakroom with my jacket wrapped around me. I heard the door open, but I was too drowsy to care.

“When I opened my eyes at noon, I saw my teacher sitting at the table inside the room. He was reading Menninger’s Man Against Himself, a book with a focus on suicide psychology.

“Sun filtered into the room. At the time, I had no idea what happened outside—I just thought that my teacher was acting strangely. He was the most experienced counsellor at our office. He was the one who taught me everything, so even though I was no longer under his tutelage, I still referred to him as my teacher.”

From the man’s voice, Chen Ge realized that he respected his teacher a lot.

“Your teacher told you everything? What were his thoughts?” Chen Ge was curious. He even wanted to become friends with the Red Specter, and for that, he needed to understand his personality and his wishes. Only then would the man willingly work for him.

“He didn’t tell me anything related to the news—he only asked me one question.” The man looked at the darkened night. “If one day, he was standing at the edge of the building, what would I do to talk him off the ledge?”

“I’d never considered that question before. In my eyes, my teacher was a very powerful person in terms of his faith. This scenario would never happen in my mind, but I still shared my real thoughts with him. If that day really did happen, I would use everything that he had taught me on him and try my best to save him. If I failed, then I would choose to respect his decision.

“I had never thought how saintly my job was; I just knew how important it was. It was no different from the doctors in an emergency room. I give it my all to save the patients, but similarly, I would respect their wishes.”

As the man spoke, his voice lowered.

“After he heard me say that, he smiled satisfactorily. Just like an old friend, he sat next to me and told me one thing.

“He said that I was a good student, the student he was most proud of in fact, but I was not a qualified suicide prevention hotline operator.

“My teacher saw the imbalance in my emotions, so he told me to go for a walk to clear my mind. A suicide prevention hotline operator is a very unique job. Aside from the prank calls, everyone would receive around twenty mildly-dangerous calls and one to five emergency calls every night. With the continuous calls, the operator themselves would be affected. They would cry on the phone with the callers. Whenever that happened, you had to tell yourself to calm down and try to detach yourself from the situation and help them from an outsider’s perspective.

“A person’s body is like a balloon filled with water. Good and bad emotions fill up the balloon. If one can’t make the adjustments, when the balloon bursts, that is when a person faces a mental breakdown.

“As a suicide prevention hotline operator, the brain is soaked in tears and pain every night. Most leave the job after a certain period of time, so initially, I didn’t get what my teacher was trying to say.

“When I tried to ask for clarification, my teacher patted my shoulders and left, but he left behind the book that he was reading. Later, after I found out that my phone conversation had been released online and became the first operator that convinced my caller to kill themselves, many people came at me with horrible words. However, at the time, I was very calm. No matter what others said, it had nothing to do with me—I only cared about right or wrong.

“From a certain perspective, I was a very dumb person. I would cry due to the callers’ stories and would talk to these strangers until dawn. I would cry with them and even laugh with them. I understood their pain. I never saw myself as a savior; I merely treated them as my friends.”

The man’s eyes were clouded when he said those things, but soon, they were replaced by red, and blood leaked out from his skin. “Before that ended, something else happened.

“When you stop a person hellbent on dying, even if you’re successful one time, they might use a more drastic method next time.

“To prevent that from happening, we occasionally allow them to try it within an acceptable range. For example, if there was an ambulance, safety cushion, and a relatively-small building, we would not forcibly pull one away from the edge.

“I know this might be hard to stomach, but think of it from a different perspective—empathy is a hard to practice effort. Even biological parents have a hard time doing that. Prevention that is too harsh will only need to a negative effect—that is something that shows that you do not understand the person’s pain.

Hearing that, Chen Ge had a bad feeling. “Have you really done that before?”

“During one of our missions, I did something similar. Actually, it is not as scary as you think. We are merely allowing it within a controlled situation. To give you another example, one of my callers wanted to die from a sleeping pills overdose. His emotions were very unstable, and we were unable to communicate. At the time, I tried to negotiate with the police and found sleeping pills with a very low dosage for him to try. After experiencing death once, he had a big change and started to love life again.

“I have many successful results, but these methods appear like it has violated our responsibility. After the recording was exposed, these methods attracted a lot of criticism. I was trying my best to save people, but people pinned me as a murderer.

“I started to think. My teacher came to talk to me, and many friends consoled me. However, the key was not me but whether it was right or wrong.”

The man did not look much older than Chen Ge, but he sounded far more worldly than Chen Ge. He looked at the dark night and was silent for a long time. The expression on his face turned ugly, but it slowly returned to normal before he smiled a faithless smile.

“Perhaps I am not a qualified suicide prevention hotline operator, but those that I once helped really did treat me as the last friend that they could trust at the end of their lives.” The man’s shirt was completely dyed red, and the tattoo on his face kept changing. “This is something I understood after my death—there was so much hope that was placed on me.”

Chapter 563 - A Ghost with Shadow

Chapter 563: A Ghost with Shadow

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

A faded light cut through the night, but neither Chen Ge nor the man turned to look at it.

“They have placed their hope on you?” Chen Ge could understand to a certain degree why the man turned into a Red Specter. His own resentment was not that strong, but he had interacted with many patients when he was alive, and the key part was that those dead patients had treated him as the sole person that they could talk to.

All their negative emotions, all their sad past, all their regrets that could no longer be fulfilled, the patients poured all these things into the operator, and he kept them locked up in his heart. A qualified operator would know how to adjust the emotions in his heart. They would be able to keep their distance from the patients and would know how to siphon out the negative emotions that they got from their work. They would engage the callers when they were on the phone, but once the call ended, they would toss the case out of their mind.

However, the man on the other side of the track was different. He had been deeply influenced by his callers. Like Chen Ge, he had placed himself in their shoes and tried his best to empathize with them, to connect with them. When he was standing at the edge of the abyss to help his patients, he had slowly been pulled into it with them.

There was a limit to a person’s ability to accept pressure. Even for professional counselors, they would have some inner problems after working at their post for too long. The man had failed to adjust his conditions after every case and then a new case would arrive. He had reached out to grab those victims, but he did not realize that his own body was slowly being pulled down into the abyss with them.

The man’s teacher had noted the problem, so he had told the man to go for a rest, but in the end, the result proved that he had failed to follow his teacher’s instructions. He had become one of his patients; a suicide prevention operator chose to commit suicide.

“Why would you do that? Death will not solve any problem.” Chen Ge tried to console the man, but considering the man’s job, he had a surreal feeling.

“I’ve considered everything that you’ve said before. After all, I’m the expert in this field.” The man’s body was covered with blood. He was different from other Red Specters. He turned to look at the light from the distance; he seemed to like brightness and light.

“There are several major reasons someone commits suicide. One is because the person’s understanding of their environment and world has become twisted. They use a gray view to look at the world and believe life is a painful ordeal. My death is not this kind.

“Next is when someone feels overwhelmed by guilt due to a certain incident, and they cannot see themselves out of it. Obviously, my death is not this kind either.

“The third is for the sake of revenge. They want to use their death to make other people feel regret. This doesn’t match my situation either.

“There are more than ten reasons to the cause of suicide if we’re being really detailed. However, I don’t belong to any one of them. In a way, I’m a unique suicide victim.

“Actually, I tried to convince myself. I reminded myself that I’ve saved so many people, but when I was trying to save myself, I realized how weak language really is.

“The author, the worker at the park, the cancer patient, each of them represent a different personality, a different attitude toward life. I felt sorry for their loss, and I hated myself for how powerless I was. I really wished they had another chance to live!

“I tried my best to explain, to persuade myself, but after hearing what they had to say, I understood that they had their own reason to leave. Sometimes, I envy the doctors because they only need to prescribe medicine to save their patients. But it’s different for us. Even though I know death is a type of release, a type of medicine, I can never prescribe them that.

“When the people on the internet attacked me, I explained my thoughts. It was a public execution, just without the blood.” The man’s eyes were calm. “Many people said that I am sick, that I’ve lost my mind. I'm an executioner, and I've killed so many people, but in reality, I was just trying to help them."

The light came closer and closer. The man stood next to the track and had no intention of evading.

"Those who have not witnessed death will never understand their pain. So, who gave them the right to point their fingers at us? Who allowed them to have the moral high ground?"

As the light got closer, the man spoke faster. Blood leaked out from his forehead to dye his uneven face red. "When I stood up from the pool of blood, I understood. Those lives that were unlivable, lives that were nothing but despair, channeled into my body. I finally understood them, understood why they would make this ridiculous choice."

The man's eyes were red. The calmness left his face, and his voice became more and more crazed.

"I tried everything to cure them. Perhaps I could find a way to make them feel love and make them give love and even accept love, but I could not change the love, or the lack thereof, in their surroundings. This is why many people continue to repeat the action after they are stopped for the first time. This is because their living environment has not changed. The bullied become easy targets, and the taboo makes them even more isolated. The group of people who really could save them did not include me, a meager hotline operator—it was the people around them.

"After you get to know most of them, you'll realize, the real evil is the people around them. They used their power to decolorize the world of these people—they are the real murderers!

"Even when they died, those who killed them would never show a trace of sadness, but those who loved them would feel more pain.

"Is that fair?"

The man looked at the approaching train, and he slowly raised both of his arms.

"I understood these things after my death. Actually, many victims have regrets, but they have no chance to redo their lives. They could only channel their last wishes into me, to ask me to seek justice for them."

“Justice? What do you plan to do?” At that moment, Chen Ge felt intense murderous intent from the man. After experiencing so many things, the man was completely corrupted.

“To punish those who would only demand love but would never give love. I need to clean up the trash so that kind people will not suffer pain anymore.”

The way the man said that made it sound like he was going after not one but many people. Compared to other Red Specters, this man’s cruelty and madness was hidden deep inside his heart.

“Calm down first. I feel like there is a better way.” Chen Ge took a step back and called Zhang Ya’s name in his heart.

“This is not my decision alone—it’s everyone’s wish.” The blood boiled, and the train lit up the stretch of the tracks. When the light shone, Chen Ge could see the many black shadows that crowded up the space behind the man.

Chapter 564 - Live Life with Kindness, Happiness, and Honesty

Chapter 564: Live Life with Kindness, Happiness, and Honesty [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

“Can you hear their voices? They are telling me their stories and pain. Even though their bodies have perished, their lingering spirits have remained.” The man slowly opened his arms, and the changing side of his face slowly settled down to become his own face.

He looked at Chen Ge. “I once personally witnessed something like this. The girl was standing at the edge of the roof. The firemen tried their best to talk her back from the edge, but the passersby who were gathered were cheering for her. They saw her death as a type of entertainment. I know it’s not appropriate to say that, but that is the truth. They took out their phones to take pictures and urged her to jump. Then they would record everything—they might even share it online and couple it with an emotional response.

“These people are not an exception. It’s because of their existence that so many people that should not have died were forced to the edge of despair.”

Chen Ge looked at the man on the opposite side of the track. He understood the man to a certain degree, but it did not mean that he agreed with him fully. “Friend, I understand that there are many terrible things and people in the world—they are all around us—but other than them, there are still many more beautiful things in the world. The mix of good and bad forms the foundation of our lives. I think that your teacher has quite a good point—you are someone who sincerely placed himself in the shoes of your patients and are a good man, but you are not suitable to be a suicide prevention hotline operator.

“You said it yourself, you hope to change people into someone who can absorb and release love, but you did not realize that you have been subconsciously and slowly influenced by your callers. Your world was slowly corrupted by these terrible things, and all you can see are those ugly and disgusting things.

“Actually, the world hasn’t changed; it has always been like that. The thing that has changed is you.”

The Red Specter on the other side was a kind-hearted man. This was also the first time that Chen Ge had seen a pure and kind person become a Red Specter after their death. This went against his previous experience with Red Specters. They were normally formed from a collection of negative emotions, desperation and despair.

The man had become a Red Specter not because of extreme hate or extreme love, and not because of negative emotions or resentment, but because of kindness. A normal person needed to shoulder the painful pasts of many suicide victims—that was impossible in Chen Ge’s eyes, but the man before him had managed to do that. From a certain perspective, this Red Specter might have greater potential than Zhang Ya, but the man did not seem to know how to utilize it.

The man did not expect Chen Ge to counter his perspective. He looked at Chen Ge straight in his eyes. There was a unique type of emotion turning in his eyes. His calmness was shattered, and he appeared rather agitated. “Do you know why I told you these things, why I chose to share them with you?”

“Why?” Chen Ge had not expected to convince the man with just a few words. He knew that a person’s way of thinking was not going to be so easily changed. He simply thought that the man must be so tired of shouldering all that pain. Be it when he was alive or after death, perhaps he could try to find a different way of living.

“The phone number that you’ve saved in your phone, that was my operator number. The people that you’ve called and talked to, those are the victims that I failed to rescue.” The man’s tone and expression became weirder and weirder. His facial features slowly twisted. If he had given Chen Ge the impression that he was no different from a living person at the beginning, that sense of humanity had now completely disappeared.

“The callers were your test. If you did not help them, mocked their deaths, or ignored their plea for help, then you would have soon joined the legion of shadows behind me.” The man had moved from one extreme to another—this type of thinking was very dangerous.

“Looks like I’m quite lucky. Does that mean I’ve past the test?” Chen Ge knew that it was not so easy to gain a Red Specter. He had spent plenty of energy to convince normal Red Specters like Yan Danian and Xu Yin to join him. To get Zhang Ya, he had even sacrificed his happiness for the rest of his life. To gain the reward, one had to provide the same amount of effort. Everything provided by the black phone was an equal trade. There was no shortcut or bargain.

“You were supposed to communicate with seven callers, but I did not expect you to pinpoint one of the callers’ location just from environmental clues; that is something that I would not have been able to do.”

The man’s expression was still scary and savage, but his eyes had softened by a lot.

“I also did not expect you to risk your life to save someone who is nothing but a stranger to you. In fact, you rushed to the track and jumped before a train before you could consider whether the person was a human or a ghost. Did you consider this? If you were a few seconds slower, then you would have lost your life too.”

“Whether it’s real or fake, I would have done the same thing because a human life is on the line. I could not hedge my bets, even if I was ninety-nine percent certain that this was a trap. For the possibility that a human life could be saved, I am willing to be tricked.” Chen Ge’s voice was even but powerful. It sounded comforting to the listener.

“So be it, perhaps I really am an idiot. I’ve done many similar things before. Many people have called me out on it, but I’ve gotten used to it myself.” The atmosphere slowly softened, and Chen Ge asked probingly, “Now that I’ve passed your test, what are you going to tell me next?”

He looked at the Red Specter across the tracks with anticipation. His eyes were glowing as he scanned the crowded black shadows behind the man. Being stared in that manner, the man frowned slightly. “Indeed, this has never happened before. This number is merely a tool that I used to silence and appease the hatred of the suicide victims. I used it to sift out the creeps that dared to mock the dead and then take their lives away. You have passed the test, but that only means that you’ve earned the right to live.”

“You’ve used this number to kill?” Chen Ge’s voice turned icy. He really did not expect that this number, which had once saved so many lives and represented hope for so many people, would end up becoming a tool to kill. The man treated the same number in a completely different manner prior to and after his death. This made Chen Ge feel a certain way.

“I know that you’ll think that is weird, but doesn’t that fit the wishes of certain people?” A smile appeared on the man’s strange face. “After my death, this number that has saved so many lives was painted by these crazies to be a number that is cursed by the devil. Those who called the number would be cursed and become unlucky. They would get into accidents and die. They even wreathed a horror story around me. What I’m doing now is merely turning their stories into reality.”

There was no joy of revenge in the man’s voice—it just sounded cold and detached. Chen Ge understood the man’s thoughts. He had never wanted to hurt anyone, but he was the one who had ended up being hurt the most. Even after death, he could find no peace, if the man’s personality did not change after experiencing all that, then something was really wrong.

After giving it some thought, Chen Ge slowly spoke. “Actually, we are rather similar. We are the type of idiot who will give up everything to place ourselves in the shoes of other people, but in the end, we end up losing ourselves.”

When the man heard Chen Ge, his frown relaxed. He was about to say something, but he was interrupted by Chen Ge. “But we’re also completely different. The road that I chose is different from yours. You chose to silently keep everything in your heart until, eventually, you couldn’t fit anything in anymore and collapsed. Actually, you do not need to lead such a tired life. You cannot change everyone, but the person whom you can change is yourself. I’m not trying to get you to change who you are—I just hope you’ll understand your own importance.”

Chen Ge used his own experience to try to persuade the man. “I’ve met many horrible people in my life, and they all came from different walks of life. They came after other people’s lives to either cure the illness in their heart or to fulfil a certain belief. They would stop at nothing and would destroy everything to get what they wanted. Of course, there are those who were born with a broken heart and sealed the love that they could not enjoy in the wall. I’ve seen many similar stories.”

Chen Ge kept his tone even and calm. He had really experienced many things in this short period of time. The man studied Chen Ge and believed that Chen Ge was not lying. "If you've seen so much evil in the world, why would you risk your life to save a dead person? Did you realize that this was a trap from the very beginning, speculate about my intention, and then purposely do something like that?"

In the man's eyes, Chen Ge was a very clever person. He had managed to figure out the caller's location from the background noises on the phone. Now, he started to form suspicions about Chen Ge, believing that this could be a trick.

"Yes, I've met many bad people, but I was not influenced by them. I have my own way of living, and I have my own principles. No matter what they said or did, I knew that I only had to make sure that I did one thing well." Chen Ge stood across from the Red Specter. Their power was not on the same level, but in terms of presence, they were quite similar.

The man had this similar concern before, and he asked Chen Ge without thinking about it, "What is it?"

"To be myself." Chen Ge was a normal-looking person, but he had a very bright smile. He was able to bring comfort to people around him no matter the time. "Society is very cruel, but I made sure to maintain my own warmth. I do not care about the chaos in the world; I only hope that I can maintain my honesty and kindness and stay true to myself. That is more than enough."

"That is all?" The man opened his lips to say something, but the train came through right then to separate him from Chen Ge. The ground shook, and what the man said later was swallowed up by the trundle of the train. Chen Ge could not hear him clearly.

The train ran toward the horizon. The light slowly disappeared, and the surroundings were swallowed up by darkness once more. In the dark night, Chen Ge and Red Specter stood on opposite sides of the track.

Neither of them spoke. Chen Ge had no idea whether his persuasion had worked or not. He sincerely wanted to help the man—he really could use the man to save more people in Eastern Jiujiang. He felt like he shared a same target with the man, so they should definitely work together.

With his hands in his pocket and the night breeze in his hair, Chen Ge stated everything that was in his heart. “Stop holding on to so much pain. There are so many things in this world that you have not experienced. There are so many people standing behind you, and they have placed their last hope on you. You should try to live the life that they were not given on their behalf. Become the person that they want to be with their hopes and dreams—I think that is the real thing that they want to see.”

Standing in the night, no one could see the crowded shadows behind the man. He stood where he was for a long time before walking over from the other side of the track. With every single step, the blood on his body disappeared. When he stopped before Chen Ge, the red shirt had returned to normal. He looked just like a normal guy. If he had not found out earlier, even Chen Ge could not have guessed that this was a special Red Specter who shouldered the will of so many suicide victims.

“You shouldn’t trap yourself inside that small circle. You are not alone. You should let them enjoy happiness and light. After all, that is the thing that they desire the most in their lives.” Chen Ge saw the man nod in agreement, and he revealed a kind smile. “The best life is one with spices. Why don’t you follow me for now? I can introduce you to many new friends to regain that warmth and happiness.”

“Follow you?” The man’s tone was confused. Normally, people would stay away from ghosts, but this young man did not appear all that normal.

“I’m already quite surprised that you’re not scared by me. There’s no need to force yourself.”

“Nothing is forced.” Chen Ge did not expect the man to consider him first at a time like this. He reminded himself not to be too eager, or he might scare the man away.

“Your issue is that you always put other people first. I’ve welcomed many homeless ‘friends’ before, and I believe that they would be happy to have you join us.” In a few days, Chen Ge planned to do something big in Eastern Jiujiang, so he needed as many friends as he could find. Furthermore, the man could transform into a normal person. This was a very powerful ability. Other people would think that he was just a normal Specter, but in reality, he was an extremely scary Red Specter.

No matter what Chen Ge said, the man did not reply. He was different from other Red Specters—he had retained all of his memories from when he was alive. Unlike Zhang Ya and Xu Yin, he had his own autonomy.

“I will go to your place to take a look, but not now.” The man showed a rare smile. “After I finish the will of all the spirits that depend on me, I will follow your instructions and try to start a new life.”

“The wishes of all the suicide victims?” Chen Ge thought about the mass of shadows following the man. If he completed the wish of every single of them, he probably would not meet the man until several years later.

Chen Ge did not want to wait for years to use the Red Specter that he had won from the black phone. He thought about it and said, “Can you complete so many wishes on your own?”

“That is my promise to them, so no matter what, I will do it.”

“You misunderstood me.” Chen Ge waved his hands. “I’m actually asking, would you like me to help you complete their wishes? That will make things go faster. I am sure you don’t want the victims’ souls to remain tormented in this world for too long, right?”

“You want to help me?” This time, the man was really touched. No one had ever treated him like Chen Ge.

“Don’t worry, I don’t ask for anything else. I just want you to realize, even if the whole world has abandoned you, there is someone who is always willing to stand by your side.” Chen Ge extended his hand toward the man. “By the way, I have not asked you for your name. How should I refer to you?”

The man was silent for a very long time before reaching out to shake Chen Ge’s hand. “My name is Zhang Wenyu.”

“Zhang Wenyu?” Feeling the cold from the palm, Chen Ge revealed a sincere smile. “I’ve remembered your name. I will help you complete the victims’ wishes, so we will certainly interact more in the future.”

The man thought that Chen Ge was quite a good person. He took back his hand silently and suddenly did not know what to say. In all his life, he had not met anyone who could understand him, but he had found one after death.

“Do you have any wishes that can be completed around Jiujiang? Let’s start with those that are closer to us. We need more preparation before we can tackle things that are further away.” Chen Ge had said that he would help the man, and he was not joking.

The man did not answer. He was not sure whether he should do that or not. After all, he was the one who shouldered all the pain of the victims.

“Don’t worry, I don’t have any hidden intentions and will not ask anything from you as compensation. I’m just helping you out of convenience. You have to understand that you’ll have difficulty completing some of these wishes, but I’m different. I’m a living person, just leave those things that are not that convenient for you to me.” Chen Ge was telling the truth, and the man was slowly convinced. He had realized that he would face many problems on his journey due to his unique identity.

“Okay, how about we do it like this?” The man looked at Chen Ge, and the red in his eyes completely disappeared. “If you help me complete the wishes of these victims, in return, I will help you do some favors that are not in violation of my principle.”

“Yes, if you help me then I’ll help you, isn’t that fair?”

Chen Ge did not expect the man to be so upright. At the man's insistence, Chen Ge was 'forced' to agree.

"The author's wish is to shoot a horror movie that is beloved by many and has great ticket sales.

"The Doraemon costume's actor's wish is to make sure the landlady receives the utility bill that he left on his luggage.

"The wish of the cancer victim is to find someone to look after his family.

"After you complete these three wishes, I will tell you the wishes of other victims so that they can leave this world without regrets," the man said and walked away. "If you want to reach me, just call that number."

"Okay, I've memorized the number."

Chen Ge watched the man walk away. He walked down the track before disappearing into the darkness.

That went smoother than I thought. I should make some time to complete these wishes. In that case, if some danger comes to me in Eastern Jiujiang, the man should come out to help me.

Before the futuristic theme park opened for business, Chen Ge planned to deal with everything in Eastern Jiujiang. He did not waste any time and found his backpack, leaving in the opposite direction from the man.

Of the three wishes, the simplest is the theme park worker's. The cancer patient's is not that difficult either; the most challenging is the author's. He wants to shoot a movie that is both popular and well received by the critics.

Chen Ge did not get why an author's last wish was to create a movie.

A qualified Haunted House worker is also a good actor, so I'll have no problem with casting, but the problem is, who will my viewers be? How can I guarantee both popularity and quality?

Not knowing anything about movie making, Chen Ge fell into deep thought.

Yan Danian's wish to become a bestselling comic artist has not even completed, and now I have to shoot a movie. I'm just a Haunted House owner, do I have to go attend some movie making classes?

It was really difficult to make a horror movie famous, and for the time being, Chen Ge did not plan to try that.

I have enough actors, but I lack a professional director and budget. In the future, I should focus on talents like that. If the movie is famous, it can also serve as a good promotion for the Haunted House.

After taking a taxi back to the children's theme park, Chen Ge knocked on the landlady's door again. "Big sister, I'm still here for my friend. Have you found the money that he left on his luggage?"

The door was opened, and the middle-aged woman looked at Chen Ge with extreme guardedness. "What's your goal here? The man left us so long ago, and now you're coming to ask me whether I've received his utility bill payment?"

"It's like this. Before my brother left, he didn't have much worry..."

"Wait, I'm not going to lie to you. I've dumped all of his luggage. You know it's a taboo." The landlady sounded impatient.

"You've dumped it?" Chen Ge was startled, but he soon recovered. "Then how much was the bill that he owed you?"

"280, why? Are you planning to pay me on his behalf?" The middle-aged woman looked at Chen Ge coldly. Then she saw Chen Ge take out three hundred from his pocket.

"He was worried about this before he left, so he purposely reminded me about this. Take this money. I hope you won't mind. No matter what choice he had made, he did not want to owe anyone."

After paying the lady, Chen Ge took the cab back to New Century Park. Chen Ge opened the door to the staff breakroom. When he sat down on the chair, he finally relaxed, and his expression slowly changed. Chen Ge thought about what had happened that night, and there was one problem that confused him.

When I ran into the operator, I tried to call Zhang Ya, but there was no reply. Did she already know the man was not threatening, or has her injury worsened?

Zhang Ya had refused to leave his shadow, so Chen Ge had no idea how she was doing. He wanted to help but could not.

Is she hungry? Should I capture some ghosts to feed her?

Chen Ge thought he had to do something.

Xiao Bu told me that if I return to Li Wan City, I will be in mortal danger, but I can go to other places at Eastern Jiujiang. I should complete the two-star missions given by the black phone first.

With a plan made, he removed his jacket and lay down in bed to sleep. At 8 am, Chen Ge walked out from the Haunted House. He pushed the gates open and looked at the rising sun. "A new day has begun."

Before he could immerse himself in the beginning of the new day, the black phone in his pocket vibrated.

A message at a time like this?

Taking out his phone, Chen Ge clicked open the unread message.

"The special ability of the Midnight Ticket Booth has been activated! A special visitor has arrived!"

Chen Ge was gobsmacked looking at the phone. I'm not even open for business yet, where does the special visitor come from? Is the phone broken?

Holding the phone, Chen Ge looked around. Suddenly, he noticed that the guard at the gate was in the middle of an argument with someone.

“Visitors so early in the morning?” Chen Ge walked toward the gate. The guard was a very cordial person. In fact, this was the first time that Chen Ge had seen him in an argument.

“This is not an issue of tickets. The theme park is not yet open, and the employees aren’t here yet to operate the attraction. Even if I allow you to enter the park, there’s nothing you can do!”

Even from a far, Chen Ge could hear the old guard’s voice. He jogged over and saw that next to the guard house was a little girl and a middle-aged man who looked rather blank in the mind.

The man toyed with the money in his hands. His expression was off, and his words came intermittently. His voice was strange, and saliva even dripped out from the corner of his mouth. “Play, my daughter, wants, play, long time.”

“Brother, the park will open in another half an hour. You only need to wait for a while. If I let you in now and something happens to you, I won’t be able to shoulder the responsibility!”

The guard had his points, but the man shook his head vehemently like he could not understand the guard.

“Money, enough money, we want play.” The man seemed to have difficulty controlling his tongue. It was a difficulty for him to even speak, and whenever he did, the muscles on his face shook. He did not seem to understand why the guard was stopping him. He gripped the money and shoved it to the guard.

“How come you don’t understand?” The guard held his head. “Such a big problem so early in the morning, there sure have been many weird things happening around Jiujiang lately.”

from the park and studied the two. The middle-aged man appeared mentally-challenged, and the girl was reticent. Her facial features were slightly off, but her eyes were clear, hiding a faded trace of fear. The girl seemed to suffer from the same illness as the middle-aged man.

“These two insist on going into the park. I’ve explained to them that the park opens at 9 am. I just need them to wait a little while longer, but they refused to listen to me and think that I’m discriminating against them. Am I someone who would do that?” The guard was only doing his job.

After hearing that, Chen Ge grasped the situation immediately. He stopped before the man and the girl.

The man thought that Chen Ge was the owner of the park. He grumbled incoherently before pushing the money to Chen Ge. As if afraid that Chen Ge could not understand him, he kept pointing at the Ferris wheel in the park.

“Okay, I’ll handle this.” Chen Ge smiled at the guard. He accepted the money from the man. There were coins, but they totaled up to the price for two tickets. It was clear that it had not been easy for them to collect this amount of money.

“You have more than enough. The ticket price for children is only half, here.” Purposely treating people with disability differently was a great disrespect. The most respectful way was to treat them as he would anyone else. Chen Ge wanted to return the money to the man, but the man did not dare to accept it. He even became agitated. His throat made a loud noise, but no one could tell what he was trying to say.

“See, we can’t even communicate with him. He thinks we’re trying to harm him.” The guard sighed helplessly.

“It’s fine. I’ll just give them a tour around the park.” Chen Ge did not force it. He patted the man’s shoulder lightly to get him to follow him. “Most of the attractions will open at 9 pm, but before that, we can walk around the park first.”

“Xiao Chen, be careful. Since we’ve already accepted their money, they’re visitors. Do not let them enter your Haunted House!” The guard was really concerned about the man and his girl. Chen Ge might appear trustworthy at times, but those who really knew him understood how unreliable he could be.

“Don’t worry.” Chen Ge waved his hand, and the three entered the park. Inside the empty park, a small part of the employees were performing maintenance on the attractions. Other than the man and the girl, there were no other visitors on the road.

“Ferris wheel and the merry-go-round only open at 9 am, and before the opening, we have to inspect them first.”

“She, my daughter, wants play...” The man gestured. It was obvious that he did not understand Chen Ge’s meaning.

“Your daughter?” Chen Ge lowered his head to look at the little girl. She was very shy and hid behind the man. Walking next to the father and daughter, Chen Ge could see the old shirt that was hidden under their white-washed jackets. They were from a poor family.

“Where are you from? Did you come to New Century Park just to play? Are there any attractions that you have to go on? I grew up here, so I’m very familiar with this place.” Chen Ge talked slowly, and as he talked, he gestured with his hands. After a long time, the man finally understood his meaning.

At the time, Chen Ge did not catch onto its significance.

“Is it Eastern Jiujiang?” Chen Ge was slowly leading them to his Haunted House. “Currently, only the Haunted House is open for business—this is my baby. If you want to enter it, I can accompany you.”

The special visitor that the black phone had detected seemed to be one of these two, but considering their physical condition, Chen Ge did not plan to have any ghost scares them. He just wanted to have them walk around the scenarios and see if he could trigger the mission on the special visitor.

The middle-aged man stood where he was like he was trying to decipher what Chen Ge had said. However, his daughter walked out from behind him like she was very interested in the Haunted House.

“Since I’m not yet officially open for business, I won’t take any ticket money.” Chen Ge touched the little girl’s head, and for some reason, he was reminded of Xiao Bu. Pulling back the curtains, Chen Ge led the pair into the Haunted House. “I have many scenarios here...”

Before he finished his introduction, the girl ran up to the steel door that led to the underground scenarios. She squatted down and kept her eyes glued to the door.

This girl, can she sense their presence?

The man waddled to catch up to his daughter. Chen Ge thought about it and decided to test them out further.

“Do you want to go down there to play?” Chen Ge thought that he sounded quite scary, but to his surprise, the girl raised her innocent face and then nodded seriously.

“This girl sure is unique.” Chen Ge used both hands to push the door open, and cold air rushed out.

“Don’t wander off, and stay behind me.” To take care of this pair, Chen Ge even turned on all the lights in the corridor.

Entering the underground was like entering a different world. The middle-aged man was unsettled, and he gripped the girl’s hand tightly while sticking close to Chen Ge.

The girl’s reaction, however, was different. Her clear eyes were filled with open curiosity.

Chen Ge had been watching the father and daughter closely, wanting to confirm who the special visitor was.

Since theme park had not opened, he was not afraid of being seen by other visitors. After the man entered the underground scenario, his body kept shivering. This should be his first time visiting a place like the Haunted House, and he looked suitably nervous. His daughter’s reaction was comparatively stranger. Her eyes widened, and if not for the man holding her hand, she would have wandered away already.

“Which scenario would you like to visit?” Chen Ge gave them the choice—this was a test as well. The man opened his lips and a ‘wu, wu’ sound came out. It sounded like he was asking his daughter’s opinion.

After spending some time with them, Chen Ge noticed that the girl was actually quite cute. But in a way, he could sense the regret. Due to genetics, the girl appeared mentally-challenged as well. The girl did not know where to go, so she looked at Chen Ge shyly.

“How about we visit them one by one? Since the park has not opened, I can be your personal tour guide.” Chen Ge walked ahead and led them into Mu Yang High School.

Eerie winds blew on the dark corridors. The empty test papers fluttered in the air, creating a scary sound like hands caressing one’s heart. The classroom doors on the sides were left half-open, and old tables and chairs were arranged within. Soon, they arrived at the door to the last classroom. Without any preparation, many human faces showed up at the door, and in the classroom, many ‘people’ were seated.

The man obviously did not handle that scare well. He staggered back, and due to the unevenness of his body, he fell. Chen Ge, who had been watching them, quickly reached out to help the man. He had underestimated the scariness of his Haunted House, especially for those who had not been inside one before.

“Be careful.” The man’s reaction told Chen Ge that he was probably not the special visitor, so he focused his attention on the girl. When the man was falling, the girl had escaped from his grasp. She stood at the window and looked at the mannequins.

They looked into each other’s eyes. After a while, she leaned against the window and reached out her hand to touch the mannequin’s face through the window. The mannequin inside the window cooperated. It slowly leaned forward to push its face toward the window.

Realizing that the mannequin could move on its own, the girl’s eyes widened even more. There was fear in her eyes, but more than that, there was also curiosity.

Standing to the side, Chen Ge caught this. He thought that the girl was similar to how Fan Yu was when he first came to the Haunted House, but they were not completely the same.

She should not be able to see the ghosts and is not as clever as Fan Yu.

After interacting with Fan Yu, Chen Ge had realized that the boy had a maturity that was way beyond his age. He knew many things, but mostly, he kept it to himself. The girl’s situation was different. She gave off a feeling of purity and innocence. She got close to the mannequin not because it was hiding a homeless soul but because she was curious.

Since the boss was standing there, the mannequins naturally would not scare the girl. They put away their scary expressions to reveal welcoming smiles. They appeared so harmless and obedient, different from how they were in front of other visitors.

They moved deeper into the scenario. When they passed the Pen Spirit’s room, Chen Ge stopped. “This is one of my Haunted House’s famous scare point, the Pen Spirit. Many people with questions come from other cities to ask the Pen Spirit, and the spirit will sometimes answer.”

Chen Ge picked up the pen that was on the table. “Do you want to give it a try? This is the chance to ask the question deep inside your heart. The Pen Spirit might answer it.”

Squatting down, Chen Ge communicated with the Pen Spirit before handing the pen to the girl.

The child accepted the pen, but it was unclear if she understood what Chen Ge had said. She mirrored Chen Ge and squatted down beside the chair, gripping the pen like how she would hold a knife.

The tip of the pen fell on the paper. The girl’s brows were furrowed, and she looked cute.

“Follow your heart and ask the question.” Chen Ge sounded like a devil seducing a child. The girl thought for a long time before writing out the term ‘Big Sister’ on the paper. The handwriting was awry.

“Big sister?” The girl did not ask the Pen Spirit any questions, and Chen Ge was sure whether it was not the Pen Spirit who had written it because the spirit, Chen Yalin, was currently floating behind the girl to braid her hair and not in contact with the pen.

The girl wrote this herself?

Is this the question she wants to ask the Pen Spirit?

Or is this the answer she gave herself?

If this was any other person, Chen Ge would not have cared, but this girl could be a special visitor. So, Chen Ge tried to read her every movement deeper.

“The child has a big sister? Why didn’t she come along to the park then?” Chen Ge turned to ask the man, but when he heard Chen Ge, he appeared to be greatly shocked. He stopped the tour and went forward to grab the girl, pulling her away.

The girl was spooked, and like a startled pigeon, a shrill voice escaped from her lips. Before Chen Ge could stop him, the man already dragged the girl out of the girl’s dormitory.

“Don’t rush. If you want to leave, I can escort you out at any time.” Chen Ge believed that if they continued the tour, he might affect the pair’s relationship, so he sent them out directly. The sun fell on them again, and the strange pair finally calmed down.

“Drink some water, rest here for a while. The park will open officially after thirty minutes.” Chen Ge just deposited the pair at the resting hall when he saw the guard rush over with a woman who looked about thirty.

“I’m sorry to give you so much trouble.” The woman was in a pantsuit. She appeared to be a worker at some company, and she gave off the feeling of a powerful businesswoman.

“You are?”

“I’m his little sister.” The woman pointed at the man rather embarrassedly. “He sneaked Wen Wen out when I was working. I’ll bring them back now.”

Chapter 568: Water Ghost

“Since you’re here, then there’s no need to hurry and leave! The tickets have already been paid for, so why don’t you let them stay here to relax? I feel like they’ve been wanting to come to theme park to play.”

“The tickets have been paid for?” The woman turned to the man.
“Brother, where did you get the money?”

“Sell, rubbish, I collect them,” the man stammered, and he looked scared of this woman.

“Have I treated you badly before? I never brought you here because I’m afraid that you might get into an accident!” The woman appeared embarrassed. Perhaps from her youth, her big brother had been the reason that she could not hold her head high.

“Regardless, I’m about to be late for work. It’ll be easy for you two to get into an accident if you stay here. Come on, let’s quickly go home.” The woman sounded stern. The middle-aged man hesitated, but when he saw his daughter’s eyes, he persisted and shook his head.

“Why don’t you let them stay here? I’ll stay with them and watch over them. I promise nothing will happen to them. After they’ve visited everything, I’ll personally take them home.” Chen Ge took the responsibility on. The service was flawless. Seeing how kind Chen Ge was, the woman started to hesitate as well.

“Don’t worry, every attraction at our park has passed the examination. If the attraction is dangerous and too much, even if they want to, I won’t let them get on it.” Chen Ge attempted to persuade her for a long time, but the woman still refused. She seemed to have some difficulty that she could not say.

“It’s not that I don’t want them to stay... you don’t understand.” The woman waved at Chen Ge, and the two walked several meters away.

After making sure that the father and daughter would not hear them, the woman finally revealed her worry. “My brother and Wen Wen are a bit not right in the head. My brother is slightly better, but Wen Wen’s condition has not stabilized—she could act up at any time.”

The woman sighed softly. “It’s a family illness. It’s mental retardation. When she acts up, it’ll be no different from epilepsy. It’s very troublesome.”

“Have you brought them to the doctor? I mean, what did the doctor say? Is there a chance for them to be cured?” Chen Ge had a feeling that the girl should face more than just a family illness. To be chosen as a special visitor by the black phone, there had to be some secret surrounding her. The girl’s father was mentally-retarded and could not communicate normally, so this woman became Chen Ge’s opening.

“Their hereditary illness cannot be cured—it can only be improved...” The woman turned to look at the man and the girl. “My family has a short life expectancy. Perhaps my ancestors have done something to offend the gods. When they’re alive, they have to suffer the pain from the illness, but even for myself, who is normal, life is not easy either. I broke up with my boyfriend of many years because of them as well. I couldn’t just ignore them, but my boyfriend refused to take them on.”

“That woman was just there to cheat my family’s money!” The mention of this woman made her grit her teeth in anger. “If not for her, we would not have ended up in this state. Initially, I also thought that she would look after my brother, but she was just in it for the money. After giving birth to Wen Wen, she abandoned them and ran.

“I also don’t know how long I can hold on. I’m already thirty-four this year.” Speaking of this sad part, the woman’s tone rose, and she caught herself after a while. “I’m sorry for losing myself.”

She turned to look at the pair with complicated emotions. “Fine, perhaps I should respect their decision. If they want to stay, then they should, but you have to guarantee their safety.”

“Don’t worry, I’ll be by their side.” Chen Ge had not gone out last night, so he did not need to sleep.

“By the way, there’s something that you have to be careful about.”

The woman was suddenly reminded of something, “Do not let Wen Wen go on any attractions with water. The best is to make sure she stays away from water, not even the fountain.”

“Stay away from the water?” This was the first time Chen Ge heard a request like that. He didn’t think too much of it at first but after a while, suddenly the mission about the Twin Water Ghosts appeared in his mind. The girl and her father came from Eastern Jiujiang, and her father once said the term ‘Eastern Dam’.

Thinking about it, could the father have been referring to Eastern Jiujiang’s dam, the place where many drownings had happened. Was the girl related to the Twin Water Ghosts mission? Was the previously-mentioned big sister actually dead?

The woman saw how silent Chen Ge was, and she assumed wrongly that Chen Ge was wondering why she would say that. “Don’t ask me why. Just make sure she stays away from the water. I need to go to work. I’ll come back to fetch them after I’m off work. I’ll depend on you in the meantime.”

“I’m going to be late!”

“One last question.” The more Chen Ge thought about it, the more he felt that something was wrong. He took out the white paper that the girl had written on in the Pen Spirit’s room. The two words were still left on it. “Do you only have three members in your family?”

“Yes, what about it?” The woman was impatient, seemingly very worried about being late.

“But how come I heard Wen Wen say that she has a big sister?”

When he said that, the woman’s expression froze, and her eyes shuddered. She needed a long time before she calmed down. “Wen Wen is sick—that is her imagination. If there’s nothing else, I need to go. I’ll come back at 7:30 pm.”

The woman’s expression became very bad, and her tone was icy. She stopped talking to Chen Ge and rushed to leave New Century Park.

“She must know something.”

“Boss, who is that woman?” Xu Wan walked over from the gate with breakfast. “It’s rude for you to keep looking at her like that.”

“The two visitors over there have a heredity illness, and she is their family. She’s worried about them, so she hoped that I can look after them for her.” Chen Ge took over the breakfast and started eating. “Today, you and Xiao Gu will have to work harder. I might get off work earlier to send them home.”

“Personally sending them home? How come you’re so good to them?” Xu Wan rolled her eyes.

“I’m always so kind. Also, let’s go and do your make up quick.” Chen Ge helped Xu Wan with her make-up. Like the day before, he summoned Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue. He gave them the same outfits as before and had them help at the Haunted House.

The park opened at 9 am. Chen Ge had delegated all the job at his Haunted House. He accompanied the man and the girl as they experienced the park’s many attractions.

Seeing the smile on the girl’s face, Chen Ge was greatly satisfied. This was the pure, original purpose of a theme park, bringing people happiness.

Chen Ge accompanied the father and daughter and experienced all the theme park's attractions that interested them. The girl showed some signs of fatigue at around three or four in the afternoon. She leaned against her father and sat at the resting hall outside of the Haunted House to catch her breath. Her eyes were closed, and she hugged a bottle of water in her arms with a smile still hanging on her face. It appeared like that day had been a lot of fun.

The father looked at his little girl with love in his eyes. His hand lightly touched the girl's head, and he suddenly realized that someone had added a little braid to the girl's hair. He did not know who had done that, but with this small braid, the girl looked more vibrant and lively. The father and daughter leaned against each other. Even though they were both physically impaired, Chen Ge had to admit that the picture that they formed was quite heartwarming.

"Why don't you two rest here for a while? Don't wander off on your own. I'll go talk to my workers at the Haunted House, and then I'll come back to take you home." Chen Ge maintained his sense of rationality. One of the main reasons that he had agreed to accompany the father and daughter around theme park was because he could make use of this opportunity to get close to them and make them lower their guard.

Of course, Chen Ge did not once think about harming them—he just wanted to get to the bottom of the truth. The girl leaned against her father, and she looked very sleepy, barely able to get her eyes open.

There was still quite a period of time until that woman had promised to come. Chen Ge decided to personally take them home because it gave him the perfect chance to take a look around their family and understand their family situation. He had a feeling that there had to be a relationship between this girl and that water ghost.

Returning to the Haunted House, Duan Yue and Ol' Zhou had completely gotten used to their new identities. Chen Ge told them some things that they needed to be careful about, and then he went searching for Xu Wan. He told her to remember to close the door at 6 pm. After arranging all that, Chen Ge found his backpack and slid the recorder and the comic inside it. Xiao Gu was using the Skull-cracker's hammer as a prop, so this time, Chen Ge did not carry it with him.

"Come on, I'll take you home." Chen Ge held the bag in one hand. It was hard to deny the sincerity in his eyes. The man scratched his head like he was in the middle of a deep hesitation. "My, sister, no, let, other, people, home."

"Your little sister doesn't like you bring strangers to your home?" Chen Ge smiled. "I can understand that. She is worried that other people might bring you harm, attracting burglars to the house, but I'm not a stranger, am I? We had so much fun playing together, right?"

After some more persuasion, the middle-aged man finally agreed. After sending the two out of New Century Park, Chen Ge called a taxi and got into the car with the father and daughter. The little girl fell asleep not long after she got into the car. To not disturb her, Chen Ge and the middle-aged man very cooperatively did not say anything. Based on the address given by the middle-aged man, the taxi arrived at a very old residential area at the edge of Eastern Jiujiang.

The place was filled with old apartments that were about six or seven stories high, and the paint on the walls was peeling greatly. Chen Ge could hardly tell what the original color of the walls had been.

"From the looks of it, this place has been in existence for at least two or three decades already, right?"

After paying the cab fare, the group exited the car. "Your family stays here? But didn't you tell me that you lived near Eastern Jiujiang Dam?"

Chen Ge even purposely asked the taxi driver about it when they were coming over, and it seemed that this residential area was quite a distance away from Eastern Jiujiang Dam.

"My, house." The man then said a few terms that seemed to be connected in some mysterious logic. Chen Ge could not grasp fully what he was trying to expression. Holding the sleeping little girls in his arms, the middle-aged man walked ahead. Since the man did not chase Chen Ge away, Chen Ge naturally followed behind the man.

The middle-aged man might have been intellectually lacking, but he had enough common sense to survive. He walked past the many old buildings to head toward the building that was furthest away. The sun was setting, hanging low in the sky. The surroundings were completely silent. It was still daytime, but for some reason, Chen Ge felt that the area was rather dark.

Perhaps it was just his imagination.

The corridor had a very low ceiling. Chen Ge would bump his head against it if he jumped a little higher. The only sensation that Chen Ge felt once he entered the place was a sense of pressure.

With the middle-aged man leading the man, they climbed up to the third floor. The man reached his hand into his collar and searched for a long time before finding the key that was tied around his neck. Like a child, he took out the key and placed it before his eyes. He studied it for a very long time before opening the door.

“Do you mind if come in?” The man did not say anything. He opened the door and then carried the girl into the room. He placed the little girl on the couch and then half-jogged into the bedroom as if he was in search of something. The place was very clean, different from a dirtiness that Chen Ge had been expecting. Even though the place was sparsely decorated and there was little furniture, everything was cleanly and neatly arranged.

There are only two pairs of slippers, one big and one small. There are also only two toothbrushes in the bathroom. Looks like the man's sister does not live with him. Normally, it is this man who looks after this child.

Someone with a mental problem looking after a child who also suffered from the same problem had managed to keep their living area so clean and neat—this came as quite a surprise to Chen Ge. He looked inside the bedroom. The man was kneeling on the ground. He opened the bedside table and took out a wool blanket.

As if afraid that he might mess up the things inside the room, his every action was very careful and deliberate. After finding the blanket, he rearranged everything before exiting the bedroom. The middle-aged man seemed to only have the little girl in his eyes. He covered the girl with the blanket with as light a touch as he could. He then sat down on the other side of the couch and looked at the girl lovingly, completely ignoring Chen Ge, who was still standing in the room.

“No wonder your little sister does not allow you to bring strangers home. If you run into a bad person, even if he cleared out this place, you probably would not have realized it.”

As he wandered around the room, Chen Ge began to respect the man more and more. The place was not big; there was only one bedroom and one very small kitchen. It was simple, but it felt very warm and homely. The man suffers from this family's hereditary illness and was abandoned by his wife, but he is able to survive with such dignity and determination. That is quite impressive.

Chen Ge walked into the bedroom. When his gaze scanned past the bedside table, he accidentally caught a framed picture that was sitting on it. He picked up the picture frame to take a closer look, and the picture inside the frame looked rather strange to him.

On a bright and sunny grass field, the middle-aged man was smiling blankly while the little girl was running after a fluttering butterfly. There should have been someone who stood beside them, but the person had been cut off from the picture. There was a hole in the shape of a person.

Could this be the child's mother?

He wanted to look for more clues, so he opened the bedside table. Chen Ge found a notebook that was hidden under the stack of clothes. He flipped through it and realized that the notebook was completely empty, but then again, he noticed that many pages of the notebook had been torn out already.

Whose notebook is this?

Looking at the notebook, Chen Ge was reminded of a detail. Even though the girl suffered from the same hereditary illness as her father, meaning her intelligence was lower than normal, she knew how to write. Chen Ge had personally seen her write down the term ‘big sister’ in the Haunted House.

Who taught her how to write? Was it her father, or was it someone else?

When the middle-aged man heard the words ‘big sister’, his reaction had been huge. Those two words seemed to be a taboo that could not be mentioned at the home, so the person who taught the little girl to write those words should not have been a family member.

Closing the notebook, Chen Ge placed it back where he found it. He closed the drawer and was about to stand up and leave when he noticed that the middle-aged man had been standing at the bedroom door for who knew how long, watching him silently. Probably due to his natural limitation, his expression was unreadable, but there was a trace of uncertainty in his eyes as he looked at Chen Ge.

“The picture...” Chen Ge did not know how to move the topic away, so he grabbed the thing that was closest, which was the picture frame. Before he could come up with a reason, the man walked into the bedroom. He did not seem to mind what Chen Ge was doing—he just moved past Chen Ge silently and picked up the pillow that was on the bed. During the whole process, he did not say a word to Chen Ge. After he grabbed the pillow, he walked out directly and placed the pillow under the girl’s head.

Chen Ge was scared for no reason. He continued to walk around the place, but he could not find anything valuable.

“Since you’re already home safely, then I feel much better. If you want to come to New Century Park in the future, or if you need any help, you can call me at any time.” Chen Ge found a pen and paper, jotted down his phone number, and placed it on the coffee table.

The girl was sound asleep on the couch. Throughout the whole day, the black phone had not sent any message, so the mission that was attached to this special visitor had not been triggered by Chen Ge. However, Chen Ge was not that disappointed. He had already confirmed the girl’s identity and address, so there would be plenty of chances in the future. After bidding the middle-aged man farewell, Chen Ge left their home.

After closing the door and heading toward the stairs, he heard a sound coming from the corridor. “Hey!”

Stopping his footsteps, Chen Ge looked around. He noticed that the door of the room right opposite from the middle-aged man’s home was open a sliver, and the sound seemed to have come from inside it. “Were you calling me?”

“If you don’t want any trouble, it’s best if you stay away from that family.” This time, Chen Ge heard it clearly. It was an old lady who was speaking behind the door, and she sounded very vehement.

“I’m not afraid of trouble—their whole family is too pitiable. It’s better if we can help them to the best of our ability.” Chen Ge walked toward the old lady’s room.

“Those who are pitiable must have something that is detestable. Listen to me, don’t walk too close to them, or you might get unnecessary trouble.” The old lady’s words interested Chen Ge greatly. It seemed that the lady knew some things.

“Granny, they suffer from a hereditary illness. That is something that you are born with...”

“I saw how kind hearted you are, so I opened the door to remind you. What you want to do with the information is your own business.”

After saying that, the old lady was about to close the door, but Chen Ge jumped forward to grab the door. “Granny, can you not just tell me half of the truth? You’ll only make me even more curious.”

The old lady probably was touched by Chen Ge’s acts of kindness, so after a few second of hesitation, she opened the door fully. “Come in, and I’ll tell you.”

“Okay.” With such a sudden turn of events, of course, Chen Ge would not let it go. After entering the old lady’s home, Chen Ge realized that something was wrong. The old lady’s home was fully covered with scary-looking Taoist paper charms. There were even various charms hanging on the door. This place was completely different from the middle-aged man’s home.

“Don’t be afraid. These talismans are to ward against evil spirits. They are harmless against living humans,” the old lady said confidently, but Chen Ge shook his head. The ghosts that he carried had no reaction, not even fear to these things, so the old lady had definitely been tricked by someone.

“You’ve just interacted with that family, and you might be followed by those scary things. When you leave, I can give you a few of the talismans.”

“Scary things? Are there really ghosts in this world?” Chen Ge scratched his chin. “Granny, have you personally seen them before?”

The old lady was silent to think before finally nodding. “It was just inside this building. Whenever the clock strikes midnight, the sound of water dropping comes from the corridors. It sounds just like rain, and then you will hear a sound that is similar to someone mopping the ground. But think about it, who would come out to mop the corridor at midnight?"

"Could there really be a ghost?" Chen Ge cooperated fully with the old lady and revealed a shocked expression.

"There was this one time when it was so noisy that I could not sleep, so I leaned against the peephole on the door and looked out."

"What did you see?"

The lines on the old woman's face were creased together like she was reminded of something very scary. The expression on her face was serious. "I'm not lying to you. At the time, I saw a woman who was completely drenched walked down from upstairs. She stopped at the door of the opposite room. Her skin was white from being soaked in the water for too long, not how a living human should look. There were also things like water grass and other weird objects curling around her body. Her long hair was dragging on the ground, and she was mumbling the name of the girl next door."

"Someone completely drenched and calling Wen Wen's name?" A thought flashed across Chen Ge's mind, and the words just tumbled out of his mouth. "The big sister?"

The old lady was surprised that Chen Ge would say that, and her expression softened quite a lot. "Looks like you also know about their family business."

"I do not know much." Chen Ge took out the paper that the girl had left at his Haunted House from his pocket. "I'm a worker at New Century Park. Our park saw how fragile they were and was afraid of their safety, so they ordered me to personally bring them home. I only knew about this big sister because that girl once wrote this down when she was visiting one of our theme park attractions."

Looking at the words on the paper, the old lady's lips were pressed tightly. She waved for Chen Ge to move away from the door. The two walked into the living room, and then the old lady whispered, "In that case, I won't hide the facts from you anymore. Actually, many people in this old residential area know about this. Their family has been involved in something called Bury Seed, and this is karma coming to get them."

"Bury Seed?" Chen Ge was confused.

"It is what it means literally. Their family has a hereditary illness, but according to rumors, it only affects the males, not the females. However, their family wanted to have a healthy boy to continue the family legacy. They started to look for alternative methods, and someone recommended the method of burying seed.

“The method is quite cruel. First, you have to find a girl and bury her as a seed inside another child’s body. I am not quite sure about the actual procedure, but I know that their family has tried this before. However, it failed. The child that was born was not a boy, and even though a girl was born, she could not escape the fate of the family illness.”

“But how is that related to the ghost that you saw?”

“The seed that was used by that family was their first child, the big sister. They used their first child as the seed, and the child that was buried with the seed was Wen Wen.”

What the old lady said made Chen Ge take in a cold breath. He could understand why the Trial Mission was called Twin Water Ghost. It was not because they were twins but because it was a twin birth.

“Granny, what else do you know about bury seed? Have there been successful cases before? Who told the family about this method?”

Chen Ge needed to confirm his thoughts, and for that, he needed a greater understanding of the situation.

“Why are you asking all that? Knowing too much has no benefit to you. When it comes to certain things, once you get too close, you’ll be dragged into it.” The old lady only wanted what was best for Chen Ge. She walked into the bedroom and took out two yellowed paper talismans. “These are for you. Take them with you. They’ll save you at key moments.”

Chen Ge did not reject the old lady’s kindness and accepted the talismans. They were painted with a weird pattern. However, it was not painted with cinnabar but just common red dye.

“Granny, are you sure these things are effective?” Chen Ge’s ghosts were not only not afraid of the talismans, and they even purposely came out to take a look due to curiosity.

“I have no idea whether they’re effective or not, but ever since I covered my place with them, that thing stopped appearing near my place.”

“She once appeared at your place before?” Chen Ge was suspicious. Some ghosts were highly aggressive, and they would attack anything that stood in their way, regardless of their innocence.

“You keep trying to jinx me. If she had entered my home, do you think a bag of old bones like myself would have been able to survive?” the old lady grumbled with dissatisfaction. She coughed twice at the door, but Chen Ge did not know the purpose of that. “When I first saw the ghost, she was standing at my door with her head lowered. After I covered my home with the talismans, she finally went to the opposite door.”

Chen Ge understood that this was probably not the effect of the talisman—the ghost originally wanted to find the girl. There was probably another reason for why she stopped at the old lady's door, but Chen Ge could not ask about that openly. The old lady might have looked kind, but Chen Ge had a feeling that she had something to do with what had happened to the family.

“Granny, I'm not going to talk circles around you. The girl's situation is not so good. The ghost that you mentioned might be haunting her. If we ignore this, the child might be in mortal danger.” Once Chen Ge said that, the old lady hesitated.

“No matter what their family has done in the past, the child is innocent—she shouldn't be made a sacrifice. Furthermore, we have not reached a point of no return yet.”

“You've not seen it—that's why you'd say that. There are really ghosts in this world, and this one appears every midnight. Once you see it, you'll never say such things. This is what that family deserves. If you intervene, you'll be targeted by the ghost.”

The old lady wanted to stop Chen Ge, but he was determined.

“Since I've run into this, then I have to do something.”

“Why are you so stubborn?” After several seconds, the old lady said, “Fine, if you insist on chasing death, then I won't stop you. I hope that you'll have a better luck.”

The old lady's tone changed. “Originally, I didn't want to bring this up again. The person who suggested the method of bury seed was my husband. The old coot didn't mean any harm by it. He just tossed it out as a suggestion. We did not expect the family to really do it. The old man died not long after Wen Wen's birth. When he left, he was wrought with guilt and regret.”

“What? No! My husband had only heard about it. He just meant well.” The old lady walked into the room again to grab a few yellowed pages from the drawer. It looked like a prescription. “This is the procedure for bury seed. I can't understand it. I hear it was obtained by the elders next door. My husband found it and hid it. He wanted to stop them, but by that time, they had already lost their minds.

“Their family illness only affects the boys, not the girls. To continue the family line, to change their family legacy, they treated their first daughter as the ‘seed’. I’d seen that child; she was healthy and cute. The actual process of bury seed was only known to my husband and the opposite family’s grandfather and grandmother. However, they died from sickness one after another, so no one really knows what they did to that first child.”

The old lady’s face was covered with lines as she tried to think. “I can only remember a few things. When the first child died, they started running all over Eastern Jiujiang, apparently to find a suitable location. In the end, they chose Eastern Jiujiang Dam. I don’t know what happened later.”

“Looks like I’ll have to go to the dam to take a look.” Chen Ge accepted the pages and scanned them. He could not understand the meaning either—they looked like Chinese characters, but he could not grasp their meaning. “Granny, can I take these pages with me? I want to find an expert to read them to see what they really mean.”

“No, definitely not. I won’t allow these pages to leave this place. If not for the special order by the old coot at his death bed, I would have burned them all already.”

“Then do you know where they got these papers?” Chen Ge asked casually, but he got a big surprise.

“Eastern Jiujiang, Li Wan City. I heard that the elders next door got it from a building called the Ghost Apartment.”

“Ghost Apartment?” Chen Ge had heard this term when he was on the last bus for Route 104. Only by taking that bus did people have the chance to reach this ghost apartment. Could this bury seed be related to that culprit as well? Was this just a move he made in isolation, or is it connected to a bigger conspiracy?

Chen Ge suspected that the culprit had harmed so many children in Eastern Jiujiang for this bury seed.

Bury seed only needs one child, but the number of children who have disappeared in Eastern Jiujiang is high...

The term ‘Ghost Fetus’ flashed across Chen Ge’s mind. Originally, he had thought that this was just a simple two-star mission, but it looked like it might be related to the four-star mission.

“Granny, can you give me a few more talismans? I plan to go to Eastern Jiujiang Dam tonight to see the place myself. Perhaps I might find something.”

“Go to Eastern Jiujiang Dam? The day is ending, why are you going there?” The old lady thought that Chen Ge was acting strangely. “Many people have drowned there; the place is not safe. You’d better think carefully.”

“I’m afraid, but compared to that, I want to get to the bottom of the truth.” Chen Ge took out the talismans given by the old lady earlier. “Granny, please give me a few more. What if I run out at a key moment?”

“If you’re so scared, then don’t force yourself.” After she said that, she still walked back into the room to look for more talismans. While she was preoccupied, Chen Ge took out his phone to snap a few pictures of the yellowed pages.

The old lady walked out from the room, holding a black bag. “These are the talismans that I have no use for. If you’re going to find that ghost, then of course, you need as much help as you can get...”

The old lady shoved him the bag. “I’ll give them all to you.”

Looking at the bag of talisman, Chen Ge’s lips twitched. “Granny, how much have you spent to buy so many talismans?”

“The price is not important; the important thing is that they’re effective.”

Chen Ge had a good impression of the old lady, and he did not want to see her getting scammed anymore. Thus, he planned to help her. “Granny, can you introduce me to the man who sold you these talismans?”

“Of course, I’ll bring you to see him when you come back. He is a powerful sensei even though he might not look like it. Actually, those who are really gifted are often hated by the world.”

The more Chen Ge heard the old lady’s story, the more he confirmed that she had been scammed. After getting the person’s address, Chen Ge left with the bag.

After leaving the residential area, Chen Ge took a look at the picture that he had snapped with his phone. The words on the pages were hard to read. Instead of saying that they were Chinese characters, they looked more like symbols.

Who might be able to understand this?

Chen Ge closed the album and called the theme park. It was already afternoon when he sent Wen Wen home, and he was held off by some other incidents. Since he was not at the Haunted House, Xu Wan followed his orders and closed when the sun fell.

Ol Zhou and Duan Yue performed perfectly. There were no accidents, and Chen Ge sighed in relief.

I have to reward Ol' Zhou and Duan Yue somehow. They say that they have no requests for anything, but I can see that Ol' Zhou likes Duan Yue. Maybe I can help him pursue her. And about Duan Yue... all girls should have a dream of stardom. I can promise to make her the main character when I want to shoot the movie to fulfill the author's dream.

After ending the call, Chen Ge put the old lady's stuff into his backpack and called a taxi to get to Eastern Jiujiang Dam.

The mission for the special visitor, Wen Wen, was not triggered. Where was the problem? Is it because I didn't let Wen Wen get close to any water-related attractions?

The girl's aunt had warned Chen Ge about letting the girl go near water. Chen Ge would not have harmed the girl just for a mission, and that might be why the mission had not been triggered.

When Chen Ge arrived at the dam, the sun was already falling. Opening the window, he could clearly see that this place was much colder than the city.

The driver looked at Chen Ge and demanded, "25 RMB please."

"25? So expensive? Do you think I haven't been here before?" Chen Ge had been looking around when the driver asked for such an expensive fare.

"Based on the timer, it doesn't really cost that much, but no one is willing to come to Eastern Jiujiang Dam these days. There have been a series of accidents over the past month, so everyone raises the price whenever a passenger wants to come to Eastern Jiujiang at night. Furthermore, I brought you here alone, and I definitely won't get any passengers on my way back to the city."

The driver was young, and he leaned on the wheel impatiently. "Hurry up. Night will fall soon, and the roads will be even harder to navigate. This place is not that safe at night."

"You even know that?" Chen Ge studied the driver. "Looks like your company's safety lesson to its employees is still lacking. You don't seem to recognize me."

The driver looked at Chen Ge with a frown. “Who are you?”

“If you don’t want any accident to happen, then you’ll charge me a fair price. You’ve found the wrong person to scam today.” Chen Ge leaned back on the chair. “After all, I’m not in a hurry; I can waste my time here with you all day. However, you have to be careful—Eastern Jiujiang is really messy at night. Anything can happen.”

The driver was familiar with the city more than normal people—cabbies travelled through the city daily and knew many things not common to others. Once Chen Ge said that, the driver’s face dropped. He had run into a thug who was more shameless than he was, and to make matters worse, he knew that Chen Ge was right. Why would a man carrying a backpack go to a countryside dam at night?

The more he studied Chen Ge, the more unsettled he was, but he did not back down. “Everyone is raising their price... but fine, I’ll just take twenty from you.”

“I’ll only give you the amount on the timer. This is for your own good, because when you spend the money earned illegally, you’ll run into ghosts.” The two continued to argue for some time. The sky darkened. Chen Ge did not get out of the car. Instead, he pulled out a large amount of paper talismans from his bag and started to study them. He ignored the driver, who tried to reason with him.

In the driver’s eyes, Chen Ge had transformed from a bad person to a mad person. Which normal person would carry so many talismans in his bag?

“Fine, consider me unlucky today.” The driver relented.

“You’re still young. Fix your attitude a bit. You might run into me again if you continue to drive the night shift.”

After paying the fare, Chen Ge got out of the car. Chen Ge’s last sentence echoed in the driver’s mind, and a chill crawled up the driver’s spine; he felt like he had just been cursed. He cursed under his breath like he was afraid of being overheard by Chen Ge and then drove away.

“Still young and rusty, probably not yet worn down by society. Luckily, he ran into someone like me, who has a soft temperament. This is a good thing for him.” Chen Ge grabbed his backpack and walked to the dam.

Eastern Jiujiang dam was a small dam and was close to Eastern Jiujiang, so people had been visiting this place to go swimming and fishing. However, starting from a certain period, the people had stopped visiting.

Standing by the dam, Chen Ge took out his phone for the light. He realized that there was a flash of light not far from him. Chen Ge used his Yin Yang Vision to realize that there were two people fishing by the bank. One was sitting, and the other stood behind him. The one standing probably thought it was boring, so he slithered away.

I just said that this place is deserted, but there're two fishers around.

Chen Ge wanted to find out more about the dam, so these fishers should be a good opening. He jogged toward the fisher. The fisher was fully focused and did not even turn his head. He stared at the luminous fishing bobber on the water. The night slowly swallowed up the sky, and the small pin of light was conspicuous on the surface of the water.

Minutes later, the luminous bobber submerged, and the immobile man revealed a smile. "Finally, the fish has taken the bait."

The rim of the cap covered the man's face. He held the fishing pole and sounded excited. The man suddenly said that when Chen Ge got near, and this caused Chen Ge to become alert. He stopped and used Yin Yang Vision to study the man. After confirming that he was a normal person, he sighed in relief. It seemed that he was being too cautious. Chen Ge did not interrupt the man during the important moment when he was trying to reel in the fish.

"This is going to be a big one!" The man used both hands to pull on the rod. The fishing line pulled taut, and he realized that he was unable to reel back the line. The man jumped up from his seat. He leaned backward and managed to slowly pull in the line.

"What have you caught?" Chen Ge was curious as well. The dam was not big, so there should not have been a big fish there. Then again, there might be exception. Many rivers travelled through Jiujiang, and big fish from other rivers might have become trapped in the dam.

"Do you need help?" Chen Ge walked to the man and spoke softly. The man was fully focused on landing the fish, and he did not reply Chen Ge. He used all of his energy, and his body slowly dragged backward. Chen Ge did not force his way through. He did not know anything about fishing, so he might ruin a good thing.

"How is such a big fish in Eastern Jiujiang Dam?" Chen Ge raised his phone to shine a light on the water surface. Just at the spot where the bobber submerged, he could see a shadow slowly surfacing. "What is that?"

The shadow was about 1.5 meters long, lean, and seemingly moving up and down. The darkness of the night and the water meant that Chen Ge had a hard time recognizing it even with his Yin Yang Vision.

The man used every ounce of energy in his body. The fishing line was taut, and Chen Ge nudged to his side. Merely spectating for once, he was worried that the line might suddenly snap. The man and the ‘fish’ fought greatly; this was the first time that Chen Ge had gotten involved in such an exciting fishing activity.

The stalemate continued for about ten seconds before the man started to run out of energy. He looked muscular, but he did not have the endurance. However, the man refused to give up on such a big catch. He could not land the fish, so he continued to fight with the catch. After a while, with a whirr, the line seemed to be cut by something, and the man collapsed to the ground on his butt. It was quite a serious fall.

The big catch slithered away, and the man cursed loudly, slamming the fishing rod against the ground. The fall earlier had pained him greatly. He was unable to get up for a long time, and in the end, it was Chen Ge who went to help him.

“Brother, are you alright?” Compared to the man, Chen Ge was more interested in the ‘big fish’ from before. “What were you fishing earlier? Do we have such a big fish here in our dam?”

The man’s expression softened. “That was the King Fish. I’ve been following it for three months already.”

“King Fish?”

This seemed to be the man’s secret, and he was unwilling to share it with Chen Ge. “For a dam that has a long history like this one and larger lakes inland, King Fish are not uncommon. They can live for a long time, and they’re much bigger compared to their brethren.”

“Our dam also has a King Fish?” Chen Ge thought that was quite interesting. Eastern Jiujiang Dam had been constructed a long time ago, but the dam was just slightly bigger than a small dam.

“Didn’t you see it earlier?” The man arranged his clothes and removed his cap. The man’s lips were very thin, and he looked like the type who was stingy and hard to get close to.

“Then how did you know our dam has a King Fish? Have you seen it before?” Chen Ge was more curious.

“I was a member of Jiujiang Fishing Association. For us fishing aficionados, catching a King Fish is a pride that will last a long time, so I’ve been following relevant news.” Speaking of his history with the King Fish, the man sounded quite proud. “I noticed the constant accidents around Eastern Jiujiang Dam, and around a certain time period, the number of drownings tripled. This is very abnormal in my eyes; the dam itself hasn't changed, so it could only mean something else has entered this dam. I suspect that it could be a King Fish that has accidentally ended up here."

"Based on your explanation, those drowning victims should have signs of being attacked. The police aren't dumb—drownings and being attacked by fish are two completely different causes of death."

"You've all been tricked by the King Fish. It is different from other fish, and it's very clever. Furthermore, the reason for its murder might not be to eat the people; it merely thought it was fun, or perhaps it was for revenge." The man seemed to be very familiar with fish. "I'll give you an example. You should have seen what happened earlier. In other words, the King Fish's existence is proven. But the police have scoured this dam many times to look for bodies, but never have they found the King Fish. Do you know why?"

"There are caves inside the dam for it to hide in?"

"Not only that, the big fish has gotten so clever that once a ship appears on the surface, it knows that it's time to hide." The man saw the disbelief on Chen Ge's face, and he coughed. He rubbed his waist and then continued. "If you want to catch a King Fish, you mustn't treat it as a normal fish. You have to put his intelligence on the same level as your own or see it as a very cunning human being."

Chen Ge looked at the dam and nodded subconsciously. "If there's a boat on the surface, it can detect it. Therefore, there are only two ways to catch it. One is to fish it up to the land or drain the entire dam."

"The government is not going to drain a whole dam for a fish. Even though the dam is not that big, the location is strategic—it's right between the up and down stream." The man pulled back the fishing line to check the cut.

"It can cut such a thick line? I even tested its sturdiness earlier... Hmm?" He touched the cut. "How come it looks like this has been bitten?"

"Could there be two King Fish in the dam?" Chen Ge walked over to get a look. He just suggested it, but it stunned the man. "Maybe one was baited, and the other went to save it by biting off the fishing line. I'm just rambling—you'd better follow your own experience."

“But that is a possibility!” The man looked at Chen Ge. “Counting this time, I’ve managed to bait it three times, and every time, I failed because the line snapped.”

Chapter 573: Fish Bait

Once or twice, it might be a coincidence, but every time? The fisher thought that something was amiss.

“But can you be sure that they are King Fishes? Is the dam enough to support two large fish?” From Chen Ge’s perspective, it was already the dam’s limit to keep one large fish.

“The water system in Jiujiang is complicated, and upstream of this dam is connected to many large rivers. When they were building this dam, people even discovered an underground stream, so there shouldn’t be a lack of food.” The man hesitated before adding, “This place used to be a very famous mass grave. Those without money would send the dead down the river, so this place not only had many big fishes, but they were also feral, and records of injury were fairly often.”

“That was a very long time ago, and things have improved a lot.” The man picked up the fishing rod and silently closed the cover of the large red bucket that was next to it.

“Fish bait, my own recipe. It’s the reason that the King Fish take my bait.” The man stood beside the bucket and shone the flashlight on the water surface. “The King Fish is very clever. After the scare today, it probably won’t show up for several weeks. Such a shame.”

When the man spoke, Chen Ge kept staring at the water bucket. The man did not use store bought bait, and it was radiating a very strange smell. Locking the bucket, the man picked up everything and started to walk toward a small hut next to the dam.

“What are you doing?” Chen Ge followed behind him. He felt that he could get more valuable clues from this man.

“You see those shiny dots on the water? The King Fish did not drag the luminous bobber down into the water, so I plan to haul them back. The bobbers are quite expensive.” Knocking on the door, after some time, an honest-looking man pulled the door open. This was the man who had been standing behind the fisher earlier. He was not tall, only 1.6 meters. His skin was dark probably because he worked under the sun.

“Going back already? You’re so early today. Don’t you normally fish until 2 or 3 am?” The man’s name was written on his name tag, Zhang Dabo, a worker at the dam.

The fisher took the opportunity to gloat, and he purposely lowered his voice and even gestured. “You’re unlucky. Once you left, the King Fish took the bait. If you don’t believe me, ask this young man. I almost caught the King Fish.”

“The King Fish took the bait?” The man was surprised.

“It did. I was also there.” Chen Ge vouched for the fisher.

“If it took the bait, why did you let it go?” Zhang Dabo looked at the fisher. “What was the problem this time?”

“The fishing line was cut. Just now I discussed it with this young man, and we believed there’s more than one big fish in the dam.”

“More than one? I’ll need to report this to my superior.” Zhang Dabo was even more surprised. It was his job to look after the dam. If there was trash on the water, he would use his boat to fish it out, so when he first heard about the King Fish in the dam, he had been first worried about his personal safety. Eastern Jiujiang Dam was incredibly isolated, and he often would not even see another person’s shadow for quite some time. He looked after this place alone, and it was normal for him to feel afraid.

“What’s the point of that? They won’t drain the whole dam unless there’s actual proof that the King Fish has killed someone.” The fisher shrugged. “I’m not going to waste time talking. Lend me your boat, I want to get back my bobbers.”

“Why don’t you wait until daylight? You just angered the King Fish, and if you go into the lake now, it will definitely come for you.” Zhang Dabo looked at the dark water surface and felt like the King

Fish was just waiting for them.

“Wear the life jacket and prepare the fish spear. If the King Fish dares show up, we’ll resolve this issue once and for all. I’ve fished it three times, but I’ve never once seen what it looks like. Then again, there are few species of fish that can grow so big in Jiujiang.”

“You sure you want to go?”

“I’ve already told you, the longer the life of a fish, the more it will value its life. It has probably sunk to the bottom of the water.” The fisher narrowed his eyes at the key that was around Zhang Dabo’s waist. “The King Fish is clever, but it is ultimately a fish. We cannot underestimate it, but there’s no need to overestimate it either, or else what’s the difference between us and the people from the past who prayed to the river god?”

“I know you’re familiar with King Fish, but there’s no need to risk your life on a theory.” Zhang Dabo was very afraid.

“My luminous bobbers are custom-made; they’re not cheap. They’re also painted with bait that was used to attract the King Fish. If I wait until daylight, they will have disappeared already. Furthermore, they are just eight meters away from the bank; it won’t take more than several minutes.”

“If you want to go, go on your own. I’m not going.” Zhang Dabo removed the keys and handed them to the fisher. After getting the key, the fisher hesitated.

His hesitation made Chen Ge suspicious. A bobber, no matter how expensive it was, would not be more expensive than a human life, right? Did the fisherman really not care about the King Fish’s threat? Or was there some secret about that bobber? Was he worried that they would be hauled away by others the next day?

The sky was darkening, and it would only get more dangerous. The fisher looked at the bobbers and decided to get them in the end. He walked to the back of the hut with the key alone and took out the paddle, fish spear, and rope.

“This man sure has lost his mind.” Zhang Dabo talked to himself. He prepared to stop the man. After all, if anything happened to the fisher on his watch, he would be responsible.

“Brother, I see that you two have quite a good relationship...”

Chen Ge reached out to grab Zhang Dabo's shoulders, but before he could finish, the man countered. "Who has a good relationship with him? The man is hard to deal with. If the King Fish did not only take his bait, I wouldn't have cared about him."

"Then why would the King Fish only take his bait? What is so special about his bait?"

"I know what you want to ask—many fishers have come to ask me what kind of bait he's using, but I don't know! This man is very secretive, and he only comes to fish at night. Whenever he wants to use the bait, he hides it well. Until now, no one has been able to understand why, but now that you mention it, it's quite weird. The King Fish won't take other people's bait, only his."

"Then there should be something special about the bait." Chen Ge and Zhang Dabo walked to the fisher.

When he saw them approach, he immediately grabbed the bucket and the other bunch of stuff. "Why are you two doing here?"

"How about you just let it go? It's too dangerous for you to go now," Zhang Dabo advised, but the fisher ignored him. He tied the rope to the front of the boat and then placed the bucket with the bait and the fishing spear into the worker's small boat.

The fisher was not dumb. To prevent an accident from happening, he tied the rope to the boat. If there was a problem, the people on the bank could pull the boat back. “You two stay at the bank. If I raise a large light, start pulling the rope.”

He turned on the fishing light that he carried with him. With a deep breath, he jumped into the boat. The water was dark, and no one could see what was hiding underneath it.

The body rocked with the boat. The fisher sat down slowly, placed the fishing spear within arm’s reach, and held the light between his legs. Then, he picked up the paddles.

“Are you sure you want to do this?” Zhang Dabo watched over the rope, worried that this might be a one-way trip for the fisher. If the fisher ended up being fish food, that would truly be a sad ending.

“Some fish will become more active at night, and the King Fish only takes the bait at night, so it means that it is this type of fish. Dragging this out will only make the situation more dangerous.” The fisher forced himself to calm down. He held the paddles with both hands and slowly edged away from the bank.

“This guy sure is seeking death.” Chen Ge rarely had that comments for others. He was not good with water, so if it was him, he definitely would not have picked this time to get the bobber. He was not afraid of ghosts, but looking at the rippling water, he had an indescribable fear.

This was an instinct. There was a voice in his mind reminding him that there was something hiding in the water and the dam was dangerous, so he had better stay away. The fisher drifted away from them, and unfortunately, the bobber was carried away by the current deeper into the lake. Initially, it was only eight meters away from the bank, but now, it was more than ten meters away.

The fisher sat facing away from them. He put down his concern and focused on paddling. The boat slowly moved to the bobber. The dam was eerily quiet. On the bank, Chen Ge and Zhang Dabo watched the fisher with bated breath. Both of them had seen the King Fish; they knew that there was a monster in the dam.

Night had fallen, but there were no stars in the sky. The sky was covered up by clouds, and the water in the dam was equally dark. The sky and the water were like an open maw, and the fisher was slowly moving into said maw.

“Almost there.” Sitting on the boat, the fisher kept his eyes on the luminous bobber. He gritted his teeth and forced himself to not look around. “It should be fine; the King Fish was spooked, so it will avoid the boat. Before, when the police came to salvage the bodies, it avoided them.”

The fisher convinced himself internally as his hands moved faster.

The surroundings were too quiet. The only sound was that of the paddles hitting the water, but that sound made the fisher strangely agitated.

“The bobber looks like it’s still floating forward. This current is not beneficial to me, but thankfully, the rope is long. I only need to collect it before the rope is pulled taut.” The rope was tied to the rope on one end and the pier on the other—it was like a lifeline.

Probably due to the current, the distance between the man and the bobber did not close. The boat moved further away, and slowly, Zhang Dabo realized that something was wrong. “He’s already more than ten meters away from us, but the longest rope inside my storage is only ten meters long. Did he tie several ropes together?”

Zhang Dabo pulled on the rope that was sinking into the water with confusion. He pulled on it, and there was not much resistance.

“Not good!” he screamed while pulling. He realized that the end of the rope had been cut!

“Come back now! The rope has been bitten off!” Zhang Dabo panicked and yelled at the fisher. Chen Ge did not expect this development. He looked like at the end of the rope. It was uneven, and it did not look like it had been cut by knife but felt more like it was bitten off by something.

“To be able to bite through the rope in such a short amount of time, this King Fish is not weak.” Chen Ge touched the edge of the rope. Probably because it was soaked in water, it gave off a weak fishy stench. He examined the cut closer and realized that there were many bite marks around the rope edges.

“This doesn’t look like it was bitten off by one fish but by a school of fish.” Chen Ge felt that the bite marks were weird, but he could not put his finger on it. Zhang Dabo was still calling for the fisher’s attention, but the man did not seem to hear it.

Just as Zhang Dabo was all flustered, the fisher finally reached the luminous bobber.

“Two meters left!”

The fisher was facing away from them, and he did not turn back. In his mind, the rope connected his boat and the pier, so when the rope was pulled taut, it would stop the boat from moving forward. Since he could continue moving forward, it meant that he was less than ten meters away from the bank.

“Come back!”

There was some noise coming from behind him, but the fisher ignored it. He kept his eyes on the bobber.

He leaned toward the front of the boat and raised the fishing light. The light shone on the water. It was then that he realized that the bobber was still moving forward, and the way that it was floating was different to the natural current. In fact, it felt like something was holding the bobber from below the surface and pulling it forward.

The fisher looked at the bobber, and he had a strange thought in his mind. Was the bobber being used by the King Fish to bait him? The custom-made bobber was right before his eyes—the man did not hesitate and raised the fishing light. The light cut through the water, but there was nothing around the bobber.

The man held the light in one hand and used his other to reach for the water. Just as he was about to reach the bobber, the water around the boat started to bubble and rock. Then, with the shine from the light, the man discovered a shadow right beneath the bobber charging up at an impossible speed!

The King Fish!

The fisher ignored the bobber and went to grab the fish spear, but when he got the spear, the shadow in the water disappeared again. "Where did it go?"

Before he could catch his breath, the small boat shook like something was trying to topple the boat.

"It's under the boat!" The fisher squatted down to lower his center of gravity. The light that had been left by the front of the boat tipped and slid into the water. "F*ck!"

The man saw the light drop into the water. Without hesitation, he grabbed the luminous bobber from the water and turned back to the bank. "Quick! Pull me back!"

When he turned around, he realized that he had already floated a very long way from the bank. The bobber that he held in his hand was connected to the fishing line and the line was tangled with black hair that was reeking with a horrible stench.

Chapter 575 - Too Much

“Hair?”

Why would there be hair on the fishing line? The man had been fishing for decades, and this was the first time that he had come across something like this. At the time, his mind was blank. His eyes looked downward, wanting to work out if it was hair or just water grass.

...

The fishing light slowly sank. The light caught a shadow moving upward in the water. He did not get a close look, but he could roughly make out its shadow. It had no fins or tail, but it appeared to have limbs.

“A person?” When this thought filled up his mind, the boat was knocked into again, throwing the man into full panic mode. He took out his knife to cut the fishing line loose and started to paddle to the bank like crazy.

“Pull me back! Quick!” He paddled violently, but the boat did not budge. The black hair started to crawl onto the boat. “What are these things?”

Not only did the boat not move toward the bank, it was slowly pulled toward the center of the bank. The fisher was panicking—he grabbed the bucket that was filled with his special bait and scattered the bait faraway. In the end, he even tossed the bucket as far as he could.

No one knew what the bait was, but strangely enough, after the bait was tossed out, the black hair on the boat slithered away, and the black shadow rushed toward the spot where the bait had dropped.

“I’m saved?” The man grabbed the paddles and moved toward the bank. When he turned his head back, he saw something that he would never forget. Just breaking the surface, spools of water grass-like objects rushed toward the bait that he had dropped.

“So... so many of them...” His arms were cold, and his body shivered. The man did not dare turn back again. He gripped the paddles tightly and rowed to the bank. “Save me, save me!”

The thing under the water was distracted by the man’s bait and temporarily ignoring him. Using this opening, the man managed to escape. He rushed to the bank and almost tripped as he tried to get off the boat. The fisher was covered in cold sweat. He sat far away from the bank and gasped greedily for air.

“You saw the King Fish?” Zhang Dabo was shocked by the man’s reaction and immediately ran to the fisher’s side. The man waved his hands frantically. His quivering lips were pale, and he could barely finish a coherent sentence.

“What did you say? Didn’t you say you were going to catch the King Fish with the spear earlier? Why didn’t you do that?”

“There’s no King Fish. The thing under the boat was no fish!” The fisher’s voice came and went, interspersed with his breathing.

“It’s a person! A person!” the emotionally unstable fisher screamed. When he communicated with Zhang Dabo, Chen Ge turned on the flashlight on his phone and shone it at the small boat. The custom-made bobber was lying at the corner of the boat. The bobber was much larger than a normal bobber, and Chen Ge walked toward it curiously.

He saw something blank and long like hair stuck to the side of the boat. Chen Ge was courageous; something had just happened inside the dam, yet he still dared to stand by the water. Looking out into the water, no one knew what kind of creepy monster hid inside it.

Chen Ge narrowed his eyes and reached into the cold water to grab the rope. He pulled the boat up the bank and fixed it to the pier. He noticed that the fisher was still in his frantic mode, and Zhang Dabo was not paying him any attention.

This is my chance.

As he activated the recorder, Chen Ge jumped into the boat, rocking it.

He quickly grabbed the bobber, which did not look much different from the ones on the market other than its size. It was much bigger.

The surface is very slippery, and there's a layer of oil on it. Wait, there's a line down the middle. This can be opened.

Chen Ge squeezed the bobber and twisted it open. A stench drifted out. This, he did not expect. There was a pinkie stuck inside the bobber! The flesh had already decayed, and there was no corpse spot, so it was impossible to tell when the finger had been chopped off.

The bobber is hiding a human finger, then what is his bait actually made of?

Why the 'King Fish' would be interested in this man's bait was apparent to Chen Ge. Using the cloth on the boat, Chen Ge wiped his fingerprints off the bobber and put it back.

Then he jumped back from the boat and walked toward the fisher with disgust on his face. When he moved, the expression on his face slowly changed. By the time Chen Ge reached the man, his expression had returned to normal.

The fisher had been given the scare of his life. He held onto Zhang Dabo's shoulder and started to mumble, "Person! Like seaweed, floating to the surface in clumps!"

The fisher's reaction was similar to those visitors who visited his Haunted House with malintent. Chen Ge gave this diagnosis after a glance. "Should we send him to the hospital? Perhaps something is wrong with his mind."

"Okay." Zhang Dabo dragged the man from the ground, but the man pushed him away.

"I'm not lying to you! That is not King Fish! It's a person!"

"The King Fish has transformed into a person?" Zhang Dabo chuckled weakly. "Calm down, we'll go to the hospital first."

"What hospital? I'm not sick!" The man pushed Zhang Dabo away. He was suddenly reminded of something and rushed to the bank. With some hesitation, he jumped into the boat.

"What are you doing now?" Zhang Dabo was worried about the man's safety, so he ran after him. When he arrived, the fisher had already gotten off the boat again. He placed that custom-made bobber in his pocket.

“You’re still worried about that bobber at a time like this? Is your life more important or that bobber?”

The fisher ignored Zhang Dabo. After getting the bobber, he ran away from the dam. No matter how hard Zhang Dabo called, the man did not look back.

“Doesn’t he want the fishing rod anymore? But surely this rod is even more expensive than that bobber.”

“Perhaps there’s some secret inside that bobber.” Chen Ge nudged Zhang Dabo away from the water. “Brother, do you know that man’s name and address?”

“You want to go find him?”

“I’m also a fishing aficionado. I wish to exchange some information with him, and I can also return the fishing rod.”

“His name is Yu Qingjia. A strange fella, that one. After the divorce with his wife, he’s been living in Eastern Jiujiang alone. I have no exact address, but I know that it’s not far from the dam.”

After getting the valuable information, Chen Ge grabbed the rod and chased after the man.

Zhang Dabo looked at Chen Ge, who had disappeared into the darkness, and he scratched his head. “These people are all so weird. He’s not just finding an excuse to steal the fishing rod, is he?”

Chen Ge had good stamina. He held the rod and tailed the man from a fixed distance.

He suspected that the man was related to a murder. He needed to find out more, and other than that, he wanted to know what the man had seen in the dam.

Chapter 576: I Need an Underwater Ghost [2 in 1]

Since obtaining the black phone, Chen Ge had also developed many new skills that technically had nothing to do with operating a Haunted House, skills like tailing someone and surveillance.

He held the fishing rod and followed the fisher from a distance. The fisher had been too shocked at the dam and jogged all the way home, not noticing Chen Ge that was following him.

There were a few houses that were not far from the dam, and they looked rather old and decrepit. The fisher stopped at one of the houses. He looked around and took out a key. He acted extremely suspiciously before slipping through the door.

He sure runs fast. Chen Ge waited until the man got into the house before walking over. He leaned against the door and looked into the place through the gap. The house was much bigger than he had expected, and it came with its own courtyard.

Should I knock on the door to say I'm here to return his fishing rod, or should I just jump over the fence?

When Chen Ge was still hesitating, there was a sound that came from inside the house. Chen Ge's pupils narrowed, and he continued to look through the gap. The fisher was kneeling before his own fridge. His hands were placed on the ground, and he kept mumbling something under his breath. It sounded like he was begging for forgiveness from someone.

Did he suffer some kind of trauma at the dam? Why is he crying before the fridge? Is the victim stored inside the fridge?

What happened next indirectly confirmed Chen Ge's speculation. The fisher confessed his guilt to the fridge. He bowed and knocked his forehead against the ground. The dust and tears dirtied his face. This continued for another ten minutes before the man calmed down. He used the sleeves to wipe at his face and then got a shovel from inside the house.

What is he planning to do?

Chen Ge could see clearly even though he was outside the house. The fisher did not stop to take a break and started to dig a large hole in the courtyard.

Digging a hole? To hide the body?

Once more, Chen Ge guessed correctly; the fisher opened the fridge and pulled out several large black bags from it. His arms were shaking, and then he knelt several times at the black plastic bags before tossing them into the hole.

"I will not fish anymore in my life. From now on, every year, I will burn paper money for all of you. No matter how much you need, I will burn it." The man mumbled strange words. He picked up the shovel and planned to cover up the hole that he had dug.

Chen Ge knew that he could not wait any longer, or else he would later need to use his own hands to open up this hole that the man would have covered.

"Is someone there?" Chen Ge knocked on the door. This sudden announcement spooked the fisher so much that he trembled and fell into the hole that he had dug. Cold sweat appeared on his face instantly.

"I'm the guy who was standing next to you at the dam earlier. You forgot to take your fishing rod, and the worker there asked me to bring it back to you." Chen Ge stared at the man through the gap in the door. "Brother, are you okay? You look exhausted. Do you need me to call the emergency number for you?"

Once he heard that Chen Ge was about to call the emergency number, the man started to panic. He struggled to climb out from the hole. "There's no need. You can just leave the fishing rod at the door. I'll get it later, okay?"

"Brother, from your voice, you don't sound so well! Are you sure that everything is okay in there?”

“I’m fine! I’m really fine! Just put down the fishing rod and leave!” The man was so agitated that his face was covered with sweat. He screamed, and at the same time, he pushed the mound of dirt into the hole madly.

“I cannot leave—you don’t sound well. Why don’t you open the door for me to take a look? If you are really fine, then I will go.” Chen Ge refused to budge from the door, and the fisher felt like cursing him out already.

Why am I so unlucky to run into someone like this?

He hurriedly used the dirt to cover up the black plastic bags and then he opened the door a sliver while he was still catching his breath. “I’m fine. Now give me the fishing rod.”

“But you don’t look so well.”

“Give me the fishing rod! Give it to me!” The man was almost forced into a corner. He roared, and probably due to that violent action, when his body shook, the bobber in his pocket fell out. The custom-made luminous bobber toppled to the ground. When Chen Ge worked with it earlier, he did not twist it tight, so the small piece of finger tumbled out.

The fisher acted much faster than Chen Ge. He used his body to block Chen Ge’s sight.

“You saw my secret. It is just ham—that’s my secret ingredient.” The fisher fixed the bobber. He suddenly became incredibly calm. His earlier agitation disappeared completely, and he even turned to smile at Chen Ge. However, this was a forced smile, and combined with that pair of eyes that obviously was plotting something, it made Chen Ge feel slightly uncomfortable.

“My fishing rod is actually also custom-made, very expensive. Thank you for bringing it back to me. How about you come in and take a seat?” The man was adjusting his breath, and his tone sounded quite weird.

“Okay.” Chen Ge appeared honest and gullible. He looked like he would not harm anymore. Chen Ge silently pressed a button on the recorder inside his bag and walked into the house. The big hole in the courtyard had not been completely filled, and there was dirt everywhere.

“I plan to plant some vegetables here, so I was tilling the ground earlier.” The man suddenly became so friendly. “Why don’t you come into the house and have a seat? I caught several river fish earlier in the day. Since you’re here, you should stay to try my cooking.”

Chen Ge walked into the room without showing any guardedness. When he walked through the door, the man who followed behind him silently locked the door and then raised the shovel in his hands. The smile on his face disappeared completely, and his eyes were filled with hatred and resentment. He focused on the back of Chen Ge’s head. He looked for the perfect opportunity to ambush Chen Ge from behind.

However, before he found that chance, the man before him suddenly removed his backpack. Then, without warning and without reason, he used the backpack to swing at his face. This was too sudden, and his plan was completely interrupted.

The backpack hit him right on the bridge of his nose. The man’s sight was blocked. Before he had time to recover, there was an intense pain coming from his stomach. It felt like he had been kicked roughly. His body knocked into the door, and the shovel fell from his hands. Before he realized what was happening, pain started to radiate from all parts of his body.

Someone was assaulting him—the truth flashed across his mind. He was confused, and for a moment, he even felt wronged.

“Stop! Stop kicking me! What the f*ck!” He used his hands to shield his head. The shovel had been kicked away, and the man writhed on the ground. However, his attacker did not seem like he was going to stop any time soon. He was beaten up for several minutes. It was not until the man felt tired that the pain on his body disappeared.

His body was covered in bruises. The fisher collapsed in the corner of the living room, and he looked at Chen Ge with fear and caution.

“What’s wrong with you? Why did you assault me?”

“Because you wanted to kill me.” Chen Ge picked up the shovel from the ground and sat on the sofa.

“Which one of your eyes saw that I want to kill you?”

“I can see that intention from your eyes.” Chen Ge did not waste time to argue with the man. “I will ask you a few questions, and you’d better answer them honestly.”

“You followed me here just to ask me a few questions?”

“First, what did you see at the dam?” Chen Ge asked directly, he did not want to waste time.

“There is no King Fish in the water,” the man answered after a moment’s hesitation. “I saw a person.”

“A person?”

“Yes, with four limbs and hair.” The terror was overflowing out of the man’s eyes. “There was more than one. When I dropped the bait into the water, there were many similar things underwater that were rushing to the surface.”

“Many of them.” Chen Ge nodded. “Second question, I already know what kind of bait you’re using. Tell me, why would you use that as your bait, and how did you know that they like this kind of bait?”

“I don’t know what you are talking about.” The fisher was still trying to deny it.

“It’s fine if you do not want to answer that question. The police will ask for more details than I do. Third question, have you been to Li Wan City before, and did you take the last bus on Route 104?”

Bury seed was related to the ghost fetus, and the water ghost at Eastern Jiujiang Dam was related to Bury seed, so Chen Ge wanted to see whether the fisher had gone fishing for a water ghost. Was it just a hobby, or did he have another motive?

“Li Wan City?” The man looked confused. It seemed genuine, so he was probably not related to the culprit at Lin Wan City. After asking a few more questions, Chen Ge directly called the police. “As for the rest of the story, I’ll leave you to inform the police.”

Twenty minutes later, the officers from Eastern Jiujiang Police Station who received the call rushed to the scene. “You should come back to the station with us.”

“There’s no need for that trouble. I suggest that you learn a bit from the Western Jiujiang station, and everything should be as simple as it can be. In the future, we will have a lot more opportunities to see each other.” After providing a simple written statement, Chen Ge also found out the fisher’s criminal process from the police.

The body that was in his courtyard had come from Ming Yang Residence. This man’s personality was a bit twisted. A few weeks ago, he had gotten into an altercation with a homeless person on his way home. He had accidentally injured the man, and the homeless person swore to take revenge to make his life as miserable as possible.

After a few more conflicts, the fisher confirmed the homeless man’s address after following him home. Then, he went to the abandoned Ming Yang Residence to kill the man. When he tried to dump the body at night, the fisher noticed a shadow about one meter long surfacing in the water at the dam, and that was when he realized that there was a ‘King Fish’ in Eastern Jiujiang Dam.

Chen Ge had already gotten the information he wanted, so he left the fisher’s home and called a taxi to get back to New Century Park.

The mission related to the girl on the black phone still has not been triggered, but at least I can confirm that it is related to the water ghost. Her sister is most likely one of the ‘King Fishes’ in the dam.

This two-star mission was harder than Chen Ge imagined. The water ghost was hiding inside the dam, if he was not careful, he might be dragged down into the depth and this was completely different from a fight on the ground.

I wonder if Xu Yin’s power will be affected when he is submerged under water.

Chen Ge carried the backpack and stopped at the water attraction at the park before activating the recorder. A light smell of blood suffused the night breeze. In his red shirt, Xu Yin materialized next to Chen Ge.

“Still haven’t found your heart?” Chen Ge could always see a flash of sadness on Xu Yin’s face. Until now, he had not figured what Xu Yin was looking for—all he could do was hope that Xu Yin would even find his happiness. He ordered Xu Yin to get into the pool, and after the water flowed over his body, Chen Ge realized that his connection to Xu Yin drastically weakened. Xu Yin’s power was also affected to a certain degree.

Since something like this happens in a normal pool, if we really jump into the dam, the problem will be much bigger. I have to keep Xu Yin around, so now I desperately need a ghost who can submerge into the water.

Entering the Haunted House, Chen Ge took out his comic to consider the ghosts that were available to him. Yan Danian, the boy with the stench, Bai Qiulin... After going through the list of ghosts, Chen Ge suddenly realized that he had a ghost that had very little presence.

He grabbed his bag and rushed into the Coffin Village scenario and pushed open the door to an old house. There were two parasol trees growing slanted in the courtyard. Next to one of the trees was a large water vat.

“I already have a ghost living in water in my Haunted House!” Chen Ge walked up to the water vat, and he could see something ball-like floating in the water. When Chen Ge got closer, the ball slowly submerged into the water, and a trail of bubbles remained on the surface.

This was a ghost that Chen Ge had brought out from Coffin Village. It seemed to be called Vat Ghost, and it had been hiding inside the vat. Normally, it would bring plenty of screams to the visitors as well.

“The Haunted House has been really kind to you, and today, it is time for you to repay your benefactor.” Chen Ge and Xu Yin stood on opposite sides of the vat. They looked at the ghost who was hiding at the bottom of the vat. The ghost was hugging his knees and blowing out bubbles, shaking his head.

“You’re going to face an extremely terrifying water ghost—you can’t be so cowardly.” Chen Ge had Xu Yin haul the ghost out from the water and summoned other ghosts to give the Vat Ghost intensive training.

“I don’t ask that you need to be able to kill everyone, but you have to be able to escape quickly at least. After finishing the investigation, come and bring me the news.”

The training for the Vat Ghost mainly focused on evasion, endurance, and speed. Chen Ge did not need the Vat Ghost to have a high attack power—he only wished that the ghost would be able to return with its life intact after it got the necessary information.

“I’ll depend on all of you to teach it the right things.” Chen Ge closed the door that headed to the underground scenario and returned to the staff breakroom to take a much deserved rest. He looked at his phone and discovered that he had several unread messages. Most of them came from Wen Wen’s aunt, and a few of them came from Xu Wan.

Most of the messages were asking Chen Ge for his location. When Wen Wen’s aunt came to the New Century Park after her working hour, she had found that the father and daughter had been taken away by Chen Ge already. One could understand that she was a little bit worried.

“The woman did not call me after the string of messages. This probably means that she was able to confirm the pair of father and daughter’s safety.”

After thinking about it for a while, Chen Ge felt that it was better if he sent the woman a reply. Probably because it was already so late, the woman did not respond.

“Nothing happened to her, right?” Chen Ge shook his head and felt like he had been a bit too sensitive lately. If anyone that talked to him would be caught in some accidents, then his world would be a very chaotic place. He placed his phone on the bedside table and then took out the black phone to look at the list of daily mission.

“Repair, promote, and expand. The mission with normal difficulty does not mean much to me. If there is a Nightmare Mission, I might consider it.”

Lying down, Chen Ge picked up Xiaoxiao and the white cat and snuggled in bed with them. He pulled up the cover and decided to have an early sleep that night.

“Hopefully by tomorrow morning, the Vat Ghost will be able to give me a surprise.”

Chen Ge did not plan to drag it on any longer. The following night, he planned to finish the Twin Water Ghost mission. “An underwater scary scenario. Probably even those horror house designers from overseas would not dare attempt something this daring. This should be a first for any haunted house operator.”

Hugging the white cat’s fuzzy head, Chen Ge slowly drifted to sleep. At around 5 am, before the sun even came up from the horizon, Chen Ge woke up. His limbs were stone cold, but the man did not feel any semblance of discomfort.

“My body temperature is still dropping, but it is not as obvious as before.” He did not sleep for that long, but Chen Ge felt reenergized and refreshed. “The later it is, the more energized I become. My need for sleep is also slowly dropping. Is that a good thing or a bad thing?”

Chen Ge was not a singular entity anymore. If he collapsed, then the ghosts at his Haunted House would lose their home as well. “I cannot abandon these poor souls; they will have nowhere else to go. Then again, there is nothing else I can do for now. I hope the tragedy that happened to the old lady in Coffin Village will not replicate itself here.”

Putting on his clothes, Chen Ge entered the underground scenario. When he entered the Coffin Village, what he saw surprised him. The Vat Ghost was using a speed that did not fit his appearance to evade the combined attacks from Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin. He always managed to evade the attacks from the two with an impossible twist of his body before the attacks were able to connect.

“The man seems to possess an agility that is higher than we expected since he spent a long time living in water. He is like a slippery eel that is very hard to catch.” Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue stood to the side. They watched the scene while giving their comments. Further away was a group of mannequins in student outfits who were there just to enjoy the show.

“That is an interesting comparison, but it looks like the special training has been very successful. This Vat Ghost is one with great potential.” Chen Ge summoned back Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin. He led the Vat Ghost out of the Haunted House and placed it in theme park's water attraction.

Once his body gained contact with the water, the Vat Ghost's speed increased once more. His speed was very fast, but the expression on his face was like before. It seemed like he was reminiscing about the days when he was just a ghost hiding at the bottom of the vat and his only responsibility was to blow bubbles.

"When this Trial Mission is over, you don't need to squeeze yourself inside that small vat anymore. I will find you a large pond." Chen Ge was very satisfied with the transformation of the Vat Ghost. He was worried that the sun might injure the ghost, so after a brief observation, he sent the Vat Ghost into the comic. "Now I have another trump card."

At 8:20 am, Director Luo and Uncle Xu arrived at the theme park earlier than usual. There were two men in suits following them.

"Xiao Chen, let me make some introductions. This is my former business partner; we used to go to the same university. He is CEO Bai from the Chaohai Organization. The update to our theme park's facilities will be a joint project with their company." Director Luo sounded bright, but Chen Ge noticed that when he introduced the man, his eyes were very calm, and there was not one ripple of happiness. If anything, there was a very well-hidden trace of caution.

"Old friend, this is the mastermind behind our theme park's Haunted House, Chen Ge." Director Luo then managed the introduction to CEO Bai.

"You are that Chen Ge?" CEO Bai looked Chen Ge up and down and then nodded kindly. "To be able to keep such a large Haunted House running alone and then come up with so many detailed scary scenarios, that's amazing. I'm really impressed." He extended his hand toward Chen Ge. "If there is an opportunity, perhaps we can consider a cooperation between us as well."

Chen Ge looked at the man's face and thought that he looked very familiar. He thought about it for a long time, and then it hit him. He had once seen a picture on the engineer's phone from the futuristic park. It was the picture of a meeting, and one of the people in the picture was CEO Bai.

Why would someone who had dealings with the futuristic theme park come to work together with the New Century Park?

With confusion in his eyes, Chen Ge silently moved his eyes to look at Director Luo. The latter understood the meaning in his eyes. He lowered his palm and then pointed at himself. He was telling Chen Ge that he knew about these things, and he would be able to handle everything.

Director Luo was a successful businessman. Chen Ge decided to leave such matters to the businessmen and did not say anything. He knew that Director Luo had his own plan. He probably wanted to earn benefits from the man and, at the same time, stop the man's wicked plan from succeeding.

Hopefully, everything can be pulled off successfully.

After sending them away, Chen Ge could sense some desperation from Director Luo. If not for the pressure from the futuristic theme park, he probably would not have taken such a risky step.

Looks like I have to increase my speed. I should focus on completing the few missions in Eastern Jiujiang first. If there is any party that dares stand in our way, I'll just feed them to Zhang Ya or Bai Qiulin.

After two days of relaxation, Chen Ge felt like he had to do something already.

At 9 am, the theme park opened, and a new day began.

Inside the corridor of a particular building in Eastern Jiujiang, Wen Wen's hands were tightly gripping the room door, and she cried loudly. Her large eyes were filled with tears, and the scene looked rather sad.

"I've fulfilled my part of the promise to let you go to theme park, and now it is your time to fulfill your part of the promise and go to school like an obedient girl."

The woman in the office clothing squatted next to Wen Wen. She tried to pry Wen Wen away from the door, but the girl gripped the door and was unwilling to let go.

Even though Wen Wen's father suffered from a mental illness and his intelligence was much lower than normal, for a father that cared deeply about his daughter, this was more like the instinct of an animal. He fidgeted in his seat and wanted to stop Wen Wen's aunt.

“Brother, I also love Wen Wen, but if you do not want her to turn out like you in the future, you have to let her go to school!” The woman’s words were sharp, and they plunged right into the man’s heart.

The biggest worry for this father was that his daughter would end up like him when she grew up. He stopped moving, no longer debating saving the little girl.

“I am only doing this for your sake. There will come a day when I am old. Wen Wen, if you have no power to take care of yourself, then what will happen to the two of you when I’m old?” Wen Wen’s aunt picked up the little girl, grabbed the school bag that was on the ground, and forcibly dragged her downstairs.

“When you’re at school, you have to listen to the teacher’s words, and do not get into any arguments or altercations with the other students.” The woman led Wen Wen to the bus. The girl seemed to have given up on her resistance. She hugged her bag and kept her head lowered like she was very sad.

Half an hour later, the woman dropped Wen Wen off at a private rehabilitative school. There were many students like Wen Wen at this school, including children who suffered from hyperactivity or other illnesses.

“Teacher Wen, I’ll leave the child with you.” The woman actually did care about Wen Wen. Before she left, she told Teacher Wen many times that she was worried that the girl would be bullied at school.

“Will you be the one fetch her after school?” The one who spoke was a female teacher. She was rather rotund, and she had a pair of glasses on. Her hair was cut short, and she looked around forty. Her voice was gentle and soft.

“Yes, thank you for your help.” The woman walked three steps and turned back to look at Wen Wen. In the end, she got onto the bus; after all, she still needed to get to work. Wen Wen never once raised her head to look at the woman, obviously unhappy.

“Let’s go in.” The woman placed her hand on Wen Wen’s shoulder and slowly nudged her forward. After crossing the front door, they entered a very unique school. The school was not big, and it was mainly separated into two parts, indoors and outdoors. Currently, on the small outdoor field, there was a male teacher who was leading a few children to do some exercises.

The actions were very simple, but the patterns made by the children were completely different and weird in their own ways. However, this scene was not at all funny; if anything, it would make one's heart tighten.

Wen Wen seemed to hate this strange environment a lot. She pushed the woman's hand from her shoulder and took out a water bottle from her bag. She did not drink the water. Instead, she opened the lid so that she could look at the surface of the water directly.

Teacher Wen had seen Wen Wen's strange action before, so she did not stop her as she led Wen Wen into the building. A row of plastic tables whose edges were covered tightly was placed in the middle of the room. There was a female teacher who was telling the students something in the classroom.

"Xiao Zhu, do you mind arranging a seat for her? I have something else to attend to, so I'll leave her with you."

"Okay." The female teacher saw Wen Wen. When she saw the little girl, her brows creased slightly, but she soon returned to normal. She arranged for the girl to sit at the back of the class. Both parties treated each other as invisible. In a way, this was the best arrangement.

Sitting at the back, the girl leaned on the table. She did not take out her textbook from her bag—she just sat there and looked at the water inside the bottle. She mumbled to herself, but it looked like she was conversing with the water bottle.

Her voice was low, and since the classroom was quite noisy, no one really paid her any attention. It was not until the female teacher started to use the projector to teach the class about animals that the class started to quiet down. The teacher called out students to answer her questions. Most of the students piped up, but Wen Wen continued to converse with the water bottle on her own. When the teacher heard her voice, she was quite angry.

"Liu Wen Wen, come and tell us what this animal is."

When the girl heard someone call her name, she lifted her head in confusion. When she noticed that everyone was looking at her, she was conspicuously unsettled.

"Don't you know? Then what about this one?" The female teacher changed another picture, and a picture of a frog appeared on the board. Wen Wen still did not say anything. She did not know what to do, and her palms became covered in sweat.

“I have already told you many times, this is a frog. How come you still cannot remember it?” The female teacher walked down from the podium. The more she looked at the girl, the angrier she became. “You keep hugging this bottle of water, but you never drink from it. If anyone else tries to drink your water, you will even scratch their faces. I really wonder about the doctor’s diagnosis for you.”

The female teacher really did not like Wen Wen. She pointed at the picture on the board. “I will tell you again, this is a frog. Can you remember it this time?”

The girl still did not answer. She stared at the water bottle on the table.

“You still won’t speak?” The female teacher grabbed Wen Wen’s shoulders and pulled her to stand at the aisle that was between two rows of tables. “Come, repeat the action that is on the picture.”

Wen Wen still did not react. In the end, with the multiple signals and warnings from the female teacher, the girl seemed to finally grasp her meaning. She mimicked the frog in the picture and squatted on the ground. Her hands were placed on the ground, and she used her four limbs to hold up her body.

“Remember this pose, this is a frog. I will ask you again during the next lesson.” The female teacher had Wen Wen return to her seat, and she continued with the class.

Patting away the dust on her hands, Wen Wen stood up and leaned against her table again. She stared at the water bottle. No one touched the bottle, but the water inside started to ripple on its own as a string of black hair that was on the bottom of the water floated to the surface.

The class in the morning soon ended. After lunch, it was time for the students to have an afternoon nap. Wen Wen was still arranged to have her place at the corner. She did not protest or make any noise. She hugged her school bag and her water bottle as she very obediently walked to her bed.

She dropped the bag by her feet and then placed the water bottle beside her pillow. After about half an hour, when the children started to fall asleep, the teacher who was responsible for patrolling the room entered. When she stopped beside Wen Wen, she noticed there was an unclosed water bottle next to her.

“Why is there a black hair in the water?” The female teacher picked up the bottle and poured the water down the toilet. Then, she replaced the water bottle on the counter next to the bed.

At 2 pm, the children were slowly roused from their sleep. The first thing that Wen Wen did once she opened her eyes was turn to look at the water bottle next to her pillow, but she was unable to find it. The panicked girl started to look around. She eventually found the water bottle on the counter, but the water inside had been poured away.

Wen Wen hurled the plastic bottle on the ground hard enough for it to break. Yet, she still could not find the hair inside the bottle and started to cry loudly.

At the time, the female teacher by the name of Xiao Zhu was conversing with the male physical education teacher. Their bodies were slowly leaning closer to each other, and they were laughing and chatting.

They were happily chatting when they heard Wen Wen’s crying. The female teacher complained with impatience. “It is her again. I really wonder if this girl was not born with mental retardation but is actually a nut job.”

Opening the door, the woman walked to the girl. She had no idea what had happened to Wen Wen because the girl refused to communicate. She bent down to pick up the pieces of the bottle, and when she saw that Wen Wen was still crying, Xiao Zhu grabbed the girl and dragged her out of the room, locking her in another room. “Stop disturbing the other children. I will give you time to calm down first. When you’re done crying, I will come back to get you.”

Chapter 578 - Have You Found Me? [2 in 1]

Chapter 578: Have You Found Me? [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Wen Wen's crying sound came from the single room. The female teacher stood outside to listen for a while. She prepared to reenter the room when the girl's crying receded, but Wen Wen only cried harder and louder.

There has to be something wrong with this girl's brain. She was the one who broke the water bottle, so why is she acting so crazy in the middle of the day?

The female teacher still had other students in her charge, so she decided to leave Wen Wen alone to calm down. She walked away from the door and returned to the classroom.

After all the children were ready for the afternoon class, the female teacher returned to the door of the isolated room. Half an hour had already passed, and Wen Wen finally stopped crying.

Looks like giving them a time-out is not bad. Of course, we cannot pamper them too much simply because they're retarded.

The female teacher was glad because she had finally found the method to deal with Wen Wen. She pushed the door open.

In the room that could not be considered as big, there was a dampness in the air, and it felt eerie and dark. There was a pool of water on the ground, and the little girl stood in the corner with her head lowered, her small, slender arms dangling weakly by her side. Her pale skin was conspicuous against her black hair. The curtain of hair fell on her face and blocked her eyes. She did not make any noise, as if she had transformed into some furniture in the room.

"Finally stopped crying?" The female teacher sensed the change in the little girl. For some strange reason, she shivered. After she entered this small room, her breathing became more difficult like the room was filled with water and if she stayed too long in this room, she might drown and die.

The sound of a wind chime and the children singing came from outside the room. Those were the usual sounds at their school, but standing inside that single room, listening to these familiar sounds that drifted through the wind felt completely different. It did not sound like children who were born unlucky and with sickness, but it sounded like the painful wailing of small tormented souls.

“Come here.” The female teacher suddenly felt afraid of stepping further into the room. She extended her hands toward the girl and hoped that the girl would walk out from the room on her own. However, Wen Wen did not seem to hear her. She stood there in her strange posture. Her arms were slightly bent, and her body was leaning forward. Her lips, the only feature that was not blocked by her hair, were pulled upward into a smile.

“Can’t you hear me? I told you to come here!” The female teacher looked at the child, and a strange emotion appeared in her heart—fear. Why would I be afraid of a mere child?

It was broad daylight, and the sun was shining brightly. The female teacher steeled her heart and walked into the room. She grabbed the curtain and prepared to yank it open. However, just as she was about to pull back the curtain, she felt a chill on her wrist like something had just grabbed her.

“Ah!” With a scream, the female teacher turned to look. Her wrist was gripped by Wen Wen. This little girl seemed to have morphed into a different person. Her eyes had become very weird like a bottomless pond, and there were bodies floating on top of it.

What is happening?

The teacher’s hand that held onto the curtain slowly lost its power. She could not move her hand, much less pull the curtain open.

“Isn’t it time for class?” Wen Wen uttered the question clearly. There was no stuttering or shivering like usual; every single word was very clear. This was different from how the girl was normally.

“O... okay.” The female teacher did not dare waste time and immediately raced out of the room with Wen Wen in tow.

Walking down the corridor, the oppressive feeling finally started to dissipate. The female teacher did not dare turn around to look at Wen

Wen. She felt like her wrist had been bitten by something. It was cold and numb, and she had started to lose the feeling in her arm.

Walking into the classroom, Wen Wen let go of her hand actively. Without waiting for the teacher to say anything, Wen Wen walked to the back of the class.

Today sure is a strange day.

Even though Wen Wen was not holding her wrist anymore, the female teacher still felt chilliness radiating from the spot where Wen Wen held her.

She had the students open all the curtains in the classroom. Then she began the class. She tried her best not to look in Wen Wen's direction, and soon, the events that happened that afternoon were slowly removed from her mind.

At 3 pm, Chen Ge's Haunted House ran into a small problem. That CEO Bai, who was Director Luo's guest, suddenly wanted to personally experience Chen Ge's Haunted House. Since he was not privy to the man's background, Chen Ge planned to give CEO Bai the best VIP service. He planned to have CEO Bai enter the Haunted House alone and then arrange a few ghosts to be his other visitors to accompany him.

The actors were ghosts, the other visitors were ghosts, and everywhere that he looked, there would be ghosts. That would definitely leave a valuable memory for CEO Bai, and perhaps he might even use this opportunity to grab some valuable information.

That was the plan, but CEO Bai suddenly changed his mind at the last minute. He bowed out from the experience and ordered the secretary that followed him to experience the Haunted House on his behalf. Chen Ge did not think it was worth it to go after a mere secretary, so he had the idea to go easy on the man. He lowered the difficulty of the three-star mission, and he allowed the secretary to almost clear the Third Sick Hall.

The man probably felt disappointed because he had overestimated Chen Ge's Haunted House. Chen Ge's plan was for them to lower their guard. If they returned in the future, Chen Ge planned to enter the fray personally and even release the lingering spirits of all the mental patients. He would show them the real terror of the ghost stories society.

CEO Bai and Director Luo's negotiation went very smoothly, maybe too smoothly. After sending CEO Bai off, there was no smile on Director Luo's face. Things had been too successful, and that made Director Luo feel quite unsettled. Chen Ge was not familiar with these things, so he could not intervene even if he wanted to. With full confidence in Director Luo, he did not ask for more details.

The Haunted House closed at night. After cleaning up the place, Chen Ge entered the underground scenario alone. He planned to finish the twin water ghost mission that night. Taking out the comic, he grabbed all the ghosts. Chen Ge put it inside the backpack with Doctor Skull-cracker's hammer.

After completing the Water Ghost mission, the variety of employees at the Haunted House will greatly improve, and the first underwater scary scenario will be unlocked. I just wonder what kind of form it will take.

With a stomach filled with anticipation, Chen Ge left New Century Park. When he planned to call a taxi to get to the dam, his phone suddenly rang. It was a call from Wen Wen's aunt.

"Hello, how are you?"

"Did Wen Wen go to your place? Boss Chen, have you seen Wen Wen?" Wen Wen's aunt's urgent voice came from the other end of the line.

"Wen Wen? But why would she be with me? Calm down and tell me what happened." Chen Ge had a very bad feeling.

"Wen Wen has gone missing! When I went to the rehabilitative school to pick her up at night, I discovered that she was not at the school! The school teachers have no idea where she is, and the surveillance footage showed that she was indeed waiting for me at the school gate after school. However, after a while, she disappeared from the footage, and now, no one knows where she is."

Wen Wen's aunt sounded desperate.

"The girl likes your theme park a lot, and she even told me that she felt very comfortable inside your Haunted House. The girl who has always been a bit reserved and pessimistic started to smile after she visited your theme park, so I think that she might have gone to your theme park if she ran away from school."

"I don't think so. You live in Eastern Jiujiang, and the theme park is in Western Jiujiang; the distance between us is very big."

"I'm just telling you. If you see that child, please call me back, okay? Thank you!"

"Okay, no problem, but I feel like there is a big chance that Wen Wen is still at her school. Can you tell me the address of her school?"

After Wen Wen's aunt gave him the location, Chen Ge hung up. He quickly ran to the guard's booth. He told the elder the situation and told him to keep an eye out for the little girl.

After sharing the news, Chen Ge headed directly to the girl's school. From his experience, the girl should not have wandered far from her school—she did not have any money on her, so she should still be around her school compound.

The girl's big sister is a water ghost. Could her sudden disappearance be related to her big sister? Is it because I went to the dam yesterday and it has attracted the attention of the other water ghosts?

There was still time, so Chen Ge called a cab to get to Wen Wen's rehabilitative school.

"She is really such a troublesome little child. If she is mentally retarded, then she should not be able to come up with all these schemes!"

The female teacher by the name of Xiao Zhu stood in the corridor and complained. The male teacher standing next to her was the one responsible for physical education.

"You should not have said that. If any outsiders hear it, it will greatly ruin the reputation of our school," the male teacher advised her patiently. Even though he also had a trace of impatience and unhappiness on his face, he did not voice his dissatisfaction openly.

"Ah Cheng, if this child did not decide to act up, we would have been shopping and then going for a movie." The female teacher did not hide her real emotion when she was with the male teacher.

"Shush, you'd better keep it quiet. Headmistress Wen does not approve of relationships between teachers. Since we're still at school, we'd better be more careful about things like that." He walked away. "Let's find that girl first."

"Why are we wasting time? It's for the best if the girl goes missing, I became tired of dealing with her a long time ago," the woman groused.

The two turned to walk into a different corridor, but the lights in the corridor were not turned on. When the male teacher wanted to reach out for the light switch, his arm was suddenly covered with softness. He turned around to look and noticed that his arm was being hugged by the female teacher. "Why aren't you paying me any attention?"

The woman put on a coquettish expression. The man looked around and confirmed that no one was there before leaned in to give the woman a peck on her lips. "We should focus on the official business first. If the girl really goes missing, it will greatly affect the reputation of our school. By the way, I heard from the students that the girl was crying for no reason this afternoon. Do you know the actual reason why?"

"If I have to guess, it was her illness acting up. I've already told you, the child is not normal. She often hugs a water bottle in class and talks to the water inside the bottle. Sometimes, she even calls the water bottle her big sister."

The woman seemed to get excited talking about Wen Wen behind her back.

"She is unable to interact with other students. I once tried to have a child who was the least retarded sit next to her, but in the end, just because the boy tried to have a look at her water bottle, she scratched the boy's face until he bled."

"She is so aggressive? But when she entered the school, the doctor did not say anything like that on her diagnosis report."

"Who really knows? In any case, I have already completely given up on her. As long as I can earn my paycheck. You also know about our situation here. There is a quota. If around sixty percent of the children have a positive improvement and the remaining forty percent's condition does not worsen, it is already acceptable." The woman hugged the man by the name of Ah Cheng. How she reacted and talked when she was with the man and when she was with her students were completely different.

The man did not push her away and allowed Xiao Zhu to hang onto his arm. He even leaned in closer to her. “No matter what, we still need to find that girl. If the police and welfare services arrive and realize that you trapped the girl inside the room for the whole afternoon and allowed her to cry her heart out, the headmistress will definitely punish you.”

His voice was full of affection. The man stuck close to Xiao Zhu, and the two entered the corridor. When the man tried to turn the light on, Xiao Zhu who hugged the man’s arm suddenly saw a small shadow that was reflected on the wall at the end of the corridor.

“There!” she yelped, and the man quickly turned the corridor lights on. The small shadow disappeared as the lights came on.

“What did you see?”

“I saw a shadow earlier. It looked like it belonged to that girl!”

“She’s still in the school?” The man held Xiao Zhu’s hand as they ran to the end of the corridor. When they arrived, they discovered that it was not a shadow on the wall but a splash of water.

“Who would splash water here? Was it that girl?”

“Who else would it be other than her?”

“But what is her intention of doing this?” Xiao Zhu was confused.

“Then again, I did notice that the girl likes to play with water.”

“Wen Wen broke the water bottle and started to cry after she woke up from the afternoon nap. Then, could something have happened during the afternoon nap?” Ah Cheng was calmer. “The teacher who was responsible for the patrol this afternoon was Teacher Wang. She is currently looking for clues with the headmistress. Let me call her to ask.”

The man made the call, and Xiao Zhu looked rather miffed. “Why would you have her phone number? When did you ask for her number?”

“Teacher Wang, during the afternoon nap, did you notice anything strange about Wen Wen?”

“I don’t think so. I saw a hair floating in her water bottle, so I poured the dirty water away.”

“Is that all?”

“Yes.”

“Then, where did you pour the water? Did you pour it on her bed?”

“What are you trying to insinuate? That this thing is my mistake?” Teacher Wang fired back with impatience. “I poured the water down the toilet. If there’s nothing else, I’m going to hang up.”

“The toilet? Come, let’s go there and see.” The man did not want to explain to Xiao Zhu about why he had Teacher Wang’s number, so he quickly changed the topic. He led Xiao Zhu to run to the toilet that was at the end of the long corridor.

He placed his palm on the handle and then quickly pulled his hand back. “Why is the door handle wet? Has someone just used the toilet?” He looked at the door and realized that the edge of the door was also wet. Other than that, it looked to be moldy. The mold released a light stench.

“Is the girl hiding inside the toilet?” With curiosity, the man pushed the door open. The sound of rushing water came from the toilet. The faucet was not shut, and someone had used water to write down the following on the sink’s mirror—Here I am.

The water slid down the surface of the mirror. Those few words had just been written.

“Is this Wen Wen’s handwriting?” Ah Cheng turned to look at Xiao Zhu. Normally, Xiao Zhu had the most interaction with Wen Wen.

“Definitely not! The girl does not even recognize alphabet, so how could she have written this?” Xiao Zhu looked at the sentence of the mirror and shivered.

“Then, this means that someone else has sneaked into our school and probably kidnapped Wen Wen.” The man crossed his arms before his chest and started to think. Xiao Zhu became more and more unsettled. The lights in the corridor flickered on and off. She looked at the faucet, and a question popped into her mind.

The drain of the sink was not clogged, but the water level inside the sink kept rising. Seeing the rising water, the feeling of drowning returned like she was placed inside a pond as the water slowly rose to submerge her heart.

The sound of a girl's mumbling and singing appeared beside her ears. Her body kept shivering, and from the cover of her eyes, she saw something floating out from the drain of the sink.

She walked to the sink and placed her hand slowly into it. When she touched the thing and planned to pull it out, she realized that it was the hair of a woman. Xiao Zhu struggled greatly like she had touched something extremely disgusting. She wanted to call the male teacher next to her for help, but when she turned her head, she saw a girl who was completely bloated from being soaked in water standing inside the mirror.

She wore a tattered shirt that was splattered with blood, and her hair crawled out from the sink. Her lips moved like she was saying, "Have you found me?"

Chapter 579: Water and Mirror

Xiao Zhu's mind went completely blank, and the familiar chill crept up her arm. She felt the water flooding through her mouth and nose. Her lungs were filled with water, and she could not breathe. She moved both of her arms and legs. She wanted to ask for help, but there was no response. She could only stand there and watch the woman slowly lift her head upward to reveal her face that was difficult to put in words.

If this was a normal situation, the woman in the mirror should have been considered a beautiful woman, but unfortunately, the woman's facial features had been completely destroyed from the bloating.

The creepy thing was that the woman's face kept changing. The black hair parted, and after a while, the face slowly became familiar to Xiao Zhu. She realized with terror that the face of the woman in the mirror slowly turned into a reflection of her own face.

She waved her hands, but she could not control her body. The sound of water filled up her ears. Xiao Zhu felt like she was trapped inside the mirror, and her body was being swapped with the female inside the mirror!

"Save me! Save me! Save..." She gasped for air, but no oxygen travelled into her lungs. Before Xiao Zhu died from asphyxiation, her face was gruesome, and her animalistic instinct kicked in. She tilted her head and knocked into the mirror that was before her!

Crack!

The sound of shattering glass filled the room. The blood muddled her sight, but that feeling of drowning finally disappeared.

"Xiao Zhu?" Ah Cheng's cries of concern appeared in her ears. The woman finally regained her consciousness. Her body swayed, and she started to lean backward.

“What’s wrong with you?” The man caught Xiao Zhu from behind. The blood poured out from the wound on her forehead, and it dyed the woman’s eyes red.

“Mirror, there was someone in the mirror!” Xiao Zhu grabbed Ah Cheng’s arm, and she screamed while pointing at the mirror. The mirror in the toilet cracked from the impact. Shards of bloodied mirror slid down and fell from the wall. Ah Cheng hugged Xiao Zhu and pulled out the glass shards from the woman’s hair. He had also been given quite a fright from the woman’s sudden action.

“Don’t be afraid. It’s fine, I’m here. I’m here with you.” Ah Cheng let the woman lean back in his embrace, and he noticed that there was some problem with the sink. The black hair in the drain danced around like seaweed, and the water level kept rising until it started to overflow from the sink. The water dripped onto the ground, and the atmosphere in the room became eerier. The water that was flowing quietly looked like the result of a suicide victim slitting their wrist. The thing that overflowed was not water but looked more like blood.

“We should leave this place first.” Ah Cheng hugged Xiao Zhu and used his strength to haul her out of the toilet.

“The faucet is not closed...” Xiao Zhu’s voice sounded weak and flimsy.

“We can worry about that later. We’ll find more people and come back. For now, let me take you to the hospital first.” Initially, Ah Cheng was not that afraid, but after the woman’s crazy action, even his heart immediately jumped to his throat.

He was like a bird in the hunter’s sight. When he turned back to look inside the bathroom, he suddenly noticed that the blood on the mirror pieces was moving. The droplets looked like little worms that lived at the bottom of the river. They slowly moved to form a full sentence.

I am inside the mirror! She is in your arms!

When he saw the few words, Ah Cheng almost released his grasp of the woman in his arms. He noticed that this had gone way beyond the stage of a prank. There was really something strange happening at the rehabilitative school.

The wound on the forehead was still oozing blood. Xiao Zhu was so different from her normal cute self. Without aid to her wound, she looked rather scary. The lights in the corridor started to flicker more intensely. To help with the children's recovery, the school pasted many pictures of cartoon characters and animals on the corridor.

Under the flickering lights and the shift in brightness, the animal characters started to look weird, and the many smiling faces looked incredibly scary. More water leaked out from the overflowing sink. The water felt like it was alive. It flowed out of the toilet and trailed after Ah Cheng.

Ah Cheng did not realize that. A normal person would not have realized that. His whole focus was on the cartoons on the wall. Only now have I realized how creepy these things look at night. We should tell the headmistress about this and request to have all of them removed.

The words that had appeared on the mirror earlier kept surfacing in Ah Cheng's mind. He held Xiao Zhu, who had her head lowered. He could feel the softness and suppleness of the woman's skin, but he could not feel the temperature coming from her body.

"Xiao Zhu?"

He tried to call out to her. Xiao Zhu lifted her head, and the wound opened wide. The blood from her forehead trailed down her face, and she looked harsh. This was definitely not the best that she had ever looked. "Ah Cheng, I feel so tired, and my head is spinning."

The tone was draggy, and there was a thick nasally undertone like the woman's nostrils and throat were filled with water. The girlfriend that he once loved dearly now looked so unfamiliar. It was a very hard feeling to describe.

"Hold on a little bit longer. I'll bring you to see the doctor now." Ah Cheng bit on the edge of his tongue. His girlfriend was suffering deeply, and he had thought of abandoning her. What an unmanly thing to do! He picked up his pace, but as he walked down the corridor, he felt as if the corridor had grown longer.

"How long have I been walking down this hall?" The negative feeling in his heart grew. He bit down on his teeth, hugged Xiao Zhu, and charged down the corridor. However, when he took his first step, he stepped on something slippery on the ground and toppled over.

Both he and Xiao Zhu collapsed onto the ground. When he turned to look, he realized with a shock that the corridor was completely wet, and a trail of water had been following him closely like a living, venomous snake. He looked further down the corridor, and the room that was next to the toilet slowly creaked open.

A small shadow appeared next to the door. She leaned against the door. The lights in the corridor were on, and the place was showered with light, but he had a hard time seeing her face clearly. All he could confirm was that the shirt that she was wearing was soaking wet.

“Wen Wen?” The room that the little girl exited was the small room that the woman had trapped Wen Wen in that afternoon. Ah Cheng was figuring out what to do next when his phone rang. He reached to answer the phone as if on instinct.

“Do you think it’s possible for the child to return to school? The headmistress and myself have asked many nearby shops, and they said that they have not seen Wen Wen. The girl is probably still at the school, but she is hiding somewhere.”

It was Teacher Wang who called. When he heard her voice, Ah Cheng seemed to see a light at the end of the tunnel. “Wen Wen is at school! Please come quickly! Xiao Zhu is injured!”

“Injured? Okay, I’ll be there immediately!” The call was hurriedly ended. Ah Cheng actually still wanted to say a few more words. He put the phone away, but when he moved his eyes away from the screen, he realized that Xiao Zhu had been looking at him with her body twisted in a strange posture. “Who were you talking on the phone with?”

“That was Teacher Wang. She will bring people to come help us in a bit.” Ah Cheng was a very careful person. After he noticed the strangeness about Xiao Zhu, he did not ask any more questions, and the shadow that he suspected to be Wen Wen did not come any closer. The way he saw it, the most urgent thing that they needed to do then was leave the school.

But I searched that room earlier—the little girl was not in there. Could it be that the girl has been playing hide-and-seek with us?

Just what was on the girl’s mind? How could a girl with mental retardation trick a whole group of adults like this?

The more Ah Cheng thought about it, the more afraid he became. A scary movie that he had watched a long time ago appeared in his mind. The female main character was an innocent-looking child, but in reality, she was a strange person who had lived for a long time already. Every time that she was adopted, she would disturb the family's peace and even cause the family to be drenched in red.

Could the child suffer from the same illness?

He did not dare to think about it any longer. Ah Cheng dragged Xiao Zhu down the corridor. However, when he reached the door, he realized that the door that led outside had been locked.

"Where is the key?" Ah Cheng looked all over the pockets on his body, but he could not find it. He tried his best to shake the door until the lights over his head suddenly went out. The shadow that was hiding inside the small room walked out. The hands were extended forward like they were stopping something.

"Don't come any closer!" Seeing the shadow pick up speed in the corridor, Ah Cheng released his grasp on the woman in his arms. He prepared to abandon Xiao Zhu and jump through the window to find his escape. However, the strange thing was, even though he had released his grasp on the girl, Xiao Zhu's body remained stuck to his body.

The woman's face appeared like it was sewn to Ah Cheng's chest. She lifted her head. "Ah Cheng, don't you want me anymore?"

Blood spread on her face, and the sound of water dripping appeared beside his ears. Ah Cheng did not know what had happened. There was a feeling that the woman's face was slowly becoming unfamiliar as it morphed into the face of another woman.

He used all his might to push the woman's face away. Ah Cheng's breathing became more hurried, and his heart was racing at maximum speed. "Stay here and wait for me, I'll go get help. I'll definitely come back for you!"

The sound of water dripping did not disappear. If anything, it only grew louder. The shadow down the corridor was approaching, and the woman on the ground crawled toward him. Her hair wrapped around his arm, and she used her hands to wrap Ah Cheng's legs tightly. "You are not going to leave me here alone!"

"Who locked the door? Have the two of them found Wen Wen?" A woman who looked comparatively quieter stopped at the door to the classroom. "They won't answer my call, and we still have not found the girl. Don't tell me they have already escaped from the scene and run home?"

In the woman's tone, one could hear her dissatisfaction toward the other teachers. She used her key to open the door, only to find that the floor was wet with water.

"What happened here?" The woman stopped for a while at the door and turned on the flashlight function on her phone. "On the phone, Xiao Cheng said that Lee Xuezhong was injured. How did she get injured if they were just searching for the girl at school? Is there a third person here?"

She reached out to turn the lights on in the corridor, but the lights would not come on. They seemed to be broken.

She stole into the corridor, and the woman raised the phone. The light cut through the corridor. She saw that the door to the toilet was open, and a girl that was not tall was standing before the mirror. The girl stood on her tiptoes and reached into the sink like she was looking for something in the water.

After a while, something that was even more surprising occurred. The girl pushed her own head into the sink, submerging herself underwater.

"Wen Wen?" The woman felt the girl look familiar, and she silently went closer to the toilet. "What are you up to?"

Since there was water on the ground, as careful as she was, she was going to make noise. When the woman reached the door of the toilet, she saw a bloated monster standing behind the girl in the shattered mirror. She wore a bloodied shirt, and she used her hands to press on the back of the girl's head.

"She wants to drown the girl?" At this crucial moment, her kindness won over terror. The woman charged into the toilet to try to save the girl. Seeing the girl run into the toilet, the monster in the mirror was surprised.

At the spot where the woman was standing earlier, black hair expanded like seaweed. If the woman tried to turn and escape, she would run headfirst into the web that was knitted from black hair.

Different from the expectation of the monster in the mirror, the woman rushed to the sink without hesitation. At that moment, she seemed to have forgotten fear. The skirt fluttered in the wind, and it was stained by the water. The woman reached the girl's side, and without stopping to consider anything else, she pulled the girl's head out from the sink. "Are you alright?"

Water slid down the girl's face. Her face was white, and her purple lips were pulling into a smile. She had been pressed into the water and almost died from drowning, but the girl did not cry or make any noise. Instead, she revealed a strange smile, which made the woman feel very unsettled.

She did not notice that the monster in the mirror was slowly becoming clear, and the face in the mirror was showing the same strange smile as the one on the girl's face.

"Let's get out of here."

The woman carried the girl in her arms and retreated out of the bathroom. The faucet was not closed, and the water that came out was darkening like it was not water but blood that was pouring out from the pipe.

The sound of dripping water echoed from the small toilet. It sounded like something moving on the ground, creating a rustling sound. The woman did not dare turn her head around. She hugged the girl and ran down the corridor.

The flashlight on the phone swung up and down the corridor. She could not see where she was stepping clearly—she only knew that there was something else on the flat surface, and her feet felt something soft when she stepped on it. She used several seconds to run down the corridor, but when she reached the door, she realized that it was locked.

“Are there other people at the school?” The woman put the girl down. She turned to look back down the corridor. The water leaked out from the toilet, and there was something long that looked like seaweed floating in the water.

“Did you see anyone else coming here?” The woman shielded the girl with both hands. She was worried when she saw how pale the girl’s face was. “There should have been two teachers who were here. You should have seen them, right?”

The girl stood next to the woman quietly. Her pupils narrowed, and her purple lips slowly opened. She told the woman, “Mo... mother.”

“Mother? Are you calling me that?” The woman’s hands that held the girl subconsciously loosened. She noticed that everything in this space was different from the world that she knew. “You’ve got the wrong person, child, I’m not your mother.”

The girl did not correct herself and continued to call her mother. Then, she raised her hand to grab the woman’s arm.

“Wait a minute, you...” It was not until then that fear started to consume the woman. The woman stood up, and her body leaned toward the exit. However, before she could get close to the door, the girl who stood where she was suddenly exclaimed with vehemence, “Do not go there!”

Bang!

Before the girl could finish, the glass near the girl shattered and exploded! The stench of blood drifted into the room, and a large hammer that looked very scary was poking through the windowsill.

Bang!

With the woman and the girl watching, the hammerhead was yanked out from the window, and then it was swung again. This time, it shattered the window completely.

“This thing sure is not sturdy.” A backpack was tossed into the room from outside, then a young man jumped onto the windowsill. The moon was shining on his back, so they could not see his face. However, they could clearly see the impossibly large hammer that he was holding.

Without saying anything, without even an exchange of the eyes, the woman and the girl next to her took a step back involuntarily. The girl who had her pupils narrowed started to return to normal after she saw the young man. A low growl escaped from the toilet like the monster in the room could sense the thing that could threaten the girl's safety. She told the girl to run but not go too far away from her.

"Don't be scared, I'm here to save you." The young man also heard the growl from the end of the corridor. He jumped down from the windowsill and activated the recorder in his backpack. Then he touched the top of the girl's head kindly. "Wen Wen, I'm Chen Ge, the Haunted House boss that led you around the theme park yesterday."

The woman was totally stumped. She had no idea why the worker at a theme park would show up in such a manner at a place like this. This was too much for her to handle.

"Take the child out of this place." Chen Ge nudged the girl toward the woman and then stood in the middle of the corridor.

"We can go now?" The woman still could not believe it. She hugged the girl and planned to hop out from the window, but to her surprise, the girl suddenly grabbed Chen Ge's leg and refused to let go.

She looked much better and healthier, but her expression was worried. Her lips quivered, and she repeated the few words in her stutter, "Sis... big sister..."

"I know, I will not harm her. I just think she deserves the chance at a better live." Chen Ge peeled the girl's hands gently off his body. "Please take her away."

No matter what, Chen Ge was not going to let Wen Wen's sister go that day. Based on all the information that he had gotten, he had confirmed that the strongest ghost in the mission, Twin Water Ghost, was Wen Wen's sister.

If she was hiding inside the dam and he was unable to summon Zhang Ya, there was no chance that he would be able to enter the dam to deal with the girl because no one had any idea how many water ghosts were trapped inside the dam.

Before the mission even started, I've already killed the boss. This kind of mission experience is not so bad.

Gripping the hammer, Chen Ge stood between Wen Wen and the toilet. The monster in the toilet saw the girl being taken away, and she started to scream again. The black hair in the water rushed toward Chen Ge.

“You both use hair as a weapon, but your hair is too weak compared to the one inside my shadow.”

The hair in the water was stepped on before they even had the chance to get close to Chen Ge.

Xu Yin seemed to see something hiding inside the room at the end of the corridor. His head was tilted to the side, and he asked the half-open door of the room softly, “Is it painful?”

Without waiting for Chen Ge to say anything, the blood vessels tore open the black hair on the ground. Xu Yin, who was almost fully red other than his heart, lashed out like an arrow. The black hair crawled out from the water to wrap around Xu Yin’s body, but they were unable to stop him; at most, they slowed him down.

“Stop struggling, I will not make it too difficult for you on the account of your little sister.”

Chen Ge flipped through the comic and released Bai Qiulin. The man and ghost also charged forward. The monster in the toilet already had a hard time dealing with Xu Yin. When she saw Bai Qiulin’s heart, which was almost dyed red, she gave up the resistance immediately.

The black hair was pulled back into the toilet. Chen Ge chased after her, but when he reached the toilet, the faucet was closed on its own, and the water stopped flowing.

“Do you think I will let you go so easily?” Using both Yin Yang Vision and Ghost Ear at the same time, and the echoing sound appeared in Chen Ge’s ears. The ghost was still inside the pipe, but she was slithering down the pipe at an incredible speed.

Chapter 581 - Blood Red City

Chapter 581: Blood Red City

“Here!” His eyes focused on the pipe. Chen Ge raised the hammer and aimed it at a certain spot.

Bang!

...

The pipe cracked, and the water splashed onto his shirt. His eyes narrowed, and Chen Ge saw the strand of black hair that slipped through. “No matter what, you’re not running away tonight!”

He recalled Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin before running out of the school.

“Where is the main control panel for water and electricity?” Chen Ge jumped through the window. He grabbed the hammer and pressed on the woman’s shoulder with his other hand. The woman whom he had saved earlier was standing in the middle of the field while hugging the girl, preparing to leave. She did not expect Chen Ge to come out so soon. She was flustered, and she did not know what to say.

“I said, where is the main control panel for water and electricity?”

“There is none. We share the same circuit with the surrounding neighborhood, so the main control panel should be with them...” the woman answered incrementally, but Chen Ge grasped the gist of it. The school shared the same circuit with the neighboring residential area, so only by shutting off the power source at the residential area would he be able to trap the water ghost inside the pipe between the residential area and the school.

Of course, Chen Ge was not one hundred percent confident that it would work. The water ghost could have escaped into any of the resident’s house, and that was the thing that worried Chen Ge the most.

“Help me contact the manager of the residential area now and get him to temporarily turn off the control panel. Just say that the person who tried to kidnap the girl and injure your students and teachers is hiding inside the pipes.”

After giving that order, Chen Ge tossed the hammer inside his backpack. He tried to focus and removed all external noise, following the strange echoes inside the pipes.

The sound travelled further away from him. The water system in Jiujiang was complicated. If he was unable to limit the monster soon, then she was definitely going to escape.

“The culprit has gone inside the pipe? But how did he manage to do that?” The woman was stumped. Would anyone believe something like that? She was going to request further explanation from Chen Ge, but he had already charged out of the school.

The pipe was buried underground, so Chen Ge could only rely on his Ghost Ear to listen to the sound that the water ghost made as she travelled through the pipe. He tailed her closely, and at one point, he even thought about closing his eyes to stop all other external stimuli.

After two minutes, Chen Ge followed the sound to enter one of the residential areas that was behind the rehabilitative school. Once Chen Ge stepped into this area, he shivered. The temperature was much lower compared to outside. They were in the same area, but the difference in temperature was drastic.

Strange, why is there a feeling that is similar to the one I got when I stepped into the underground morgue?

Chen Ge’s body temperature was already lower than normal, and even he could feel the chill, which meant that this place was really suspicious.

The area was built somewhere that was not that vibrant in Eastern Jiujiang. Unlike other residential areas, this area did not have a fence to close in the buildings, but instead like a prison, it had a tall wall. The wall did not look pretty, and if anything, it gave off an oppressive feeling.

There were seven buildings inside the area. They were all around ten floors. They looked like they had been refurbished plenty of times, but probably due to the lack of everyday care, they looked like they were old and uncared for. This was something common in Eastern Jiujiang, and nothing really jumped out. However, once he stepped into the place, Chen Ge had a strange feeling in his heart.

It felt like someone was watching him from behind one of the windows. That feeling made cold sweat appear on his forehead.

“Wen Wen’s sister would not have chosen this place for no reason...” Chen Ge did not retreat. Unless this place was hiding a Red Specter, the other ghosts were not going to stop him.

The buildings close to the residential area had some lights on, but this place was completely dark. The more he walked into the area, the more oppressive the darkness became. Chen Ge focused on the sound in the pipe under his feet, and he followed the monster to reach the building that was at the deepest part of the residential area.

Even after completing so many Trial Missions, Chen Ge still hesitated before he entered this building. The building before him had signs of fire. Even though the walls had been repainted, once he got closer, he could smell that stench of burnt objects. Not only that, when Chen Ge looked closer, he realized that a huge fire had once ravaged this building. However, the building had not been abandoned. After some fixing and painting, it had been reopened to welcome new tenants.

“A building that was burned before?” Chen Ge was reminded of the other Trial Mission on the black phone—the three-star mission, Ghost Fire. “It shouldn’t be that coincidental. There are many buildings that have suffered from fires before.”

He took out the hammer from the backpack. The sound made by the water ghost weakened. She followed the pipe and entered the building before him.

“Why would she come into this building?” Chen Ge muttered. “The control panel shouldn’t have been closed already. She has the chance to escape to other pipes, so why did she decide to trap herself in this place?”

If this water ghost was really Wen Wen’s big sister, her life had been ended by her biological parent, so her resentment after death must have been incredibly deep. This kind of ghost would be highly vengeful.

“I’ve ruined her plan, so she must hate me a lot. The reason she lured me here could be that there is a stronger presence here, and she wants to borrow that thing’s hand to kill me.”

Chen Ge quickly understood the water ghost’s intention, but he was not afraid. “You want to borrow another person’s hand to kill me.

Tonight, I shall capture that pair of hands that you want to borrow as well.”

Entering the corridor, the walls of the corridor were decorated with painful scrawls. There were many messages, like return the life of my child.

Walking down the corridor, the pipe kept making noise like there was something crawling inside it. Chen Ge summoned Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin to chase after it, and the sound eventually stopped on the thirteenth floor.

“She wants to lure me here?” Chen Ge was sensitive to everything including the number three. He looked at the three rooms on the thirteenth floor, but he could not confirm which room Wen Wen’s sister had escaped into.

“Try the rooms one by one? But it’ll be so bad to disturb people.” Holding the hammer in one hand, Chen Ge’s eyes darted between the doors of the three rooms.

The darkened sky was filled with blood vessels, and a pair of vengeful eyes was staring at the corner of the street. In this blood red city, there was a man in a blood red doctor’s coat. He held the head of his lover in one hand, and whenever he took one step, blood would ooze out of his coat. That was the reddest red that had ever been!

“Good versus evil and sin versus punishment, there is a dichotomy to everything in this world.” The man held up the head in his palm. “Then what is the opposite of human?”

Shadows slipped up and down the red street, and the man seemed to have gotten used to everything there. He looked at the burnt building at the end of the street, and his face was maddened.

“Should I hide there? After consuming more things, I should have the answer.” Blood pooled silently underneath his feet, and the man’s expression became more and more twisted. “I’m so hungry...”

Chapter 582 - That Familiar Smell, I Want to Eat Him!

Chapter 582: That Familiar Smell, I Want to Eat Him!

“So hungry, I want to eat him, eat everyone. To make them become the thing in my stomach, to make them into my nutrients.” The man looked up at the sky, looking at the blood red eyes that were hiding behind the shadow. “You’re also looking at me, aren’t you? Stop hiding, I’ve already seen you. You are just around him, observing my body. You want to eat me. You all want to eat me, so why aren’t you doing that? What are you afraid of? Come, come and eat me! Come!”

His voice grew, and the man’s scream filled the street. He was not afraid of anything, like he did not possess the emotion ‘fear’. On the red street, the red blood dripped on the red ground.

In the alley that was growing with decaying flesh and moss, hiding in the underwater pipes that were glowing with red eyes, inside the shadow that could not be touched by the light, many strange objects with scary faces walked out. They could no longer be described by the simple terms ‘scary’ or ‘horrifying’. They were not gory either. They had gone beyond murder or massacre—they were more than that. They were not humans and could not have been humans. They should be the creature native to the world behind the door.

They were the residents of this nightmare. They consumed negative energy, and they survived on the negative emotions from living humans. They did not have a fixed shaped and different from man, their limbs could be twisted to impossible angles. If one really had to describe it, they were like bodies that were caught in a car accident and were dragged for miles by the tires. They could not be called humans, or rather, they had obtained the human shape because they had consumed too many negative emotions from living humans. They had gained a human consciousness and an appetite for the delicious object that was called human.

“You have been waiting me. You have prepared this for a long time.

You're going to serve me on the dining table tonight and make me your main dish. I saw the utensils that you have prepared, and I saw the greed in your eyes. I saw how you swallowed your saliva, and I saw how excited your Adam Apple was quivering," the man screamed loudly and madly. He did not evade or run and stood there to allow these things to surround him.

"Do you think I will be afraid?" The man hugged the head of his lover, and for a moment, his expression softened.

"I like this feeling; I love death, and I admire madness. A life gone wretched from screaming, yelling, and crying. When a person is alive, they are never brave enough to voice their true opinion, but here I can do anything that I want. There is no need to hide anymore. There is no need to hide anymore. I can play with the limbs of living humans. I can peel open my skull to look into my soul. I can gift my former self to myself.

"Many people think I have gone mad, but what is the difference between their madness and my madness exactly? I was once a doctor, but a doctor that can't even save himself, so what was the point of being a doctor?"

The head in his palm slowly lowered. The man's eyes were filled with blood. He looked at the monsters that approached him, and the smile on his face could not be hidden anymore. His lips peeled open, and the flesh on the edges of his lips parted to reveal an extremely scary smile.

"I am now a connoisseur of food. My greatest hobby is eating, eating everything within my sight and sending every delicious meal into my stomach." The laugh that would make one's hair stand on end escaped from the man's throat. He was surrounded by all the monsters, but he did not panic, like he was not the one being surrounded.

"It is my favorite time again; it is time for feeding. Yes, with my current situation, is it more appropriate to call it eating time or feeding time? Never mind, it is all the same. In the end, they will become a part of my body." The man's words were dripping with madness, but he had the right to say these things because his power had reached an incredibly scary level. When he rambled to himself, the blood kept leaking out of his blood red coat.

Many giant, thick chains that were made from many blood vessels slithered out from his back, like he was a monster with multiple tails.

The blood froze, and he looked suspiciously similar to the monster that was carved on the toilet of Chen Ge's Haunted House.

"There is an opposite to everything in the world, but humans are the only exception. I have been trying to figure out what the opposite of man is. Once, I thought the answer was ghosts, but after becoming a ghost myself, I realize, the opposite of man is not ghost but God! God that rules everything!"

The large chains swept the length of the street. Once the monsters were touched by the chains, they exploded on the spot. The chains were like snakes that had their own thoughts, drilling into the bodies of their victims and slipping into their hearts to suck out the nutrients. Screams echoed up and down the street. The monsters' bodies were deflating at an incredible speed.

The man laughed upon hearing the screams. He laughed and laughed, and his lips were torn open until they reached his ears. He laughed and laughed until he cried.

But the man did not seem to notice it. He continued to laugh like all the pain, all the regret, could be released from the echoes of his maddened laughter.

"Not enough, it'll never be enough! I'm still not satisfied! I'm so hungry, I need to consume everything. I need to eat everyone that wants to eat me!" The laugh continued to echo out from his throat as blood trailed down his lips.

No one knew what had happened to the man. No one knew what had led him to this state. However, there was one thing that was certain—he was still alive, and he was keeping himself alive with this highly maddening and highly disruptive method.

Blood dyed his teeth red, and he dragged the innumerable monsters behind him. The chains pierced through the monsters' bodies. He dragged the monsters and ran down the street. At the corner of the street, there was a burnt building.

The building was about ten stories high. Looking through the broken window, there was a door in one of the rooms that was not blood red. Half of it was red, and the other half was a normal brown. In this blood red city, other than black that represented decay, red that represented violence, and gray that represented despair, there were no other colors.

“Just behind that door, I can smell a very familiar smell. It’s so tasty! I need to eat him! I shall bite on his skull little by little, suck on his bone marrow, and chew on his bones. Yes, it shall be my best meal!”

The man dragged the monsters behind him and stopped at the burnt building. He looked up, and on the top floor of the building stood a man who was wrapped in red clothes. The man literally looked down at him and was also studying the man in the doctor’s coat.

“A red outfit, is he the owner of this building?”

Inside this blood red city, the buildings were the most dangerous because no one knew what was hiding inside them. Each building was an unknown. The man in the doctor's coat was very strong, but even as strong as he was, he did not dare to step into these buildings willy-nilly. The most extreme red was still a Red Specter, but the man knew that hiding in a corner of this city was a presence greater than a Red Specter.

He did not know how to describe it because he had not seen it before, but he could sense its presence. It was an overwhelming presence; every vein in his body felt like exploding, and his hair stood on end. At that moment, he even forgot that he had become a ghost. Before such a presence, human, ghost, Red Specter... there was no difference.

“Go back from whence you came, this is not a place for you.” The man who stood at the top floor of the building had his lips move. His voice echoed in the doctor's ears.

The chains behind him dragged out the monsters from the shadow. The doctor did not heed the man's warning. He watched the building quietly. He was not afraid of the Red Specter at the top of the building but the other unknown presence that might be inside the building. In the city, each building represented an enclosed world, a singular nightmare. Entering them was easy, but exiting them would be hard.

“I shouldn't enter the buildings, but I am so hungry, and I smelled that familiar taste. I can feel my soul shivering. I think I know the owner of this smell. Perhaps after consuming him, I can remember why I ended up in this state.” The maddened speech slowed down. The doctor opened his red eyes to look at the man.

Without any warning, more chains slithered out from his back. The chains that seemed to be made from innumerable blood vessels charged at the building. The doctor climbed up the stairs, and his target was clear. He wanted to enter the thirteenth floor and then consume the man that was on the other side of the door.

This burnt building was the man with the red shirt's territory. The strange door on the thirteenth floor should be related to him, so the chance was high that he was the door-pusher. The door-pusher could release twice the amount of power in the world that he had constructed, so when he saw the doctor charge into the building, he did not retreat.

The world behind the door was constructed via the door-pusher's memory. Surrendering the nightmare meant betraying one's past, handing over the memory to a stranger. Unless it was absolutely necessary, no door-pusher would abandon their own world and escape.

The doctor rushed toward the door on the thirteenth floor, and naturally, the man intended to stand in his way. He stood at the edge of the building and opened his arms. He leaped forward, and his body fell toward the doctor like a bullet.

As he fell, the edge of his shirt turned extremely sharp and frayed, which looked somewhat like knives but more like feathers. Underneath the red shirt, one could see scary scars. The man's body had been seriously burned. Just from those scars, one could imagine how painful his death had been. The resentment on the man was strong. His eyes were sharp, filled with destruction.

He was similar to the doctor at the bottom of the building. They seemed to have slowly acclimatized to this blood red city after being there for so long. They had lost themselves and become out of control and maddened.

The man careened from above and aimed at the doctor. The edges of his lips tore open, but the doctor seemed to have expected this already. He saw the approaching man, and he not only did not panic, he even revealed a scary smile to the man.

"Are you so desperate to be my food? Are you so keen to be a part of my body? Okay, I shall fulfil your wish." The doctor pulled open his coat to reveal the clot of red chains underneath. The scary man had been hiding his real ability.

Around half of his energy had been used to resist himself—this was a completely insane person. Blood oozed out of his body, and it formed snakes that seemed like they could never be satisfied. The snakes wrapped around the doctor's body like they wanted to consume him as well.

As the man fell from above, the doctor released a maddened laugh. He removed the limitation that had been holding him back. Endless red chains swamped out of his back. There were so many of them that they could not be counted. Looking from afar, it seemed like a giant red man-eating tree had grown up by the side of the building.

Its roots were moving rapidly like they were trying to consume the entire building. The fight that was anticipated did not happen. The man was soon entangled by the many chains, and then he was dragged to the doctor's back.

The two men stood with their backs to each other, and the doctor could clearly hear the man's cries of desperation and despair. Torn apart by the red chains, the man's body was slowly digested. Like nutrients, he was absorbed into the doctor's body. Throughout the process, the man kept resisting, but he was no match for the thick curls of red chains.

When the man's voice slowly disappeared, the doctor bit on his finger. With the blood, he drew a slash across his arm.

"That's the fourth one. Soon... I can already feel something coming out from my body! That should be the new me, but before welcoming this new life, I still wish to find and understand my past." The doctor touched the head in his embrace.

"Why do tears come whenever I look at her? What is this emotion? How did she die? Who killed me? And who took her body away and left me with just her head? What should I do? Should I seek revenge or help her welcome a new life with me?"

The doctor stopped at the thirteenth floor, and his gaze fell on that special door. His lips slowly returned to normal. He pulled back all the chains and stood by the door.

"This familiar smell, the person I'm looking for is just on the other side." The man waved his arm, and the chains struck the door. He wanted to open the door, but he seemed to have angered the building. A horrible stench leaked out from every corner, and at the same time, the blood on the door was spreading. In a few seconds, this door would turn completely red.

...

Standing on the thirteenth floor of the building, Chen Ge held the hammer and looked at the three doors.

“The noise disappeared on this floor, so the water ghost should be hiding in one of these rooms. Should I break down all the doors to take a look?”

Before he decided what to do, the door on the leftmost side suddenly became colored with red veins. The normal-looking door slowly turned red.

Chapter 584: I'll Be Waiting for You!

“A door?” Chen Ge, who had merely trailed the water ghost, did not expect to run into a door inside the building. Before the red door and the blood vessels that were expanding, everything felt so familiar to Chen Ge.

“It’s not yet midnight. Even if this is a door that has been pushed open before, it shouldn’t have appeared now. Is this a trap? Is it something set up by the culprit at Eastern Jiujiang?”

Chen Ge was no longer the innocent toy designer. Ever since he obtained the black phone, he had become more sensitive to these problems.

With a lack of insurance, Chen Ge did not dare get too close to the door. Wen Wen’s sister was just a monster from a two-star scenario—she was incomparable to the culprit at Eastern Jiujiang. Chen Ge summoned Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin, which gave him a sense of security.

Just as he hesitated over what to do, the door started to shake. The blood vessels on the door bulged forward like something was trying to crawl out from it. “There’s something behind the door? It wants to force its way out?”

This was the first time that Chen Ge had come across something like this; he also did not know what to do. The bulge on the door grew bigger, and the blood vessels started to move. It curled on the wooden board to form lines of thin chains. If one looked closer, one could see human faces with pained expressions on the chains. Each of the blood vessels represented someone’s extremely despairing memory.

“How come these look so familiar?” Chen Ge was reminded of his final battle with Doctor Gao at the underground morgue. The blood vessels wielded by the chairperson of the society had been similar to the ones before him at that moment. They were not merely red blood—they were carved with human faces. If he leaned closer, he could even hear the faces screaming for mercy.

It was not yet midnight. There was a force in reality that suppressed the blood vessels on the door. It was not easy to break through the door at the time like that. The blood vessels kept snapping, but the monster behind the door appeared like it had gone mad. It would stop at nothing to get out. As the blood vessels disappeared, more came out to take their place. They entwined together to form a chain that slithered down the other side of the corridor like they were trying to force the door open from the outside.

“The monster inside the door could have waited until midnight to come out. Did it sense something that made it so desperate?” A burnt smell lingered in the air, but there was nothing special about it. “This is different from my previous experience. After I entered the building, I stopped at the door. Is this because the monster can sense my presence, or is it due to my title of Specter’s Favored?”

Chen Ge narrowed his eyes. He felt like this was not the culprit’s doing. The water ghost could not have known that he would appear that night. This was completely random.

“A burnt building, blood door, this building fits the introduction of the mission on the black phone, Ghost Fire, perfectly. Also, from what Doctor Chen said, my parents came here before they disappeared. Could it be that they have left too deep a scar on the monsters behind the door, and now that they sensed the similarity in my blood and legacy, they have gone berserk? But that can’t explain the similarity of the blood vessels on the door and the ones used by the ghost stories society...”

Many questions appeared in Chen Ge’s mind. His grip on the hammer tightened. He was courageous enough to slowly approach the door. When he got close, the monster behind the door completely lost it. Multiple chains pierced through the blood door, and they forced an opening in the closed blood door.

” Argh! ”

Chen Ge heard a desperate roar, and the thick stench of blood almost caused his sense of smell to go haywire. He forced his eyes open and looked through the opening. His eyes narrowed, and his heart skipped a beat. “Is that him?”

A face was squeezed against the door. Chen Ge could see the face clearly, but that pair of eyes that were different from normal gave Chen Ge a very familiar feeling. Fingers poked through the opening—the man could also see Chen Ge. The person before him gave him a deep sense of excitement and craving. He released a beast-like growl, like he wanted to tear Chen Ge into pieces and swallow him.

Ten fingers reached through the door. The opening in the door grew bigger, and the resistance from reality also grew stronger. Once the blood vessels appeared on the door, they would snap and disappear, but the monster inside the door did not care. All he could see now was Chen Ge.

Forcing his way through, the monster inside the door was under great pressure, but he did not care. All he wanted was to consume Chen Ge.

His hands pushed through the door. His fingers were tapered and beautiful. If just focusing on this pair of hands, one might think that he was a pianist, but in reality, every single finger was covered in blood. Who knew how much flesh and blood that pair of hands had already torn apart?

He's at least a Top Red Specter, like Zhang Ya! Chen Ge quickly determined the opponent's power level, and he made the best decision to retreat while he still could. However, as he prepared to turn, he felt a piercing chill around his waist. Then his legs turned numb like his body was locked inside a fridge. He slowly lost control of his limbs.

What is happening? Xu Yin is just next to me, who can attack me from this distance?

He turned his head around and saw a strand of black hair landing on his shoulder. Someone was standing behind him, leaning on his back.

Different from the fiery red inside the door, the corridor felt like it was frozen. It was so cold that Chen Ge's heart felt like it was encased in ice. The black hair silently reached out from Chen Ge's shadow. It evaded Chen Ge and pulled out all the chains that surrounded the blood door.

Losing the chains, the monster inside the door was unable to fight against the invisible power in real life anymore. The blood vessels on the door disappeared at a drastic speed, but he did not give up. What he desired was just inches away, so he used all of his power to push his fingers outward.

The black hair seemed to be waiting for this chance. After clearing away the chains, it started to gather power. When the monster behind the door was unable to keep the sliver of the door open, all the black hair rushed at the door.

The door slammed shut instantly, cutting off four fingers from the monster's hand. When they fell to the ground, they morphed into globules of blood that were so red, they were practically glowing.

Endless growls issued from behind the door. Black hair spread out from Chen Ge and swept all the blood globules away.

The door slowly lost its color, and the sound behind the door became unclear. At this time, Chen Ge did something that no one expected. He rushed to the door and punched heavily on it. Then, he yelled loudly, "I will be waiting for you in Eastern Jiujiang, Li Wan City!"

When the monster heard his voice, he seemed to be reminded of something and replied by saying someone's name. Alas, the connection between the worlds was so weak that Chen Ge was unable to hear him clearly.

That gaze is too similar to Doctor Gao's, but the monster behind the door is so different from my impression of Doctor Gao.

The temperature in the corridor returned to normal like everything earlier had just been his imagination.

Chapter 585 - Stop! Do Not Move!

Chapter 585: Stop! Do Not Move!

The world behind the door is weaved based on the memory of the door-pusher. In a way, it could be understood as a nightmare that the door-pusher cannot escape from. In the underground morgue, Doctor Gao suffered all the despair and negative emotions in the world alone, causing the underground morgue to implode upon itself in the end.

After the morgue collapsed, I caught a glimpse of the outside world, a blood red city. If this singular building was the nightmare of a single despairing soul, then that blood red city could be the amalgamation of many nightmares.

Accumulation caused transformation. After the sedimentation and festering of endless nightmares, what kind of monsters would be birthed from that sea of negative emotions?

Chen Ge stood in the corridor, and he had never been so conscious before.

The main opponents in one-star missions are living humans; two-star missions have half Red Specters like the middle-aged woman who kidnapped children on the hearse or Wen Wen's big sister; three-star missions are like a threshold because each three-star mission will contain one or more Red Specters, but more than that, every venue for a three-star mission will come with a door! Whether it is the Third Sick Hall, Coffin Village or the underground morgue, the 'existence' of the door is the hallmark of a three-star mission.

If that is how things are arranged, then what will a four-star mission be like? More than one door at a single mission location? Or will the world behind the door no longer be closed in but a connection of multiple buildings and thus multiple nightmares?

Chen Ge personally thought that the chance of the second possibility was larger.

The Trial Mission at Li Wan City was marked as 3.5 stars. If the world behind the door is similar to the game world inside Xiao Bu's game, then in a way, it could be a validation of my speculation. After the door goes out of control, the world behind it will no longer be limited within a singular building but will continue to spread. If one is not careful about it, perhaps it will eventually turn into a four-star scenario.

The mastermind in Eastern Jiujiang used to the hearse to continually feed negative emotions into Li Wan City and used the despairing passengers to spread the despair like seeds. Chen Ge still remembered the conversations that he had with the passengers on the bus. There was a ghost building in Li Wan City. To fulfil a wish, one had to sacrifice or bear something of equal value.

The mastermind seemed to be using these people's determination to turn them into the carriers of fear and misfortune to use them to create more despair to lure in more passengers. The core purpose behind his action was probably to turn Li Wan City into a four-star scenario.

"To use these poor souls as chess pieces, this monster in Eastern Jiujiang is worse than the ghost stories society," Chen Ge muttered calmly.

Eastern Jiujiang already has a four-star scenario—Ghost Fetus—could the culprit have originated from this scenario?

The more Chen Ge thought about it, the more convinced he became. After all, the mastermind had only appeared in the form of a shadow so far, but the scariest thing was that it was able to exchange blows with Zhang Ya in just a shadow form.

A three-star scenario wouldn't contain this kind of monster. Zhang Ya was already the most threatening presence a three-star scenario could breed. In that case, that monster had to be related to a four-star scenario. Its physical form should be trapped somewhere, or its physical form is immobile, and this is the only way it can move.

Standing in the corridor, Chen Ge was lost in thought until the door of the family on the rightmost side suddenly opened, and a fat middle-aged man stood at the door holding his phone.

"Why are you screaming so late at night?"

"Hmm?"

After the brief exchange, their eyes met. Through the open door, Chen Ge saw that the pipe in the house was not screwed shut, and strands of black hair were climbing up the water into the pipe. The man's gaze instead fell on Chen Ge's hand, attracted by the scary hammer that Chen Ge was holding. It was hard to imagine that one could come across such bloody and primal thing in modern society.

The blood grooves, the skeleton-like handle, every detail of this hammer seemed to announce its difference from the tool hammer that was used by construction workers.

"You..."

"Move!" Chen Ge ordered the man—not harming the innocent was part of his creed. He dragged the hammer as he charged into the room and swung it at the pipe!

Bang!

A loud crash echoed from inside the room. The pipe burst, and the water spurted several meters, falling on the man's face. He was stunned speechless. His lips were wide open, and he was unable to close them for a long time.

"Xu Yin!" After dealing with the water ghost once, this time, Chen Ge had learned his lesson. He predicted the water ghost's movement and bent the pipe that she was going to escape from. He kicked the door of the bathroom open, and Chen Ge summoned both Bai Qiulin and Xu Yin, having them block both ends of the pipe.

"Let's see where you're going to run this time?"

Wet, raven-black hair oozed out of the pipe and covered the entire bathroom. This was the water ghost's final struggle. The mirror cracked, and pipes burst—the sound of intense fighting came out from inside the bathroom.

"What... what is he doing inside?" The man saw the water seep out from underneath the door, and after a long time, he finally recovered and called the police on his phone. "Hello, is this the police? A madman just rushed into my home. You have to come help me!

"Is he dangerous? Of course, he is! He's extremely dangerous! He carries a long ass hammer with him!

"I don't know him! He just appeared at my door, rushed in, and started ruining my water pipes! I swear, I didn't say anything. I just shared a look with him!

"Okay, I understand! I will stop provoking him and will stay as far as I can, but you have to hurry!"

...

Half an hour later, Chen Ge finally gained control over the water ghost. The limited space made it difficult for him to fight. Both Bai Qiulin and Chen Ge blocked the water pipe and underground sewer—the main fighting force was still Xu Yin.

"She's so hard to deal with even on the surface. If the fight really happened at the dam, it might have been me who lost."

After fighting with the water ghost, Chen Ge noticed something. The girl's attack style would become extremely strange when she was near water, and her fighting power would almost triple.

"Thankfully, we cornered her on the ground, or else this mission would have been as difficult as a normal three-star mission." Chen Ge placed the twisting black hair in Xu Yin's grasp into a shampoo bottle. Behind the curtain of black hair hid a girl's faded shadow. She was wearing a blood-stained dress, and she looked just like Wen Wen, probably slightly older than Wen Wen.

"She is just a child and needs adult supervision." Chen Ge placed both the bottle and the recorder together inside the bag.

"Before the two-star mission has even started, I've already captured the boss. After the water ghost assimilates into the family at the Haunted House, I should go back to visit the dam—perhaps I can recruit her underlings then."

Satisfied, Chen Ge shoved the hammer into his backpack and opened the door.

"Stop right there! Do not move!" A scream came from outside the door, and it startled Chen Ge. However, his expression soon turned curious because the voice was very familiar. With his hands in the air, Chen Ge slowly walked out from the bathroom.

When they saw his face, both of the officers were equally shocked.

"Officer Xiao Qing, I told you at the fishing aficionado's home that we would meet again soon.” Chen Ge smiled embarrassedly. “I didn’t lie, did I?”

Chapter 586 - Salvage

Chapter 586: Salvage

“That was two days ago, wasn’t it, or was it yesterday?” Xiao Qing looked at the innocent-looking Chen Ge, who had his hands over his head, and he felt a headache coming. He did not know how to report this to the captain.

“Was that yesterday? It doesn’t matter, as you saw, I was investigating the culprit of the children kidnapping case.”

“That’s why you trespassed into a civilian’s home and broke all of the water pipes with your hammer? Mind telling me what the relationship between the two is?” Xiao Qing and the other officer relaxed after they saw Chen Ge. They knew that Chen Ge was not crazy. His way of thinking was certainly different from a normal person, but he was definitely on the side of justice.

“That will be very hard to explain. If Captain Yan is here, he should be able to understand it.” Chen Ge namedropped Captain Yan to use as a shield, and he quickly changed his tone to become weak and apologetic. “But destroying someone’s property is definitely bad. I will compensate everything at its original price.”

He flashed an apologetic smile at the middle-aged man, and that caused the latter to shiver. The man before him now and the man earlier were like two completely different people. The people present had no idea what Chen Ge was thinking.

Trading several hundred RMB for a water ghost? This is such a good deal!

After negotiating with the man, Chen Ge was led out of the building by the two officers.

“You said earlier that you were investigating the child kidnapping case. What’s that about?” Xiao Qing had made a big break in the previous case, but unfortunately, his captain had refused to allow him to follow the crime team and always set him up with the normal cases.

The situation had really been grinding his gears.

“That’s right. There is a special ed. school near this area that had a missing child. After my investigation, I realized that there were other people at the school other than the students and teachers. I followed the trail, but it went cold at this building.” Chen Ge naturally would not tell the police about the water ghost. He came up with a believable story and pushed it onto the officers.

“Was the child found?”

“Yes, but the child suffers from a hereditary illness that causes her to be mentally different. Combined with the shock, you won’t get any answers even if you question her.” Chen Ge carried his backpack and walked between the two officers. “You seem to be very interested in this case.”

“Compared to the case, I’m more interested in you.” Xiao Qing asked for Chen Ge’s number. For some reason, he felt like, if he followed Chen Ge, there would be big cases to uncover.

After returning to the school, Chen Ge arrived to see the two teachers being carried away by the ambulance. They had been found inside the toilet cubicle. Their clothes were dripping wet, and their faces were frozen in fear like they had just lived their worst nightmare. The strangest thing was that the doctor discovered a large amount of water in their throats and lungs. No one knew what had happened to them after they fainted.

Wen Wen’s aunt was there as well, and the headmistress and the teacher were apologizing to her. A bad guy had sneaked into the school—the administration had to bear some responsibility.

“The female teacher and the girl’s aunt can prove that I’m a good person.” Chen Ge very naturally stood next to them and placed himself in the ranks of the victim. After asking around, the bespectacled teacher vouched for Chen Ge. She said that there were indeed other people at the school, and it was Chen Ge who broke the window to save her and Wen Wen. However, to everyone’s surprise, when the police wanted to take Wen Wen’s aunt’s statement, the woman was extremely uncooperative. She kept scratching her arm and the back of her hand like the minute pain was necessary to help her cope with fear, to help her calm down.

“What are you afraid of? The revenge from the culprit? We’re the police, and I can guarantee that we will eventually catch the culprit.”

Xiao Qing had no idea what was happening. After he consoled the aunt, he walked toward Wen Wen.

The girl was not crying or making any trouble. She was silent, standing alone in the shadow of the wall. No matter who went to hug her, she would attack that person like an animal.

“Officers, thank you, but we don’t want to pursue this case anymore.” After a long time, Wen Wen’s aunt voluntarily gave up on the investigation. Her face was pale as she kept turning around to look into the school like there was a man-eating demon hiding in the shadows of the corridor.

“You are going to let the culprit that harmed the child escape just like that?” Xiao Qing could not understand the aunt’s logic. “If we don’t capture the criminal, he might harm other children in the future. This is not only about you anymore—please help us by cooperating with the investigation.”

“There’s no need. There’s really no need! Wen Wen, let’s go.” The aunt reached to grab the girl’s hand, but to everyone’s surprise, the girl reacted like a spooked feral cat and waved her hands wildly, scratching her aunt’s hands until they bled.

She refused to let anyone near her as she curled up in the shadows. Her cute face turned savage as her eyes darted about, and her chest rose unevenly. She was desperately in need of security.

“Wen Wen? I’m your auntie!” The woman wanted to try again but was stopped by the police.

“Is the child acting up? Do you have her medicine?” Xiao Qing felt that the case was not as simple as it seemed.

“The medicine is at home. I’ll take her home now!” Wen Wen’s aunt wanted to grab the girl by force, but naturally, the police would not allow that before getting to the bottom of the truth. Seeing as everyone was about to snap, Chen Ge removed his backpack. He walked around Xiao Qing and Wen Wen’s aunt as he took out a shampoo bottle.

“What are you doing?” This strange action attracted the attention of the teacher and the other officer.

Chen Ge ignored them and squatted down one meter away from the girl. He told the girl, “Your big sister is here. No one hurt her, and I know that she has her reasons for doing those things. She is as kind-hearted as you, and the two of you are the real victims here.”

Holding the bottle, Chen Ge slowly approached the girl. “You share the same body, so you should have some kind of special bond with her. Try to summon her, you should be able to get her to respond.”

The girl raised her hand in semi-disbelief and touched one end of the bottle. Chen Ge did not know whether the girl could sense her sister’s presence or not, but at least she had somewhat calmed down.

“No matter what happens, I will help you and stand by your side.” Chen Ge slowly picked the girl up from the ground. “Everything is okay now...”

Wen Wen slowly returned to normal. Her small hands grabbed the end of the bottle, and she buried her face into Chen Ge’s chest like she was afraid of seeing other people. When Chen Ge picked up Wen Wen, the black phone in his pocket vibrated.

Chen Ge took it out and clicked open the message.

“Different choices lead to different result. The special visitor has left, and you have made your choice. Congratulations for lowering the hostility of the Twin Water Ghost.

“Two-star trial mission Twin Water Ghost activated!

Salvage her dead body?

When Chen Ge saw the mission details on the black phone, his eyelids jumped slightly. This Trial Mission was different from what he thought.

...

Isn't it a bit difficult for the mission to request me to go to the dam alone to salvage the sister's body?

To salvage a dead body from a body of water would require a professional team, but Chen Ge only had one night to do it. Without the help of other people, without salvaging tools or a boat, he did not even know what the 'person' that he was supposed to salvage look like.

Bury seed happened before Wen Wen was born, so how old could Wen Wen's big sister have been at the time? Why was her body later abandoned in the Eastern Jiujiang Dam?

Many questions floated up in his mind, and only Wen Wen's aunt would be able to provide the answers.

Wen Wen's father suffered from the same hereditary illness, but it was clear that he loved his daughter a lot. Unfortunately, due to his mental impediment, he might not have been able to remember things that happened so long ago. Thus, Wen Wen's aunt was the only person who had lived through the experience and could be communicated with normally.

The woman appears to constantly avoid the event that transpired several years ago. Direct questioning will get me nowhere. I have to come up with another solution.

The Twin Water Ghost mission had been activated, and based on Chen Ge's understanding of the black phone, if he failed the mission, the scenario would be locked away forever, and Chen Ge did not want to miss out on this unique underwater scary scenario.

Silently putting the phone away, Chen Ge turned around while holding the girl, and he suddenly realized that everyone's eyes were on him. "Why are you all looking at me?"

Xiao Qing coughed and reminded him out of kindness, "The bone in your backpack is poking out."

Chen Ge quickly turned around and realized that the handle of Doctor Skull-cracker's hammer was indeed poking through the opening. This hammer that had been given by the black phone had not been so big at the beginning. As it followed Chen Ge and as the number of ghost and Specter that it came into contact with grew, it had probably absorbed 'nutrients' from them and grown scarier, longer, and heavier.

"Don't worry, this is just a prop from my Haunted House. I often go out alone at night, and I carry this to ward off the bad guys." Chen Ge provided a clumsy excuse.

"I really don't understand how a person like you is so liked by children." Xiao Qing did not go and inspect Chen Ge's backpack. He looked at Chen Ge's bright and kind expression; the innocence in his eyes, the angel-like Wen Wen in his arms, and rest of the setting formed a great contrast to the hammer peeking out of the man's bag.

"Actually, I am quite good with children. Many of them like to be around me." Chen Ge was reminded of Fan Yu, Xiao Bu, and Men Nan—all these children shared a good relationship with him.

"If you say so..." Xiao Qing and the other officer opened the police car's door. "The culprit sneaked into the school to kidnap the student, which is quite serious. I will need a few of you to come with us."

...

At 10:10 pm, Chen Ge hugged the girl as they walked out from the police station. Wen Wen grabbed the shampoo bottle. She still only let Chen Ge hug her and stuck close to him. Even Wen Wen's aunt did not expect this. She followed Chen Ge closely, watching the two with complicated emotions. The three walked in a row, and those not in the know would think that they were a family.

"When the police were doing the interrogation earlier, I tried my best to help cover for you." After they wandered to a more deserted corner,

Chen Ge suddenly stopped. "Actually, it was Wen Wen's elder sister who injured the teachers at her school. There was no child kidnapper, right?"

"I don't know what you're talking about."

"I've met Wen Wen's sister. Her body is still submerged at the bottom of Eastern Jiujiang Dam. She died a horrible death and is coming back to seek..."

"Stop talking!" Wen Wen's aunt suddenly lost control and screamed shrilly, causing the passersby around them to jump.

"Avoiding is not going to solve the problem. Perhaps she hasn't harmed you now, but that doesn't mean that you're safe." He turned to look at the aunt. "What actually happened to the child? Perhaps I can help you."

Standing by the bridge, the woman looked at the gently flowing river. After a long time, she said, "Do you know about Bury Seed? It was a cruel method to use a child's life in exchange for the healthy growth of another. I don't know about the exact details; I only know that when Wen Wen was about to come into this world, my parents led Wen Wen's sister away. They left at midnight and only returned at dawn."

"Wen Wen's sister didn't come back with them?"

The woman shook her head. "My parents only came back with a small bowl of dirty water. They woke Wen Wen's mother up and forced her to drink it."

"A bowl of dirty water?"

"Yes, very murky. There was even blood on the edge of the bowl."

"Wen Wen's mother didn't resist? She allowed them to do that to her?" Chen Ge suddenly realized that there were few things about Wen Wen's mother at her home.

"Her mother was from the same village as I was. She was unfortunate enough to get into a car accident and lost a leg. My parents took her in with the condition that she helped give birth to a healthy child for my big brother." The woman paused. "It was my parent's decision to use Wen Wen's sister as the seed; they didn't tell anyone. Wen Wen's mother didn't even realize the bowl that she drank from was stained with her own daughter's blood."

"So, what happened later?" Chen Ge felt like halting the story already. He did not know how to evaluate this family.

"Since Wen Wen's sister didn't come home, my parents made up an excuse and said that the child had been sent to their old home to be taken care of. Several days later, Wen Wen came into this world. During the previous hospital visits, the doctor had told us that the child was a boy, so until the minute of birth, everyone was so happy."

A sad smile appeared on the woman's face. "But soon, karma came. The child came out a girl and had a slight deformation on her head like there was another face growing on the back of her head. After the doctor's examination, it was confirmed that the child suffered from the same hereditary disease. My parents couldn't suffer the trauma and left home one rainy night."

"They didn't tell Wen Wen's mother about her first daughter?"

"My father's mind was not normal, and he had a temper despite his physical abnormality. My mother suffered from the same fate. They had been taking the ridicule and mockery from the society their whole lives, and they couldn't resist it anymore. Their life was difficult, and they did not want their next generation to go through the same thing.

"However, the result showed that they had been lied to. The so-called bury seed failed. I don't where they went after that night. In any case, I never saw them again."

Initially, the woman looked pained, but as she talked, the lines on her face smoothed out like she had become desensitized to it. "My parents and Wen Wen's big sister disappeared, her husband is an idiot, and now so is her second daughter. Wen Wen's mother couldn't withstand the pressure, so she stole all of the money that the family had and left. It was my twentieth birthday that day."

Chen Ge wanted to console her, but he did not know what to say.

"Now, I'm almost thirty already. I don't need pity or help from others. I just wish for Wen Wen to grow up healthily and safely—that's all I wish for." The woman walked to Chen Ge and extended her hands toward Wen Wen. "Give her to me. It's time for us to go home."

“I can give you the child, but you have to be clear about this—if this issue is not fully resolved, this thing will happen again in the future, and it might not be me who is holding the child next time.” Chen Ge put Wen Wen down. The child was still holding the shampoo bottle. She liked to stick close to her sister; without her sister, she felt so unsafe.

“There is no need for you to worry. I will look after Wen Wen.” The woman looked at Wen Wen—the girl had already calmed down. She did not resist her aunt, but she did not leave with her either.

“Follow your aunt home. I will help fulfill her wish.” Chen Ge pointed at the bottle. “Trust me.”

After a long time, Wen Wen finally let go of the bottle and silently went to grab her aunt’s hand. Seeing Wen Wen return to normal, the woman sighed in relief.

“You should go home now. Leave the rest to me.” Chen Ge placed the water bottle inside his backpack as he stared at the dark surface of the lake.

Sensing the incongruity in his tone, the woman pulled Wen Wen behind her. “What do you plan to do? We didn’t ask for your help, and don’t you be dumb enough to start any investigation.”

Based on that sentence, Chen Ge felt like Wen Wen’s aunt still had something that she was hiding from him due to certain reasons.

“You are both victims. The culprits are those who turned a sad event into a tragedy. If we do not stop them, more families will encounter the same pain as you did. Despair is contagious, and we must stop them before it is too late.” Chen Ge held the railing of the bridge with both of his hands. He had no idea whether he had said those things to pull some useful information from the woman to help her complete the Trial Mission or really intended to use his negligible amount of energy to help change this imperfect world.

“Then, be careful. I still need to work tomorrow. I’m not going to stay to act crazy with you.” The woman nudged Wen Wen along, and after taking a few steps, she suddenly stopped and stood where she was for a few seconds. Then she turned to tell Chen Ge, “The Bury Seed needs three things—the seed, the fetus, and the womb. To transfer a child’s life into another child’s body, that is Bury seed. But if you transfer many lives into one singular body and use the whole city as the womb, then what kind of monster will be birthed once the seed germinates and grows?”

Chen Ge was thinking about something else, and the sudden exposition from the woman made Chen Ge think that he had misheard her. “The night that my parents left, I followed them sneakily to Li Wan City and saw something.”

The woman seemed to be talking to herself, and when she was done, she led Wen Wen away. Chen Ge stood by the bridge and watched the woman and the girl disappear into the distance.

“To use the whole city as the womb?” Chen Ge gripped the railing tightly. He realized that things were far more serious than he had thought. “Innumerable children’s lives and despairing living humans as seeds, the city as the womb, then the fetus can only be the ghost fetus.

Li Wan City’s difficulty is 3.5 stars, and ghost fetus is four stars. Could there be a relationship between the two?

Chen Ge’s mind was flooded with many questions.

Wen Wen’s family might just be the first stage of the trial to confirm the effect of Bury Seed and the real test will begin at Li Wan City. Xiao Bu is most likely the ‘fetus’ that was handpicked by the culprit, but why did it insist on creating the ghost fetus? Could it be that it also wants to gain a new life like the well ghost in Coffin Village?

Li Wan City’s door had gone out of control, and Chen Ge had no idea how powerful Xiao Bu was. However, she had to be a very special Red Specter to have been chosen by the culprit hiding at Eastern Jiujiang.

The upper limit of a three-star scenario is a Top Red Specter, but it is hard to say for a 3.5-star scenario.

Thinking back to the woman's parting sentence, Chen Ge dissected it closely, and he noticed some details that he had missed earlier.

If the culprit plans to turn the whole city into the womb and use living humans as seeds, then they must need some kind of medium to connect with everyone. The first time that I ran into the shadow was at Eastern Jiujiang Fresh Water Plant, and that place happens to be relatively close to Eastern Jiujiang Dam. The Water Plant is used to cleanse the water from the dam, and both of these locations are stops for the bus on Route 104. Could the culprit have been using the drinking water as its medium? The man from the fishing society told me that he saw many water ghosts at the dam. That shouldn't happen under normal circumstances. Could the dam be a part of the culprit's plan?

Realizing the severity of the situation, Chen Ge hailed a cab and rushed to Eastern Jiujiang Dam. The dark surface of the dam occasionally rippled. When Chen Ge arrived, it was almost 11 pm.

"Is someone there?" He knocked lightly on the manager's door. Ten seconds later, the light inside came on.

"Who is it?" With an alarmed voice, the man inside got out of bed but did not open the door.

"Brother Zhang, we met each other earlier. There was someone fishing for the King Fish, yes? It was me who returned the man's fishing rod."

"I think I remember you, why did you come back so late at night?" Probably thinking that Chen Ge sounded familiar, his alertness went down.

"I want to borrow a boat." Just as Chen Ge finished, the door opened.

The manager was wearing a large coat, and he looked shocked. "Borrow a boat?"

"Yes, I have something to confirm and need to salvage something from the water." Chen Ge's eyes were firm and his tone unshakeable.

"I can't help it if you're on your personal mission, but I can't allow you to risk your life like that. There is a King Fish in the dam, and you want to conduct a salvage around midnight. What if there's an accident?" Zhang Dabo shook his head.

"Zhang Brother, when I went to return the rod, I found a dead body buried at the fisher's home. The police will probably come to find you soon.”

“They already came this morning.” Zhang Dabo looked at Chen Ge with a bitter smile. “It gave me quite the shock. After all, I’d spent so long in the company of a murderer.”

“Actually, I’ve been working with the police. You can go online and search for Western Jiujiang’s Haunted House boss. I’ve helped the police solve many big cases. I’m borrowing your boat this time to investigate some things.” Chen Ge took out his phone and opened his phone record. In his small contact list, the names with inspector, officer, and captain took up half of it.

After some more persuading, Zhang Dabo finally agreed. “I can borrow you the boat, but I don’t think I’ll be coming with you.”

“By the way, what is it that you’re trying to salvage?” Zhang Dabo was curious.

“A dead body, a little girl’s body to be precise.”

Zhang Dabo definitely did not anticipate that answer. He rubbed his hands and didn’t know what to say.

Opening the warehouse’s door, Zhang Dabo pulled out the paddles, fish spear, and rope. “Wait here for a moment.”

He turned into the manager’s room to take out a flashlight. “This might look old, but its light can penetrate far into the darkness. If there’s any danger, wave it several times at the bank, and I... I will call the police for you.”

“Thank you.” Chen Ge threw everything into the boat, then activated the recorder and jumped into the boat as well.

“Several teams normally work together to salvage a body, are you sure that you can do this alone?” Zhang Dabo thought that Chen Ge was messing with him.

“Don’t worry, I’m not working alone either.” Finding his balance on the boat, Chen Ge opened the comic and released the vat ghost into the water.

“Just remember this piece of nautical advice. No matter what happens on the water, as long as the boat doesn’t capsize, there is still hope.” Zhang Dabo was a nice person. He saw that Chen Ge was ready to set out, and he went back into the room to retrieve a life jacket. “This is the only one we have at the dam; it was given to me by my boss. It has not been used before, but you should take it with you.”

“Thank you, you should go back inside. It’s not safe staying by the bank.” Chen Ge thanked the man, put on the vest, waved goodbye at Zhang Dabo, and rowed the boat away. Rowing a boat on the dam alone at midnight, that was certainly a unique experience.

The sky and the water were both dark, and there was no light around. It was as if the world was made of darkness, and his body was slowly decomposing into it as well. Chen Ge did not head directly to the center of the dam. After moving away from the bank, he started to communicate with the Vat Ghost.

The creature that came from Coffin Village did not retain his living memory, so most of the time, it acted on instinct, and that made communication difficult. Looked from outside, Chen Ge was acting strangely. He kept waving his hands at the water like he was trying to talk to the water.

“The girl’s body is about this big. If you spot it, tell me the location, and I’ll hand you the rope. You only need to tie the rope around her body.” Chen Ge repeated that several times, but the Vat Ghost could not grasp such complicated order. He was curled up underwater, blowing bubbles out of his lips, looking at Chen Ge blankly.

“Never mind, it’s me who’s demanding too much.” Chen Ge did not blame the Vat Ghost. He opened his phone and searched for the picture of a child. “Go underwater to see if there’s a child like this. Don’t make too much noise, and if there’s any danger that you can’t handle, retreat immediately. Safety first.”

Chen Ge would often tell his workers to do various things, but he had a line inside his heart and would never sacrifice his workers to achieve his goal. Perhaps because of that, the ghosts that stayed at the Haunted House due to various reasons would grow to become accomplished and efficient ‘workers’. After simplifying the order, the Vat Ghost appeared to have understood it. His body slowly submerged, disappearing out of Chen Ge’s sight.

“It’s still not yet midnight. Hopefully, everything will be done before then.” Chen Ge looked at the shampoo bottle in his backpack. Actually, he had a more efficient method, which was to release Wen Wen’s sister and have her go look for her own body. “I’ll should consider that if the Vat Ghost fails.”

He waited for ten minutes on the boat before the Vat Ghost returned. He was frozen in fear like he had experienced something horrifying. With his body submerged underwater, the Vat Ghost waved his hands that were disproportionate to his head, and his lips opened and closed. However, Chen Ge could not understand what he said. All he could see were the bubbles.

“Slow down, or you’re going to attract other people’s attention.” Chen Ge flipped through the comic to summon Ol’ Zhou. “Can you understand what he’s saying?”

He thought that communication might be easier between ghosts. Ol’ Zhou stared at the Vat Ghost’s lips for a long time before saying, “There are many people underwater, and he’s very afraid.”

“Ask him if he found a little girl’s dead body.” Chen Ge sighed in relief. He suddenly realized that Ol’ Zhou had the talent of being a translator; this was indeed a valuable talent. Ol’ Zhou’s communication with the Vat House was voiceless. Chen Ge used the power of Ghost Ear given by the black phone, and he only barely captured some murmuring.

“He didn’t spot a girl’s body, but there was a spot at the bottom where dead bodies were piled high, and the girl’s body might be hidden there.” After communicating with the Vat Ghost, Ol’ Zhou came to this conclusion. “There are many dead bodies under the water, and the one that you’re looking for should be there as well, but he’ll need time to find it.”

“We have the whole night—that should be enough. It’s fine to take it slow.” Chen Ge had the Vat Ghost lead the way. He was about to move the boat when a ray of light hit his body. Turning around, Chen Ge saw Zhang Dabo waving the flashlight by the bank.

“What’s wrong?”

“I thought that I saw a second person on the boat with you!” Zhang Dabo’s palm that held the flashlight was slick with sweat. “There’s still time to turn back now!”

“You’re probably mistaken.” Chen Ge signaled for Ol’ Zhou to return to the comic, but he got no reply. When he turned around, he realized that Ol’ Zhou had reacted faster than he did because when the light shot over, he had already disappeared. “Turn your flashlight off, or you might attract the King Fish.”

Chen Ge felt like he was the main character from a horror movie who refused to listen to advice and eventually ran into the ghost. Shaking his head, Chen Ge tossed this curious thought out of his mind and continued to row to the middle of the dam.

Eastern Jiujiang Dam was neither big nor small. When he was at the center, Chen Ge felt like he had become part of the dam, dissolving into the darkness.

Without light and with the bank far away, Chen Ge was not worried that Ol’ Zhou would be seen, so he released him again. “Tell the Vat Ghost to hold one end of the rope. Tie it around the girl’s body if he spots it, and I will personally pull her out.”

Ol’ Zhou communicated Chen Ge’s order. He dropped the rope into the water, and the Vat Ghost dived again, holding the end of the rope. The water surface returned to its undisturbed peace. Ol’ Zhou and Chen Ge grabbed the other end of the rope, and they held the same position, waiting patiently like they were fishing. Time trickled by, and the Vat Ghost did not return even when midnight arrived.

“Did something happen?” Even though Chen Ge had great expectations of the Vat Ghost, he was his worker, and Chen Ge treated him as family. The night seemed to thicken, and once midnight passed, a light fog rose from the water, sequestering the water from its surrounding.

“Why is it suddenly so foggy?” The shampoo bottle in his backpack was shaking, and strands of black hair peeked out from the cap like they were giving Chen Ge warning. Even the recorder started to play static. Chen Ge smelled a faint scent of blood in the air. He did not summon Xu Yin, but the latter materialized at the stern.

“This is not right. Something seems to have changed this two-star scenario.” Normally, it was already too much if there was a half Red Specter at a two-star scenario. They posed no threat to Xu Yin, but somehow, Xu Yin had shown up. The fog thickened. Chen Ge could see the flickering light by the bank, but a few minutes later, even that disappeared.

Chen Ge was now at the middle of the dam, the boat being twirled around by the current. Slowly, he lost his sense of direction like he was cut off from the world.

“Focus on the water.” Chen Ge summoned Bai Qiulin as well and had him and Ol’ Zhou watch the bow and Xu Yin guard the stern while he stayed in the middle.

The fog was still thickening, and to Chen Ge surprise, there was a voice coming from the fog. It was unclear whether it was from the surface of the water or from underwater, but the person was calling his name, and the voice was very familiar.

Chapter 590: Second Way of Death [2 in 1]

The thick fog isolated Chen Ge from the bank. The small boat turned lazily while being fixed to one spot, causing the passenger to slowly lose his sense of direction.

“Chen Ge...” That familiar voice called next to his ears again. Chen Ge frowned, and he tried his best to think. However, there was no memory related to this voice in his mind. It was very familiar and friendly, like this voice had once accompanied him for a very long time.

Could this be my parent's voice? But that shouldn't be! How could I not recognize my parent's voice?

In the fog, Chen Ge felt his mind fading, and to stop that, he bit on his tongue harshly.

This doesn't feel like something that should exist inside a two-star Trial Mission. I'm probably being ambushed by something more dangerous.

Chen Ge quickly calmed down. He knew clearly within his heart that since he had ruined the Eastern Jiujiang's culprit's plan so many times, the latter must have hated his guts.

The shampoo bottle in his backpack shook even harder, and the strands of black hair crawled out through the small crack to wrap themselves around the bottle, making it look strange and scary.

“Are you trying to tell me something?” From how Chen Ge saw it, Wen Wen's big sister was also a victim, so she would not help the culprit come and harm him. The hairs bound and entwined together to become something in the shape of an arrow, pointing a clear direction for Chen Ge to follow.

“She's giving you a sign. The body is right there,” Ol' Zhou explained.

“The situation has changed. We’re no longer in a hurry to solve this mission.” Without getting to the bottom of the truth regarding the voice in the fog, Chen Ge was not going to move around aimlessly.

“Ol’ Zhou, can you hear someone calling my name from inside the fog?” Chen Ge sat in the middle of the boat. Listening to the voice from the fog, an indescribable sense of isolation was burgeoning in his heart, like someone was whispering him an ultimate truth. He was alone and was always alone and would continue to be alone.

“No.” Ol’ Zhou shook his head. His tone and expression were no different from usual, and Chen Ge could not see any visible change to Ol’ Zhou’s demeanor either, but in Chen Ge’s eyes, everything was wrong. He stared at Ol’ Zhou’s face and took from it a sense of chilliness and ghastliness, like Ol’ Zhou was plotting something nasty, a wicked plot to take his life.

“It is good advice for normal people to stay away from ghosts, but the situation is unique for my family. Regardless of whether it was my parents or myself, our opinion and treatment of ghosts are different from normal people, especially considering the situation that I’m in. Without the aid of my spectral friends, I would not have been able to survive this long.” Chen Ge knew the truth clearly. “I treat these ghosts as my friends, so naturally, I do not believe that they would do anything dangerous to me. Furthermore, compared to human beings, ghosts are often more authentic and trustworthy.”

Looking at the surface of the water, Chen Ge kept his gaze sharp and determined. “I do not know who you are, but you’ve gotten too far ahead of yourself. You want to turn me against my ghost friends, but you’ve failed.”

Even though his mental faculty was not completely all there, it did not alter Chen Ge’s attitude toward ghosts. This was a viewpoint that had been cultivated in him since he was a wee babe. With the influence from his parents and the black phone, his understanding of ghosts was different from a normal person.

“Your voice sounds very familiar and even friendly, but the thing that you want me to do can only bring me harm. The real entity that wants to kill me is you. Stop relying on these tricks, come out and face me. Let me see who you really are.” The fog consumed the dam. The small boat twirled, carried by the water current, and the memory in Chen Ge's brain slowly became as fuzzy as the fog around him.

"Chen Ge..." The voice that called his name was incredibly familiar, but this was the scariest thing. Because he did not know such a person, in his memory, such a voice definitely did not exist. That sense of familiarity had nothing to do with memory; rather, it felt like it was branded into his body.

He had encountered a similar experience in the past. When he was doing the Nightmare Mission at the tunnel, after taking the forty-fourth step, there was also a similar voice calling him from deep inside the tunnel. It was the same cadence, same tone. Chen Ge gripped his fists tightly, seemingly having remembered something.

After the voice appeared inside the tunnel, he had seen something extraordinary—he had been killed when he was very small. He would never forget that strange experience of watching himself die. His thoughts were pulled toward that particular incident, and he started to uncontrollably reminisce about it.

"I once entered the tunnel when I was very young, and the person who killed me was standing behind me. From the looks of it, I was very familiar with this person." The boat shook, and so did Chen Ge's body. When Chen Ge extricated himself from the heaviness of that memory, he realized with a start that other than himself, there was no one and nothing else on the boat.

The backpack, Ol' Zhou, Xu Yin, and Wen Wen's sister had all disappeared, and he was the only one left behind on the boat. Fog swallowed up everything, and Chen Ge felt like he had been abandoned by the world. An indescribable feeling of loneliness gushed out from his heart. The temperature continued to drop. A thin sheen of water was coating his exposed skin, and it felt cold to the touch, a big difference from what a normal living human being should feel like.

"What is happening? Is this the special power of a unique ghost that I've not faced before?" He sat down on the boat and grabbed the paddle. Even at a time like this, he had not given up, and he was getting ready to fight.

"Chen Ge..." The voice began anew, and this time, Chen Ge could hear clearly that the voice was getting close to him.

"This is a strange feeling. I once heard this voice inside the tunnel before. When I first got the black phone and did my first Nightmare Mission, this voice also came from inside the mirror. When Doctor Gao destroyed the underground morgue and connected it to the blood world outside, I also felt this sense of familiarity. In fact, the door at the Haunted House's toilet also occasionally makes me feel like it's very familiar, like there is something behind the door that has been calling after me."

His mind was filled with tons of different information. Chen Ge's head was heavy with the information overload. "Have I forgotten something very important? Is it related to my parent's disappearance?"

"Chen Ge..." The voice started again, and it was just several meters away from Chen Ge. Taking a deep breath, he placed the paddle into the water and moved the boat. He decided to go take a look for himself. He rowed for three meters before Chen Ge saw a blurry shadow in the fog. The shadow was small, probably a child.

"The dead body of Wen Wen's elder sister?" He was still thinking about the black phone's mission, which had become sort of an instinct for him. The small boat continued to move forward. As the distance between them closed, the fog started to part to the sides, and the shape of the shadow became clearer and clearer. It was not Wen Wen's sister's body but a little boy.

When he saw the boy's face, Chen Ge's hands that gripped the paddle tightened subconsciously as a chill ran up his spine. This child was the younger version of himself. The familiar face and the friendly voice... but the different thing was, the boy's neck was snapped, and his head was basically dangling off his shoulders. His facial features, twisted beyond belief, radiated a sharp pierce of venom and resentment that Chen Ge had not experienced before.

"Yes, it was my own voice." Chen Ge had thought that the voice was very familiar, but he only realized then that the voice that had been calling him was his very own voice.

"Why would I be calling after myself? Who exactly is this child? How come he looks exactly like me when I was young?"

His brain was about to explode, and Chen Ge massaged his temples with more force than one would feel comfortable with.

"Have I forgotten about something?"

Actually, since the door at the Haunted House's toilet had shown up, Chen Ge had been suspicious about this. Only those in the depths of despair would be able to push open the door, and there was such a door at the Haunted House. Then, the question was, who pushed open that door?

Was it his parent or himself?

When Chen Ge was trying to figure out an answer, the child in the fog lifted his head to look at Chen Ge on the boat. It was hard to describe the gaze of the boy. There was envy, resentment, and an undercurrent of a complicated emotion. This was a very lonely child; he was unable to communicate with anyone else. His body was cold, his face was ugly, and his mind was twisted—the desire to destroy made up every cell in his body.

“Chen Ge, save me...” The familiar voice came out from the boy's lips. He stared at Chen Ge with both eyes. Then, his feet slowly floated above the water, and a different person's shadow appeared behind him. From the size of his physique, it seemed to be an adult. He placed his arms on the young Chen Ge's shoulders and lifted the child up high before slamming him deep into the water.

When the adult's shadow left, Chen Ge could hear a whisper of his voice. “This time, he should be completely dead. There is no way he will return again.”

The water rippled, and the adult's shadow disappeared. Chen Ge looked at this scene with shock. When he was doing the Nightmare Mission at the tunnel, Chen Ge had similarly seen the young version of himself being murdered by an adult, and now, when he was conducting the water ghost mission, he realized that he was bearing witness to another murder of his young self.

“What is really going on?” He rowed the boat to the spot where the child had been pushed into the water, and he looked down. His eyes narrowed, and what he saw was quite cruel. The child with the twisted limbs and a bobble-like head was slowly sinking into the water.

The face that reflected the features of Chen Ge's own looked at him through the water. His expression became more agitated as all the pain turned into resentment like he was unwilling to just sink like that into the deep, dark water. His lips slowly opened, and his twisted arms waved upward. The frail body started to float upward, and that scary yet familiar face was approaching in Chen Ge's eyes.

"Chen Ge..." His mind was a mess, and a strange thought suddenly appeared in Chen Ge's heart. It has returned.

Unable to control its body—or rather, that unique voice—caused Chen Ge's thoughts to be influenced. The boy underwater extended his arms. No one knew what had happened to him when he was still alive. His arms were slightly longer than normal, like someone had forcibly disconnected his arms from their sockets.

The pale and noodle-like arms floated up the water, and the face came closer and closer to Chen Ge. The purplish lips opened lightly, and he was calling Chen Ge's name underwater.

The water surface was like the surface of a mirror, with the adult Chen Ge on one side and the Chen Ge warped by resentment on the other side.

Through the water surface, these two completely different lives seemed like they were about to be woven back together.

"Chen Ge, I am you..."

He could not read any special emotion from the body, and his body dipped uncontrollably deeper toward the water surface like he was trying to take a closer look of his reflection in the mirror. The limbs reached out through the surface. The pale fingers touched Chen Ge's face. The touch was very light. Chen Ge could not tell whether the child wanted to pull him into the water or merely wanted to touch his face.

"Who are you? And why have you been calling my name?" Chen Ge could sense a familiarity from the boy, a connection that went beyond blood ties. It was as if they were originally the same person. "Who killed you? Who turned you into something like this?"

Chen Ge kept asking the questions that were in his heart, but the child in the water did not answer. His fingertips were about wrap around Chen Ge's head, but before it could close completely, another hand fell on Chen Ge's shoulder.

The fingers were long, and the blood trails and cracks were like the exquisite work of a tattoo artist. The first impression that was given by the hand was... it was very beautiful. The fog around the boat suddenly dispersed, and an extremely cold and scary presence appeared behind Chen Ge.

The blood-soaked black hair slid down Chen Ge's body, and it fell into the dark water like a rain of metallic needles. It was an attack without target, sinking into the water like it was trying to turn the entire dam upside down.

Chen Ge could feel the hand on his shoulder gripping tighter and his body that was tipping into the water being slowly pulled back.

A shrill scream came from underwater, and the child who looked like the young Chen Ge morphed into a shadow and slipped away. After it disappeared, the spell on Chen Ge was broken. Like someone just pulled up from the water, his whole body was drenched in cold sweat, and he sucked greedily for the fresh air.

When he opened his eyes next, the fog above the water had already completely dispersed. Chen Ge saw Bai Qiulin and Ol' Zhou squeezing behind Xu Yin, shivering. The usually reticent Xu Yin also had an unnatural expression on his face.

"Did Zhang Ya show up just now?" He touched his shoulder. The hand that had landed there earlier was fresh in his memory. The pale skin was crisscrossed with cracks and blood. "Has she still not recovered from her injury?"

The three ghosts on the boat did not dare answer, like the woman inside Chen Ge's shadow was a taboo that they could not mention. Standing up, Chen Ge looked in the direction that the child had escaped.

Using Yin Yang Vision, he saw someone standing at the bank, and he was pushing an e-bike. The person was on high alert. When he felt Chen Ge's eyes on him, he quickly jumped on the bike and rode away.

"An e-bike?" Chen Ge stared at the man's back, and another person's image appeared in his mind. "He looks suspiciously like Huang Ling's husband."

Xiao Gu had accidentally taken the last bus on Route 104 and saved Huang Ling, but later, Chen Ge had realized that the woman's husband actually died years ago and the man sharing her bed now was someone else.

"Why would Huang Ling's husband be here? Is he the culprit in Eastern Jiujiang? That doesn't seem likely." Chen Ge looked at the taillight of the e-bike and was reminded of something else. When he accompanied Captain Yan to go to Ming Yang Residence to look for the broken body parts, parts of the body had been stolen away, and he remembered spotting someone drive into the residence on an e-bike.

“Was he the one who stole the body parts that night?” Chen Ge had thought that Huang Ling’s husband was just a small lackey, but from the looks of it, he was mistaken. He put the issue of the salvage aside for now and sent a message to Captain Yan and Lee Zheng, asking for an update regarding Huang Ling and her husband.

While he waited for the reply, Chen Ge turned to look at the water. He could not help but go through the things that had happened earlier. “When I crossed paths with the shadow at the Fresh Water Plant, it also changed into a young version of myself. Is this its special power, or is he really related to my childhood?”

Chen Ge thought about it for a long time but settled on no answer.

“I still know too little, but I did come away with a reward tonight.” He narrowed his eyes at the bank. Huang Ling’s husband was already gone. “Previously, I thought that he was just a small fry, but it turns out he might be the biggest fish in the pond.”

...

Chen Ge did not like to do things in a roundabout way, so he decided to go straight to Huang Ling’s home after finishing the Twin Water Ghost mission. The fog on the water dispersed, and it was dark all around. Chen Ge glanced at his watch; it was almost 1 am.

“How long have I stayed in the fog?”

When the boat rowed to the center of the dam, it had not yet been midnight, and now, it was almost one hour later.

“Ol’ Zhou, has the Vat Ghost returned?” Chen Ge stood at the bow and looked down the rope. The dam was deeper than he thought—even with the Yin Yang Vision, he could not see the bottom.

Ol’ Zhou was not there mentally. He had been spooked by Zhang Ya, and his demeanor had stopped being so natural around Chen Ge. Previously, he had always had the impression that his boss was a kind person, one who managed to gather a house of ghosts from his kindness and grace, but seeing Zhang Ya walking out from his shadow at such close distance, Ol’ Zhou changed his mind.

Was it possible for a normal person to spend every moment with such a scary Red Specter, to have their relationship so close that they were basically inseparable?

He even started to wonder if his boss was actually being controlled by a Red Specter, being nothing more than a puppet.

“What’s wrong? Are you not feeling well?” Chen Ge’s concerned tone caused Ol’ Zhou to shudder. He quickly snapped into it and waved his hands in quick succession.

“Did the Vat Ghost return when I was out of it earlier?”

“I don’t think so; the rope hasn’t moved.” Ol’ Zhou shook his head. “Actually, I haven’t been paying much attention. I was too focused on you.”

“Focused on me? By the way, did you see a boy who looked just like me coming over from afar earlier?”

“A boy?” Ol’ Zhou’s confused look explained many things. The thing that had happened earlier was only visible to Chen Ge and Zhang Ya.

“Then did not notice anyone appearing at the bank?” Chen Ge wanted to get more information on Huang Ling’s husband.

“I’m not sure, but I think that was where the fog drifted from.” Ol’ Zhou’s words confirmed Chen Ge’s suspicion. “There is something wrong with the fog?”

Ol’ Zhou was very clever and quickly grasped what Chen Ge was hinting at.

“I have no idea what they’re after, but it’s not that simple to kill me. It’s more like they want to show me something and lead me down a sinful path.” Anyone who saw their young self being brutally murdered would be left with an emotional scare, but with the training given by the black phone, Chen Ge had cultivated a strong and resistant heart.

“But let’s ignore that for now. The Vat Ghost has probably encountered some danger if he still hasn’t returned. Can you help me to communicate with the female ghost inside the shampoo bottle? See if she is willing to help bring back the Vat Ghost.” Chen Ge was worried about the Vat Ghost’s safety. After all, he was sent in alone to deal with so many strange ghosts unwater.

Ol’ Zhou relayed Chen Ge’s words to Wen Wen’s sister. After a while, the shampoo was twisted open from the inside, and a weave of dirty, smelly hair crawled out from within. She seemed to want to crawl onto Chen Ge’s body but was afraid and hesitant.

“What is she doing?” Chen Ge turned to Ol’ Zhou, but the latter did not get it either. The hair was stuck together, and without closer inspection, it did look like water weed.

“They’re both hair, but this is completely different from Zhang Ya’s.” Chen Ge squatted down and made a brave decision as he actively reached out toward the hair on the boat.

“How do you wish for me to help you?” The hair curled around Chen Ge’s finger. It was wet and slippery like he was holding a living fish. The hair knew its limit. She only dared to touch Chen Ge’s finger—she did not even dare to approach his palm. With one end curled around Chen Ge’s finger, the other end reached toward the water.

“You want to drag me into the water?” Chen Ge did not think that the girl would be courageous enough to harm him after Zhang Ya’s appearance and with Xu Yin standing there. “Or are you trying to lead the way?”

Just as they were tussling, the rope at the bow shuddered. Many bubbles followed, and the Vat Ghost’s round head broke the surface.

“How come you’ve been down there for so long?” Probably feeling the concern in Chen Ge’s voice, the Vat Ghost did not appear that frightened anymore. His lips opened and closed as he waved his hands at Chen Ge. More bubbles floated to the surface.

“He found the body, but he could not get close to it. It seems that ghosts are unable to get close to it.” Ol’ Zhou took up the role of the translator seriously—he was very professional.

“Ghosts can’t get close to it?” Chen Ge felt the slickness around his finger. “Is that why Wen Wen’s sister needs my help to get her body?”

Staring at the water, this mission turned out to be different from what he had expected. Wen Wen’s sister was a half Red Specter, and even she could not get close to it, let alone less powerful ghosts. Zhang Ya was probably the only exception, but Chen Ge had no power over that one.

“Xu Yin’s connection to me will weaken once he’s underwater, and he’s still missing his heart—I doubt he’ll be able to go through the barrier as well.” Xu Yin had implicit trust in Chen Ge, and because of that, Chen Ge did not send Xu Yin to do things that he had no confidence in.

“Since ghosts can’t get close to it, then a human has to do it.” Chen Ge took out the black phone to confirm the mission detail. It said clearly that he had to be there alone to salvage the body. “I was wondering why it purposely added a detail like that.”

Chen Ge thought about it for a long time before coming to a decision. “There is nothing to hesitate about. When I first got the black phone, I was in a much worse condition, and I wasn’t afraid then, so there is no reason for me to be afraid now.”

Fixing the rope to the boat, Chen Ge had Ol’ Zhou and Bai Qiulin look over the rope, and he took the flashlight given by Zhang Dabo, removed his shirt and pants, and jumped into the water. The water temperature was low, but Chen Ge did not feel cold. It was unclear whether that was because he was well-trained or because he had gotten used to the chill.

His finger had Wen Wen’s sister’s hair wrapped around it, and she had been pulling Chen Ge toward a direction inside the dam. He sucked in a deep breath and had the Vat Ghost and Xu Yin guard beside him. He dived into the water.

He turned the flashlight on, but the light was weak underwater. Even with his Yin Yang Vision, the range of his sight was very limited. Time seemed to have slowed down like Chen Ge had entered a different world. This place was very quiet, and it gave him a strange feeling, like an unborn child swimming in his mother’s womb.

His body sinking, Chen Ge gripped the flashlight in one hand and the rope in another. Water pressure came in from all sides, and the oxygen in his lungs slowly decreased. There was something that touched Chen Ge in the dark, and it did not feel like fish.

Unable to speak, he was unable to communicate with the ghosts around him. In fact, Chen Ge could not even see them; he could only sense somewhat uncertainly that Xu Yin and the Vat Ghost were next to him. Then again, it was them who gave him courage to go underwater to go searching for a body.

Several seconds later, with the black hair leading the way, Chen Ge saw something that looked like a coffin underwater, and a thick copse of water weed grew around it.

The flashlight was barely able to pierce the darkness around him. With the tugging of the black hair, Chen Ge was slowly being pulled to the thing that looked like a coffin.

Why is there such a thing in the dam? Who was it made by, and who is it for?

...

Before jumping into the dam, Chen Ge had no idea the dam would be so deep. He was running out of oxygen, and it showed with the lightness of his head. He moved the flashlight to shine around the coffin. The black 'water weed' danced at the bottom of the dam. After diving another two meters, Chen Ge realized that it was not a plant but human hair. It was weaved together into braids, and Chen Ge's eyelids kept twitching as he observed them.

Wen Wen's sister wants me to swim through the jungle of hair?

Just as this thought floated up in his mind, his body could not help but shiver. The black hair climbed onto Chen Ge's arm. As he parted the 'water weed' away, it revealed a bloated and pale face.

It's a woman.

Her eyes were closed, and she was floating vertically in the water. There was something that was wrapped around her ankle, tying her to the coffin. With a quick glance around, Chen Ge noticed a hole at the bottom of the dam. The coffin was stuck inside the hole and the bodies were floating above the hole. Their hair grew alongside the natural water weed, and they formed a large blurry shadow in the water.

To enter the hole, one had to pass through the water weed and dead people's hair. This was the first time that Chen Ge had come across such a creepy scene. Perhaps it was the nervousness that sped up the exhaustion of oxygen because Chen Ge started to feel his lungs constrict.

Reaching out to push the weed and hair away, Chen Ge swam past the human bodies. The hole was very deep, and the coffin was stuck close to the entrance. Once Chen Ge tried to swim toward the hole, the hair around his arm untangled. Wen Wen's sister was unable to get close to the coffin.

Unable to speak, Chen Ge could only gesture with his hands. Thankfully, Xu Yin had worked with him many times in the past, and he soon understood what Chen Ge meant.

A smear of red appeared in the water like someone had poured blood into it. Xu Yin tried to follow Chen Ge into the hole, but once he approached the hole, a weird gurgle came inside the hole like the monster hiding inside it was slowly awakening. Xu Yin wanted Chen Ge to retreat—he could sense the bad aura hiding inside the hole.

Is Wen Wen's sister's body deeper into the hole or just inside the coffin?

The water slipped into his ears and his nostrils. Chen Ge was running out of time, and he needed to come to a decision soon.

Open the coffin! If her body is not inside it, then we'll retreat immediately.

All of the ghost refused to get close to the hole, so something seemed to be wrong with it. No matter what it was, this was not good news for Chen Ge, who did not have the support of any ghosts with him. He was used to interacting with ghosts, and the only thing able to apprehend a ghost was a scarier, crueler ghost.

Chen Ge was not good at diving. With no other option, he pulled on the water weed and dead human hair as support to yank himself closer to the coffin.

The flashlight given by Zhang Dabo was not made for underwater diving. The light flickered on and off like it could go out at any moment. With the threat of no light and dwindling oxygen, every second that he spent underwater would increase the chance of Chen Ge getting into an accident.

With his hands on the water weed and dead bodies, Chen Ge finally nudged through the hole. At the same time, he noticed that all of the dead bodies' legs were shackled by rope, and all the ropes reached into the coffin.

From the looks of it, it appeared like the dead bodies' owner was hiding inside the coffin, and it had the say of these dead bodies' life and death.

After exhausting two seconds, Chen Ge finally gripped the coffin inside the hole. He adjusted his position and shone the flashlight deeper into the hole.

The man from the fishing society said that he saw many water ghosts at this dam, but there are only four dead bodies around this hole, could the rest be hiding deeper inside the hole?

The ray of light was unable to penetrate into the darkness, so he was unable to tell.

I have to tell the police about the dead bodies. I should leave the exploration of the hole to Captain Yan and his team.

Chen Ge intended to suggest that Captain Yan drain the dam, but he knew that the chance of that were not high. Eastern Jiujiang Dam was located upstream, and it was connected to many different branches of big rivers. Unless they could stop the running water at its source, there would not come a day when Eastern Jiujiang Dam would be dry.

Now's no time to plot.

Due to the lack of oxygen, Chen Ge's mind was wavering. His palm pressed on the coffin, and something sticky touched his palm. It felt very uncomfortable like he had stuck his hand into a vat of glue.

What is slathered on the surface of the coffin?

Chen Ge lifted his hand to see—his palm had turned blood red. It was unclear whether it was a kind of red algae or something else completely. Chen Ge watched closer, and he realized that the red thing on his palm was still moving like it was alive.

*Oh, f*ck it.*

Chen Ge swam to the bottom of the coffin, and due to his experience at the Coffin Village, he was familiar with the construction of a coffin and could lift one open easily. Using the buoyancy of water and his own weight, Chen Ge shook the lid loose, and several seconds later, the closed coffin lid eased open a sliver.

The lid was nailed onto the coffin—this was an old tradition at Jiujiang city, a practice called Coffin Sealing. This tradition was not often practiced because only those who brought shame upon the family name would get such a treatment.

Even with all his might, Chen Ge was unable to peel the lid off. When he was desperate, a thick smell of blood smothered his nostril. Xu Yin had entered the hole and grabbed the other end of the lid. He purposely avoided the end of the coffin, like the thing inside made him uncomfortable or even afraid.

With Xu Yin's aid, Chen Ge slowly pulled the coffin open, and he shone the flashlight in.

What he saw was something that he never would have imagined in his life.

The coffin was filled with a collection of dolls. They did not look like the ones sold on the market, so they were probably hand-made. That was confirmed also by the extremely rough handiwork and the lack of company label. However, each of them was marked with a name.

What's going on?

Chen Ge trained his full attention on the content inside the coffin.

The black phone's mission was for me to salvage dead body. Could these dolls be the dead body it's referring to?

With the dwindling of time, Chen Ge could not stop to think, so he reached into the coffin. However, as his hand landed on one of the dolls, the coffin shook, and the ropes that reached into the coffin were pulled taut. He looked up, and the four dead bodies anchored to the four edges of the coffin had all turned to look at him.

Four dead faces with the hair growing from their scalp weaving together to form something of a net. Chen Ge kept calm. At this point, there was no return. With a grit of his teeth, he yanked the doll out of the coffin. Weirdly enough, a string was pierced through each of the doll's hearts, connecting them, and by taking one out, Chen Ge pulled the whole collection out with it.

When he yanked out the dolls, Chen Ge felt his feet going numb like a school of fish just slithered past him. Considering where he was, he instantly felt unsettled. Turning the flashlight around, Chen Ge lowered his head to look, and a group of pale-faced children had gathered around his feet.

When did you show up?

Scanning them with Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge soon realized that these kids barely counted as baleful Specters—they were lingering spirits hanging onto this world by a thread, and they had possessed the dolls.

Does each doll represent a living child? So many children have died from bury seed?

The incident was more serious than he had thought. Chen Ge pulled the children out from the coffin and prepared to swim to the surface.

Wait a minute.

Without much hesitation, Chen Ge dislodged the coffin lid from the coffin. Since Xu Yin did not dare to get close to the end of the coffin, there had to be something more to the lid. Thus, he decided to carry it back with him for a closer inspection.

The dead bodies that were tied to the coffin did not stop Chen Ge. If anything, this felt more like a ritual. The deeper secret would only be revealed by exploring deeper into the hole.

This should be the handiwork of the mastermind as well. Instead of going into the unknown hole, it's safer for me to go and confront Huang Ling's husband in person.

Chen Ge rarely did things that he had no confidence in.

Under the protection of Xu Yin and the Vat Ghost, Chen Ge grabbed the coffin lid and the rope that strung through the dolls and swam through the black hair and water weed.

Breaking the surface, Chen Ge took a deep breath. He tossed the dolls and coffin lid onto the boat and used the last vestige of his strength to haul himself on it.

A slight vibration came from a corner of the boat. Chen Ge moved the clothes aside, and he was greeted by the lit screen of the black phone. A new message had come through.

“Congratulations, Specters’ Favored, for completing the two-star Trial Mission—Twin Water Ghost! You have successfully unlocked the underwater scary scenario!”

Chapter 593: The Shirt of the Drowned

Even then, Chen Ge was still trying to get over the aftereffects of holding his breath for too long. His head was light, but even in that condition, he still grabbed onto the coffin lid and the rope that strung the dolls through their hearts tightly. After taking several deep breaths, Chen Ge finally felt well-adjusted enough to glance at the phone.

“The two-star mission Twin Water Ghost has been completed. Completion Rate: one hundred percent. Unlocked this mission’s hidden item—the Shirt of the Drowned.

“The Shirt of the Drowned (Malice Points: 17): There are things underwater that crawled into my clothes, and they pulled me deep into the water.”

The mission has a completion rate of one hundred percent. Looks like the hole in the dam is not counted by the black phone as part of the Twin Water Ghost mission.

Chen Ge put the black phone away, and there were many questions left in his mind.

Was the coffin purposely placed there to block the way into the hole?

Earlier, Chen Ge had noted that Xu Yin did not dare get close to the end part of the coffin, and he felt the secret to that would be hidden on the coffin lid.

After putting on his clothes, Chen Ge laid the lid vertically down on the boat.

It's impossible for me to physically carry this back home with me, but no taxi will allow me to put this inside their car. I'll need to come up with a solution.

The coffin lid that Chen Ge had salvaged from the dam was much smaller than a normal coffin. It was decayed and was stained with patches of red. It was unclear whether those patches were dead bugs or a type of water plant that had dried up. After removing the thing that covered the surface, Chen Ge made a startling discovery.

A Specter was carved on the decayed wooden board. The monster was wrapped in chains and had six eyes, looking almost similar to the monster that the ghost stories society had left on the door in the Haunted House.

The ghost stories society committed many ritualistic murders and gouged out the victims' eyes to create something like this on the door in my Haunted House. At the time, they wanted to dominate the door, so the carving of this ghost should possess the power of guarding a door.

Chen Ge took out his own phone and snapped a picture of the carving.

The coffin was stuck near the entrance of the hole, and the ghost was carved onto the lid—could this be a device to guard the hole inside the dam? To prevent the thing inside from coming out?

Only Chen Ge would come up with the idea of using a coffin to guard a hole.

The black phone gave me the mission to come salvage dead bodies, so technically, it should include the possibility that I would carry the whole coffin away with me. Then this means that no matter what kind of scary presence is hiding inside the hole, it should pose no threat to me.

Since he already had the coffin lid, going back underwater was impossible; Chen Ge was merely finding an excuse for himself.

The coffin was probably placed here by the mastermind. Then the enemy of my enemy is my friend. If it doesn't want the thing inside the hole to come out, then I should find a way to release it.

Chen Ge was unsure what was inside the hole and had no idea where the hole led to. Honestly, at that moment, he was not at all interested. He just wanted to leave that place as soon as possible. What if something really did slip out and vented its anger from being trapped onto him?

When Chen Ge prepared to row away, a blob of dark shadow floated onto the surface of the water.

I'd almost forgotten about her.

The shadow stuck to the side of the boat. Strands of black hair crawled up from the water, and they grew like vines on the side of the boat before slithering onto the boat and slipping into one of the dolls.

Picking up the doll, Chen Ge noticed that it was different from others. She was wearing a little dress with blood spots, and the hair was real human hair. The name that was carved on the back was red in color.

“Zhao Shuang'er? This doll is Wen Wen's big sister?” The mission had been completed, but there were too many dolls on the boat. “Every doll has a name carved on the back, so each of them represents a life.”

When he was underwater, Chen Ge could sense the anxiety and fear from the children. They were all still so young, and most of them had not even experienced life before.

“Too many things are involved in this case. I'm afraid I won't be able to handle this alone. I should inform Captain Yan about this.” Ninety percent of the Jiujiang's disappearances happened in Eastern Jiujiang. If they were all due to the shadow's plan, then the number of deaths would be astronomical.

Chen Ge decided to hold onto the doll that Wen Wen's sister possessed. There was another unique thing about this doll—her clothes were always wet. Afraid that she might wet the comic, Chen Ge placed her in his pocket. Summoning all the ghosts, Chen Ge rowed the boat back to the bank.

When Zhang Dabo saw Chen Ge return safely, he sighed in relief. He had really been concerned for the man. Who could blame him when Chen Ge came alone to the dam at night to come salvaging for dead bodies, and without any safety gear at that! Just watching it from the bank, he could not help but feel anxious, afraid that the King Fish might show up to assault Chen Ge.

“What is this?” Zhang Dabo was an honest man. He gripped the other end of the coffin lid and started to pull.

“A coffin?” Hearing Chen Ge's answer, Zhang Dabo almost slipped and fell to the ground. “Didn’t you go searching for dead bodies? Why did you come back with a coffin lid?”

“There are four dead bodies in the dam, I couldn’t handle all that alone. We should call the police and leave this to the professionals.”

“Four... four bodies?” Zhang Dabo could not imagine that the dam that he was tasked with guarding over would hide so many dead bodies. Chen Ge moved everything onto solid ground and right then his phone rang.

“Shall we call the police now?” Zhang Dabo looked at the coffin lid, and he felt incredibly uncomfortable.

“There’s no need to rush. Let me answer this call first.” It was Lee Zheng who called Chen Ge. When Chen Ge saw Huang Ling’s husband earlier, he had messaged Captain Yan and Lee Zheng, but they did not reply immediately probably because it was already too late.

Accepting the call, before Chen Ge could speak, Lee Zheng’s voice came through. “Chen Ge, are you telling me Huang Ling’s husband is the murder suspect? How confident are you?”

“One hundred percent confident, I suggest you detain him as soon as possible. The man is extremely dangerous. The longer you let him roam free, the more dangerous he’ll be,” Chen Ge said confidently, “Also, there’s another thing. I found four female dead bodies in Eastern Jiujiang Dam.”

“Eastern Jiujiang?”

“Yes, they’re underwater. When I was investigating the dam earlier, Huang Ling’s husband was also around the area.”

Lee Zheng did not question why Chen Ge would go to the dam searching for dead bodies in the middle of the night; he just answered Chen Ge instantly, “Wait there, our people will be there in a minute.”

“Okay.” After the call ended, Chen Ge looked at the dumbstruck Zhang Dabo. “Brother, the police will be coming soon. I might need to trouble you again later.”

“It’s no trouble. Do say if you have any use for me.” After all that had happened, the way Zhang Dabo looked at Chen Ge changed. At 3:10 am, the police from both Eastern Jiujiang’s police station and the main police station arrived at the same time. As if on cue, Chen Ge also received the call from Lee Zheng.

“Chen Ge, something’s wrong. I personally went to Huang Ling’s home. Huang Ling is mentally unstable, completely out of it, and her husband is nowhere to be seen.”

“Follow the surveillance around Eastern Jiujiang Dam—that should give you the lead to follow his trail. This man is very important and very dangerous, be careful when you conduct the search.”

Chapter 594 - Expanding Haunted House

Chapter 594: Expanding Haunted House

“For now, you should focus on helping the local team investigate the dead bodies underwater, leave the rest to us.”

Whenever Lee Zheng conversed with Chen Ge, he would have this strange feeling. Whether it was his tone or his way of thinking, the latter felt more like an experienced first-class police inspector. At times, Lee Zheng even suspected that Chen Ge was a special agent that Captain Yan had requested to aid their group. In fact, Lee Zheng did not think he would be surprised if one day in the future, Chen Ge came slapping his shoulders and said with a smile, “Sorry, but I’m actually also a police officer.”

Clever people turn their passion into their career, but in Chen Ge’s case, his pursuit of justice was far beyond a mere passion for murder investigation. It was hard to imagine what kind of attitude he adopted to be able to unearth so many hidden cases all over the city without asking for any reward in return.

“Alright, I will lend them my full cooperation.” The group that was responsible for overseeing the dam was from the Eastern Jiujiang Police Station and Investigation Team Two from the main station. Chen Ge was not familiar with them, and after some basic questioning, the two parties got into a standstill on how to deal with the coffin lid.

In the end, under the persuasion by the leader of the Team Two, Chen Ge agreed to hand over the coffin lid and the dolls inside the coffin to the police temporarily for the medical doctor and other professionals to examine, and then the police would personally send them back to the Haunted House.

“Every doll here has a name carved on their back, and each name corresponds to a once-living child. I suggest you run an investigation on each of the names, and you might come to a surprising discovery.” Eastern Jiujiang had been peaceful for so long, but this peace was faked. The current beneath the surface was rapid, and no one had any idea how dirty and how deep the water went.

At 3:30 am, the management of the dam and the salvage team arrived. They worked together to retrieve the dead bodies and the coffin. During the process, one of the salvage members claimed that he heard strange noises coming from inside the hole, and someone else noticed flickering shadows underwater. It was probably the fish.

The salvage operation went smoothly. After the bodies and coffin were taken away, there was nothing left for Chen Ge to do. After getting permission from the police, Chen Ge called a cab and left.

He had never seen an underwater scenario being built before, and he was quite curious about this newly unlocked scenario. At 4 am, Chen Ge returned to his Haunted House. He pushed open the gate and rushed underground. Walking down the darkened steps, Chen Ge noticed that a small path had opened up between Mu Yang High School and Coffin Village. It was large enough to allow two people to go through at once, and it went deeper underground. Walking down the path felt strange and oppressive.

The light was dim and the air damp. Occasionally, Chen Ge could hear the sound of water dripping. At the end of the tunnel was a dark lake of water, and a small boat was floating on the surface of the water. The boat was made from wood, and it was just big enough to fit two passengers.

“There’s no paddle?” Chen Ge tossed the Vat Ghost into the water, and to his surprise, the water was surprisingly deep. Getting on the boat, Chen Ge slowly paddled using his hands to row himself forward.

“This design is rather insane. The visitors have to use their hands as paddles for the boat to move. If the monsters hiding in the water suddenly surface, just how much terror and despair will the people on the boat be trapped in?”

Due to safety considerations, Chen Ge planned to go to the Props Room to make a small wooden paddle for emergencies. Inching along the way, the boat continued to move forward. The scenario for Twin Water Ghost was only half the size of Mu Yang High School.

“But this is at the very least a two-star scenario. It can’t be this simple, can it?” Chen Ge was seated inside the boat and looking around with his flashlight when the Vat Ghost suddenly surfaced. He waved his hands and then pointed at the water.

“There’s something underwater?” Chen Ge thought about it and approved of that possibility. The lake was quite large, and the boat did not come with a paddle. The people on the boat had to use their hands to work the boat, and in that case, it was highly probable for them to be pulled overboard.

No matter what, safety was the most important. To prevent accidents from happening, Chen Ge removed his clothes that were still damp and jumped into the water again. Using his Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge discovered to his surprise the completely different world that was underwater.

This scenario was built on the slope, and the deeper one swam, the more things one could see. The things near the top of the water were common everyday items like an old sofa, broken furniture, and lamps like actual rooms that had sunk.

Further down, the bed of the lake was littered with cut up dolls. The faces were embedded into the silt, the broken eyes staring at the boat that skimmed across the surface. Moving forward, one would come into a graveyard of coffins. They were stacked in a complicated manner, turning the geography of the underwater lake into a maze.

“I don’t think this scenario should be opened to the public yet. Without the necessary equipment, it is too easy for accidents to happen.”

Running into scary things underwater was ten times more terrifying than running into them on solid ground, but unfortunately, the risk was too high. Chen Ge was a Haunted House operator, and he defined his own job as one in the service industry. The underwater scenario was a good direction for the Haunted House to take, but it could only be tested after he had the necessary equipment.

“Then again, I suppose it’s not completely useless. At least I have a home now for all the underwater ghosts that I encounter in the future.”

Chen Ge worked together with the Vat Ghost to move the boat back to the shore. Then, he carried his clothes and retraced the path back. “You should stay here for now.”

Vat Ghost was naturally faint-hearted. Give him a water vat, and he could stay in the cramped space without complaint for century. His personality was really a great contrast to how he looked.

“If you see any visitors wander in here, remember to warn them to stay back. If they fall into water, you have to save them, understand?”

After giving the Vat Ghost his orders, Chen Ge was still worried. He ran to the tool room to make a roadblock and placed it at the scenario entrance.

“Who would have thought that my Haunted House would one day have an underwater scenario?” Chen Ge looked at his Haunted House, and his heart was surfeited with pride. With his careful expansion, the Haunted House now had a hospital, a school, a village, a residential area, and even a manmade lake. “The Haunted House just upgraded to a Maze of Terror. If I continue to unlock scenarios, will my Haunted House eventually become an underground city filled with endless scary stories and terrifying tales?”

When he first obtained the black phone, Chen Ge had once noted the term Castle of Nightmares on the mission detail, and he felt like that should be the Haunted House’s final goal.

After dealing with all that, Chen Ge placed the wet clothes in the toilet and gave them a simple scrub. Then he went to the staff breakroom. He was about to crawl into bed when his phone-started to vibrate. It was Lee Zheng.

“Inspector Lee? How can I help you?”

“We’ve found Huang Ling’s husband.” Lee Zheng’s tone was grave, signifying that they had run into trouble.

“Where did you find him?” Chen Ge sat up and spooked the white cat, which had curled up next to him.

“We checked for his trail on the surface and finally found him at the entrance to White Dragon Cave Tunnel. When we arrived, he was already unconscious.”

“White Dragon Cave Tunnel?” Chen Ge thought that the name was familiar. His eyes slowly widened because White Dragon Cave Tunnel was the abandoned tunnel where he had completed his latest Nightmare Mission, the place where he had seen his young self being killed for the first time.

Chapter 595: He's Already Dead

Huang Ling's husband was found fainted at the entrance to White Dragon Cave tunnel, which was something that Chen Ge did not anticipate.

The shadow is extremely cunning. He probably sensed something beforehand and made an early escape. But why would he go to the tunnel? Is this a hint that there is something he needs inside the tunnel? Huang Ling's husband is fainted outside the tunnel, does that mean he's already been abandoned by the shadow? Or is there a spare body to possess inside the tunnel?

Several questions popped up in his mind. Chen Ge could not get it. He glanced at the time and told Lee Zheng, "Inspector Lee, can I go there and ask him a few questions?"

"We're now at the hospital. The doctors are inspecting Jia Ming's body. He is slipping in and out of consciousness, and his mind is a jumbled mess. I'm afraid you won't be getting any answers even if you try."

"Then, can I just take a look at him?" Chen Ge wanted to personally confirm whether the shadow was still attached to Jia Ming. After getting Lee Zheng's permission, Chen Ge changed and rushed to the People's Hospital.

Chen Ge flitted in and out of the theme park multiple times in one night. Initially, the senior guard still greeted him, but later, even the guard got tired of watching him coming and going.

When Chen Ge arrived at the hospital, it was around 6 am. Police officers stood guarding the door, and when he tried to approach, he was immediately blocked.

"I'm here for Inspector Lee Zheng from the main police station. I was on the phone with him earlier." Chen Ge gave them Lee Zheng's name.

One of them thought that Chen Ge look familiar, and after studying him for a while, he managed to recognize Chen Ge.

“His wife, Huang Ling. We went to Huang Ling’s home first tonight, and we immediately noticed something wrong with her. It was like she had taken some hallucinatory pills, so we also moved her to the hospital.”

“Okay.” Chen Ge pushed the door lightly open. Lee Zheng and a female officer were seated one meter away from the bed, and they were conversing with the patient in bed. Hearing the door open, everyone in the room turned to look.

Since Lee Zheng and the female officer knew that Chen Ge was coming, so they reacted calmly, but just as Lee Zheng was about to greet Chen Ge, Jia Ming suddenly screamed in bed. His face was pale, and he jumped to the other end of the bed. His emotions were frazzled, and he pointed at Chen Ge with a shaking finger. “Ghost! Ghost! He’s a ghost!”

The needle for the drip was forcibly yanked out, but Jia Ming did not appear to feel pain. His eyes were glued to Chen Ge with fear pouring out of them. The people in the room did not expect a change like that. Lee Zheng summoned the doctors, and they worked together to pin Jia Ming down on the bed.

“Should we try to use anesthetic?” the doctor asked Lee Zheng. Lee Zheng shook his head; he was curious why Jia Ming would react that way when he saw Chen Ge. After Jia Ming calmed down, Chen Ge sat on the chair. Strangely enough, after he entered the room, Jia Ming refused to move his eyes away from Chen Ge. Whenever Chen Ge made a move, Jia Ming would react like a frightened cat, trying to escape.

“Don’t worry, he won’t be able to harm you with us here. Furthermore, I can confidently tell you that he is a human being, not a ghost.” Lee Zheng had Chen Ge sit down next to him.

“What is going on?” Chen Ge was equally confused. He used Yin Yang

Vision to study Jia Ming. The man did not have a trace of Yin energy on him—he looked just like a normal human being. The ghost was not on his body. Did it leave, or was it hiding in his shadow?

Chen Ge had not left the park with his backpack, and he maintained a sharp alert around Jia Ming. Ever since Chen Ge entered the room, the atmosphere had changed. Lee Zheng massaged his thudding temples, and his bloodshot eyes looked at the two who were staring at each other. “Please, both of you, calm down.”

Seeing as Jia Ming’s emotions were slowly calming down, he told the doctor to go and nurse the wound on his hand while he stood up to remove all the fragile and sharp objects from the bed.

“Tell me, why are you calling him a ghost? Have you seen him before?” Lee Zheng had interrogated many criminals, and he knew that Jia Ming’s reaction earlier was not an act.

Jia Ming did not dare to speak, and his eyes kept darting around. Finally, after multiple questions from Lee Zheng, he sighed. “I saw his murder with my own eyes!”

“I was murdered?” Not only Lee Zheng, even Chen Ge was shocked. In the morning, he had stayed obediently at the Haunted House, and occasionally, he would wander out at night, but he was sure that he had not been killed in any shape or form.

“But he’s here in his physical body. Are you sure you did not just imagine this? When a person is under high stress situation or possesses a highly unstable mental faculty, hallucinations can happen quite often. After all, most of the time, our brain will only allow us to see what we wish to see.” Lee Zheng tried to analyze this from a professional angle.

“He’s not a living man; you have to trust me! He’s very dangerous! He’s really a ghost, a ghost back to claim lives!” The mention of Chen Ge caused Jia Ming’s emotions to unravel. “He will kill me. Those who get too close to him will die—I will die, no! Everyone in this room will die!”

Jia Ming yelled loudly, so loud in fact, the patients in the other rooms could hear him clearly. Both Lee Zheng and the doctor in the room frowned.

“It’s not beneficial for the patient’s health to allow him to keep yelling like this. I still suggest we should administer some anesthetic,” the doctor suggested again but was still denied by Lee Zheng.

This experienced officer was observing Jia Ming's tone and expression. He even paid attention to the way the man's pupils moved when he was speaking. He was surprised by his conclusion; Jia Ming did not appear to be lying.

Hearing Jia Ming's accusation, Chen Ge did not deny it instantly but instead started to stare back at Jia Ming with some interest in his eyes. This reaction made Lee Zheng rather speechless.

Normally, if the living human next to him was accused by the suspect to be dead, Lee Zheng would laugh and then drag the suspect to see a psychiatrist. However, this happened to Chen Ge, and Lee Zheng started to have doubts. The man next to him had a case file dedicated to him at the main station's filing room. He had helped the police solved many murder cases, and it was not wrong to say the man walked the same path as death. However, this did not mean that he suspected that Chen Ge was dead—he merely suspected that this case would dig up even scarier things.

“You said that I will kill you? Then what is my motive?”

When a person was suddenly scared, their body would react in involuntary ways. In the study of this field, Chen Ge was an expert. When he entered the door, his eyes had fallen directly on Jia Ming. The man reacted in extreme fear—whether it was his expression or tone, they were extremely authentic, but for Chen Ge, they were also a bit much.

Jia Ming's reaction was slightly different from the reaction of the visitors at his Haunted House when they were scared. If not for the fact that he scared people for a living, he would not have been able to tell the difference.

With a theory in his heart, the way that Chen Ge looked at Jia Ming changed from kindness to suspicion.

“You said that I will kill you, then you have to at least give me a reason to kill you, right?”

Everyone turned to look at Jia Ming. From an observer's point of view, Chen Ge indeed did not have any motive to harm Jia Ming. The police were not fools. Before they captured Jia Ming, they had already investigated his background, and there was no interaction between him and Chen Ge before they met.

He curled backward. After hearing Chen Ge, Jia Ming became even more afraid. "I can't say. If I do, then there is no way I'm leaving this hospital alive! He will kill me here! He will use methods that you can't ever imagine to welcome death. He is the devil, the devil that peels back human skin to feed on their flesh!"

"Stop changing the topic. If you don't give us an honest answer, I will leave you alone to stay in the same room as him," Lee Zheng warned.

"Am I that scary?" Chen Ge knew that Lee Zheng was purposely saying that to force out the truth, so he cooperated fully. He stood up to examine the windows and door. After making sure that all the openings were locked, he sat back down.

With his exit barred, Jia Ming hesitated before coming clean. "I once witnessed his murder, and while I was running away, he saw my face.

"When was this?" Lee Zheng waved to signal for the doctor to leave, and then he took out his recorder pen.

"It was around three or four years ago." Jia Ming looked at Chen Ge cowardly, and his voice was as soft as a mosquito—one would not be able to hear him unless one paid full attention. "I worked at an insurance company before this, and I was tasked with handling a car accident for a realtor's family. The people escaped unharmed, but the car was not so lucky. After the traffic police's investigation, it was revealed that the person was driving under influence, and the deepest scar on the vehicle was discerned by a professional to be the drunken driver's own doing, so following the company rules, I did not approve of his insurance claim.

“Because of that, the man brought people to come to the company to create trouble. The man came from a powerful background, so the manager did not dare make him an enemy. As such, he sacrificed me as the scapegoat. At the time, I was still a young man, unable to control my emotions. After the man sent his people to beat me up, naturally, I fought back, and in the end, both of us were sent to the police station.

“My wife went through a lot of hoops to save me. For that, she lost her job, and we lost a lot of money. I was deeply resentful, and all I wanted to do was to take revenge.

“That night, I sneaked into the man’s house. Initially, I just wanted to familiarize myself with the place, but I ran into something extremely scary.”

At this point, Jia Ming stopped. He looked at Chen Ge, and his forehead was covered with cold sweat.

“Why are you stopping now?” Lee Zheng and the female officer were both quite agitated.

“I ran into someone who was trying to kill the realtor.” Then he raised his finger, but he was too afraid to point it at Chen Ge. “I just wanted to take a small revenge on the man. I never thought to kill anyone. I had nothing to do with his death.”

The case suddenly became complicated because it involved another murder. Lee Zheng frowned. “Who is this realtor that you’re talking about? I think I know all the real estate agents in Jiujiang.”

“Jiang Long died from a car accident. We have the case file at the police station.” Lee Zheng was quick to point out the anomaly in Jia Ming’s story.

“You’re being tricked! You’re still being lied to! He was definitely murdered, and the killer is...” Jia Ming bit on the tip of his tongue and then pointed his finger at Chen Ge, “The kill is now sitting next to you!”

“You said I killed Jiang Long? How come I have no memory of this at all?” Chen Ge studied Jia Ming’s every move closely. He realized that the way Jia Ming bit on his tongue was quite similar to his own. When he was caught in a conundrum or had to remain calm while in a dangerous situation, he would do the same thing and used the acute pain to help pull in his focus.

Jia Ming did not dare answer Chen Ge. It was as if he had depleted all of his courage telling his story.

“What exactly did you see? Why did you say the murderer is Chen Ge?” That was what Lee Zheng was curious about. This was the first time that, after detaining the suspect, the suspect pointed out the witness as the murderer.

“You have to believe me. His face is forever seared into my mind! I can confidently say that it was him who I saw that night!” Jia Ming ignored Lee Zheng and continued in his own manner. “The first time that I went to find Jiang Long was around twelve midnight. That was merely to scout the place out. However, once I arrived at his place, I realized that I wouldn’t be able to get close to the man. There were too many guards and cameras.

“But at around 1 am, something seemed to happen inside the residential area. All the guards ran toward one of the houses, and in the chaos, I sneaked into the crowd and followed them.

“It was Jiang Long’s neighbor’s home that attracted the crowd. The two dogs raised by the family were brutally murdered, and the curious thing was that there was no sound to the murders.

“The guards quarantined the neighbor’s home and started the search for the dog killer. It was a noisy occasion, but Jiang Long’s home was weirdly silent. All the lights were off, and no one answered when the guards went to knock on the door.

“Jiang Long was probably not home, so I realized that this was my perfect chance. I could sneak into his house and run away with some valuable items as compensation. I circled around to the backyard, and after some trials, I realized that the wall was too tall for me to climb over, not to mention the cameras that were still operating. Just as I thought of giving up, I gave the backdoor a push, but to my shock, the door was not locked, just closed.

“After the door opened, before I could react, what I saw gave me the shock of my life.

“A man was kneeling on the ground, covered in blood. His expression was one of intense pain, and there was something forced down his throat. Even so, he was still coughing up blood. Standing next to him was a man who held a bloody knife between his two fingers, and he was speaking something in an awfully casual manner.”

Jia Ming turned to look at Chen Ge, and his fists tightened as veins popped on the back of his hands. “The bloody man kneeling on the ground was Jiang Long, and the man standing over him was him.”

“I was at Jiang Long’s bungalow? How many years ago was this?” Chen Ge had no memory of this at all. The man had to be lying, or the man that he saw was not Chen Ge but someone who looked like Chen Ge.

“The face matches perfectly. Your face is the stuff of my nightmares, so I cannot be mistaken.” Jia Ming was on the verge of tears. “Jiang Long noticed me and reached out to me for help. When he opened his mouth to beg, the blood trailed down his lips. Of course, I didn’t dare stay and turned to escape from the scene.”

“Wait a minute, I have a question. Jia Ming definitely died from car accident, and there was no knife wound on his body. The forensic doctor even confirmed that as his actual cause of death.” Lee Zheng was still on Chen Ge’s side. Of course, he was because Jia Ming was making no sense.

“That was the first time. After that, this devil started to haunt me. I kept having the same dream over consecutive nights. After I fell asleep, he would crawl out from underneath my bed and stand at my bedside to whisper into my ear that since Jiang Long had died, it would be my turn next.”

“You dream about what you think in the day. That’s quite normal.” Lee Zheng was familiar with Chen Ge, and from his perspective, it did not feel like Chen Ge would do something like hiding under someone’s bed and then slipping out to whisper a death threat.

“I know that you don’t believe me, but that was not a dream.” Jia Ming lowered his voice, and his tone turned weird. “Have you ever wondered what your reflection is doing when you stand before the mirror and lower your head to wash your face? Has he lowered his face reflecting your motion, or is he still standing in the mirror, looking down on you? Have you ever run into a situation where someone in the public restroom in the next cubicle asks for toilet paper from you, but when you came out, you realize that you were alone in the restroom all that time? Have you ever found that when you called a close friend or family, they kept saying there was disturbance on your side like there were many things standing around you?”

Jia Ming gripped the edge of the bed tighter and tighter. “I’ve experienced all of that.”

“I think I should call the doctor to come back in.” Lee Zheng was an atheist, and he had studied criminology and psychotherapy at college. He did not think that Jia Ming was lying, so in that case, his mind had to be wrong. He was probably suffering from paranoia.

“Before the doctor comes in, do you mind hearing a few stories?” Jia Ming tilted his head toward Chen Ge. “It is about me and him.”

“I had no idea you two were so close.” Lee Zheng nodded.

“After leaving Jiang Long’s home, I was too panicked to recognize the route home. I raced about aimlessly for half an hour before arriving at home. At the time, I was living at a rental, and my landlady was an old lady. She lived on the first floor, my family was on the second floor, and the third floor was a storage room.

“When I returned, it was already very late. After entering the place, the old lady’s pet cat kept screeching, not the kind of meowing that asked for a scratch on her back but a shrill and eerie noise.

“Probably woken up by her pet, the old lady opened her door and looked out. Then she told me one thing.

“Please don’t make such a loud noise when you two walk around. It’s already so late at night; what are you two doing out so late?”

Jia Ming still remembered the expression on the old lady’s face because he replicated it perfectly for his listeners.

“I apologized hurriedly to the old lady, but once I got to the second floor, I realized that something was wrong. I turned back to look, but there was only me in the dark corridor, so why did the old lady say ‘two’?”

“At the time, a chill quickly crawled up my spine. I ran to the door and searched for the key. You know how everything becomes more difficult when you’re panicking. I tried to get the door key, but it just refused to be found, and then something strange happened.

“There was a knocking sound coming from the third floor like a ball bouncing continuously against the ground.

“When I moved in, the old lady had already told me that the third floor was empty, and it was used to store big furniture and stuff. I had asked her why she hadn’t rented the place, and she had said that her son’s family once lived on the third floor, but the family of three had died in a car accident. Even though she could have rented the third floor, she didn’t want to because she wanted to keep it as a memory.

“Strange sounds came from the third floor that should have been vacant. I didn’t dare stay too long in the corridor. I finally found the key in my shirt pocket, and at that moment, the sound stopped. I turned to look up the stairs out of curiosity, and at the corner, turning up to the third floor, I saw a pair of gray-colored legs. Due to the angle, that was all I could see.

“I was spooked and opened the door as fast as I could.

“After entering the house, I was still panicking. I closed the outside security door, and just as I was about to close the inner door, curiosity killed the cat, and I leaned out slightly to glance at the legs on the stairs.

“Leaning against the gap on the door, I adjusted my angle and slowly squatted down. I moved my gaze up and saw the pair of legs once more. Just as I was continued to look up further, a boy’s head suddenly appeared in my sight!

“His posture was very strange. His legs were straight, but the head was almost touching the ground. That was not possible for the normal human body.

“I slammed the door shut and tried to switch the light on in the living room. I knew where the switch was, and as my hand reached over, before I touched the light, my finger brushed up against something. It felt like human skin. It felt like I was touching another human hand inside my own home.

“Flipping the switch, the lights came on, and it gave me the sense of security that I needed. I started to call for my wife, but there was no answer.

“I was so afraid, so I proceeded to turn on all the lights in the room. Eventually, I found a note left behind by my wife next to the living room phone.

“She said that my father-in-law was seriously ill, and the hospital had told her to go to the hospital. She had left the food for me in the fridge, and if I wanted to eat, I would need to heat it up in the oven.

“I put the note away. My wife wasn’t home. I looked at my own hand. I was sure that I’d touched another person’s fingers earlier. So, that could only mean that there was another person other than myself in the room.

“I didn’t dare to sleep. I checked every nook and cranny that could be a hiding place, but I came up with nothing. I tried to call my wife, but there was no answer.

“I was so afraid. I turned the television on and blasted the volume up to the highest. Then I brewed myself several cups of strong coffee. I planned to stay in the living room throughout the night and then move away from that horrible place the next morning.

“I wasn’t paying any attention to the show on the television. I kept refilling the coffee to fight the drowsiness that was coming. Finally, dawn came. Unable to hold it in anymore, I went to use the bathroom.

“After peeing, I stood before the sink, wishing to use some cold water to wash my face. Opening the faucet, watching the water flow, I started to panic like someone was observing me. I suspected that the person who had been following me was hiding inside the bathroom. I glanced around the room out of the corner of my eye, but the bathroom was too small for anyone to hide in.

“Straightening up, I looked at the haggard reflection of myself in the mirror. I shook my head and decided to move right there and then, moving somewhere where there were more people.

“Putting down the towel, I couldn’t shake the feeling that something was wrong. Without a chance to think about it, the phone rang. My soul jumped out of my body. I hurried to answer it—my wife was calling.

“The sky was already bright, and my wife said that she had called me many times throughout the night. She had been very worried because no one answered.

“When she said that, I was sweating bullets. It was she who had refused to answer my numerous calls that night, not the other way around.

“I glanced subconsciously at the phone cable and was about to tell her what had happened when she suddenly asked me if there was someone in the room with me. She heard someone talking incessantly, and it sounded curiously like my father-in-law. Apparently, he was saying, ‘Look behind you, look behind you...’

“I quickly whipped my head around, but there was no one there. Looking into the bathroom, I could only see my reflection, standing with the phone in his hands, looking right at me.

“I told my wife to stay at the hospital to accompany my father-in-law. After hanging up, I sat back down, but the more I thought about it, the more unsettled I became.”

Chapter 598 - Someone Behind Me

Chapter 598: Someone Behind Me

“Holding the tea cup, I thought about it for a long time until I saw the reflection that was on the surface of the coffee. When I looked down into the cup, the reflection was also looking back at me.

“Then I suddenly realized, when I was turning back to look at the mirror earlier, my reflection in the mirror didn’t have his neck turned? He was standing facing me, just like...”

For a moment, Jia Ming lost the ability to speak, like something was wrapping its hands around his neck. His eyes were overflowing with terror.

“A chill rose up behind me, and the living room sofa was facing away from the toilet. I could sense something behind me! It was like someone was standing there!

“I didn’t dare to turn around. Turning the cup, my eyes slowly moved down. I wanted to see through the reflection what was behind me.

“As the cup turned, the chill approached me. The hair on the back of my neck stood on end, and just as I was about to catch a glimpse in the water, the skin that was exposed on the back of my neck felt something, like someone had lowered their hair, letting it fall over my skin.

“My arms shivered. Without being able to help it, the cup slipped from my fingers, and the coffee splashed everywhere. Screaming, I grabbed the ashtray and fruit plate on the table and flung them behind me as I skipped over the furniture, rushing to the door. Holding the doorknob with both hands, I turned back to look. There was nothing else in the room. The only thing different was the disturbance of the television signal. There was no video, only a flickering blue and white background.

“The surroundings were so quiet that I could hear the static coming from the television. I didn't dare stay inside the room for too long—I wanted to escape, but I started to have second thoughts, remembering the boy that I saw on the stairs in the impossibly position. I was afraid that he was just on the other side of the door.

“The corridor wasn't safe, but neither was the room. I didn't know what to do. I froze, holding the doorknob.

“Just as I was hesitating, the image on the television started to flicker faster and faster. I noticed that, amid the changing images, a woman's face was starting to form!

“That was all the motivation I needed to yank the door open and run. Without stopping to look around, I dashed right to the street. But the dark streetlight still unable to provide me with any sense of security. I charged ahead like a mindless madman until the energy left me, and I collapsed on the ground. Surrounded by the streetlights, I felt slightly better.”

When he told the story, Jia Ming's forehead and back were drenched in cold sweat, and none of the people in the room had a normal expression. The tone of Jia Ming's voice, combined with his actual exposition of terror, drew his listeners into the scene.

The female officer gripped the pen that she was holding tighter. Lee Zheng turned to glance at Chen Ge. “What is your opinion? Before Doctor Gao disappeared, he once told me that you were quite good at psychology. What do you think that the ghost he saw represents?”

“His story is very interesting. I can give it a simple analysis.” Chen Ge stood up and moved to sit next to the bed. “Jia Ming started his story by saying that he saw Jiang Long being assaulted by someone at his bungalow. The person used a knife and threatened Jiang Long to do something extremely painful, and he said confidently that the person was me, or at least looked similar to me.

“After coming across that, he raced back to his home. When he was in the corridor, the senior landlady told him, ‘Please don't make such a loud noise when you two walk around. It's already so late at night; what are you two doing out so late?’

“This means that the old lady saw more than Jia Ming in the corridor, and that second person was very close to Jia Ming! So close that the elder thought that person was Jia Ming's friend.”

Chen Ge smiled at Jia Ming.

“If he’s telling the truth, then this means that from then on, there was already someone or something following him, and this person is most likely the bad guy that he saw at the bungalow—the ‘Chen Ge’ who threatened Jiang Long with a knife. The difficulty of trailing the man without being noticed and how I managed to trick him and failed to hide myself from the detection of an old lady aside, we shall assume that what he’s saying is real so that we can continue the analysis.

“Then, he ran to the second floor where his home was. When he opened the door, he saw a little boy’s legs and head on the corner of the stairs to the third floor. Plus, the location where the boy appeared was quite interesting.

“Jia Ming told us the old lady said that her son’s family of three died in a car accident, and the third floor was originally occupied by them. She didn’t want to rent it to keep as a keepsake.

“We’ll make the bold assumption that the boy that Jia Ming saw was the old lady’s grandson, the boy who died in the accident. Then the strange thing was, Jia Ming had stayed there for so long, but he had not seen the boy before. So, what changed that night so that he was able to see the boy?”

Chen Ge was serious with his analysis, but from Lee Zheng and the female officer’s perspective, it was like they were listening to a mental patient giving counselling to another mental patient.

“The answer is very simple because the boy could see the thing following Jia Ming as well. Pay attention to how the boy appeared. He was standing at the corner with his head lowered to the ground like he was spying. This means that the thing following Jia Ming was much scarier than the boy.” Chen Ge had the smile on his face. “A human scaring a ghost, that is the first time I’ve heard something like that.

“There’s another noteworthy detail after he entered the door. When Jia Ming noticed that his reflection in the mirror was not reflecting the action that he was doing in real life, he felt something coming from behind him. Just as he prepared to turn the cup to see who it was, his neck was touched by something similar to a curtain of hair.”

Chen Ge paused.

“This is important because I have short hair. Most guys have short hair. When we lower our head, it is impossible for our hair to be long enough to fall onto the back of his neck. In other words, it should be a woman, or rather a woman ghost who was standing behind him.

“Then, when he prepared to escape the room, he saw the issue with the television. The images started to flicker, and a woman’s face appeared. From all the observations so far, even if there was a ghost in the room, it should have been a female ghost. Combining with the information that we gathered earlier, the real identity of this female ghost should be none other than the landlady’s daughter-in-law.

“In Jia Ming’s story, two ghosts were featured, and they were related to the story that his landlady once told him. This probably happened because something happened to Jia Ming that night, causing him great psychological stress. This placed mental subversion on his mind, causing him to see things where there were none. This could explain him drawing out the ghosts from the story that he had once heard.”

Chen Ge used some professional terms that he had learned from Doctor Gao before. He had no idea what they meant exactly, but it did help to make him sound professional.

With his explanation, Lee Zheng and the female officer’s expression softened, and they kept nodding. Compared to the supernatural, they had an easier time believing that something was wrong with Jia Ming mentally.

After clearing his name, Chen Ge turned to look at Jia Ming. Perhaps his gaze reminded Jia Ming of something scary, or maybe Jia Ming sensed danger from him, but his body suddenly started to spasm before fainting completely.

“I didn’t even touch him.” Chen Ge raised his hands and stood up. As the doctors and nurses bustled around Jia Ming, Chen Ge slowly stepped away. He did not really tell the police everything. Actually, it was his opinion that Jia Ming was not lying.

The person that looked like Chen Ge should be the shadow. As for why he looked like Chen Ge, Chen Ge himself had no clue.

What Jia Ming said later was probably all real. The shadow followed him back to his home and was spotted by the landlady, which alerted the souls of the family living on the third floor.

The boy was the landlady’s grandson, and the female ghost was the landlady’s daughter-in-law. There should be a male ghost that Jia Ming did not encounter.

The shadow followed Jia Ming home, and the three souls should be trying to protect him, but the difference in power was too big, so they could only use their own way to remind him, to make him realize the danger he was in.

Chen Ge knew that Jia Ming was not lying. In any case, he would get himself involved because he could not confirm whether the shadow was still on Jia Ming or not. The shadow was very cunning, and this could be his way of making use of the police.

To prove whether Jia Ming was lying or not should be very simple.

After calling Lee Zheng out of the room to get the address for Jia Ming's rental home, Chen Ge left the hospital. He wanted to ask them in person, he wanted to know what the old lady saw that night, and he wanted to find the souls to ask them how they felt that night.

The theme park opened at 9 am, so Chen Ge did not have much time left. He decided to continue to investigation right there and then.

“Inspector Lee, don’t let your guard down. This man is very dangerous, and he is definitely not as harmless as he makes himself out to be. It is unwise to treat him like a normal mental patient.” Chen Ge had no idea when Jia Ming would wake up. He shared a few words with Lee Zheng and then left the hospital.

He hailed a taxi to get to Jia Ming’s first rental home. The sun was just coming up, and there were few people on the street. Occasionally, a few cars would pass by, but that was all. Chen Ge had not caught any sleep the previous night. He had first gone to the special education school to chase after the water ghost and then dived into the Eastern Jiujiang Dam to salvage the body before finally going to the hospital to help with the police’s investigation of Jia Ming. In other words, he had put his night to optimal use. There was not one second that had gone to waste.

His head was feeling light as drowsiness came at him like waves. Chen Ge got a quick forty winks in the cab, and the driver woke him up when they arrived at the destination. Alas, the quick nap did not prove to be useful; if anything, it only made Chen Ge feel heavier and slower. It was as if his brain was filled with lead.

He rubbed his face and walked into the small alley. A draft of cold wind buffeted his face. Perhaps it was how the buildings were built, but the sun had a hard time showering its rays into the alley.

“No wonder Jia Ming did not dare stop even for a moment after he escaped from his building. He only dared do so after he ran out into the main street.”

This was an old residential area, and the surrounding buildings were generally quite low. Most of them were buildings with only two or three stories. They looked worn and old, and some of them even had the term 'to be demolished' painted on the walls in red.

"The story that Jia Ming told at the hospital should have happened a few years ago. I hope the old lady hasn't moved and the building is still there."

He followed the address provided by Lee Zheng and moved in and out of the alleys for a long time before he found the old lady's home. The neighbors on the left and right had already moved away, and there was a large hole in one of the walls. From the looks of it, this place had been abandoned for a long time already.

"This place sure was not easy to find." Chen Ge entered the corridor and noted the pots of flowers placed in the corners. However, due to the lack of sunlight, most of the flowers had wilted, and the stems were old, thin, and yellow.

"Is anyone home?" Chen Ge knocked on the door on the first floor, and he called out softly. There was no answer, but his own echo reverberating in the first-floor corridor. He turned to look up the stairs. For some reason, Chen Ge felt like there was something off about the place. He tried to pull on the door, and the security door was pulled back just like that.

"It's not even locked?" Curious, Chen Ge pulled the door completely open. A heady wave of mold rushed out from within. The room was filled to the brim with old furniture. The sofa was the type that had been in fashion twenty years ago, the type with cloth upholstery. Even the cuckoo clock on the wall and the low dining table looked quite worn already.

"There is no dust on the doorknob, and the clock in this room is wound to be able to run punctually, so there should be someone who still lives here."

Without getting the permission, Chen Ge would not be rude enough to trespass into someone's home. He called again at the threshold of the door, but there was still no reply. However, there was a strange noise that came from the ceiling. It sounded like a deflated rubber ball rolling on the ground.

"That came from the third floor." Chen Ge walked up the stairs. When he passed the second floor, he noticed that the door of the second-floor room was opened, but no strange smell drifted out from it, like the place was regularly cleaned.

After stopping for a while at the second floor, Chen Ge continued to move upward. The window at the corner of the stairs was covered up by a black cloth. There was no light on the wall, so even though the sun was already up outside, it was still as dark as night inside.

“Is someone there?” A strange voice drifted into his ears. Chen Ge was like the hapless main character of those horror movies as he took one step after another toward the source of the strange noise. Stepping on the creaking steps, his body moved gradually into the darkness. He gripped the handrail, feeling the chill that came from the center of his palms.

There was no light at all on the third floor of the old building. Chen Ge took out his phone and activated the flashlight. He shone the light at the place that the sound came from. When the light fell on the spot, there was something that slithered past in a flash.

Chen Ge tensed up as he scanned the entirety of the third floor. The doors on the floor had all been removed from their hinges, and the place was filled with various items. The most conspicuous object of all was a piano covered in a layer of dust. There were many keys that were missing, and it looked like an old man with many missing teeth opening his lips.

“They should be a quite well-off family. After all, they own a three-story building and could even afford a luxury item like a piano.”

Having walked up to the piano, Chen Ge pressed on a few of the keys. The melody that he expected to come from the piano did not show up.

Chen Ge looked into the piano, and a bunch of hair was stuck inside it. Perhaps he had imagined it, but for a moment, Chen Ge felt like the hair was moving as it curled deeper inside the piano.

Reaching into the piano, Chen Ge calmly pulled out a handful of hair. “There is white hair and black hair. The ends are all neat and clean, so they should have been cut off, not pulled off. Is this the old landlady’s special collection? But why would she collect these?”

The landlady’s daughter-in-law was young when she died, so her hair had not gone white.

“Why would the old lady shove so many reams of hair into the piano?” Chen Ge tossed the hair that he was holding back into the piano. As he pulled his arm back, the corner of his eyes caught the vision of a gray face amid the sea of hair. It seemed to be watching

Chen Ge from the cover of the hair.

“What was that?” The third floor was reserved for the souls, so it was not unusual for him to encounter something supernatural. Chen Ge did not panic. He placed his phone to the side, aiming the flashlight inside the piano. Then he reached into the pile of hair with his two hands and started to search. “Are you still in there?”

No one knew what was hiding under the pile, and no one knew what kind of treasure he could come up with. However, the feeling of bare skin touching against the hair did not feel so good. He rummaged through it for a long time, but Chen Ge failed to find the person. He pulled back and looked at the clock sitting at the side. The clock looked similar to the one in the old lady’s room on the first floor, but for this one, only the second hand on the clock face was moving.

It turned again and again, but the time shown on the clock was always stuck at 3:44.

“Is it 3:44 am or pm? And what exactly happens at this particular time in the day?”

Just as Chen Ge’s attention was distracted by the clock, there was something that slithered out from underneath the piano. The sound of a ball bouncing returned, and when Chen Ge picked up on it, the sound had moved to the second floor.

Chen Ge returned to the second floor. He could not shake the feeling that something or someone was watching his back. The sound disappeared once Chen Ge arrived on the second floor, but strangely enough, the angle that the door was left open was different from before.

“It ran to hide inside the room?” Chen Ge pushed open the door to the room that was featured in Jia Ming’s story. However, different from Jia Ming’s description, all the windows in this room was boarded up. Even though the place was clean, there was just a creepy feeling about the location.

Entering the room, Chen Ge rushed toward the bathroom where the Yin energy was the heaviest. Pushing the door open, he scanned the place roughly and then stopped before the mirror. Chen Ge stood there and stared at his own reflection in the mirror for a long time.

If a person stared at their reflection for a long time, their brain would create the impression that the reflection in the mirror was becoming more and more unlike them. In extreme cases, there might even be a sense of indescribable strangeness and fear.

Chen Ge stared at the mirror for a full five minutes, but he could not tell what was wrong with the mirror. He believed that after the shadow accomplished his purpose, he left immediately and did not leave behind any trace or trap in the mirror. But out of concern for being thorough, before he left, Chen Ge used his Yin Yang Vision and focused on the mirror one last time. As his eyes narrowed, he caught sight of a pair of gray legs.

It was a boy whose head had almost fallen to the ground. He was standing at the door to the bathroom, looking at him.

Whipping his body around, Chen Ge turned but could not see anything. He looked at the mirror again, but this time, even with the use of the Yin Yang Vision, the boy did not show up in the mirror anymore.

“Where did he go?” Chen Ge walked out of the bathroom to the living room, and his expression shifted. The door leading out of the living room was closed. The windows were boarded up, and now, the door was closed. The air in the room became so stale and heavy that it pressed down on Chen Ge.

“Is this that boy’s doing?” He walked to the door and turned the doorknob. He realized that the door was locked, and it would not be able to open without the use of a key. Just as Chen Ge was figuring out what to do with the lock, a sound came from the corner of the living room. Then, the sound of static entered Chen Ge’s ears.

He turned to look, and in the dark room, the originally closed television was switched on. A collection of twisted blue and white images appeared on screen, and occasionally, it would flicker.

“This scene appeared in Jia Ming’s story before.” Chen Ge sounded calm, but his heart was actually racing. Before he finished, the flickering on the television screen turned intense, and the rough shape of a shadow started to appear.

The shadow appeared like it was slowly approaching Chen Ge. Initially, it was only the size of a fist, but eventually, it grew to the size of a brain. As she drew closer, Chen Ge managed to get a clearer look.

It was the shape of a woman, and after each flicker on the screen, this shadowy woman would get closer to him, and Chen Ge's heart would start to involuntarily pick up in speed.

When the woman became the size of an actual person and the television screen was not big enough to hold her, Chen Ge stopped hesitating. He reached his hands back and mumbled two words on his lips. "Xu Yin!"

His fingers searched behind him, but he found nothing, and Chen Ge's heart skipped a beat. He suddenly remembered that he had received a call from Lee Zheng that morning to go to the hospital to help with their investigation.

Due to the time crunch and the fact that his backpack was drenched from his dip at the dam, Chen Ge had not taken his backpack with him. He figured that since he was going to meet the police, no danger was going to come to him.

His frozen fingers hung behind him, and Chen Ge slowly raised his head to look at the television. Cold sweat glided down his face as his eyes slowly moved up. He finally got the television screen in his sight. Only the blue and white images remained on screen—the shadow of the woman had already disappeared.

Chen Ge sighed in relief, but before he could catch another breath, there was a numbness coming from the back of his neck like someone had accidentally brushed their hair against his skin.

His eyes twitched, and Chen Ge remembered hearing this part in Jia Ming's story as well.

He slowly turned around, and from the corner of his eyes, he saw a pair of starkly white eyes looking at him from behind.

The body that had shown up in the television was twisted in impossible angles, and her lips cracked open. The woman whose eyes were popping out of their sockets was standing behind him.

His face twitched slightly, and Chen Ge felt the air around him frozen. He stared at the woman's harried hair that looked like it was brutally tussled and slowly took a step back.

He tripped on something, and Chen Ge fell into the sofa. He looked at the approaching ghostly shadow and almost instinctively said, "Will you believe me if I say I've come here to help you?"

The dirty hair swayed with the rhythm of the wind. The sound of bones grinding came from the woman's throat. She moved extremely fast, and while Chen Ge spoke, she was already pressing against him. From the way she reacted, it did not seem like she was in the mood to listen to what Chen Ge had to say.

"I haven't felt this for so long." Cold sweat kept pouring like he was dancing on the edge of a cliff. Chen Ge leaned against the back of the sofa while gripping the armrests as tight as he could. "I don't mean to offend you. I came here just to find the truth of something that happened here some time ago! There was a tenant in this room who was haunted by an evil spirit several years ago. Back then, you showed up to warn him of the danger that he was in, and if he did not find out the reason why, he would not be long for this world!"

If this was any other person, they would be blubbing by then or screaming mindlessly. But Chen Ge was different. He said everything that he wanted to in the shortest amount of time. The ghost did not press closer, and Chen Ge sighed in relief. He adjusted his posture to be more comfortable, and as he moved his neck, he noticed a boy standing next to him.

The boy's skin was startling ashy, and his spine was snapped, so his head hung around his chest. His eyes moved up and down as he gave Chen Ge a close inspection.

"Is this your son? He's such a little cutie..." Chen Ge peeled his lips back to reveal a smile. He knew that the souls here did not have much impression of Jia Ming, so after a brief hesitation, he quickly added, "That tenant was once my best friend. He told me the best time of his life was spent at this old building. The senior landlady treated him very well, and he treasured this part of his memory. But recently, it seems like he's changed into a completely different person. He keeps rambling on about destroying everything that was good in the world to regain control of himself. Initially, I thought he was just kidding, but reality proved that I was wrong. If I didn't call the police to stop him last night, he would have shown up here with a knife already!"

Stuck between the two ghosts, Chen Ge had no idea what he was talking about, but he knew to push all the blame onto Jia Ming. The ghosts there should have seen the shadow before, so Chen Ge believed that if he kept bringing up the incident from several years ago, it should be enough to jog their memory.

He did not need to spend all of his effort in trying to persuade the spirits—he only needed a chance from them to explain himself and to not come for his life when he was so vulnerable. Then, everything else would be a piece of cake.

"Even now, I can't believe that my dear friend has snapped like that. Therefore, I rushed here to warn the senior landlady about the danger she's in. There's a monster possessing my friend's body that's coming after her!" The more he talked, the more agitated he became, and gradually, that overcame the terror that Chen Ge felt. "The old lady is a kind person, and kindness should not be repaid with harm or vengeance!"

For the spirits in the old building, Jia Ming was nothing more than a passing tenant, but their connection to the old lady was different; she was their family. After saying all that, the boy next to him turned to look at the female ghost. Her expressions kept shifting, so Chen Ge could not tell what she was thinking.

His mind moved, and after combining her previous experience, he came up with three different solutions to resolve the conundrum that he was in. However, just as he was about to put one of them into action, the woman and the boy suddenly retreated to the sides and disappeared.

The door was pushed open, and a seventy or eighty year old granny appeared at the door, holding the key in her gnarled hand. She mumbled, "Qian Qian? Is that you?"

The old lady's face, which was filled with wrinkles, looked around the room with anticipation before falling on Chen Ge, who was sprawled on the sofa.

"Please let me explain!" Chen Ge quickly stood up to walk toward the old lady, but his pant leg was pulled back. He turned to look and saw the boy hiding behind the sofa. He was grapping Chen Ge's leg, and that curious head turned left and right like he was warning Chen Ge from revealing their presence to the old lady.

“Don’t worry, but who were you talking to?”

Even though the lady was old, she was not a bit senile. She entered the room and peered behind Chen Ge. By then, the woman and the boy had already disappeared.

“Was I talking earlier?” Seeing the old lady enter the room, Chen Ge said softly, “Granny, please don’t misunderstand. I’m not a burglar—I just came here to ask you some questions. I saw the door was unlocked, so I thought I’d come in here to find you, but the wind suddenly picked up and slammed the door shut from outside.”

“You’re telling me it was the wind that locked the door?” The old lady was not easily tricked. She looked at Chen Ge and reached into her pocket. Chen Ge thought that she was going to grab some weapon to defend herself, so he was on high alert, but as it turned out, she was merely going to hand him a clean handkerchief. “Use this to wipe away your sweat. It’s fine even if you’re a burglar—there’s nothing here worth stealing anyway.”

“Granny, you’re such a nice person.” Chen Ge relaxed completely and decided to come clean. “I have a friend who once rented this room from you, but he’s in a bad place right now. He keeps saying that there’s another person living inside him and kept rambling about destroying all the good memories in his life...”

“You’re also here because of Jia Ming?” The old lady interrupted him.

He frowned, and Chen Ge quickly asked, “Someone has been here asking about him before me?”

“A few days ago, a police officer with the surname Yan came to confirm some things with me.”

“Captain Yan? What questions did he ask?” Chen Ge was instantly reminded of Captain Yan.

“Mostly about my impression of Jia Ming. The child came from the countryside. He was honest and hardworking, and the only negative traits were his stubbornness and misfortune.” A trace of melancholy entered the old lady’s voice with the mention of Jia Ming.

“Then did he ask why Jia Ming moved away?” Chen Ge realized that he had underestimated the police. Before Jia Ming was detained, Captain Yan had already unearthed the man's background and history.

"He did, but honestly, even I don't know why the child was in such a hurry to move. He didn't even take his luggage or affects with him. I wanted to mail them to him, but he rejected me."

"Then can you still remember what happened the night before he moved? It should have been a day when he returned home very late at night." Chen Ge wanted to corroborate Jia Ming's story with the old lady's account.

"I was inside my room that night and didn't..." The old lady suddenly paused, and she stared at Chen Ge's face for a very long time. "Have we met somewhere before?"

"Have we met?" This time, Chen Ge was genuinely surprised.

"Yes, I think I remember now. That night, I heard Jia Ming walking in the house, and I thought that he was in an argument with Xiao Ling, so I planned to mediate the argument for them. But when I got to the second floor, I saw someone standing at his door." The old lady slowly raised her thin and desiccated arm to point at Chen Ge. "It was you; you were the one who was standing at his door that night!"

The old lady panicked, based on the usual development, Chen Ge would reveal a devilish smirk and then say something like, 'Since you've seen my face, I can't let you live to tell another soul.' But in reality, Chen Ge voluntarily moved away from the old lady, and he started to fall into a deep contemplation.

The old lady had also seen someone who looked exactly like Chen Ge. This was proof that the shadow was related to Chen Ge, or at least they looked physically the same.

"No wonder the boy and the woman kept staring at my face when they saw me—they should have received quite a shock as well," Chen Ge grumbled softly to himself and then turned to look at the old lady. "Granny, that night, you saw someone who looked just like me. Was he doing anything weird?"

The old lady shook her head. "All he did was just standing there. Oh right, I was carrying a flashlight with me that night, but after the light fell on him, I realized that he did not seem to possess a shadow."

“A shadowless man?” If it was a living person, he should have had a shadow, unless he was not a living human, or he was someone’s shadow out on a ride. Chen Ge decided to confirm it with the old lady again. “Granny, are you sure you’re not mistaken?”

“Yes.” In the old lady’s memory, that person looked just like Chen Ge. She stared at Chen Ge, and a weird feeling overwhelmed her. “That day, he was just standing outside the door. I asked him what he was doing, but he didn’t reply. He carried on mumbling someone’s name on his lips.”

“Someone’s name? Can you remember what name it was?” To clarify the suspicion in the old lady’s mind, Chen Ge took out his phone and shone the light on himself to show that he still had his shadow with him. “Granny, I come with a shadow. Look. The person you saw merely had the same face as I do.”

“My memory eludes me. I’ll call you to tell you if I remember it.” The old lady exchanged phone numbers with Chen Ge.

“Granny, other than this, can you remember anything else about this person? How long did he stand at the door? After he left, were there any changes at this building?” Chen Ge was afraid that the shadow might have left a trap in the building. After all, his adversary had the whole of Eastern Jiujiang roped into his plot, so Chen Ge could not be too careful.

the building, but nothing was missing. Yet, that feeling wouldn't go away, and I wouldn't say it wasn't responsible for my lack of sleep."

"You feel like something is missing?"

"I've told you everything I need to. When you leave, remember to close the door for me." The conversation with Chen Ge seemed to remind the old lady of her sad memory, so she shuffled out, unwilling to continue the conversation anymore. Chen Ge was about to leave with the old lady when he felt a tug on his shirt.

Turning back to look, he saw five crooked fingers holding the edge of his shirt, and then the woman crawled out from underneath the coffee table.

"I'm not going to harm her..." Chen Ge's eyes scanned the woman and the boy; he was suddenly reminded of something. After he entered this building, he had only encountered the woman and the child, but he did not come across the old lady's son. "A family of three got into a car accident. The wife and the son remained in this building, so there is no reason for the husband not to be here as well."

He related that to what the old lady had said earlier. After the shadow left, she had felt like she was missing something important. Could the spirit of her son have been kidnapped by the shadow?

Chen Ge intended to find out. After a moment's silence, he asked, "A few years back, you should have encountered an evil spirit that looked like me. Can you tell me everything you know about him?"

The two ghosts stayed away from him. Their eyes studied Chen Ge closely, and they were thinking about something.

"If I don't kill him, one day, I'll be killed by him. If you were once harmed by him, then we should be friends because we have the same enemy." Chen Ge leaned down and actively reached out his hands to hold the woman's bloody and deformed fingers. "I can help you, and I'm not just staying that for fun."

When the female ghost sensed Chen Ge's intention to shake hands with her, she immediately retreated. Seconds later, the boy ran into the bedroom and dragged out a broken schoolbag from under the bed. He took out a pen and paper and placed them on the coffee table. The woman's hair curled around the pen, and crooked words started to form on the paper.

“He’s alive, not completely dead. The shadow is just a part of him. My husband told us to leave, and he stayed back to help us escape. He ate my husband—he’s growing stronger.” Chen Ge read the words on the paper.

“What does it mean by he’s alive? The shadow’s physical form is still alive? He’s a living human? But how could a person consume a ghost?” Chen Ge had no idea what the woman meant by dead, but he believed that it had a different definition from the medical understanding of dead. However, even so, the information was already shocking enough for Chen Ge. “The shadow’s real form couldn’t be defined as a ghost, or rather, he’s different from a normal ghost. This enemy sure is a confusing one.”

When he battled with the ghost stories society, even though the members were highly mysterious, at least Chen Ge could confirm that they were all living humans. The society was made up of living humans, and the ghosts were technically only tools. Yet, the feeling that this mastermind in Eastern Jiujiang gave Chen Ge was completely different. Even now, he could not tell whether the culprit was a ghost or a man. After reading the woman’s message, that confusion had only deepened.

“Is that all?” Chen Ge put down the paper, and the woman controlled the pen to start writing again. “When he ate my husband, he said, with each death, the resentment in his heart would grow stronger, and each consumption would lead him closer to that man. One day, he would return to Western Jiujiang to personally push open that door.”

The written words had little semblance of logic, but it caused Chen Ge’s hair to rise. These sentences revealed plenty of information, especially the last sentence, where the shadow said that he wanted to personally open the door in Western Jiujiang. Chen Ge greatly suspected that the door in question was none other than the one inside the toilet at the Haunted House.

The business at the Haunted House was on the rise, but once the door in the toilet was opened, things would change overnight. Every effort that he had made after obtaining the black phone would go to waste.

“Just who is this person?” The door at the Haunted House was Chen Ge’s bottom line. He would fight to the death with whoever dared target that door. There was no room for negotiation.

The woman had no idea what Chen Ge was thinking. She continued to write on the paper. "There are ten locales in Eastern Jiujiang that form the background for the scariest ghost stories. The man has consumed the ghosts of five of these locales, and he was injured for the first time at White Dragon Cave Tunnel. The shadow will only show up at night, and he hates light and children's crying."

After writing all that, the woman looked at Chen Ge and picked up the boy before they both disappeared.

"The people in Eastern Jiujiang are generally superstitious, and I've heard about these ten ghost stories before, but I had no idea only five of them remained. Then again, the first time that the shadow hit a roadblock was at the White Dragon Cave Tunnel, and last night, Jia Ming just so happened to be found fainted at the mouth of the tunnel. Could it have been on purpose that he fainted there to lure me into the tunnel to investigate and use my hand to deal with his enemy?" The shadow was an extremely cunning person in Chen Ge's mind, so he had to consider everything from the worst possible angle.

"But I can use his weakness of hating light and children's crying somehow, I'm sure." Chen Ge shoved the paper on the table into his pocket. When he prepared to leave, he remembered that he had forgotten to ask whether the mother and son wished to come with him or not, to move to somewhere more comfortable.

After some thought, Chen Ge took out another piece of paper from the boy's bag, and he used the pen used by the woman earlier to leave this message. "If you run into any trouble, feel free to come find me at New Century Park's Haunted House in Western Jiujiang. Please give it some thought. The boy is not young, and I have many professional teachers and children his age at my Haunted House. You should think about his future."

He placed the paper in the most conspicuous spot and turned to leave the room. His steps were soft, a result of his many Trial Missions. When he reached the first floor, the door to the old lady's room suddenly opened.

"Granny? How can I help you?"

The old lady looked at Chen Ge. Her lips moved, but eventually, she shook her head and returned to her room.

Chen Ge stood at the door, and he could guess that the old lady already knew that her family had not left, but neither party was willing to be open about it.

“They also wouldn’t wish for you to stay in this lonely world alone.”

Leaving the building, Chen Ge hailed a cab back to theme park and a new day began.

Chapter 602: Ghost Realm

Chen Ge arrived at New Century Park at around 8:40 am. The park was still not yet open, but there were already many waiting visitors at the entrance. Seeing the visitors' excited faces as they chatted among themselves, Chen Ge revealed a large smile. Knowing that his work was able to bring the visitors joy and help them chase away their unhappiness, it made him feel very accomplished.

Amid the crowd, Chen Ge spotted some familiar faces, and they often pulled the topic back to the Haunted House.

The return of many visitors proved that Chen Ge's decision to delineate the scary scenarios into different categories was a correct one. Those who had challenged a less scary scenario would definitely be interested in the scarier ones. With the 'encouragement' from their friends, the chance for them to return would be high.

The small app designed by Director Luo for the Haunted House was a runaway success, too. Not only the visitors of the Haunted House, even many supernatural fans and alternative culture researchers on the internet also downloaded it. The app looked like it was on its way to become the biggest social community for Haunted House lovers in the nation.

The daily download number and active user number was still climbing, and Chen Ge heard Director Luo had been approached by many advertisers for cooperation, but he had rejected all of them. Director Luo had a clear vision. The Haunted House was the park's main attraction, and the app was its support. Everything was to uphold and support the service of the Haunted House, so he would never bring in a negative user experience for the sake of advertising money.

"Boss, where did you go this time?" Xu Wan and Xiao Gu stood next to the gates, one on the left, the other on the right, like a pair of door guardians.

“It’s too complicated to explain. Just pay attention to the news and you’ll see.” Chen Ge’s answer was short and to the point.

“Is it the crime and legal channel?” Even though Xiao Gu had not worked at the Haunted House for long, he had gotten used to his boss’ ‘hobbies’. Now, he shared his room with some roommates, and his roommates were confused by his demeanor because most teenagers their age would spend time playing games or watching videos, but Gu Feiyu would plant himself in front of the television, watching the local crime news. His roommates could not understand Xiao Gu like how a normal person could not understand one’s feeling from having to find one’s own boss appear on the local crime news again and again.

After putting on the make-up for Xiao Gu and Xu Wan, the theme park officially opened for the day. Uncle Xu and the workers helped maintain the order while Chen Ge finally got the chance to rest. Seeing the visitors move in and out, Chen Ge had a sudden realization that he was living quite a comfortable life.

“The Haunted House depends on the unknown and novelty to attract the visitors. Only by continually unlocking new scenarios will I be able to maintain its livelihood.”

Chen Ge took out the phone and looked through the missions. The deadline for the Ghost of the Afterlife was coming to an end, and Chen Ge would not give up on this four-star scenario.

“I can’t drag this out any further. I need to go to White Dragon Cave Tunnel tonight to have a chat with the woman caught in the car accident. Since she has gotten into an altercation with the shadow before, it shouldn’t be too difficult to communicate with her.” Chen Ge put down the black phone and turned to glance at his own phone. “Today’s weather forecast is not bad, but there is supposed to be heavy rain tomorrow night. I should make use of that opportunity to take the last bus on the Route 104 out for a spin. Even if I don’t run into the woman in the raincoat, I have nothing to lose if I can find some passengers.”

He found a pen and paper to make some notes. “Tonight, I’ll go to White Dragon Cave Tunnel to finish the three-star mission, and tomorrow, I’ll go find the woman in the raincoat and purchase a batch of strong lights. Then the night after tomorrow, with all the preparation done, I’ll bring all of my employees to Li Wan City to challenge that 3.5-star mission.”

Xiao Bu had once warned Chen Ge that he would die if he stepped into Li Wan City again. He had no idea what he would face in Li Wan City, but there would be nothing wrong if he went fully prepared.

“Xiao Chen, what are you so busy with?” Uncle Xu’s voice came from the Haunted House door. Due to his cowardice, he had never once stepped into Chen Ge’s Haunted House before.

“Uncle Xu, how can I help you?”

“Director Luo is looking for you.”

After sending the visitors into the scenario, Chen Ge put away the paper and raced out of the Haunted House. Not far away, Director Luo was chatting with a group of visitors in a casual outfit. Their conversation was lively, interspersed by laughter. The few visitors probably did not expect this middle-aged man who looked so friendly and kind to be the leader of the entire theme park.

“Director Luo, were you looking for me?” Chen Ge waited for their conversation to come to a lull before barging in.

“I have something important to discuss with you.” Director Luo led Chen Ge to a more deserted spot, and the smile on his face slowly disappeared. “Do you still remember that I once accompanied a man to visit theme park and the man even asked about your Haunted House?”

“I think I do. I can’t remember his name, but he said that he wanted to invest in our theme park, to help us upgrade our amenities and expand the theme park’s grounds.” Chen Ge was reminded of the man, and he had also once seen the man’s face on the phone of an employee from the futuristic theme park.

“His real name is Bai Qin, a very powerful realtor. He only has one passion in life, and that is money. For money, he is willing to do anything, even things that err on the wrong side of the law.” Director Luo spoke slowly. “We were once schoolmates, so I know him well. The man will stop at nothing for nothing. When he was young, he married the daughter of a rich man and even changed his surname, so nowadays, few people know of his real name.”

“Are we going to cooperate with him?”

“New Century Park’s amenities are too behind, and without an upgrade, it’ll be very hard for us to grab the visitors away from the futuristic theme park.” Director Luo had his own concern. “There are currently few places in Jiujiang that can provide quality entertainment, and people are starved for choices, so they can only come here. After the futuristic theme park opens, it will definitely bring a huge impact to us.”

“They will mostly rely on high-tech attractions and the overlapping of virtual and physical entertainment. It is completely different from the direction of our theme park. As long as we can survive the first wave, I’m sure the visitors will eventually return.”

“You’ve underestimated their ambition.” Director Luo was the center of the theme park, so he rarely shared his concerns with others lest the morale was shaken. “I’ve done some investigation, and they’re not only planning to come up with the latest non-virtual attractions; they’re even planning to copy the idea behind your Haunted House. For that, they have introduced a new project recently. It’s called Ghost Realm.”

“Ghost Realm?”

“It’s a combination of both physical and virtual setting with the aid of actors. They’ve poured in plenty of money to build the biggest and most unique Haunted House in the nation.” Director Luo glanced at Chen Ge. “Bai Qin allowed me to look at some of the insider information. The futuristic theme park plans to turn their own Haunted House into a real-life horror game that the visitors can enter and interact with. They have come up with four main plots and more than ten subplots. Based on the choices that you’ve made, the final result will be different each time.”

“That sounds marvelous, even I am interested in visiting it.” Chen Ge purely wanted to exchange information and initiate friendly competition. Perhaps they would be able to learn from one another, just like his previous visit to Tian Teng Medical Hospital.

“You sure are relaxed.” Seeing the glow in Chen Ge’s eyes and the young man’s excitement in trying the new attraction out, Director Luo felt quite speechless. “Your Haunted House is currently our theme park’s main attraction. In other words, your Haunted House sets us apart from other theme parks, but once the visitors find a replacement, we will lose our competitive edge.”

“Then what should we do now?”

“Do everything they plan to do before they do it. That way, when they officially open for business, the visitors will have the impression that they’re merely copying us.”

The older the ginger, the spicier it was. Director Luo’s suggestion was incredibly tempting to Chen Ge, but it stopped there. “Increasing the visitors’ interactivity with the scenario is doable, but to combine every scenario to create a horror game experience is too difficult.”

Chen Ge knew about his own situation. All of the scary scenarios had everything to do with the black phone, and he was only responsible for unlocking them.

“There’s no need for us to change the existing scenarios. I’m merely giving you a general direction to follow.” Director Luo offered his thoughts. “The underground parking lot is limited in terms of space. Have you considered expanding to the surface and connecting both the surface and underground? It’ll be more dimensional, and you can come up with unique settings like stairs and elevators.”

Chen Ge’s final goal was to create a theme park with the theme of terror and horror, so eventually, he would have to expand beyond the confines of the underground parking lot.

“I can help you solve the issue of budget and manpower; you only need to focus on interior design.” Director Luo had great confidence in

Chen Ge. He took out his phone and opened a document. There were several designs in it. “Your Haunted House is on the northwestern side of the park. We plan to break down the fencing on the northwestern side and expand in that direction; that is just perfect for you to connect to your Haunted House.”

By designing intertwining corridors inside the Haunted House and overlapping the spaces, even without using a large space, one could create the sensation of a maze; Chen Ge was an expert in this area. “The expansion of theme park will be based around my Haunted House?”

“The other attractions will be updated as well so that our theme park will not appear to be so lagging behind, while the expansion of your Haunted House will be to increase our theme park’s competitiveness, to make our advantage stand out even more.” Director Luo’s mind was very sharp. “I’ve already found the builders and the Haunted House’s design team, but there’s one thing that you need to be careful with. Even though I’ve personally approved this batch of workers, their relationship with Bai Qin is not bad. So, when you come up with the design, you’d better be careful.”

Bai Qin was willing to invest when theme park needed it the most, so theoretically, Chen Ge should be thankful of the man’s help, but in reality, both Chen Ge and Director Luo thought that this man had an ulterior motive.

“I can use the builders, but I don’t think I’ll have any use for the design team. This is the core of a Haunted House, and I will never allow any outsiders to meddle in it.” Chen Ge denied the offer directly.

“But can you do all of it alone? We’re planning to make use of all the land on the northeastern side. The workload will be massive.”

“I have my own team. They’re my parent’s friends. After my parents disappeared, I kept in contact with them. If I ask, I’m sure they’re willing to come and help.” Chen Ge’s parents did not have any trustworthy friends, or none that Chen Ge knew of—he was merely coming up with a valid identity for his team of Ghosts and Ghouls.

“That would be perfect. If there’s a chance, bring them to come meet me. I will help you talk to them about the salary.” Director Luo worried about this character, Bai Qin. The man was a pure businessperson. Since he was able to sell the inside information about the futuristic park, it was only logical to expect him to sell the information about New Century Park as well. For someone who placed profit above everything else, there was nothing in the world that could not be sold for a price.

“They need to work in the day and can only come at night. It’s okay, I can negotiate with them myself.” Chen Ge had his own plan. Construction on the surface was different from construction underground, so he had to come up with a building process somehow, or at least make a show of it.

“Okay, then I’ll leave the interior building and design to your team. Do you have any requests about the exterior appearance?” Director Luo looked through his phone. “Currently, we have three proposals. The first is to make it look like a hospital, second is an abandoned school, and third is a haunted residential area.”

Chen Ge thought all three proposals were quite brilliant, but considering the four-star Trial Mission provided by the black phone, he first excluded the haunted residential area. There were already plenty of school-related scenarios in the underground parking lot, so after some consideration, Chen Ge chose the first proposal, which was to make the appearance look like a hospital.

“Director Luo, when you’re building the set, remember to keep everything sealed, and ensure that you couldn’t see anything from outside. If a Haunted House loses its sense of mystery, then the feeling of anticipation will greatly decrease.” Chen Ge scrolled through the design papers that Director Luo provided. “I’ll leave the construction of the exterior to you, and the sooner it is built, the better. When you’re done, I’ll find my parent’s friends to help me with the interior design and construction.”

“It shouldn’t take too long since we’re technically just building an empty case.” Director Luo put the phone away. “After the place expands, manpower will be a problem. If you have any problems, please come to me, and I will try my best to help.”

“Okay.” After sending Director Luo away, Chen Ge looked at the northeastern side of theme park. “It is a good idea to expand the Haunted House to the surface. At least this will lay the foundation for the horror theme park in the future.”

Returning to the Haunted House, the visitors were still bustling. Chen Ge summoned Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue to come help while he went to the staff breakroom to rest.

“The futuristic theme park plans to create a horror game that the visitors can interact with, and I shouldn’t be lagging behind. For now, most of the employees here only know how to scare people—their function is too singular. I need more workers like Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue who can play different roles. If there’s a chance, I need to conduct some training for all of my employees.” Chen Ge wanted to vary the elements of his Haunted House, to increase its challenge and playability, and he needed his employees’ cooperation for that to happen.

“Much still remains to be done, but there is a short-cut. I only need to find the type of ghost that fits the type of actor that I want.”

At 5 pm, Chen Ge exited the staffroom. There had been no accidents throughout the day, and he was getting more satisfied with Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue’s performance. At 6:30 pm, Chen Ge sent the last batch of visitors away. He let Xu Wan and Xiao Gu, who had been busy for the day, go home while he stayed back to clean.

“My biological clock is now completely inverse. I’ll feel so spirited at night.”

With the aid from the ghosts, the cleaning was soon completed. Chen Ge changed and grabbed his backpack to prepare for the Trial Mission that he was attempting that night.

“The shadow once failed at White Dragon Cave Tunnel, so this three-star mission is probably different from the ones I’ve faced.” Chen Ge shoved the recorder, comic, and everything that he could carry inside the backpack. “I can’t be too careless, but I shouldn’t be too afraid since we have the same enemy, so we should be able to talk over this nicely.”

After preparing everything, Chen Ge took out the black phone and found the page that he needed.

“Are you going to accept the three-star Trial Mission—End of the Tunnel?”

“Yes.”

“Mission accepted!

“End of the Tunnel (3-star Trial Mission): No one knows what is at the end of the tunnel, but all that go in never come out.

“Mission Requirement: Reach the deepest part of White Dragon Cave Tunnel before midnight.

“Mission Hint: Close both of your eyes, and perhaps you might see the real world.”

“Enter the deepest part of the tunnel before midnight. So, does this mean I only need to keep walking into the tunnel?” The mission requirement was a bit too vague for Chen Ge to understand. If he failed any trial mission, the punishment was that the corresponding scenario would be locked away forever, so Chen Ge did not dare take any risk. “The only thing I can do is walk into the tunnel as deep as I can.”

Chen Ge had already done his research about White Dragon Cave Tunnel before. Everything online had something to do with the woman related to the car accident. In other words, people only knew that the female ghost would ask for a life. Chen Ge could not find any information on other spirits like the strange breathing sound, the shadow of the spider, or the like on the internet.

“I should go there before the sun completely sets.” Due to the multiple car accidents in White Dragon Cave Tunnel, many experts had been brought in to update the layout, but strangely enough, no matter how many times it was rebuilt, once it was allowed for traffic, accidents would still happen and in the end. The only solution was to seal the entire tunnel.

The internet said that the tunnel had been given three big rebuilds and numerous small rebuilds. Someone even suggested mixing dog blood and black donkey hoofs into the walls and floor of the tunnel, but that did not prove to be of actual use. The inside of the tunnel was complicated, and Chen Ge did not dare act too carelessly.

Carrying his backpack, after locking up the Haunted House, Chen Ge hurried to leave New Century Park and hailed a cab to get to White Dragon Cave Tunnel. With his previous experience, Chen Ge did not tell the driver directly that he was going to White Dragon Cave but told the driver to send him to a fork near the tunnel.

The original purpose of the White Dragon Cave Tunnel was to connect Jiujiang and Xin Hai City. Jiujiang was surrounded by lakes and a mountain range, so to liven up its economy, a route was necessary. Unfortunately, accidents kept happening on this route.

Some of the older Jiujiang locals said that Jiujiang's lakes formed a Feng Shui depiction of Nine Dragons playing with the globe, so cutting a road through the mountains of Jiujiang caused the good Feng Shui energy to leak, and it was little wonder that strange accidents kept happening at that road. No one bought this story at the beginning, but the string of strange accidents started to change minds. The people on top eventually changed their mind and sealed White Dragon Cave Tunnel.

The night covered Jiujiang. As the taxi drove toward Eastern Jiujiang, fewer cars appeared on the road, and the number of skyscrapers also dwindled. The houses that showed up by the roads also appeared worn and old.

Cutting through the old part of town, the driver was a friendly person. He kept chatting with Chen Ge along the way. White Dragon Cave Tunnel was on the edge of the countryside, and before even reaching the destination, cars completely stopped appearing on the road.

On the narrow road, the streetlights were placed very far from each other. Perhaps because this road was rarely used, the government did not care much about its maintenance. Trash littered the road, and many of the streetlights were defective.

"I hate driving to Eastern Jiujiang. The locals hate outsiders and have a habit of dropping their trash on the road. It's fine for an experienced driver like myself, but the newbies always get into accidents when they come here," the driver grumbled casually.

"That trash might not be the doing of the locals." Chen Ge had come to the edge of Eastern Jiujiang many times already, and every time, the feeling that he got from this place was that living humans should stay away.

The closer the taxi got to White Dragon Cave Tunnel, the more deserted the geography became. The surroundings were mostly trees and scrubs interspersed occasionally by the views of buildings and light.

"You can drop me here." Chen Ge did not want to harm the taxi driver. He decided to walk the rest of the way. After all, it was still early.

“Are you sure? This place is in the middle of nowhere, and there’s not even a human shadow around here.” The driver said that, but he was already accepting the fare from Chen Ge. He handed the paper with the QR code for his WeChat wallet to Chen Ge.

Chen Ge knew that the man was only being polite. After he paid and prepared to get out from the car, the driver suddenly said, “Why is there a woman there?”

Following the driver’s gaze, Chen Ge noticed a woman squatting before an old residential home on the left side of the road. She had only one shoe on, and one side of her dress was torn open. She squatted in front of the house with her head lowered like she was searching for something.

The driver rolled down the window and poked his head out. The woman looked frail and weak. Her arms were thin like twigs. The yellow and white striped dress was wrinkly like someone had rustled it roughly.

“Hey! Why are you here alone?” The driver did not ask for Chen Ge’s opinion and called out directly. The woman heard the driver and slowly raised her head. The curtain of black hair parted to reveal a pale face. She looked normal, but as they said, whiteness could cover up one hundred types of ugliness. There was a unique allure about her.

The woman did not speak but slowly stood up. Without a word, she strode toward the taxi. The side of her dress was torn, and the dress itself was covered in dust and dried leaves. There were wounds on her calves, but strangely enough, none of the wounds were bleeding.

“Is there something wrong with the girl’s brain?” When a normal person came across something like this, they would not instantly think of ghosts. The driver was one such normal person.

The car window was tapped consecutively. Without taking too long, the woman reached the side of the taxi. She used her palm and tapped on the window with an expressionless face.

If this had happened to a normal person, they would have been unsettled, but the driver’s reaction was a bit strange. He smiled at the woman outside the woman and continued as if talking to himself. “It’s alright, don’t be afraid, I’ll drive you home.”

Then, he opened the door, and the woman easily crawled into the passenger seat.

“What’s happening?” Chen Ge was still seated in the back, and he turned to look to the front.

The woman lowered her head once she got into the car. She did not say a word, but the driver could not stop talking. It appeared as if he was talking to the air, and it was just weird overall.

“You’re married?”

“There shouldn’t be any tolerance for domestic violence. If it’s happened once, it’ll happen again. The b*stard shouldn’t be forgiven.”

“I can understand why you’re running away from home. You poor thing.”

“Are you planning to escape to your parent’s home? It’s okay. I understand. No problem.”

Chen Ge could not allow harm to come to an innocent. He took out the ballpoint pen from his backpack and left a message on the back of the paper with the QR code—The woman is not who she seems.

Then, he passed the paper back to the driver. “Boss, your code is not working! See if it’s because something is wrong with the paper.”

“Huh? It should work fine.” The driver looked at the paper for a long time but simply refused to turn it around. “How about you use any e-wallet?”

Then he took out another piece of paper and handed it to Chen Ge.

Without reaching to grab the paper, Chen Ge glanced at the passenger seat. “You plan to drive this girl home? Where is her home exactly? Perhaps we’re going the same direction. In that case, I’ll pay for both of our fares.”

The driver saw the logic in his argument. “She lives in the nearby village. It’s further in, but that place is even more deserted. I don’t think you’re heading there, are you?”

“Wow, this is such a coincidence, that is exactly where I’m heading. Just keep on driving then, you can drop me off with the girl.” Chen Ge opened his backpack and reached his hand into it.

The driver did not agree instantly. He secretly turned around to glance at Chen Ge with suspicion in his eyes. From his perspective, Chen Ge's insistence to leave with an injured girl belied an ulterior motive. Yet, Chen Ge looked like quite a trustworthy person—he was sunny, kind, and polite. However, the large backpack that he carried unsettled the driver, and now, he noticed the faded scent of blood drifting out from it.

Have I ferried a criminal? The driver hesitated before starting the engine. "Okay."

The taxi continued to move, and the driver still talked to the air while both of the passengers in the car ignored him. Chen Ge kept his eyes on the woman in the passenger seat. He used Yin Yang Vision to scan the girl, but he could not see anything particularly strange about her. The woman seemed to know that Chen Ge was watching her, and in the rear-view mirror, the edge of her lips started to curl upward. The smile combined with her stark white skin made the hair on Chen Ge's arms crawl.

Just keep on smiling, we'll see if you can still retain the smile when we reach the destination, Chen Ge grumbled internally. He had no idea where the girl was going, but since he had the 'good luck' of encountering her, he was going to come along for her final journey.

The streetlights dimmed, and the trees by the road shook, swayed by the wind. The gnarled branches cast their shadows on the ground, creating the perfect atmosphere for a horror-filled night.

The driver continued talking to himself. From Chen Ge's perspective, it seemed like he was in a scintillating conversation with the girl, but in reality, the girl had not spoken a word since she got into the car. In this strange atmosphere, the taxi continued to drive several hundred meters before the driver suddenly stepped on the brake. The car halted, and due to inertia, Chen Ge's head almost flew into the back of the girl's seat.

With one hand inside the backpack and the other holding the door, Chen Ge asked, "What's happening?"

If there was any danger, he would directly smash the lock and jump out.

"There's a child in the road." The driver was shivering with cold sweat as he pointed at the road. On the left bend of the road, there was a boy holding a black plastic bag. He looked just shy of nine years old, and he was wearing a faded white T-shirt. His face was one of anxiety and fear like he had been given a big fright by the incoming taxi.

"Why is there a child out here in the middle of nowhere?" The driver opened the car window and was about to poke his head out when Chen Ge at the back suddenly said, "I advise you to not stop your car here."

"Are you afraid this might be a scam?" The driver nodded. "I read about things like this on the news before. An adult purposely had a child play by the road, and when a car passed, the child would be frightened. The adult would then jump out to demand for compensation because the child was frightened for real, so even if there were surveillance cameras, it was hard to argue for one's innocence. This has happened many times on the news already."

"Those kinds of scams want your money, but I'm afraid, the people that you met will want your life," Chen Ge said under his breath. He was wondering if the driver had the attribute of attracting ghost because he had already gotten into so many accidents before they even reached White Dragon Cave Tunnel. Just in case, Chen Ge used Yin Yang Vision to study the driver, and the result was that he was just a normal man.

"If the problem is not with the driver, then it should be me." Chen Ge remembered that Jia Ming had been controlled by the shadow fainted outside the tunnel, and no one knew what the shadow did that night inside the tunnel. "Could this be a part of the shadow's trap?"

When Chen Ge was thinking, he heard a tap on the window next to him. He turned to look, and a child's face materialized next to him. Through the car window, a smile appeared on the child's pale face. He leaned his body forward like he was looking into the car.

"Are you looking for something?" Chen Ge also smiled in response.

With his hand on the hammer's handle, he slowly nudged it to the opening. This was a curious scene. The ghost outside the car had a vicious intention while the person inside the car was harboring his own motive as well.

The boy used his small hand to tap repeatedly on the window, leaving small handprints on it. The child's palm was covered with red dirt, and he quickly smudged the clean car window. The boy's pale face flitted in and out of the mess of handprints, and it looked quite scary, but the thing that worried the driver the most was the passenger in his backseat. He seemed to be holding something in his bag while smiling at the boy outside the window—the two appeared to be engaged in some kind of game.

"Er..." The driver wanted to lighten the mood, but after he opened his lips, he did not know what to say.

"Just keep driving and ignore this weird child."

"That's not so good, right?" The driver hesitated. It was not that he was that kind-hearted, but he worried that by starting the car, it would topple the boy, and if he was run over by the wheels, then it would only make things worse. Probably hearing Chen Ge's words, the boy started to hit harder, and more handprints appeared on the window.

"Sure, keep knocking. If you dare, break this glass." Chen Ge seemed to get into a competition with the boy. He smiled at the boy with a face filled with provocation.

"Just what the hell is happening?" The driver was speechless. He complained internally, This is not even your car. If he really breaks the glass, are you going to pay me for the repairs?

He coughed and asked the woman at the passenger seat, "Do you know this child? Could he have come from the nearby village as well?"

When he ran into a ghost, he asked the opinion of another ghost. Chen Ge seemed to see his own shadow on this driver, but he did not say anything, and the expression on his face did not change. The woman did not say a word, but the driver kept nodding like he was slowly being persuaded.

He waved at the boy outside the car, and after some hesitation, he opened the door. "Come in. Since you're both going to the same place, I'll give you a lift."

The backdoor opened, and the boy jumped into the car with the black plastic bag. He sat next to Chen Ge and continued the staring match.

"What's your name? Can you remember your parent's phone number?" The driver started the engine and asked the boy some basic questions. He waited for a long while, but there was no response. The driver turned back to look and saw that the boy was caught in an intense stare with Chen Ge. He had no idea what they were doing.

"F*ck it, I'm not going to care anymore." The driver gave up. He placed his phone on the dashboard, someplace that he could reach easily. He tapped into the system of walkie-talkie shared by cab drivers. "Is anyone in Eastern Jiujiang? There's plenty of work to do here tonight."

He was actually quite panicky inside and wanted to find a normal person to chat with.

Soon, an uncle replied on the walkie-talkie, "You still dare to go to Eastern Jiujiang? Most of the drivers that have gone there over the past month came back with an injury, and I heard some of them were found fainted in their driver's seat."

The uncle appeared to be the driver's close friend, and they often joked with each other. "Stop trying to trick me, you know how easily scared I am."

"Who's tricking you? I'm being serious. It's not safe in Eastern Jiujiang. Just take a look at the news yourself."

"What news? You know I'm driving."

"I'm just giving you a warning. In fact, the police found..." The communication was abruptly cut off before the uncle could finish his sentence.

"Found what?" The driver tapped the walkie-talkie. "Why has it broken at a time like this?"

He had not felt so scared initially, but after hearing what the uncle had to say, the driver was feeling much less grounded. He slowed down the car and took out his phone to do a quick search.

There had indeed been quite a few cases in Eastern Jiujiang lately. He glanced through them, and his eyes were soon attracted to one of the articles. A child ran away from his adopted father's home, and his body was found on Eastern Jiujiang's Lin Jiang Road.

"Wait, I'm currently driving on Lin Jiang Road, aren't I?" The driver clicked open the article, and the picture of the victim made him feel so familiar. "This boy..."

His body froze. The driver slowly inched his head upward and sneaked a glance at the boy sitting at the back through the rear-view mirror.

Chen Ge was squeezed next to the boy, and he leaned closer toward the black plastic bag that the boy was holding onto so tightly. "What is in the bag of yours? I noticed you were searching for something before you got in the car."

The boy smiled at Chen Ge and said after a while, "I've almost found everything. I'm just missing a hand."

After the boy said that, the temperature in the car dropped to below freezing down, and the driver's face turned ashen.

"Just missing one hand?" The driver thought he had heard wrong. He had a hard time believing that he would hear something like that come out from the lips of a young boy. His pupils shuddered, and he glanced toward his phone. The article did not detail the boy's cause of death—it only mentioned in passing that the boy had been brutally murdered. Due to one comment by the boy, the atmosphere in the car changed.

The driver's hands that gripped the steering wheel were slick with sweat. The woman next to him was silent, and the boy on the backseat gripped the black plastic bag tightly, his face plastered with a smile that did not match his young age.

Of the few 'people' in the car, only Chen Ge could be considered relatively normal. He seemed like the only one to have everything under control. He nudged closer toward the boy. His voice was soft and warm, but what he said made the driver squeeze out a fresh bout of cold sweat.

"You're only missing one hand? Does that mean the other parts that you've found are all inside this plastic bag?" Chen Ge pointed at the bulging bag. "Do you mind letting me take a look inside it? And if you need help, I can help you look for the rest after we get out of the car."

"There's no need." Seeing Chen Ge turn his target toward the black bag, the smile on the boy's face slowly disappeared.

"Actually, we're not so different, you and I. We're both looking for something." Chen Ge picked up his own backpack, but his bag was much bigger than the child's.

"You're also in search of something?" The boy could taste the light trace of blood coming from inside Chen Ge's bag, and he realized that things were getting dangerous. This was different from what he had anticipated before he got into the car. "What are you looking for?"

"Actually, the thing I'm looking for is in this car with me. When the time is right, I'll shove all of them into my bag."

Chen Ge played the role of a strange uncle scaring a child perfectly. It was a common joke for adults to play pranks on innocent kids, but the boy next to him did not show a trace of a smile at all. This was because the boy knew that Chen Ge was being serious.

"All of them?" Different from the boy, the driver overheard Chen Ge and almost mistook the gas pedal for brake, almost driving into a tree. He thought what Chen Ge meant by that was that he was going to murder everyone in the taxi and then cram all of their body parts inside his backpack.

He was unable to follow the conversation of his passengers at the backseat, so the only passenger who could give the driver some semblance of security was the young woman next to him. From his point of view, the young woman was soft and pitiable, and if an accident happened, he decided to take the girl and run. That way, at least they would be able to be on the lookout for one another.

The situation is becoming worse. All I can do now is help as many people as I can while maintaining my own personal safety! The driver came to that decision in his mind. He sneaked a glance at the young woman next to him. The young woman seemed to notice the problem as well, and she laid her fingers lightly on the driver's knee.

Chen Ge had no idea of the role that he had been cast in the driver's mind. All of his focus was placed on the boy next to him. Since they had met by chance, he figured that they should be friends, and he planned on inviting all of these 'people' to come to his Haunted House as guests.

The taxi continued to move for another stretch of the road, and it soon came to a T-junction. One of the roads would lead them away from Jiujiang to another district while the other road would take them to White Dragon Cave Tunnel.

"Which turn shall I take to get to your home?" the gentlemanly driver asked the young woman. The lady slowly raised her head and extended her finger to point at the direction of the White Dragon Cave Tunnel.

“White Dragon Cave Tunnel?” Jiujiang locals knew about the stories that surrounded this particular tunnel. The place was technically a stretch of cursed public road. Car accidents happened there as often as rain, and various ghost stories and urban legends were made with this place as its setting and origin.

The driver’s face blanched. He forced himself to calm down. He turned to ask the boy who was holding the bag, “Child, can you still remember which direction your home is?”

The boy was not happy to have been placed next to Chen Ge. He nudged his chin in the direction of White Dragon Cave Tunnel expressionlessly.

“Your home is also that way? Looks like you two are indeed from the same village.” The driver tried to find a logical excuse to explain the whole situation, to try to comfort himself. He forced a smile as he turned to Chen Ge. “What about you?”

“That is where I’m going as well, but I advise you to stop and turn back now. Let the two of them out of the car and drive me back to the spot where you picked up this young lady.” Chen Ge wanted to protect the driver. If he got out of the car with the woman and the boy and allowed the driver to go back alone, then on the way back, the man might run into other accident. To ensure the man’s safety, Chen Ge volunteered to accompany him.

However, the driver did not see it that way. He sensed danger from Chen Ge, and he thought that Chen Ge was trying to get him alone so that he could strike. The more the driver thought about it, the more afraid he became. Chen Ge was out alone at night to take a cab, going to the middle of nowhere with him a backpack that had the smell of blood drifting out of it. One could write ten horror stories about what Chen Ge was doing. He believed that he knew what Chen Ge was planning, and there was no way that he was going to stay with Chen Ge alone inside the car.

“I don’t think so. Since you’re all going the same way, I should just drive all of you there.” The driver sent a coordinate triangulation message on their company’s chat group, but the connection was so bad that he saw the message loading for a long time before failing. He slowed the car down and typed two more messages, but they too failed to send due to poor coverage.

His car was filled with people, but strangely enough, the driver did not feel safe at all. He thought about calling the police, but he was afraid that might provoke his passengers, causing them to do something irrational.

Just as the driver was thinking about what to do, an old man appeared in the middle of the road. He trundled down the slope, moving toward the T-junction where the taxi sat idle. He carried a medicine basket on his back as he shuffled along with his limp. He appeared to be a herb gatherer. Most of Eastern Jiujiang was dominated by mountains and lakes, so the economy was not so good. However, also because of that, nature had been left mostly untouched, and many valuable herbs that could not be found elsewhere grew vibrantly.

Different from the plants cultivated in labs and farms, wild herbs were valued much higher, and the older generation that remained around the nearby villages depended on harvesting them to keep their lives afloat.

The old man appeared to have tripped on his way back from the mountain. His right leg was limping, and his shirt had many tears made by branches and bushes. There was even a blood stain on the edge of his pants.

When he walked past the taxi, he glanced absent-mindedly into the car, but when he did, his eyes slowly grew big, and he suddenly picked up his pace, shuffling away from the scene. Seeing the reaction on the old man's face, the driver only got even more panicked.

He rolled down the car window, wanting to ask the old man for help, but when he turned to look out the window, the limping old man had already disappeared.

"How did he manage to move so fast with a limp?" The driver shivered involuntarily when he felt a cold caress on the back of his hand. He turned to notice the woman had moved her hand to place on the back of his arm.

"What's wrong?"

The woman pointed in the direction of White Dragon Cave Tunnel, signaling for him to start moving.

When the driver made the turn, Chen Ge also spoke up. "Did someone pass the car earlier? Who were you talking to?"

“There was an old gentleman with a limping leg. He carried a bamboo basket on his back, didn’t you see him? He even paused to look inside the taxi when he shuffled past it!” The driver could not stop the shrillness from entering his voice.

Chen Ge shook his head. There were only shaking tree limbs and their shadows outside the car. He did not see any old man.

Ever since the shadow appeared at White Dragon Cave Tunnel, the strange factor of this area had been kicked up a notch. The young woman, the boy, and the old man that the driver had mentioned—before even entering the tunnel, Chen Ge had already met three ‘people’.

“This place sure is crowded.” Chen Ge did not ask for more information about the old man but sat quietly in the back. The taxi slowly moved down the road leading toward White Dragon Cave Tunnel. The closer they got to the destination, the more unsettled the driver felt, but he was starved of options. At this point, there was nothing he could do but move forward.

The trees by the road swayed like souls crawling out from hell. The light dimmed because most of the streetlights leading to White Dragon Cave Tunnel were broken, and the local government did not care enough to fix the road that was covered with dried leaves and mud.

However, strangely enough, amid the mess of trash, there were trails of clear footprints—some big and some small, some barefooted and others with shoes. In any case, it was clear that they had been left behind by more than one person.

“There weren’t so many footprints when I was here last time.” Chen Ge observed closely. He realized that all of the footprints pointed toward White Dragon Cave Tunnel. “They’re all heading to the tunnel? What is attracting them inside the tunnel?”

Chen Ge had no idea what had happened to the tunnel, but he knew that after the shadow made his appearance here, the tunnel had become different from before. The car tires crushed the fallen leaves and branches, eliciting an eerie sound. With the headlights beaming, a large black outline appeared. All the lights would disappear when they hit that spot.

“White Dragon Cave!” The taboo of all the urban legends appeared before his eyes, and the driver’s eyelids could not stop twitching. His legs were shaking, and his body sent him messages that it was time to turn and run.

“We’re here.” The taxi stopped before the tunnel, but the passengers inside the car didn’t show any intention of getting out. “We’re already at White Dragon Cave Tunnel, so I think I’ll stop here.”

The driver felt like retreating; he had already been through enough strange events for one night.

“I don’t mind, but the key is dependent of the two of them.” Chen Ge leaned against the cushion and shifted his weight to a more comfortable position. It was still well before the mission time given by the black phone, so he was not in a hurry. Chen Ge was the only one who was more willing to negotiate—the same could not be said of the two other passengers.

The young woman slowly raised her eyes, and between the strands of tussled hair, the pair of eyes shone brilliantly red. She slid her fingers down the window, creating a sharp noise. It felt as if there was something inside the tunnel that was causing her to go berserk.

The condition of the boy was equally strange. He was still holding the black plastic bag, but his originally innocent-looking face was now twisted beyond recognition.

The closer they were to White Dragon Cave Tunnel, the more obvious the abnormalities they possessed. It was as if the resentment in their bodies was being drawn out, and they could not hold it in anymore. None of the three passengers looked like they were getting out of the car, and this caused the driver to panic. A deep frown was etched on his face, and he appeared as helpless as they came.

They say good things come to good people, but how come it’s the opposite for me? the driver grumbled internally. He stopped the car; White Dragon Cave Tunnel was the taboo location for all the taxi drivers in Jiujiang. No matter what, he was not driving into the tunnel.

Even sitting inside the car, he could feel the cold draft coming out from inside the tunnel. Rising his eyes to look, White Dragon Cave Tunnel was like the gaping maw of a beast, and everyone that walked into it would be consumed until even their bones could not be found.

“Why did you stop? You need to move forward! My house is just in front, keep driving!” the boy at the back demanded urgently.

“Your house is inside the tunnel?” When he heard that, the desire for the driver to stay away from the tunnel increased. The boy in the back looked similar to the victim from the news article. Earlier, he had even said that he was searching for his hand. If this was not a prank, then the real identity of this boy was worth pondering.

The driver realized the danger he was in, and he ignored the boy’s command and turned the car around. He planned to drive all the way to the police station—regardless of whether it was a ghost or human inside his car, he would pass on all of them to the police. That was a good idea, but once he started the engine, something went wrong.

He could hear the engine starting, but the car simply refused to move. He tried it multiple times, but in the end, he only caused the dashboard to break down. This time, the driver was genuinely panicking. The car had broken down in the middle of nowhere, and the scariest thing was that he had no idea how many people were ghosts inside his car.

“Don’t panic, the dashboard is acting up probably because you tried to start the engine too many times, and you short-circuited the battery somehow. It’s just a small problem.” At the most crucial moment, Chen Ge’s words gave the driver the security that he needed. Chen Ge’s voice was powerful and warm, and it helped the driver to slowly calm down.

“Okay, you stay in the car, I’ll go to take a look.” The driver placed his hand on the doorknob and was about to step out when there was a loud thud, like something heavy had landed on the roof of the car. The driver was frightened, and he instinctively pulled his hand back, but then something even stranger happened.

Without touching the steering wheel, the car started to move. And the direction it was heading? It was none other than White Dragon Cave Tunnel!

“I didn’t start the car, so why is it moving on its own? We have to jump out now!” The driver wanted to pull open the door, but when his hand landed on the handle, the loud thud came again. This time, the sound originated right in front of the driver. He could clearly see, after the sound disappeared, on the windscreen right before the driver’s seat, there was a blood red handprint.

His eyes widening, the driver’s mind was drawing a blank. He had no idea how the red handprint appeared on the glass like magic. Before he could understand it, the sound appeared this time at the back of the car. Then the whole car shook, and more bloody handprints appeared on the car's back window.

"What is happening?" This time, even Chen Ge was slightly apprehensive. Different from the driver, using his Yin Yang Vision, he could just about see that the car was currently surrounded by 'people', and each handprint represented a resentment-filled soul.

"Why are there so many dead spirits gathering at the mouth of the tunnel?" Sitting inside the car, Chen Ge flipped open the comic and activated the recorder. This caused the smell of blood inside the car to thicken.

More bloody handprints appeared, and they looked quite scary, filling up the windows. With them jostling and pushing, the car was slowly sent deeper into White Dragon Cave Tunnel.

The driver's despairing cry for help was unable to stop the taxi from being engulfed by the darkness.

This happened too suddenly, and no one expected this transformation. When they recovered, the taxi was already deep inside the tunnel.

The tires felt like they had rolled over something because the car tipped slightly. More handprints continued to appear, and the spine-tingling rapping echoed in their ears.

The light around them slowly disappeared. It felt as if the taxi was being pushed into the ocean. When the last shred of light vanished, it meant that the passengers inside the taxi were enveloped by darkness.

“Is... is someone there?” When the continuous rapping petered away, the driver slowly raised his head. His hands went searching for his mobile.

“Don’t move, lie down.” The voice was harsh, but the driver did not rebel against and moved to oblige. The one giving the order was Chen Ge. The sound of tapping had disappeared, but the spirits were still surrounding the taxi; they had not left.

“What do they want?” With Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge could see things that the driver could not, and from his perspective, they were not in a good spot. Every inch of the taxi’s exterior was covered by bloody handprints, and the people that had left those handprints were surrounding the taxi. Each one of them had a strange facial expression, and their bodies were turned toward the same direction. Their lips moved up and down like fish, sucking in the strange air inside the tunnel.

About ten minutes later, a strange noise came from deep within the tunnel. It was hard to describe. It sounded like thousands of centipedes crawling on the wall, and at the same time, it sounded like a giant breathing, its breaths scraping the uneven tunnel walls.

After that sound appeared, the spirits around the taxi started to move toward the sound. Footprints echoed around them, but there was no living human in sight. The driver hid inside the car, hugging his head; he was well and truly frightened. It was too dark for him to see anything, but his ears kept picking up these strange audio cues. They rushed into his mind, and the driver felt like his brain was about to explode.

A light creak came from a part of the car. It sounded like the door was being eased open.

Without the light, no one knew what was happening. Half an hour later, when the sound had completely silenced and the tunnel became quiet again, the driver finally summoned his courage to go looking for his phone. Using the weak light from the screen, he looked around the inside of his car.

The doors had been left open, and there were no other passengers in the car. The taxi was empty with the driver remaining alone at the driver's seat.

"Where are all the people?" With people next to him, he would not be so afraid, but realizing that he was all alone, the driver started to panic. He activated the walkie-talkie, but all he could hear was static—there was no one talking. He tried to call his friends and colleagues on his phone, but strangely enough, no one was answering.

He was unable to keep his movement silent due to anxiety, and he called out on the verge of tears, "Please, is anyone there? Anyone will do, can someone answer me?"

"Stop yelling, shush." A ray of light appeared at the front of the car. The driver looked to the source, and it was a young man carrying a backpack standing there. The driver was familiar with the man's outline—he was the first passenger that he had picked up that night.

"Don't waste time and follow my orders. First, try and see if you can start the car or not." Chen Ge held the backpack with one hand and his expression was severe. The driver understood the gravity of the situation and did not pause to ask questions. He tried multiple times, but the engine was still not working.

"Get out of the car to inspect the engine. Quick, we don't have much time to waste." With the urging from Chen Ge, the driver crawled out from the car. The hair on his body stood on end once he noted the bloody prints that covered his vehicle. Opening the front lid, the driver leaned in to look. The internal compartment was ruined by the reams of black hair that curled around everything. He was unable to cut them loose without the aid of tools.

"Do you have any scissors?" the driver asked Chen Ge in a whisper.

"Will a hammer work?"

“Er, never mind then.” The driver closed the lid and followed behind Chen Ge with a saddened frown. “It should be the hair that plugged up the pipes of the motor. I won’t be able to fix it without the necessary tools.”

“In that case, we’ll abandon the car for now. Later, remember to stay close to me, and no matter what happens, do not wander too far away from me.” Chen Ge turned on the flashlight function attached to his phone and started to walk down the road opposite in the direction that the spirits had gone.

“Did you see the two other passengers? How come you’re the only one here?” After a brief hesitation, the driver finally asked that question.

“Even now, do you still think they are normal passengers? Those two have already moved deeper into the tunnel.” Chen Ge was not going to waste time explaining these things to the driver. If not for the fact that he thought the driver was a kind-hearted person, he did not think that he would waste the time to lead the driver out and would have joined the ‘crowd’ earlier to head deeper into the tunnel. “This tunnel is seriously dangerous. I’ll bring you out first and leave after ensuring you’re safe.”

“Thank you.” The driver was genuinely appreciative of Chen Ge. Under that condition, having the company of a living human was something worth celebrating.

“If you want to thank me, make sure that you keep everything that you see tonight to yourself and don’t tell a third person after you leave this place.” Chen Ge kept his voice low, and it added an air of mystery to everything.

After hearing that, the driver nodded consecutively, promising to follow Chen Ge’s orders. The duo walked down the tunnel for three minutes, but they were no closer to the exit.

“This is not right.” Chen Ge stopped, standing in the middle of the tunnel. “It only took half a minute for the light to disappear after the taxi was hauled into the tunnel. At the time, the car was moving about as fast as we’re moving. In other words, we should only take one minute before we saw the exit, but we’ve been walking for longer than that, and there’s not a shred of light in sight.”

“You’re right! What’s going on?” Hearing Chen Ge’s analysis, the driver shivered out in cold sweat. “Perhaps we’ve gone in the wrong direction? Have we accidentally moved deeper into the tunnel?”

“The front of the car is facing the deeper part of the tunnel, so our direction cannot be wrong.”

“Then, why aren’t we out of this tunnel yet?”

“How am I supposed to know?” This was the first time that Chen Ge had encountered something like this. With one hand on the wall, he stealthily took out the black phone. “If only I could contact that Red Specter in the tunnel. Last time we met, we had quite a friendly talk, and it shouldn’t be too hard to ask her for a little favor.”

Chen Ge did not know the name of the Red Specter and did not know how to contact her. However, thinking about his previous experience there, Chen Ge had a brave idea surfacing in his mind.

He clicked open mission for the End of the Tunnel on the black phone and read the mission hint again. “Close your eyes, and you might see a different world.”

With the driver looking on with shock, Chen Ge shredded the sleeve of his shirt.

“What are you doing?”

Chen Ge ignored the driver. He folded the torn sleeve into a blindfold and tied it around his eyes.

“Brother, what are you doing? Can you please act a bit more normally?” The driver was frozen standing where he was. He could not understand Chen Ge’s action at all.

“Be quiet and follow me. If you’re really that afraid, feel free to close your eyes.” With his hand touching the wall, Chen Ge continued to move forward in this manner.

Voluntarily closing one's eyes in the dark and scary tunnel, in a way, was a different method of viewing the world. However, the driver, who had not been briefed on Chen Ge's intention, could not for the life of him understand what Chen Ge was doing. Was this a manifestation of the ostrich effect? By closing one's eyes, it was easier to pretend that the monsters roaming the tunnel did not exist?

Even though he was filled with many questions, the driver followed behind Chen Ge honestly. After all, the man was his only hope. He could not imagine being abandoned in this long stretch of dark tunnel.

Chen Ge had no idea what was going through the driver's mind. With his eyes closed, he was completely submerged in the darkness, and the surrounding became silent. Perhaps it was his tense nerves, but his body temperature kept slipping. If someone accidentally brushed up against him, they might have thought that they had come into contact with a dead body.

With the sense of sight deprived, he could only rely on his sense of hearing and smell as well as the feeling under his skin to help him recognize everything around him. The wall was uneven, and occasionally, his hands would touch something that felt like moss. When his fingers first brushed up against something wet yet sticky, the hair on Chen Ge's arm rose involuntarily.

"Will I eventually get to the exit this way? It shouldn't be so simple. The hint given the black phone probably carries a different meaning." The blinded Chen Ge moved forward with his hands guiding the way. He could not see anything. The darkness, chilliness, and strange sounds as well as the sensitive touch of his fingers overwhelmed his sensory systems like waves.

With superhuman training and determination, Chen Ge resisted the urge to yank off the blindfold and took one step after another. No sight, no thoughts, no nothing.

Chen Ge adjusted his breathing, and just like his first Nightmare Mission, there was only one thought in his mind—finish the task at hand. His mind detached itself from the sense of time, and Chen Ge had no idea how long he had been walking. Different from his previous Nightmare Mission, this time, he did not even pause to count his heartbeat or footsteps. He had completely emptied his mind.

Caressing the wet surface of the wall, he kept on walking until suddenly his hands caught nothing.

There's a hole in the wall? White Dragon Cave Tunnel was a straight route, and there were no turns, so something like this should not have happened.

Should I take off the blindfold to look? Before Chen Ge could make the decision, someone suddenly pulled on his arm, and the person who did that was shaking so violently that Chen Ge could feel that through the skin contact.

“Calm down, what did you see?” The unknown was often the scariest. After losing his sight, Chen Ge’s emotions were more easily influenced by the people around him.

“Don’t panic, describe the thing’s appearance. Is it a person or a bug?” Chen Ge stood where he was, careful not to move a muscle, but he waited for a long time, and there was no reply at all. “Are you there?”

In the empty tunnel, only the echo of Chen Ge’s own voice remained. The driver seemed to have disappeared into thin air.

“What exactly did he see?” If the driver had just disappeared, Chen Ge would not have been so worried, but his timing was just so suspicious. He had left behind such a cryptic message before he disappeared. He had told Chen Ge very explicitly that there was something unique and probably terrifying sitting right next to Chen Ge’s left cheek.

“The driver’s disappearance should be related to this thing, but that is not for certain. Something might have already happened to the man after I decided to put on the blindfold, and it has been someone else who has been following me. He's purposely trying to make me look to the left." Chen Ge had no idea what the truth was. All he could do was try his luck within an acceptable range of possibilities that he could still control.

Raising his arm, Chen Ge touched the left side of his face—there was nothing there. He sighed in relief before slowly moving his arm toward the wall. His fingers soon touched the cold stone wall, and he did not brush up against anything weird. He extended his fingers and stopped at the edge of the wall and the supposed hole.

"There's a strange split in the road that is supposed to be straight. Shall I turn into it to take a look?" Resisting the desire to peel off the blindfold, Chen Ge raised both of his hands, and like a blind person, he slowly nudged toward the mouth of the opening on his left.

"Where will this route lead me to?" It was supposed to be a straight tunnel, but for some reason, he had ended up inside a maze. With every few steps, Chen Ge left a deep scratch on the wall, leaving behind a trail of marks.

He continued walking like that for a few minutes, and then Chen Ge's fingers felt air for the second time. Another split had appeared on his journey.

It was because of the hint on the black phone that Chen Ge had decided to blindfold himself, but the result made him feel greatly unsettled. This straight tunnel seemed to have split into endless turns and corners. Like a person's fate in life, one would never know what was awaiting at the next turn of the corner.

"Xu Yin..." Chen Ge was worried that he might be greeted with a nasty surprise once he tore off the blindfold and placed himself in danger, so before doing that, he summoned Xu Yin. The smell of blood suffused the air, and Chen Ge took in a deep breath. His nerves slowly calmed down, and Xu Yin's presence gave him the sense of security that he had been lacking.

Rubbing his eyes, Chen Ge looked around with Yin Yang Vision. He discovered to his surprise that he was standing at the spot that he started his journey; a few meters behind him was the taxi covered in bloody handprints.

The vehicle was still there, but the driver had already disappeared. With Xu Yin's accompaniment, Chen Ge walked down the tunnel. He did not come across any splits, nor could he find the markings that he scratched on the wall.

The tunnel that he saw with his eyes and the tunnel that he felt with his fingers did not seem to be the same one. This was a strange feeling like one was reality, and the other was a dream, but strangely enough, they were somehow intermingling to form an endlessly repeating circle.

“No wonder the shadow lost once in a place like this. I should consider myself lucky that I was able to escape last time.” White Dragon Cave Tunnel was a unique location, but Chen Ge had no idea what the reason behind its uniqueness was.

“So, the question is, which of the tunnels is the real one? And why were those homeless spirits and souls so drawn to this place? Is it possible that they somehow perceive this place as the cycle of reincarnation?”

This Trial Mission was a lot more complicated than Chen Ge thought. He did not dare move recklessly. He flipped open the comic and released all of his employees.

“Ol’ Zhou and Duan Yue, I need you two to guard the taxi. The rest of you, follow me. Try not to leave too much space between you.” Chen Ge had been to this tunnel before, and based on his online research, he knew clearly how long this tunnel should be.

Chen Ge summoned all of his employees because he wanted to test out his hypothesis.

Chapter 610 - Creature That Lives in Nightmares

Chapter 610: Creature That Lives in Nightmares

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Chen Ge's plan was very simple; he was going to use the special connection between the ghosts to repeat the steps that he took earlier. But unlike before, this time, he decided to have Bai Qiulin take his place. He wanted to see if the same situation would happen when it was a ghost that was blindfolded. Bai Qiulin had his eyes blindfolded by his boss before he understood what was happening.

"Don't think about anything. Empty your mind and walk ahead." Chen Ge and Xu Yin stood about three to four meters behind Bai Qiulin, watching his every move. If anything happened, they would come to his aid instantly.

Not knowing what his boss was up to, Bai Qiulin still followed his order because, in his mind, his boss was always right. He walked down the tunnel for a long time, but what happened to Chen Ge did not replicate itself on Bai Qiulin. Even when he was told to remove the blindfold, Bai Qiulin's face was still colored with confusion, unable to understand his boss' action.

"Having the ghost blindfolded is pointless, but why is that so? Most of the ghosts are formed from the lingering desire of a living human, and the biggest difference between them and a normal human is that they don't possess a physical form. Could it be because when I'm moving down the tunnel with my eyes open, it's a world that is observable to the living humans, but once I close my eyes, I'm moving through a world of the spirits?"

A normal person would not have considered a possibility like that, but Chen Ge was different. In this field, he had a wealth of experience, and his way of thinking was different from most. Many times, he would assume the perspective of the ghost to see things.

"I cannot confirm that one hundred percent, but it is a big possibility.

In any case, this experiment has indirectly proven something—the strange things will only happen after I have my eyes blindfolded.” To have the ghost replace his spot to find the way out was impossible, and Chen Ge was back to square one.

“Looks like I’ll have to do this myself. But with my employees around me, this time, it should be much safer.” Chen Ge led the ghosts back to the taxi and gave Ol’ Zhou and Bai Qiulin some orders before putting on the blindfold. This was his third time venturing into the tunnel.

Darkness swallowed Chen Ge, but he did not feel that worried with his employees watching over him. He walked down the tunnel for ten minutes before finally stopping. The split in the road did not appear, and the tunnel kept going straight, one way forward, leading nowhere.

“Why have I failed this time? Where is the problem?” The difference between his first run and his third run was the number of participants. The first time, Chen Ge did it with the driver, but this time, Chen Ge did it with all of his employees.

“Is there a number limitation? That’s unlikely, it’s more possible that my employees have prevented the thing that should appear around me from coming.”

When the driver disappeared, he had mentioned a strange thing appearing next to Chen Ge’s left cheek. Thinking back, the changing of the tunnel probably had everything to do with that strange thing.

“The driver disappeared in the middle of his sentence, and that was probably that thing’s doing as well.” Chen Ge looked down the dark tunnel and started to hesitate. With his employees, the thing did not dare turn up, but if he put his employees away, there was no guaranteeing his own safety.

He lowered his head to look at his phone. Chen Ge wanted to see how long he still had until his mission time, but to his surprise, he noticed that the time on his phone was running backward, like instead of a clock, it had transformed into a timer.

“What is wrong with this phone? Why is the time running backward? I’ve been in the tunnel at least half an hour already, but the time is still showing the moment when I first stepped into the tunnel.”

Something must have happened. Chen Ge leaned against the wall and frowned in contemplation.

“No one is powerful enough to mess with time, so what could have happened here?” He had not experienced this type of anxiety in a long time. At a time like this, his employees were unable to give him any aid.

With no method to leave the tunnel, Chen Ge was unable to save himself, much less complete the Trial Mission.

He looked into the darkness, and his expression turned severe. “These things didn’t happen when I came alone the first time.”

Thinking back to his previous mission experience and picking out the details, Chen Ge finally made a decision. He put all his ghosts back into his comic, and the originally crowded tunnel instantly cold and silent. In the darkness, only two shadows stood opposite one another.

“You can go now, leave the rest to me.” Patting Xu Yin lightly on his shoulder, Chen Ge switched off the recorder. He put everything away and straightened up. He kept his eyes level, and not a shred of fear could be found on his face.

“All the missions on the black phone are fair. Without effort, there shall be no reward, and the risk and reward are always proportional.

“I’ve been spared adventures like this for a long time already. I’ve almost forgotten this feeling that was common when I first obtained the black phone, the feeling of dancing at the edge of a cliff or on a thin line. One wrong move, and everything will over.”

Chen Ge took in a deep breath and he spoke to the air.

“And now, I’m all alone again.”

He tossed his backpack into his taxi, and like his previous Nightmare Mission, he was alone. Without any weapon, without his employees, he walked toward the deepest darkness with nothing but himself.

“I do wish to see how the world will change after I close my eyes.” With a firm determination, Chen Ge seemed to say that to provoke, his eyes filling up with condescension. He picked up the torn sleeve, and at the last second before putting on the blindfold, he looked behind him and called out Zhang Ya’s name silently.

There was no answer—his shadow was just his shadow. The blindfold came on, and this time, there was no one next to him, just like his very first Nightmare Mission.

Holding the wall, he slowly nudged forward. He only walked for several meters before a shuffling sound appeared next to his ears like the sound of thousands of centipedes crawling on the wall.

“Everything will go to waste once I open my eyes, so this time, no matter what happens, I will not open my eyes.” Part of the confidence that Chen Ge had came from Zhang Ya in his shadow. He knew that she would not watch him get seriously injured.

“Come on, show me what is at the end of the tunnel.” Chen Ge did not hesitate and walked through the shuffling. He was using himself as bait to wait for the ‘big fish’ in the tunnel to bite.

It felt like someone was blowing air into his ears, and his body temperature slipped downward, but none of that was able to stop Chen Ge’s footsteps.

Chapter 611 - The Woman in the Tunnel and the Shadow of the Spider [3 in 1]

Chapter 611: The Woman in the Tunnel and the Shadow of the Spider [3 in 1]

Chen Ge had made the mental preparation that no matter what happened, he would never open his eyes. His body was swallowed up by darkness, and the noises around his eyes fell away. It felt as if he was walking slowly and alone deep into the ocean, departing from the familiar world, with the fear of the future unknown, and carrying with him an anticipation for the final destination. Many feelings blossomed in the man's mind, like an octopus' tentacles wrapping themselves around his shuddering heart.

"I've already experienced this sense of isolation many times before. To prevent this feeling from happening in real life, this time, I have to see this to its end," Chen Ge mumbled to himself, not because he thought someone or something was listening but because he was trying to give himself words of encouragement.

About ten meters later, Chen Ge's felt an emptiness underneath his fingers. On his third trail, the split finally appeared again. Without hesitation, he strode into the split.

The temperature around him dropped. Chen Ge had no idea whether his decision was the correct one or not—he had never been a particularly clever person. The reason that he had been able to survive thus far was dependent on his supernatural observational skill, decisive personality, and a courage that had been cultivated since he was young.

Touching the wet and slimy wall, Chen Ge emptied his mind, not allowing it to latch onto anything. The only sound echoing in his ears was his own footsteps, yet slowly but surely, the originally rhythmic sound was interrupted. Someone or something was following behind Chen Ge.

Don't turn to look, don't even think about it.

Not seeing meant nothing, and not thinking meant not existing. Chen Ge repeated that to himself in his mind, and that was how he kept himself from being distracted.

Many footsteps started to appear in the quiet tunnel. There seemed to be more than Chen Ge walking through the tunnel. The footsteps initially only came from behind Chen Ge, but slowly, other than the side where the wall was, the sound of footsteps came from everywhere.

Chen Ge's heart was itchy like it was being scratched by a cat. He was incredibly curious, but he maintained enough self-control to not remove the simplified blindfold on his face. After going through so much, Chen Ge had a very strong adaptive ability. He soon regained control of himself and slowly got used to the echoes of footsteps around him. He cheered for himself internally, hypnotizing himself with the belief that the footsteps around him were not there to harm him. At least from what he was experiencing, it merely appeared that they just so happened to be on the same path that Chen Ge was travelling on.

Am I on a path that is only traversable by ghosts?

After several more seconds, Chen Ge discovered another problem. Other than the footsteps, there was a new sound, the sound of car tires crunching over items on the road.

Vehicles are passing me by?

Currently, there should only be one automobile in the tunnel, and that was the taxi driven in by the driver.

Who activated the car? Could it be that the driver has found his way back to his taxi? Or is he actually more than a normal taxi driver?

The driver that had driven Chen Ge to White Dragon Cave Tunnel was a random one that he had found on the street; the possibility that he was related to the tunnel was too much of a stretch. The possibility was so small that it could be ignored.

It shouldn't be the driver. Does that mean there's another thing driving the car?

Chen Ge was about to consider the line of thought when something even more incredible happened. He could hear clearly in both of his ears the humming of engines, plural. There was more than one car passing him by.

What on Earth is happening?

With his eyes blindfolded, Chen Ge had no idea what was going on—he could only picture the explanation with what he heard. The footsteps around him picked up pace, and they appeared to be rushing in a unified direction.

Something scarier is forcing him to run? Or has the thing that has been drawing them forward finally appeared?

Chen Ge was unsure whether he should follow them and run. With his eyes blindfolded, it was hard to make a decision. After a moment's hesitation, he decided to maintain his current speed. He kept himself alert and careful with every move and used his remaining senses to slowly dissect this whole new 'world'.

The slick feeling on the wall has disappeared, and what's left is a cold hard surface. It feels much smoother and flatter to the hands, like it has been sanded down before.

Chen Ge desperately wanted to remove the blindfold to confirm his suspicion. Ever since he entered the split, the world had changed tremendously. The split led him to a completely different world.

He continued moving forward, and the tunnel became even more crowded. He could just about make out people talking, and the more he moved forward, the louder the voices became. But the strange thing was, as loud as the person spoke and as sharp as the voices were, he was unable to perceive the meaning that was inherent in the words; he could only process the emotions behind the words—anxiety, anger, and a small inkling of fear.

What is happening out there?

Even though he was still inside the tunnel, the situation outside had completely changed. The footsteps, the screaming, the honking of cars, the tires grinding, and the humming of motors—it felt as if the tunnel was still in use.

If the tunnel hadn't been sealed, it would be this active, I suppose...

Chen Ge had no idea where he was, but one thing was certain, everything that he was experiencing should have something to do with the actual owner of White Dragon Cave Tunnel, and it was probably leading him there on purpose.

The cacophony around Chen Ge grew louder, and more voices entered Chen Ge's mind, making it nearly impossible for him to hear his own voice. The only thing that he could tell was that the footsteps were still moving in one particular direction, and after he paid them more attention, he realized that all the cars were moving that way as well.

Why are they moving that way?

The question was stuck in his mind. While Chen Ge was figuring out the answer, a different sound entered his left ear. The noises drowned out the voice for the most part, such that Chen Ge only managed to tell it was the voice of a child. It was crisp and intermittent, and it sounded like the child was injured.

Chen Ge shuffled another few steps forward along with the 'crowd', and the child's voice appeared again.

"No, wait..." This time, Chen Ge stopped. He noticed something weird. The child's voice was coming from behind his left ear. When all the 'people' and cars were moving forward, the owner of the voice stayed where they were; they had not moved.

Another person might not have noticed a detail as small as this, but Chen Ge was different. To break through this conundrum, he kept his focus sharp, making note of everything around him. He did not dare speak lest he revealed the fact that he was different from the 'people' around him.

"Save me, save me, save my mummy..." Several seconds later, the voice returned, and it came from the same spot as before.

This is strange. I can hear so many sounds, but for some reason, I can hear this soft voice the clearest.

He could read the despair in the person's voice, and the feeling was hard to describe; it made Chen Ge feel comfortable, like the voice was reaching into his heart to squeeze on it.

Turning around, without knowing what kind of danger was coming from behind him, Chen Ge instinctively moved toward the source of the voice. He nudged his footsteps little by little, and like a blind person, Chen Ge slowly searched for his way.

As he got nearer the voice, suddenly, someone tapped him on his shoulder, and then it was followed by an urgent scream. The voice was loud, and it warned him to move faster. If he stayed, he would be in mortal danger.

These are probably the spirits that entered the tunnel with me. They are running for their lives, so the thing chasing after them is probably the owner of the tunnel!

The way Chen Ge thought was different from the ‘people’ inside the tunnel. He was very clear about his identity; he was a bait, waiting for the owner of the tunnel to show himself.

This was a very risky move, but that was the most direct and simplest way that Chen Ge could think of to tackle the issue at hand. He had always adopted the most straightforward solution to his problem—that was his style.

The ‘people’ in the tunnel seemed to misunderstand his action, and the voices around him sharpened to become clearer. The ‘people’ urged him to leave, telling him that if he dared stay any longer, he would really die!

Chen Ge was unfazed by the persuasion of the ‘people’ around him, and soon, his ears captured a different sound.

It sounded like liquid dripping.

Tik tok tik tok.

It was very close to him.

Seeing Chen Ge’s desire to stay, the ‘people’ that tried to persuade him abandoned him, and the tunnel became quiet again. The footsteps, the crunching of the tires, and the honking of the car disappeared like the tunnel was once again abandoned by ‘society and its people’.

“Save me, save me, save my mummy...” The location near the wall issued the child’s pleading again. Chen Ge went closer to it and slowly squatted down. His eyes were still blindfolded, and he did not dare to speak, afraid that it might cause some unknown and unbeneficial changes.

After a few seconds, Chen Ge’s hands, which were not covered or gloved, reached out toward the source of the voice. His fingertips touched a liquid that was cold, and Chen Ge was very familiar with this sense.

This is blood.

He searched around blindly, and eventually, his five fingers came across a thin and slender arm.

“I’m trapped by the window. Please go and save my mother first. She’s stuck in the driver’s seat!”

The child’s voice entered Chen Ge’s ears. He did not follow the child’s direction immediately but was instead reminded of something else. The voice had initially come from his left side; Chen Ge was very sure of that. Now that his body was turned, the voice was still coming from the wall. This meant that what the voice said did not make any logical sense.

If the thing is really trapped inside a car, how did it manage to talk into my ear that was facing the wall? I’ve been walking alongside the wall after all!

Interestingly enough, when the driver disappeared, he had once mentioned that there was something incredibly scary near Chen Ge’s left cheek.

This is such a coincidence. The driver said that the thing was near my left cheek, and that is exactly where the child’s voice originated from. So, if the driver wasn’t lying, the monster that managed to spook him should be the ‘child’ that I’m hearing now.

Chen Ge slowly understood what had happened. The reason for the driver’s disappearance was probably because he had chanced upon the monster’s real identity and had ruined the monster’s plan.

“My mother is just in front. Can you please save her? Please?” The voice was so desperate that it was hard to reject.

“Okay, I will help you.” Chen Ge had no idea what kind of scary face was issuing this childlike, innocent voice. He chose to follow the thing’s request to save the mother because he believed that this was the upright and moral thing to do. With the child’s guidance, Chen Ge bent down and slowly moved forward.

The sound of liquid dripping had not stopped. A strange scent filled up the air, and the further Chen Ge moved forward, the greater the sense of danger he felt he was in. He could not see on account of the blindfold over his eyes, so Chen Ge could only slowly find his way forward.

His hands soon found the frame of a car. He bent down, and his hands touched a woman's hair. He did not speak, and by applying force to his arms, Chen Ge grabbed the woman by her shoulders and gently shuffled her out of the car.

"Take her away! Quick! Now!" After Chen Ge rescued the woman, the child's voice turned shrill. Unlike normal children, the child had not cried even though he was injured, and his voice was filled with a maturity that was not present in other children his age.

Chen Ge had no idea what the child was plotting. He dragged the woman and walked for several steps before suddenly stopping.

"Go ahead! Why are you stopping? Go!"

Ignoring the child's order, Chen Ge carried the woman on his back and returned to the child. Without his sight, Chen Ge's hands touched around the car window and had a brief understanding of the child's situation. The lower half of the child's body was stuck inside the car window, and the broken glass had pierced through his stomach. If Chen Ge forcibly dragged the child out, it would definitely cause the injury to worsen. Chen Ge tried to lift up the car, but obviously, he did not possess the super strength to do that.

"Just leave me behind, take her and leave!" Perhaps it was pain or perhaps it was something else, but the child wailed at the top of his lungs, and finally, Chen Ge could hear the tears in his voice.

"If I abandon you and your mother manages to survive, she will live in guilt for the rest of her life." Chen Ge could not resist the urge to voice the thought in his mind. When he said that, the surroundings suddenly became a lot quieter, but soon, everything returned to normal.

"My body is stuck, and I can't leave. You have to go, or else everyone will die!"

After confirming that his words would not influence this world, Chen Ge became more courageous. "I have an idea that might be able to save you, but it'll be painful, and I can't guarantee that you'll be able to survive."

"What is it?" As long as there was a possibility, most people would still fight for it.

"Your hip bone is stuck in the warped car window. I can try to force you out, but that way, your lower body will definitely be crippled, and the wounds on your body might worsen.” That was the situation that Chen Ge had perceived from the use of his hands, and it was because he had not witnessed the actual gore that he dared come up with such a risky idea. “Like you said, staying here will lead to certain death, but pursuing this chance might lead to a hope of survival.”

“But if I die in the tugging process, wouldn’t you become the murderer that took my life?” the child suddenly asked.

If this was real life, perhaps Chen Ge would hesitate, but in that strange place, he did not panic at all. “If it can increase the chance of your survivability by even one percent, I don’t mind being misunderstood by the world.”

He leaned down on the ground and braced his feet against the warped car window while hugging the child’s upper body with both of his arms. “It’ll be painful, but if we manage to survive this ordeal, then a new life awaits.”

He started to apply force, and the boy’s body was slowly adjusting to the pull. The sound of bones cracking was eerie to Chen Ge’s ears. Other than that, the boy’s skin was torn open, and blood oozed, but none of that stopped Chen Ge from continuing his rescue.

He expended all of his strength and finally pulled the boy out from the warped window.

“Good, we’ve done it! Are you still okay?” No one answered Chen Ge, and the tunnel suddenly became a lot more deserted. Chen Ge had no idea what had happened, but he had a feeling something was not right—perhaps the monster at the back had caught up to them.

Even at a time like that, Chen Ge had not forgotten about the woman on the ground and the child next to him. Even though he clearly knew that neither of them was technically human.

“Something is probably coming, be careful.” Chen Ge slung the woman over his back and picked up the broken child from the ground. To his surprise, the child in his arms was much heavier than the woman on his back—they were not even on the same weight level.

However, it was not the time to care about things like that, and he jogged forward. Chen Ge could not see the road, and it did not take long for him to trip and fall. He did not say a word or even curse; he quickly got back up, picked up the child and the woman, and continued running.

He tripped and fell, gaining many bruises as he knocked against the wall and floor. After who knew how many tumbles, when Chen Ge stood up and wanted to pick up the child again, another voice sounded next to him.

“Are you an idiot?” The voice was similar to the child that he had heard, but the voice was no longer in pain. In its place was a trace of coldness and a strange resentment. Chen Ge did not reply. He wanted to go and pick up the child again, but he caught air.

“So, such people really exist in the world.” The voice continued, but this time, it was came from right above Chen Ge. Standing where he was, when Chen Ge did not know what to do, someone tapped him lightly on his shoulder, and a pair of bone-chilling arms wreathed around his neck and undid the blindfold around his neck.

Opening his eyes, Chen Ge turned to look and realize that it was the woman in the tunnel standing behind him. But different from last time, she was much prettier—at least, her skull was not broken, and all her facial features were where they should be.

“It’s you?” Chen Ge revealed a smile and was about to say something more when he fell under the shadow of a large spider. Looking up, the smile on Chen Ge’s face froze. Even though he had met so many ghosts, at that moment, he could not help the fear from curling around his heart.

Just above Chen Ge was a red spider made from endless spirits and Specters hanging upside down. The red on the spider was much brighter than the red dress on the woman’s body. It felt as if blood was flowing through its body, and it were slowly dripping down.

“Why have you stopped speaking?” The voice came from the head of the spider. Following the voice, Chen Ge noticed that the spider’s head was replaced by a boy’s. He only had his upper body remaining, and his lower body was attached to that of a giant spider. With his legs gripping the wall, the boy hung from the ceiling, looking at Chen Ge with cruelty and hatred in his eyes.

“Wait, so I was carrying you with me earlier?” The first sentence out of Chen Ge’s lips stumped the boy. In reality, he also did not expect Chen Ge to choose to carry him and run. Both the ghost and the man felt quite uncomfortable after the charade was broken.

“It’s fine, that’s quite an interesting experience.” Chen Ge tried to find an excuse for his behavior. Without waiting for the boy’s response, he quickly changed the topic. "I actually came here to discuss something with your mother. I didn't expect something like this to happen. I know your heart is filled with hatred, and I will not try to convince you to let it go. I merely want to say that if you have any dream, I can help you fulfil it, even if it is to take revenge."

What Chen Ge said was completely different from what the boy anticipated. He did not think that anyone would be able to say something like this considering the situation that Chen Ge was in. He did not know how to answer, so he chose to be silent.

"It's fine if you don't want to answer, but can you tell me why the tunnel has changed to something like this?" Chen Ge asked the question on his mind. The White Dragon Cave Tunnel even stopped the shadow, so there had to be a big secret hiding here.

The boy opened his lips, but perhaps he thought that he should not reveal his past so easily, so he closed them again. However, with the persuasion from the woman and the fact that he had nothing to lose, the boy gave Chen Ge a rough depiction of his past.

He was the woman's child, and after his mother divorced his father several years ago, she drove the car, taking her child back to her mother's home. When they passed White Dragon Cave Tunnel, they got into a car accident, a large-scale collision in fact, and one of them was leaking gas.

It was unclear now which of the cars started burning first, but as the trail of fire nudged toward the oil-leaking vehicle, the people in the tunnel started to run. At the time, the boy had been stuck inside the window, and the woman was injured. She had managed to crawl out from the wreckage, but she had been too weak to be able to save her child without help.

She had cried for help from people around her, chasing after the passing cars, yelling for them to stop. If one of them had been willing to help her, they would have been able to save the child. However, under the condition where their lives would be put in danger, no one was willing to lend a hand.

In the end, the woman who had the means to escape did not leave but chose to return to her baby's side, to console him, to accompany him until the fire reached the leaking vehicle.

Ever since then, peace had deserted White Dragon Cave Tunnel.

Many drivers saw a woman in a red dress standing in the tunnel waving for them to stop, and some witnessed a monster piecing indeterminate things onto its body...

Chapter 612: Dream Weaver?

The woman waved for the drivers to stop to get people to help save her son. If the drivers would stop to aid her, she would get into the car and follow them until they arrived at her son's death spot. While those who refused to stop and left just like that, the woman would leave something special in their car. Compared to the boy who had turned into a monster, the woman could be considered relatively kind.

With his body stuck, and his eyes watching the slow approach of death, the small body had been consumed by fire bit by bit, and the pain had forever been seared in the boy's heart, making it something that he would never forget. His clear eyes were dominated by hatred and resentment. The flames danced on his skin, filling every inch of his body, slowly turning him into something else.

Hatred blinded him, causing him to destroy everything in sight, using their body to fill up his own misgiving. If one came across the woman in the tunnel, if one was kind enough, one would at most get into a car accident. The vehicle would be ruined, but most of the time, one would escape with one's life intact. However, if one ran into the child, the only destination was death.

Specters were ultimately Specters; resentment had already laid a curtain over their eyes, silencing their conscience while becoming the reason for their existence. Chen Ge listened to the woman and her child's story patiently. This was undeniably a tragedy; human nature was gray, alternating between a sinner and a saint. As a bystander, he had no right to judge others, so he could only lend them an ear.

Without anyone stopping to help and her son stuck in the car, the mother had chosen to return to accompany her child, to actively wait for death. From Chen Ge's perspective, the child had turned into a true monster—his resentment being far beyond that of his mother was due to guilt and self-blame. Perhaps he thought subconsciously that it was him who caused his mother's death; his mother would not have died if not for him. He wanted to find a channel to vent that emotion, and that turned him deeper toward the abyss.

With a giant shadow of a spider hanging above him, it would be a lie to say that Chen Ge did not feel a shred of fear. However, after understanding the whole story, at the very least, he was able to understand the woman in the tunnel and her son that took on the shape of a giant spider better.

“So, you have been suffering a pain like this.” Chen Ge’s tone was even. There was no conspicuous pity—at most, there was only a light trace of melancholy.

“Pain? I wouldn’t say so. Initially, there might be some discomfort, but eventually, I fell in love with this sensation. Every nerve was grinded sharp by knives. Seeing blood pour out from the many holes and then sharing this joy with more people, I like to admire their expression because I know they are admiring me as well.” The boy’s upper body grew on the ginormous spider body, and he had an ‘innocent’ smile on his face.

“I can understand that, and in fact, I do admire you.” Chen Ge’s expression returned to normal, and the last trace of discomfort on his face disappeared. In terms of being calm while facing a great deal of pressure, no one could do better than Chen Ge in Jiujiang.

“You admire me? I’m sorry, but that only made the scalp of my head go numb, so please watch your actions and words. Don’t come too close to me, you make me uncomfortable.” The child denied Chen Ge’s kind intention. He wanted to leave immediately. “Go back to where you came from. We don’t welcome you here. Mommy will only stay with me, and she won’t be going anywhere.”

The monster spoke in the petulance of a child, but contrasting that with his scary body, it was definitely a strange experience.

“Since you insist on your mother staying with you, I’m not going to force anything otherwise. But in return, can you help me answer a few simple questions?” Without waiting for a confirmation, Chen Ge continued. “Why are there suddenly splits in White Dragon Cave Tunnel? The tunnel that I saw when my eyes open and the tunnel that I felt with my eyes closed are completely different, why is that? After closing my eyes, I can hear people and car honks, and my hands even found the frame of a car, but how come all these things disappear after I open my eyes?”

“You sure have plenty of questions.” The boy was impatient. His thick appendages crawled on the wall, and each move created this grating sound of shuffling.

“I’m just curious.”

“There is only one tunnel here. Earlier, I drew you into my dream.”

The boy’s answer surprised Chen Ge. “In your dream?”

“It’s very hard to explain. No one has asked me this question before, so for now, let’s just use dreams to explain it. It is the term closest to the truth anyway.” The boy started at Chen Ge, and he was quite annoyed. If not for the fact that Chen Ge had done everything right in his test, he would have come after Chen Ge already.

“A dream only exists in one’s mind, and the body is still, but what I experienced earlier is completely different from a dream. I couldn’t see it, but everything else was real. My fingers could touch it, and my ears can hear them.” Chen Ge did not believe the boy could weave dreams and, more than that, drag someone into that weaved dream.

“Why do you have so many endless questions?” The boy’s murderous intent continued to rise seeing how stubborn Chen Ge was, but he was able to suppress it. “I’ve already told you, dream is just an appellation. If you want, you can also see it as a type of power. As long as we’re in this tunnel, I can drag everything into my dream.”

“It’s geographically limited? The power is only usable inside this tunnel?” Chen Ge noted the boy’s weakness before the boy’s face. He started to lower his head to think ignoring the boy’s face, which had turned ashen.

The boy was different from a normal Red Specter. Compared to a Specter, he was more like a monster. The big difference between his upper body and lower body attracted Chen Ge’s attention. Thinking back to earlier, the world that he had felt, the boy was stuck inside the car with his upper body exposed outside and his lower body trapped inside. After he transformed into a ghost, his upper body remained, but his lower body disappeared.

Where’s his lower body? Chen Ge’s mind turned, and then he was suddenly reminded of something else. Of all the three-star scenarios introduced by the black phone, there was one common feature—there would be a door! So, where was the door at White Dragon Cave Tunnel?

This is a tunnel, and the builder wouldn't have built a door in the middle of the street for no reason, right?

Only when one is at the deepest depths of despair can they push open the 'door'. The child spent his last moment trapped inside a car window. His body was crushed by the warped window.

A flash crossed Chen Ge's eyes. The 'door' in White Dragon Cave Tunnel was most likely the car door!

But then that led to another problem. The abandoned car had already been towed away by the police a long time ago, so how was the 'door' inside the tunnel being maintained?

With a curious gaze, Chen Ge turned to study the boy's incredibly disproportionate body.

Could the door be growing on him?

Chen Ge was shocked by the thought that appeared in his mind. If that was the case, then the Red Specter before him was really something extraordinary.

A moveable blood door...

Being stared at by Chen Ge, the boy's pretty brows scrunched together. For some reason, he felt like in Chen Ge's eyes, he was not a scary monster but instead some kind of rare piece of art.

“What are you looking at?” The thick appendage moved to point to Chen Ge, stopping before his eyes. The boy seemed to be averse to be gawked at like a spectacle.

“I’m sorry, that was impolite of me.” Chen Ge pulled his eyes away from the part where the body’s stomach was joined to the spider’s body. Even if the ‘door’ for White Dragon Cave Tunnel was really on the child’s body, he would not tell Chen Ge anyway, so focusing on that point would be useless. Thus, Chen Ge ended that topic quickly. “If you’re not willing to share about that, we’ll talk about something else.”

...

Chen Ge suddenly turned serious. “This is my last question, and it is related to all of our safety, so I hope you wouldn’t hide anything from me with regards to this question.”

“Go ahead.” The boy pulled back his scary appendage.

“At midnight several days ago, did you see a shadow enter White Dragon Cave Tunnel?”

The mention of the shadow caused the boy’s expression to shift instantly. “Are you here because of him?”

“Looks like you do know something.” Chen Ge was excited. He had finally someone who could tell him more about the shadow. The temperature in the tunnel suddenly dropped, and a cold wind drifted out from the deeper part of the tunnel. Neither the boy nor his mother spoke. They were silent for a long time until the boy jumped down from the wall. With his strong appendages holding his large body up, the boy looked down on Chen Ge.

The monster was incredibly large, and the way he stood placed Chen Ge under great pressure.

“Go home. The more you know, the deeper you’ll sink into despair.” When the boy said that, his voice even quivered slightly.

“Are you afraid?”

“I’m not!” The boy suddenly lost control of his emotions and raised his front appendage to swipe at Chen Ge’s chest. The human faces on the appendage wailed, but it stopped at the last minute.

“We have the same enemy, so I can help you in any way that you might need me to.” Chen Ge looked at the appendage right before his eyes and slowly lowered his arms. If the boy wanted to hurt him, he would be sent flying already.

After a long time, the boy slowly moved back from Chen Ge and lowered his body to maintain the same eye level with Chen Ge. “That man is crazy. That was not his first time coming to White Dragon Cave.”

“He’s been here before? Was this several years ago?” Chen Ge thought back to the strange ‘memory’ that he had seen in this tunnel, about how his young self was killed.

“Do you know why my mother and I insist on hiding here, unwilling to take one step out of this place?” Uncertainty crossed the boy’s face.

“Is it because of the shadow? Does he want to harm you?”

“Who really knows? The shadow comes every year, and every time, he is stronger than before. I only barely manage to keep him back every time.” The boy did not sense any threat from Chen Ge, but he felt a strange discomfort from the man’s shadow. “I hate shadows.”

“I met the shadow recently, and in just a week, he has grown much stronger. I have no idea how he did that.” Perhaps the information revealed by Chen Ge made them uncomfortable. After sharing a look with his mother, the boy told Chen Ge, “I can tell you everything I know, but you have to promise me one thing.”

“No problem.” Chen Ge gave his promise without even asking what the promise was. His easy-going nature unsettled the boy.

“I need you to wind this spider thread around your neck.” The appendages on the spider body spread and a gap slowly opened at the joint where the boy’s torso was sewn to the spider body. A thick stench of blood floated into the air, and blood dripped down his body.

As the gap grew bigger, the expression on the boy's face turned scarier. He reached his hand into the gap, and it looked like someone was reaching into his own stomach.

"Tell me your choice." The boy slowly pulled out his hand to retrieve several red spider threads from the gap. They were stuck to each other, and with the boy pulling on them, they gradually wound into a thin red rope.

There was no fear in Chen Ge's eyes as he stared at the thread dripping with blood. His answer was still the name. "No problem."

Stepping forward, Chen Ge moved to the boy's side without any hesitation.

His insouciance caused the boy to become suspicious. He studied Chen Ge seriously, and for a moment, he thought this kind-looking man before him could be hiding a devil with self-destructive desire deep inside his heart.

Being close to the boy, Chen Ge finally had a chance to inspect the gap on the boy's body.

Fresh blood, spider threads that looked like blood vessels, the heavy scent of blood—all these features matched those of a 'blood door'.

Accepting the spider thread with both hands, Chen Ge smiled at the boy. He cried for Zhang Ya's name internally, wanting Zhang Ya to see whether the thread would be threatening to his health or not, but Zhang Ya gave him no reply.

The thread slowly neared Chen Ge's neck; it was too late to turn back now. Just as the thread was going to wind around his thin neck, the woman in the tunnel stepped forward and shoved the thread away. Perhaps Chen Ge had left a good impression on the woman the last time they interacted, so this time, she came forward to help him.

"Are you really not afraid?" Suspicion appeared in the boy's resentment-filled eyes. Then he turned around. "Follow me. I know many things about the shadow. Perhaps we can work together this one time."

Chen Ge had no idea why the boy suddenly changed his mind. He followed the boy, and something brushed against his head. He lifted his head to look, and Chen Ge's eyes twitched. In the center of the tunnel, at the top of the darkened ceiling, hung many "bodies".

Their necks were all wound with spider threads, and they dangled from the ceiling like hanging victims.

“If you wind the thread around your neck, your only destination is death. I have no idea why Mommy suddenly decided to intervene, but I respect her choice.” The boy’s heart was seared by hatred and anger; the only thing that could give him pause in the world was his mother.

The boy crawled onto the wall—this ‘forest of bodies’ was where he rested normally. “I met the shadow a long time ago. At the time, he was not as powerful as he is now; he was just a kid slightly older than me.

“I have no idea where he came from or what his origin was; I only know he’s been looking for many different children, and if I’m not mistaken, he needs to feed these children to something called a ghost fetus.

“He told me that he needed to build a door at Li Wan City. Initially, I had no idea what he meant, but later, I understood that the door he mentioned was this.”

The boy moved his body, and blood splashed. A large gap opened up between his spider body and his human torso. A conspicuous depression could be seen. “I have a distorted door, and the door is stuck inside my body. It was something I edged open little by little when the fire was burning.”

Chapter 614: Come with Me

Only when a person was at their most despaired and most helpless would they be able to open the 'door'. When the fire was burning, the boy was trapped inside the warped car window, and what he saw was his injured mother and the people who ran away from them.

Fire burned his body, and as his flesh and blood melted into the car door, he finally managed to open the door that he was stuck in. His lower body was left inside the car, but his upper body was burnt into the car door.

Chen Ge couldn't imagine a pain like that, so no matter what the boy had done, Chen Ge did not think that he was in a position to judge him. No one was born a monster; even if they looked different from a normal human being, their heart was made of flesh and blood.

Crawling amid the jungle of human bodies, the gap on the boy's body slowly recovered.

"The shadow wants to build a door in Li Wan City to release something from behind the door. Before he met me, the madman came up with many experiments to test out human nature and push innocent people to their breaking point. Then he used them to open the door, but even until they died, none of them were able to open the door. His plan kept failing until he eventually turned his target to me. He wanted to capture me and detain me in Li Wan City to help him complete his plan."

The boy's tone dropped. "Naturally, I wouldn't agree, so I wanted to kill him."

This was a cruel character. He would kill whoever that dared target him.

"But from the current situation, it appears that you've failed." Chen Ge easily rained on the boy's parade. He was reminding the boy that things had changed, and the shadow was their common enemy.

“You’re right, he’s extremely hard to kill.” After saying that, the boy studied Chen Ge. “He grows ever stronger, but as long as I am inside this tunnel, I’ll be able to protect myself and my mother.”

Blood leaked out from the boy’s torso. “I can drag anything that enter the tunnel into the door, and there I can do many things that I wouldn’t be able to do outside the tunnel.”

The door-pusher’s power would multiply when they were inside the door, so the boy’s ability to pull people into his door was incredibly powerful if used right.

“So, you pulled me into your door earlier?”

“Yes, that place is a nightmare that I’ve weaved. Time is frozen on that day, but there is a weakness to this power—it can only be used inside this tunnel. Once I leave the tunnel, the door can’t be opened anymore.” The gap on the boy’s torso was like a mouth, and it looked scary. “Sometimes, I even wonder, was it me who opened the door, or did the door assume who I was?”

The boy’s situation was very unique. This was Chen Ge’s first time encountering something like this as well.

“You’ve fought the shadow before. Did you notice if he has any weakness?”

“If I knew that, do you think I’d still be here talking with you?” The appendages shook agitatedly, and the boy looked quite mad. “The madman was stronger every time he came. I tried many methods, but I could not kill him. Then I planned to trap him inside the world behind the door, but eventually, he found out the pattern of the tunnel behind the door and almost escaped on his own...”

The boy caught himself because he realized that he had accidentally revealed that there was a pattern to the tunnel behind the door.

“And then?” Chen Ge pretended not to have heard him and urged him to continue.

“He failed, but I won’t be able to use the same trick next time.” The boy leaned his body to the side to expose a large gash on the spider body. “I just fought him some time back. He was strangely desperate like a maddened dog.”

“Where did he go after that fight?” Chen Ge wanted to know if the shadow returned to possess Jia Ming after leaving the tunnel.

“How would I know?” The boy started to evade the question. With the interrogation from Chen Ge, he had finally revealed three things to him. Whenever the shadow came here, his form would change. The boy suspected that the shadow had the ability to change his appearance and size. There was a child’s shadow hiding inside the shadow—no matter the appearance that he took on, the child’s shadow had never changed. The last was something that the boy himself could not confirm. He sensed a presence similar to Chen Ge in the shadow, and that was why he had wanted to kill Chen Ge earlier.

Memorizing these three points, after confirming that he was unable to get more information from the boy, Chen Ge turned to the woman.

“What are doing?” Before he said anything, the boy weaved through the ‘forest’ to stand between Chen Ge and his mother.

“After you leave the tunnel, you won’t be able to open the door inside your body, and your power will drop drastically, so I wish to ask her to help me fight the shadow. After all, the more we have, the greater the chance of winning.”

Chen Ge said that so naturally that the boy felt stumped. “Letting you go and telling you so many things is already the limit of my kindness, but you still want to take my mommy with you?”

“If we don’t deal with the shadow, when he returns to the tunnel, both you and your mother will die,” Chen Ge said plainly. The boy’s mind was filled with resentment and vengeance, so the normal persuasion that Chen Ge used on other ghosts would be pointless. Thus, Chen Ge changed his angle and decided to go around this the most straightforward way—to convince the boy with the facts.

“I will not force you to make the choice, but I hope that you’ll really take into consideration your mother and your current situation.” With pain in his voice, Chen Ge empathized with their pain. “I believe you are unwilling to experience that deep despair again, right?”

“Impossible, she will die if she leaves this tunnel. They will all die.” The appendages slashed the dead bodies hanging from the ceiling. The pained souls wailed, but their spirits were wound inside the spider web—they were unable to escape. The boy could be quite scary if he wanted to.

“Instead of waiting for death, I still think it’s better to grasp your fate with your hands.” Chen Ge walked past the boy to address the woman. “Your child wants to protect you, and you also want to protect your child; neither of you can suffer the pain of loss again. I understand that, so no matter the choice either of you make, I will accept it.”

The dangling bodies swayed as they cried out in pain. This continued for several minutes until the woman smiled at Chen Ge and walked toward her boy.

Like a loving mother, she reached out to hug the boy’s head. The boy’s eyes, which were filled with hatred, suddenly softened, and his large appendages were pulled together. The scary lines on the spider body also stopped bleeding.

The woman whispered something into the boy’s ear before letting go and walking out of the tunnel.

Chen Ge did not pry because he said that he would accept any decision that they made. Catching up to the woman, the expression on Chen Ge’s face finally softened.

This three-star scenario should be successful after bringing away the mother of the strongest monster with me, but the completion rate will probably be really low. I should come back if I have the chance to give the mother and son their deserved reunion. For now, I should focus on dealing with the shadow.

The taxi was parked at the entrance of the tunnel, and Chen Ge's focus was captured as he studied one page of the comic. After a long time, there was a commotion coming from the driver's seat, so Chen Ge pulled the door lightly open. "You're finally awake."

He tapped the driver's face and then covered his mouth. He predicted that the first thing the driver would do after waking up was scream, so he took the precaution. The driver's eyes flew open, and his face was covered in fear.

"Calm down, and listen to me." After conversing with the spider-boy, Chen Ge had not left immediately. To ensure that the mission was completed, he had spent time inside the tunnel until the sun rose. After one night of exploration, Chen Ge had discovered many things.

Many spirits that died from car accidents had made their home inside the tunnel; the place was as dangerous as the underground morgue. However, whenever the shadow came, he would commit to a total cleanse, taking away or consuming all the spirits that blocked his way. As time passed, the number of ghosts in White Dragon Cave Tunnel decreased, and in a way, Chen Ge benefited from that.

They had come across so many ghosts heading toward the tunnel when they arrived because that was the boy laying the bait for them to come. The boy had been injured in the battle with the shadow, and the fastest way to recover was to feed.

After some communication, Chen Ge knew that the boy was still hiding his special power, and that power appeared to be related to his large spider body. Chen Ge did not interact too much with the boy, and for the time being, he did not plan to bring the boy back to his Haunted House. After pushing open the 'door' in the fire, the boy had been completely corrupted.

He hated everything other than his mother. Selfishness, hatred, anger

—all the negative human emotions could be found on the boy's body, so in other words, the boy was much more dangerous than he appeared.

Pulling back his thought, Chen Ge turned to the panicking driver, and his voice softened. "We seemed to have run into ghosts tonight."

Slowly releasing his hand, Chen Ge put his backpack on the passenger seat and said calmly, "We'll talk on the road, but for now, let's leave this haunted place first."

The driver immediately started the car and turned to rush down the road. "What happened earlier? I remember there were three, no, wait, two strange passengers inside the car, and then we were carried into White Dragon Tunnel Cave. There were many people rapping against the car window, and there were bloody handprints everywhere. The car broke down, and the phone couldn't be used..."

As he spoke, the driver sounded like he was about to cry. Chen Ge quickly tried to calm his emotions. "I think you were possessed. I got into your car in Western Jiujiang, and I wanted to go to Eastern Jiujiang to visit a friend. But on the way, when we passed an old, empty, abandoned building, you suddenly stopped and rolled down the window to talk to the air. Then you even opened the car door. You have no idea how scared I was."

"You didn't see anyone?" The driver's face was blanched.

"There was no one there; I only saw you talking to air. Then something creepier happened. After driving for a while, you suddenly stepped on the brake, screaming about almost hitting someone. I quickly turned to look, but there was no one on the road. Then, without asking for my opinion, you opened the backdoor and started rambling again." Chen Ge complained to the driver like he was the wronged party. "Then, just when I thought things couldn't get weirder, after finishing your one-sided conversation, you drove the car right into White Dragon Cave Tunnel. I tried but couldn't stop you."

"I think I have a memory of that." The driver took in a cold breath. He felt like his limbs were frozen. "Have I really been possessed? Are there actual ghosts in this world?"

"That, I cannot answer, but in any case, you have given me the biggest scare of my life tonight." Chen Ge hugged the backpack that radiated a faint scent of blood and looked quite pitiable.

“We probably ran into ghosts then.” The driver looked at the squeaky clean car window—there was not one bloody handprint in sight. He had no idea that it was Chen Ge and all of his employees who had cleaned his car for almost an hour. His heart was shaking, and the driver kept feeling something was wrong. However, he kept his lips zipped, and he only sighed in relief after driving out of Eastern Jiujiang.

As the sky was hazy with light, the driver dropped Chen Ge off at New Century Park.

“Just drop me here. Here’s 100, keep the change.” Chen Ge was about to leave when the driver grabbed his sleeve. “What’s wrong?”

“Big brother, are you sure you didn’t see anything last night?” The driver glanced around his car. “Please, give me a direct answer. I don’t think I’ll be able to drive this car anymore. I keep feeling like there’s something inside here.”

“Don’t worry, your car now is very clean, and in the future, stop driving to Eastern Jiujiang,” Chen Ge said as he grabbed his bag and headed into the park.

“What exactly happened last night? Oh right, I can check the vehicle camera... Wait a minute, who removed the machine? If it’s a ghost, then it sure is a high-tech ghost!”

...

Returning to the Haunted House, Chen Ge went into the staff breakroom and took out the black phone. As the sun rose, he received the mission complete message.

“Congratulation Specters’ Favored for completing three-star Trial Mission.

“A new scenario, The End of the Tunnel, has been unlocked.

“The End of the Tunnel: What is at the end of the tunnel?

“Mission Completion Rate: 20%

“Hidden reward not yet unlocked.”

The completion rate is low, just slightly higher than the rate at Coffin Village, Chen Ge, sitting in bed, thought to himself. Since the completion rate is only twenty percent, it looks like the boy in the tunnel still hid something very important from me. He must have lied to me last night, but it is hard to tell what the lie was.

The boy had a hatred-filled heart, so it was normal for him not to trust Chen Ge. If not for his mother, the boy would have hanged Chen Ge.

Looks like he needs some real education.

Putting the phone away, Chen Ge went underground and found the newly-unlocked scenario next to the Twin Water Ghost pool.

It was a tunnel that one could not see the end of. Chen Ge had no idea where it led, and just standing at the entrance, Chen Ge could feel the bone-chilling wind that radiated out.

The boy can only open the door inside his body at White Dragon Cave Tunnel. I wonder if he can do the same if he's here at this Haunted House replica.

The boy was unique because he was in possession of a mobile door. Chen Ge valued that because he believed that in the near future, the boy would have a huge role to play.

After sealing up the entrance, Chen Ge left. He planned to remake all of these recent scenarios to combine them into a large faux-four-star scenario after completing the 3.5-star scenario in Li Wan City.

He already had a concept inside his mind.

When this large scenario is built, my Haunted House should rise to a new height.

Focused on dealing with the shadow, it had been so long since Chen Ge admired the happy expressions on his visitors' faces.

The weather forecast said that there might be a rain tonight. After the sun sets, I should go explore the area around Li Wan City to see if I can run into the woman with the red raincoat.

At 8 am, Chen Ge, who had only lain down for two hours of sleep, walked out from the Haunted House. The sky was cloudy, a portent of lousy weather ahead, but that did not dampen the visitors' spirit. The theme park was still not yet officially open, but there was already a crowd waiting.

"No matter how good the attraction is, after many repetitions, the visitors will eventually lose interest. I have to keep unlocking new scenarios or come up with new playstyle to spice up the experience." The Haunted House was Chen Ge's base. He decided to give it a good upgrade once he dealt with the shadow.

"Boss, what are you thinking about?" Xiao Gu jogged through the gate in a pair of exercise slacks. "We probably won't have that many visitors today on the account of impending rain."

"That might not be true. Once it starts to rain, the visitors will be forced to queue for indoor attractions since the outdoor attractions won't operate normally. Perhaps many visitors who normally wouldn't give the Haunted House a chance might attempt it." Chen Ge led Xiao Gu to the dressing room. "In other words, don't think about slacking on the job. Get to work."

"Yes, boss." Xiao Gu was a very qualified worker. He was loyal and worked without complaint. Chen Ge planned to raise his salary for the coming month. The Haunted House could not have met its success with the workers, so naturally, Chen Ge felt like he should share the earnings with them.

"After the new scenarios are unlocked, two employees is no longer enough. I should try to recruit more employees during this mission."

The park opened at 9 am, and a new busy day began. This time, Chen Ge did not hide inside the staff breakroom to sleep. He summoned Bai Qiulin, Ol' Zhou, and Duan Yue and had them change into outfits that would not show their faces. Chen Ge led them through all the scenarios before his guests.

He explained the purpose of all the rooms in the Haunted House and the official responsibility of a Haunted House worker to the three of them. He even gave them some lessons on running and operating the business.

“In the future, I’ll need the three of you to help me manage the underground scenarios. I will have Xu Yin and Yan Danian help you.”

The underground scenario was getting bigger and bigger, so Chen Ge definitely could not handle everything alone. To prevent accidents, he needed to improve the safety awareness of his ‘employees’.

“In a bit, I need you to pass on the knowledge that I’ve taught you today to the students in the mannequins and the professors and lecturers in the morgue. Especially remind the professors to not purposely go after the students from the medical university.”

Chen Ge had no idea what the source of the professors’ conflict with the Jiujiang Medical University students was. They were normally so reserved and professional, rarely showing up before the visitors, but once the students from the university arrived, they would turn into the scariest visage.

To Chen Ge’s bafflement, the headmaster from the university seemed to have taken this on as a challenge. He even encouraged his students to come to the Haunted House’s morgue to train their courage when they were free. Chen Ge did not want to intervene too much, but whenever he saw the students who were scared mindless by their ‘teachers’, he would feel sorry for them.

“When I go around Li Wan City tonight, I should bring the professors with me. I have a feeling their full potential hasn’t been unlocked yet, and it’s not a long-term solution to have them spend their time just scaring students in the underground morgue.”

After briefing Ol’ Zhou and the rest, Chen Ge had them enter the scenario.

The visitors that visited the Haunted House that day would come across this strange scene. There would be this strangely-dressed fellow, and no one knew whether they were a visitor or worker. As they stood on the podium in the classroom explaining lessons on management to the room of mannequins, words would appear on the blackboard, notes about how to find people to talk to inside a group and how to increase efficiency at work. It felt like a scene right out of a multi-level marketing meeting.

Chen Ge, who hid in the corner, kept watch over Ol' Zhou's group, and reality proved that they were indeed quite excellent and would become the spiritual center of the Haunted House in the future.

"The three of them, and Yan Danian, are the perfect team. They know each other well, and each has their own assigned role. The only weakness is their lack of power. However, once Bai Qiulin advances to become a Red Specter, that weakness will be obsolete. This team of four can help me manage many scenarios."

Chen Ge was very satisfied, but he still had a regret in his heart because the most suitable candidate to be the Haunted House's manager should be Mu Yang High School's old headmaster.

"Perhaps I should return to that place to look around if there's time." Chen Ge walked out from the underground parking lot. He entered the staff breakroom, removed the cat from its perch, opened the locked drawer, and fished out the notes that he had made earlier. He went through all the supernatural events that he had encountered in Eastern Jiujiang.

After finishing his revision, Chen Ge used his lighter to burn the papers. The man and the cat saw the ash that floated up into the air, but they were thinking about different things.

"The sky is dark. There should be a heavy rain tonight."

...

The clouds were still hanging low in the sky at 3 pm. Due to safety concerns, most of the outdoor attractions had been shut down, and more visitors rushed into the Haunted House. At 5 pm, a shower fell from the sky, and it continued to grow. As a kind and considerate gesture, Uncle Xu and the park workers gave out free umbrellas to the visitors who needed them. Seeing as the rain might turn heavier, the park decided to close its door at 5:30 pm.

"It's raining, so why don't the two of you go home?" After sending the last batch of visitors away, Chen Ge let Xu Wan and Xiao Gu off work while he stayed behind to finish the cleaning.

At 7 pm, the sky became darker. Chen Ge stared at the dim sky outside the Haunted House, and he was silently contemplating.

“This is such a wonderful weather.” Changing into a set of clean clothes, Chen Ge grabbed his backpack and ran into the underground parking lot. He placed all the ghosts that he could carry into the comic, including the senior doctor Wei Jiuqin.

“Sir, you don’t need to come out, just stay inside the pages. I’m bringing you with me because you’re a good doctor, and I hope your good karma will be able to bring me luck tonight.”

Chen Ge returned to the staff breakroom and found another bag. He poured some cat food inside it.

“I’m going out to do something big tonight, you coming?” Chen Ge knelt down next to the white bag. The confused cat tilted its head at the bag of cat food, and it felt this scene was strangely familiar. Before it could resist, Chen Ge shoved it and Xiaoxiao into the travel bag.

“After all, it’s a cat that has consumed the society’s blood vial. It’s quite spirited.” Chen Ge pulled up the zipper half-way and rubbed the cat that poked its head out.

Chen Ge left the room and exited the Haunted House via the backdoor. He stopped next to the bus. Ever since he obtained the vehicle, it had been parked near the Haunted House’s backdoor.

Uncle Xu had asked him about it before, and Chen Ge had said that he dragged this from the flea market and was planning to turn it into a new scenario. Summoning the driver, Tang Jun, from the comic, Chen Ge passed him the key. “Tonight, we’re going for a spin.”

Chapter 617 - Welcome, Passengers

Chapter 617: Welcome, Passengers

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

The honest Tang Jun opened the door, took the seat at the driver's spot, and felt that everything was so surreal. "I didn't think I'd get back to my old career so soon."

"That is what you're best at, but I'll never force you to do anything you don't like. We're colleagues, so if you have any requests, do voice them." Chen Ge placed the heavy backpack at the last row. "Tonight's weather is not bad. The rain is very heavy, which is perfect for an outing."

...

"Where are we planning to go tonight?" Tang Jun was still a bit cautious around Chen Ge for reasons that he could not understand.

"Li Wan City, just take the route that you're familiar with."

"We're really going there?" When he heard the words 'Li Wan City', a bad omen arose within Tang Jun's heart. "Boss, that place is really dangerous. I'm not doubting your ability, but I simply think there is no reason for us to provoke them."

"I'm not doing this to provoke anyone." Tang Jun was about to sigh in relief when Chen Ge added, "I plan to cleanse Li Wan City from top to bottom, to rescue those that need to be rescued and to find out the truth."

Since Chen Ge had said that, there was nothing more for Tang Jun to say; they were on different wavelengths.

"There's still time for you to bow out. We'll only depart at 11 pm." Route 104 was very long, and it connected Eastern and Western Jiujiang. If they left at 11 pm, if there was no delay, they would arrive at Li Wan City after midnight.

"I won't run; you've underestimated me." Tang Jun's legs shook unnaturally, and his hands gripped the steering wheel a bit too tightly.

The rain continued to pour, and it was complete darkness outside of the bus.

At 11 pm, a broken bus exited New Century Park and slowly disappeared into the rain.

“Is this how you normally drive?”

“Yes.”

“Have you been blocked by traffic police before?”

“No. The shadow has done something to the vehicle. In a way, you can see this vehicle as a hearse in service of dead people and people in despair.” Tang Jun answered Chen Ge’s questions seriously as he piloted the bus, and soon, they arrived at the first bus stop.

The stop appeared blurry through the heavy rain. There was no one there, but Tang Jun still chose to open the door and waited by the stop for three minutes.

“Even if there is no visible passenger waiting by the bus stop, it’s better to wait for three minutes and perhaps a special passenger will arrive. That is what the shadow told me.”

The rain flew into the car. Chen Ge, who was seated at the second last row, observed everything silently. There were many ghost stories related to the bus in this city, but who would thought that it would one day turn into something like this? However, this was in line with the ghost stories society’s goal.

When I walk in the darkness, I am the scariest ghost story this city has ever heard.

Tang Jun continued to move after three minutes. After many stops, Chen Ge finally saw someone waiting at the stop after they left Western Jiujiang.

“He’s waiting for a bus at 11 pm. This sure is an interesting character.” The bus slowed to a halt. The driver did not say a word as he opened the door. The man at the stop shuffled his way up the vehicle.

He was wearing a cheap suit, radiating a heavy stench of alcohol. His cheeks were red, and he was slurring his words. Both his shirt and pants were wet.

“Do... do you take card...” He took out his wallet and tapped it multiple times at one of the spots on the bus. He was getting agitated because he still had not heard the beep that signified payment had been deducted from his card.

“Why don’t you go there and rest? I’ll pay for your ticket.” Chen Ge went to support the drunkard who almost fell. He scanned the man with his Yin Yang Vision. This passenger should not be a ‘passenger’ that he was waiting for. “Take a good rest and don’t move.”

“Thank you. I’ve been so unlucky recently, but tonight, everything’s going to change! I just got a huge contract, managed to catch the last bus, and even got the help from a kind person like you. Thank you so much!” the drunkard said. He slumped into the third row and took up two seats.

“You are indeed quite lucky.” Chen Ge turned to look at Tang Jun, and the latter understood his meaning. He shook his head. He also was not sure whether this was the special passenger that Chen Ge ‘needed’ or not.

“Boss, where are you going? I’ll wake you up when we’ve arrived.”

“Just ignore me, I don’t want to hold you up! My home is at the last stop. When the bus stops fully, it’s time for me to alight.” Then, the drunkard collapsed on the row of seat.

“The final stop? You’re going to Li Wan City?” Chen Ge studied the man closely but still could not see anything wrong with him.

The bus continued to travel through the rain. After entering Eastern Jiujiang, the surroundings became conspicuously more deserted—not many cars could be seen on the road. They passed a few more stops, and one hour later, Chen Ge saw a pair of red high heels on one of the platforms.

There was no one around, just a pair of heels placed at the spot where the rain would not drench them. Chen Ge glanced toward the driver’s seat. Tang Jun did not seem like he knew anything—he kept staring at the steering wheel.

No one got on the bus, and after three minutes, the doors closed. Just as Chen Ge was checking whether the heels were still there, Tang Jun suddenly laughed. Following his voice, Chen Ge noticed a pair of red high heels being placed on the seat just behind the driver’s seat. The blood red shoes were placed side by side—it felt like a person was sitting behind the driver.

When did she get on?

Still there was no one there, just a pair of shoes. Chen Ge walked forward and exchanged a look with Tang Jun through the mirror. In the mirror, he noticed that Tang Jun was trying his best to smile even though he was probably about to cry.

“Your attitude is very nice, keep that smile on your face.” Chen Ge acted like he did not see the red high heels and returned to his seat. He opened the travel bag to try to appease the kidnapped white cat. Crawling out of the bag, the cat did not seem to be used to the atmosphere inside the bus, and it took a quick tour before returning to Chen Ge’s side.

“You should be happier on an outing.” Seeing the cat’s reaction, Chen Ge understood many things. He grabbed the backpack that contained the recorder and placed it next to him. It was totally silent inside the car. Other than Chen Ge, no one spoke. This bus that travelled through the darkness and rain was a like mobile coffin.

The rain was still turning heavier. Just as the bus reached the next stop, Chen Ge saw someone in a black raincoat running away from the platform. The man had originally been pacing back and forth, looking like he was in a hurry. However, once the car really pulled up, he left instantly like he had seen something that he should not have.

“Did the person recognize me?” Chen Ge studied the man’s frame and thought that he looked very familiar. He instantly signaled for Tang Jun to chase after the man with the bus.

The black raincoat covered the man's body, but Chen Ge noticed that he was wearing many layers, making him look bigger than he actually was. When he noticed that the bus was coming his way, he immediately turned to run the other way.

"Why is it following me?" There was panic in the person's eyes. The bus had deserted its route—that had never happened before. The bus cut through the rain, its speed not too fast and not too slow. It was driving right next to the man like it was waiting for him to get on. Such a strange thing happening caused the man to pick up his pace. He looked left and right like looking for an alley too small for the bus to get through.

"It's so dangerous for you to wander alone so late at night when it's raining." Chen Ge had Tang Jun stop the bus in the man's path and open the door. The man hesitated before getting on the bus. He removed the rain jacket and revealed a face that Chen Ge was familiar with.

Chen Ge had met this passenger before. When he visited Li Wan City before, it was this man who had introduced Chen Ge to the hearse. He was a doctor from the burn unit who had married a patient much younger than he was. Due to complicated reasons, his wife had committed suicide in the bathroom. Since then, he had been wearing the scarf knitted by his wife and gone searching for methods to see his wife again in the dark corners of the city.

After the doctor got on, he saw Chen Ge. In such a weird situation, it was greatly relieving to see a familiar face. He walked toward Chen Ge and sat down next to him without hesitation. The vehicle continued to move. Rain pelted the bus window, and the sound made people feel uneasy.

"You're still alive?"

Chen Ge's greeting was unusual to say the least, but the doctor was not mad. He shushed Chen Ge and then whispered, "Today, this bus is different from normal. Something bad might have happened."

"What's so different?" Chen Ge listened to the feedback, thinking about how to improve.

"I can't tell, but it just feels strange." The doctor shrugged his coat off and scanned the other passengers in the vehicle out of the corner of his eyes.

"No wonder you chose to escape the moment the bus pulled up at the platform." Chen Ge shrugged. He placed the cat back into the travel bag. Whenever there was danger, the cat would become incredibly obedient and liked to stick close to Chen Ge.

After the doctor got on, the bus turned around and returned to its normal route.

"We'll reach Li Wan City in a few more stops. There sure is a lot of passengers wanting to take this bus tonight." Chen Ge closed his eyes to rest. Be it the drunkard or the red high heels, neither of them was his target. His main target was still the woman in the red raincoat.

Crossing through the rain, outside the bus, it was howling with wind and thunder, but inside the bus, it felt smothering and oppressive like even breathing was difficult. After another five minutes, the bus reached the next stop.

At the empty stop, there was a pool of blood being washed away by the rain. No one knew what had happened at the stop before the bus arrived. The blood stain slowly faded cleansed by the rain.

"When the woman in the red raincoat is attacked or provoked, blood will seep out of her raincoat, so does this belong to her?" Chen Ge could not confirm it. Perhaps it was a waiting passenger who was murdered.

Like usual, the bus opened the door and stopped for three minutes even though there was no one waiting at the platform. There was nothing unusual for the first minute, but during the second minute, there was a shadow coming down the road.

He swayed in the heavy rain, sporting a mushroom-shaped hairstyle. His neck was longer than normal, and even though his facial features looked normal, in combination, it felt so awkward.

Just as the door was about to close, the mushroom head got on the bus. His whole body was drenched, and he had a smile fixed on his face. His lips cracked open to reveal his teeth. Even though the rain slid into his lips, he did not mind as if this was the only facial expression that he could make.

“A strange smiling man?” That was Chen Ge’s impression of this new passenger. He used his Yin Yang Vision silently, and with just a glance, it felt like someone had poked his pupils with a pin. He quickly closed his eyes to shut off the sharp pain. When Chen Ge reopened them, the smiling man was already seated. He took a seat in the second row. It seemed like he was purposely taking the seat opposite from the pair of red high heels.

Tonight, we sure have plenty of quality passengers!

Rubbing his eyes, Chen Ge was still working through the pain. He had no idea what the man was hiding, but one thing was for sure, the man was definitely not a normal person like the doctor.

The bus continued to move. Several minutes later, the doctor suddenly reached behind him to pass a phone to Chen Ge. Accepting the phone, Chen Ge read the written message on it—‘Ever since we left Li Wan City, the hearse disappeared. It stopped arriving at the designated time. Tonight, I came to try my luck, but the hearse showed up when it shouldn’t have. It has broken all of the rhythm that has been set up in the past. Tonight, there will be more former passengers like myself who came to check the route, so it’ll be very dangerous. Be careful, and one thing to pay attention to is the smiling monster on the second row. Be cautious. It has killed a whole bus of people before.’

Reading the doctor’s message, Chen Ge noticed something. When referring to the smiling passenger, the doctor used monster and ‘it’ to describe it.

How did the doctor find out it has killed a whole bus of people? If he was one of the passengers, how did he survive? If he wasn’t on the bus then, who told him about this?

His eyes were pulsing with pain. Chen Ge merely glanced at the man with the power gifted to him by the black phone.

This man sports such a cute hairstyle, but in reality, he’s a cruel character.

When Chen Ge was silently observing the smiling man, the bus reached the next stop. Before entering the platform, Chen Ge saw a young man on the platform looking quite unsettled. After the bus parked and the door opened, sitting inside the bus, Chen Ge could hear the young man's voice. "It's really here, the midnight bus! The stories are real!"

His voice was shaking, and his face was white. His lips were unnaturally purple, and his body was shaking like he could collapse at any moment.

"Such a scaredy-cat?" Chen Ge studied the young man through the window. The man looked just over twenty, probably still in university. This was just a normal student. Chen Ge believed that he was like Xiao Gu, followed by unnatural things, and with his bad luck, he ran into the last bus on Route 104.

Chen Ge had no interest in the young man. He looked at him like how a fisher would look like a small fish that had gotten into the net. He prepared to let him go.

The bus pulled up to the stop. Out of Chen Ge's expectations, this young man who looked so scared and cowardly jumped through the door without being forced when the doors were about to close.

The doors closed, and the engine revved. The young man's Adam's apple shivered slightly. He squeezed the umbrella between his legs, sought out some coins from his pocket, and tossed them inside the ticket machine. Following the crisp sound of the coins falling against metallic tin, all the few passengers on the bus turned to look at the young man.

Being stared at by so many strange individuals, he quickly lowered his head as if he thought that if he could not see them, they would not notice him. The bus swayed on the road, and the young man gripped the rail tightly to stop himself from falling. Perhaps due to his nervousness, one could see the green veins popping on the back of his hand.

"A new arrival?" It seemed to be the first time that the doctor had encountered the young man. His brow raised slightly, and his lips pressed into a straight line, but ultimately, he did not say anything.

Two minutes later, the young man silently looked around him. He sighed in relief when he realized that the passengers had stopped paying him any attention. He reached his hand into his pocket to silently take out his phone. It seemed like he was planning to utilize the camera function.

"It's a bit much trying to take a picture." Chen Ge was unwilling for his hearse to be exposed, so before the young man could do anything, he stood up to walk toward him. Seeing someone approach, the young man was so scared that the phone almost slipped out of his fingers.

"There are so many empty seats in the bus. Why are you standing?" Chen Ge's smile was infectious, and his voice was friendly.

"I..." The young man did not explain that it was because he was too cowardly to do so. Ever since getting on the bus, he had realized that even his brain had started to move slower, and for some reason, he could not land on a believable excuse.

“Are you still in school?” Chen Ge very naturally placed his hand on the young man’s arm. “Sit here, stay away from the wind, or you might catch a cold.”

Before the young man realized what was happening, he was already dragged by Chen Ge to the last row. Calculating the distance between himself and the door, and then turning to look at the locked window, he predicted that it would be faster to break the glass and jump out.

“Don’t be so nervous. Is this your first time taking the last bus on Route 104?” Chen Ge was like the big brother next door. “You’ve probably been misled by some of the baseless articles online. In reality, the public transport company occasionally adds a last trip running at midnight on certain days. I have no idea why, but you don’t need to worry. We’re all living humans.”

To increase the persuasiveness, Chen Ge even opened his travel bag to grab the white cat. “Have you seen a ghost who has a pet cat?”

The white cat who had been hauled out to be shown was annoyed. It waved its claws but was too far away to actually touch Chen Ge, so its anger caused its fur to burst.

Seeing such a lively creature, the horror in the young man’s heart dissipated. He scratched his head and said uncertainly, “But it’s midnight and raining so heavily, why are there so many passengers?”

“Even at night, there are many who need to work to keep their lives afloat, like telephone operators, late night drivers, night-shift guards, and radio personalities with early morning programs. The contributions of these people can’t be overlooked for the advancement of our city.”

Such a positive statement felt strange inside the eerie bus, but Chen Ge ignored the incongruity. “By the way, what do you do for a living? Why are you still outside so late at night?”

“I...” The young man hesitated. He turned to look at the other passengers. Since the lights inside the bus were not on, he could only see clumps of shadows. His palms were slick with sweat. After a long time, he silently put the phone away and told Chen Ge, “I am a student at Lin Jiang First High.”

“A high schooler?” Chen Ge studied the child’s face. “You look so mature for your age.”

“I’ve repeated my studies for two years already, and it seems like I’m going to have to repeat again, but that is not that important anymore.” The young man’s tone was laced with a bitterness that was far beyond his youth.

“Brother, you’ve repeated two years already. Is there really anything that is more important than that?”

“Yes.” The young nodded firmly, and he took out his phone. “In my class, three students went missing. I know where they are, but the police refused to believe me.”

Opening the phone, the young man showed Chen Ge a group picture. “They are my best friends.”

There were four people in the picture. The young man held a basketball at the back, a pair of twins with obvious distinction in personality stood on both of his sides. The one on the left was shrouded in a negative aura, carrying a black backpack in his hands, while the one on the right looked at the girl at the front with overflowing love in his gaze.

“Why did they suddenly disappear?” Chen Ge studied the students in the picture, paying extra attention to the backpack that the boy on the left was carrying. In Xiao Bu’s game, there was a black schoolbag placed at the last row of the bus, and when Xiao Gu took the hearse, he had come across a high-schooler on the bus. That high-schooler had also been carrying a black bag.

“Black school bag, a pair of twins who look similar but have completely opposite personalities...” Chen Ge seemed to be remind of something. “Did the three of them disappeared after taking the last bus on Route 104?”

The young man nodded again. “The twins have a rare surname, Bei. Even though they looked identical, they couldn’t have been more different. The elder brother was Bei Ye. He was easily angered and didn’t have many friends. His favorite activity was pulling heinous pranks that only he would enjoy. The younger brother was Bei Wen. He was a good student, quiet and shy. He kept to himself unless when he was approached.

“The four of us stayed close to each other, so we normally went home together. Some time ago, for some strange reason, Bei Ye and Bei Wen got into a fight at the bus stop. Apparently, it was because Bei Ye got tired of living in Bei Wen's shadow.

"At the time, we didn't think so much of it. Bei Ye stormed off, but the next day, we realized that Bei Ye hadn't returned home that night. During class, Bei Ye came back to us, and strangely enough, the first thing he did was apologize to Bei Wen. Then he told us a secret. He said, after midnight, there would be a bus carrying all dead people heading toward Eastern Jiujiang.

"Naturally, we didn't believe him. Bei Ye invited us to wait for this bus with him. Neither Bei Wen nor I wanted to give him the time of the day, but he forced our hands by provoking Bei Wen in front of the girl."

The young man stopped to take a breath. He looked at his phone, and the more he thought about it, the more scared he became.

"And then?"

"And then all three of them disappeared. Bei Ye and his father disappeared on the same day, then it was the girl and finally Bei Wen."

This sequence was similar to the sequence in Chen Ge's memory. He felt like there were a great chance Bei Wen and Bei Ye were trapped inside the world behind the door in Li Wan City.

"Get off the bus at the next stop. If I run into your friends, I'll bring them back."

"You'll bring them back? No way." The young man shook his head. "You have no idea how much courage I needed to summon before I could even get on this bus..."

"Follow my orders if you don't want to die." The smile on Chen Ge's face was still gentle, but the young man felt like he had been splashed with a basin of cold water in winter. He could not help but shudder.

The child was like the main character in a normal scary movie, but he was lucky to have run into Chen Ge.

Chapter 620 - Omen

To use such a gentle caressing tone to say something as scary as ‘you will die’... For a moment, the young man thought that there was something wrong with his ears. He sat where he was, frozen, and looked at Chen Ge blankly like his mind was unable to process the information.

“Tell me everything you know. The greater the detail, the greater the chance I have at saving your friends. Other than that, remember this—no matter where your home is, do not go toward the east once you get off the bus. Understood?”

What kind of person was Chen Ge? To say that he was someone who had climbed out a mountain of dead bodies would be stretching it a bit too far, but thinking back to his past experience, one would need to use more than two hands to count the crazed murderers that had fallen under his hands.

Traversing through haunted houses every night, having close contact with ghosts, that caused the essence of the Specters to eventually brush off on the man. Chen Ge had not done anything other than change the tone of his voice, but the young man already thought that something was wrong. Perhaps it was his intrinsic need for survival that compelled him to stay away from this dangerous person. Chen Ge’s body temperature was lower than normal, but it should not have accounted for anything. Yet, the young man suddenly felt ravaged by an eternal chill. With both of his hands pressed against the cushion, he stealthily nudged away from Chen Ge.

“Bei Wen was the last to disappear. Perhaps because he was scared, he was acting differently from normal.”

“That isn’t useful information. I need clues about them. Did they leave behind anything useful? Like messages or a diary.” Chen Ge cornered the young man into the corner of the last row. “Think about it seriously.”

The young man's face was stressed, and after a long cogitation, he finally remembered something. "Before Bei Wen disappeared, he told me to not tell the police about the last bus on Route 104 no matter what. He also gave me a key and told me that if he didn't come back in three weeks to take this key to the last bus to find him."

"Do you have the key with you?" With Chen Ge's watching, the young man took out a rusted key from his pocket. It was stained with blood.

"Let me take a look." Chen Ge grabbed the key to inspect it. He could not believe it. He rummaged through his bag and found his own key in the inner lining of his bag. The two keys looked surprisingly similar.

"You have the same key?" The young man gasped in shock.

"Be quiet." Chen Ge placed both keys on the chair and frowned. He had obtained that key a long time ago when he finished Men Nan's second persona's mission. It had been a reward from the black phone, Self-perceptive Key. The key would be able to help him search for his real self should he fall under the effect of confusion and illusion.

Chen Ge had believed that this key would be useful when he explored the Third Sick Hall. One would easily be disturbed by the thick haze of negative energy behind the door when one entered it for the first time, causing a loss of self. Based on Chen Ge's suspicion, the key was to handle a contingency like that.

In the end, he did not have to use the key back then because Zhang Ya was too overpowered. She had charged into the door and chased after the president. Other than shock, Chen Ge did not experience too much of any other emotion, so he did not have a use for this key.

Since Chen Ge thought that he might have a use for this key in the future, he had kept it inside his backpack. But to his surprise, on the way to Eastern Jiujiang that day, he ran into a similar key. In terms of appearance, other than the bite mark, they looked identical.

"Does the appearance of this key signify something?" The key was able to stop someone from getting lost. Before Bei Wen went missing, he had told the young man to come find him with the key. Did this mean that the place that he was going to was somewhere one could be lost fairly easily?

"Do you know where Bei Wen got this?" Chen Ge very naturally placed both keys inside his pocket.

“He didn’t tell me.” The young man watched as Chen Ge snatch his key away. He answered honestly and did not dare ask for the key back.

“The key is quite important, but don’t worry, since I’ve taken your key, I will definitely help your friend.” Chen Ge leaned against the chair, and he suddenly felt like this was an omen. When the first key appeared, he had entered the Third Sick Hall and run into the toughest opponent since then—the ghost stories society.

This time, he was going to Eastern Jiujiang alone, and the appearance of the key probably signified that he was going to run into another powerful enemy.

The first key has to do with Men Nan. The child has two personas, and they are different personality-wise. The second key is related to the Bei twins, who look the same but act differently. Chen Ge touched the keys in his pocket and was suddenly reminded of the shadow who looked like this. Does this mean I’ll eventually run into a third key?

Chen Ge turned to look at the window. No one spoke again, and the bus eventually reached the next stop.

“Get off here and walk toward the west; it’s not so safe east of here.” Chen Ge squeezed back to allow the young man to pass. The young man stood up. It seemed like he had something else to say, but as he looked at Chen Ge’s face, he ultimately swallowed his words and jogged off the bus.

“Hey, you forgot your umbrella!” Chen Ge yelled out the window. The young man was so scared that even with the rain pouring, he ran westward without even turning his head around.

“Have I scared him? But this is a good thing. This way, he’ll be able to focus on his exams and won’t need to repeat a third time.” Chen Ge walked back to his seat, and the doctor lightly nudged him. “What’s wrong?”

“Now is not the time to care about others,” the doctor whispered before winding the scarf tighter around his neck, covering his face fully.

“Understood.” Chen Ge took the young man’s umbrella and returned to his spot. When he lifted his eyes, he noticed that the mushroom head at the second row was looking at him. With the cracked lips and frozen smile, he was staring at Chen Ge so intensely that the latter felt like rewarding him with a hammer to the face. Considering the crowd on the bus, Chen Ge dampened that urge.

“Stop smiling, is it because you’re too ugly once you stop?” Chen Ge’s challenge was highly provocative, but the mushroom head did not react in any way other than to continue staring at Chen Ge, smiling all the way.

The atmosphere on the bus became tense, but at that moment, the front door creaked, and a bloody hand reached into the bus. Blood dripped, and a woman in a red raincoat stood at the front door.

Her hair was stuck to her face, blocking her eyes. Her lips were sewn shut by something, and she looked positively ghastly.

“Finally, you’ve arrived.”

Seeing the woman, Chen Ge directly stood up from his seat. All the passengers on the bus had their attention turned to the woman in the red raincoat.

Chapter 621 - Trap

Chapter 621: Trap

The bus had already changed owner, but the woman in red raincoat was still cautious around it. Her arms gripped the door, and the red of her coat was conspicuous in the dark.

“We’re both going in the same direction. Why don’t you join us as we head toward Li Wan City tonight?” Chen Ge invited the woman on. He had many questions that he wished to ask her. The last time that he left the hearse, he had handed the ‘human trafficker’ who stole the children to the woman, but since then, he had not seen the human trafficker.

Chen Ge suspected that the woman in the red raincoat had already found out the information that she needed from her, the location of her own children. After all, if she did not come up with any result, she would not have shown up for the last bus on Route 104.

Walking to the front door, Chen Ge bent slightly over to address the woman. “If you’ve completed all the preparation, we shall go rescue your child tonight. I will go with you—that was my promise to you.”

Her lips sewn shut by blood vessels meant that she could not speak, so she made a series of strange gestures toward Chen Ge instead. Her fingertip pointed at the bus, then at Chen Ge’s face, and then at the spot where Chen Ge’s heart would be. Finally, she squeezed her fingers together like she was crushing Chen Ge’s heart in her palm.

“The hearse? My face? Crushing my heart?” It dawned on Chen Ge several moments later. “Do you mean that someone who looks like me is out to gouge out my heart? And he’s currently on the bus?”

The woman did not nod or shake her head. She looked through the curtain of her hair as she reached out to grab Chen Ge’s arm, trying to pull him off the bus. The bus was now Chen Ge’s property, and his backpack and cat were still on the bus, so naturally, he would not give it up so easily.

Chen Ge took a step back. When the woman sensed that, she stopped applying force and allowed Chen Ge to slip from her grasp. The rain slid down her raincoat. For the last piece of communication, she pointed in the direction of Li Wan City and her arms curled together to mimic the action of holding a baby. Before Chen Ge understood what she meant, the woman retreated to the platform. Blood trailed down her raincoat, and the blood pooled around her.

The bus slowly rolled out from the platform, and the woman stood there as she watched the last bus of Route 104 move away. The closer they were to Li Wan City, the heavier the rain outside fell. Outside the window, there was no light at all; it was as if the bus was travelling through a realm of darkness.

“What was she trying to say?” The woman had refused to get on the bus, which was different from what Chen Ge planned. “But if she doesn’t want to cooperate with me, she didn’t need to have shown up at all. She should have sensed a source of danger in the bus, so she refused to get on.”

Chen Ge sneaked a look at the other passengers—the doctor and the drunkard should be a normal human being, so Chen Ge focused his attention on the red high heels and the smiling man.

Should I make the first move? Chen Ge thought to himself when the phone in his pocket vibrated. He glanced at the caller’s number before ending the call. Then he fired off a message to the caller. “Inspector Lee, it’s not convenient for me to answer your call. I hope you don’t mind us communicating via messages.”

When Chen Ge saw that it was Lee Zheng’s number, he thought that something bad had happened.

“Jia Ming has escaped from the hospital! Be careful! I fear he might go to hurt you!” Lee Zheng used three exclamation marks in his message.

“But why would he come for me? I have not done anything to him. Plus, wasn’t he at the hospital with the officers watching him? How did he manage to escape?” Jiujiang’s police force was best of the best, and Chen Ge had good faith in the law enforcement.

“The mad man spun a wild story to confuse us. In the story, he was a victim, and through the retelling of eleven different stories, he described a shadowy monster who was an expert at changing its appearance and voice. He told us that the shadow monster was the real mastermind—he was merely an unlucky soul who was at the wrong place at the wrong time!”

“Eleven stories?”

“Eleven stories in total, detailing how he was threatened by the mastermind to do things that are in violation of his moral values. However, none of the stories were factually-flawed, and our investigation corroborated his claims.”

“This proves that he wasn’t lying.”

“Yes, he wasn’t lying about those eleven stories, but he was deceitful with one major detail!” Lee Zheng sounded agitated. There were many unusual spaces and exclamation points in his messages. “The mastermind was never real to begin with; it was a creation in his mind. He was the real killer! For all of those eleven stories, he was the real killer!”

Seeing this message, Chen Ge finally understood that the eleven stories probably represented eleven human lives.

“This man who looks shy and weak on the surface is hiding a completely twisted persona! When he told us the stories, his voice even broke several times due to emotions. He was so wrought by regret that the doctors and nurses felt sorry for him. We sent out people to inspect the crime scenes in his stories, and as the details surfaced, as the investigation deepened, we felt more unsettled. To speed up the investigation, we arranged more people to join the case. Earlier tonight, Jia Ming’s sickness showed signs of worsening, and the doctors suggested sending him to the ICU. Thinking that he wouldn’t be awake any time soon, we only left one officer behind to look after him.

“But on the way to send Jia Ming to the ICU, this man who shouldn’t have been able to walk jumped out from the second-floor window and escaped. He had already planned everything, he scouted out the route beforehand. His sickroom was on the third floor, and ICU was on the first floor. The window that he jumped out of led to the back alley. It was a maze inside there with the hidden splits and turns—one officer was not enough to catch up to him.”

Lee Zheng told Chen Ge about Jia Ming’s escape, but Chen Ge was not interested in any of that. “Inspector Lee, I predicted that Jia Ming would attempt to escape, but why would you say he’s out to harm me?”

“We found some wooden chips next to his bed. We opened the bedside table and realized that, at the back, someone had used their fingers to carve out your name. After the names were carved, the person would use their nails to gouge them out again, I don’t think anyone would do that except when they had extreme hatred toward the named individual. In any case, be careful—we suspect that he’s already on his way to find you.”

I don’t have any history with Jia Ming, so he shouldn’t harbor such deep hatred toward me unless it wasn’t Jia Ming who we saw at the hospital.

From Lee Zheng’s message, Chen Ge suspected that the shadow was still in Jia Ming’s body. He had probably fainted outside of White Dragon Cave Tunnel that night because of some accident.

“By the way, where are you now? Don’t go wandering tonight!”

After a while, Lee Zheng sent another message. Initially, Chen Ge did not think that it was weird, but as he formulated a reply, he paused.

Wait a minute, why would Inspector Lee ask about my current location? And he rarely used exclamation marks in our previous correspondence. Is it possible that it’s Jia Ming and not Lee Zheng who’s communicating with me?

Chapter 622 - The Strangest Adversary [2 in 1]

Chapter 622: The Strangest Adversary [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Chen Ge reread the series of messages sent by Lee Zheng. The usage of punctuation and the overall tone were indeed a variation from how the inspector would usually communicate via messages. The monster described by Jia Ming in the messages was familiar with changing with its appearance and voice; in other words, it would be able to mimic Lee Zheng's voice perfectly. However, since Chen Ge could not answer the call because he was on the hearse, Lee Zheng could only use written messages to communicate with Chen Ge. This was probably a contingency that the other party would not anticipate before making the call.

Could it really be Jia Ming who is sending messages with me?

Once the thought appeared, it crawled around Chen Ge's heart like poisonous briar, causing the man to work up a cold sweat. His finger hung over the top corner of the screen. After a long time, Chen Ge finally replied to Lee Zheng. "No problem, I'll make sure to stay at New Century Park tonight and won't go anywhere."

"Hmm, I'm just writing this to warn you—the man hates you to an extreme degree, and there is currently a warrant out for his arrest, so he might just take this last chance to go find you. It's better for you to stay put at the theme park. In a bit, I'll arrange some of my men to set up a perimeter around the theme park to protect you."

"So sorry for the trouble."

"Don't mention it, it is, after all, due to our negligence that he was able to escape. But remember, do not wander off to anywhere tonight. Once you leave New Century Park, it is going to be very hard for us to ensure your safety."

"Understood." After Chen Ge gave an affirmative reply, Lee Zheng stopped sending Chen Ge messages like there was no need for communication after his goal had been achieved.

"It just feels like something is not right." Chen Ge held the phone in his phone. Without thinking about the feelings of the other passengers, he called Captain Yan directly, wanting to find corroboration to Lee Zheng's story. It was near midnight, but Captain Yan still accepted Chen Ge's call—this went to show how much he valued the input of this young man. From Captain Yan, Chen Ge confirmed that Lee Zheng had not been lying; Jia Ming had indeed escaped from the hospital.

After hanging up, Chen Ge still felt something was off. "Is it possible that the shadow has escaped from Jia Ming's body but now has possessed Lee Zheng?"

If that was true, then things would become a lot more complicated.

"At the hospital, Jia Ming once told the story where he ran into the shadow and Jiang Long at the latter's bungalow. At the time, Jiang Long was kneeling on the ground, covered in blood, while the shadow stood beside him, holding a knife. This is an interesting scene.

"Considering Jiang Long's neighbor's dogs had just been murdered, can I make the extrapolation that it was Jiang Long who killed the dogs? A real estate mogul had no real reason to murder other people's pet dogs, so obviously, if he had done so, it was forced by the shadow. Yes, the shadow was trying to slowly wear down Jiang Long's constitution. From this point, one can confirm there should be some limitation before the shadow can assume full control over an individual. The weaker the victim's constitution, the easier it would be for the shadow to take control of them.

"Lee Zheng is a professional police inspector; it will very difficult for the shadow to take control of a man like that, but that does not mean it is impossible."

Lee Zheng's messages reminded Chen Ge that the shadow had already abandoned its original host so he could not trust anyone that night.

"Xiao Bu once told me, if I dare venture into Li Wan City again, there will be a serious threat to my life. I've just entered Eastern Jiujiang, and something already happened to Jia Ming who was supposed to be under police surveillance. Can I be sure that this is just a coincidence?"

Chen Ge was about to put his phone away when the screen lit up again. This time, it was Fan Chong who was calling.

“You sure are one busy man.” The doctor glanced behind him, signaling for Chen Ge to be quieter. Maintaining a high profile at a location like this would bring him no benefit.

“There are only a few people in my contact list. Even I want to know what is up with them tonight.” Chen Ge took out the earphone. After he plugged it in, he answered the call.

“Boss Chen! I’ve cleared the game! I know the truth now! I finally know the truth!”

“Calm down and slow down. I can hear you just fine.” Chen Ge lowered his voice, realizing he was indeed creating too much of a commotion.

“I used the save file that you left behind to try again and again, I ran into eleven new side quests, and the eleven side quests corresponded to eleven crime scenes and eleven human lives. I’m telling you, I used my life to explore every corner of the game, slowly pushing the progress forward, but finally, I’ve completed all the eleven side quests.” Fan Chong sounded incredibly ecstatic on the phone.

“Eleven side quests?” Chen Ge had just come across the number eleven on the messages with Lee Zheng. Facing the police’s interrogation, Jia Ming had told the law enforcement eleven different stories. Most of the scenarios in Xiao Bu’s game were based on real life; in fact, they were probably derived from something that really happened. Chen Ge suspected that the eleven side quests that Fan Chong had cleared were exactly the eleven real murder cases that Jia Ming told the police.

The town in Xiao Bu’s game was based on Li Wan City, so it is only logical for these eleven murder cases to be related to Li Wan City.

After giving it some thought, Chen Ge asked softly, “After completing all the side quests, did you get any kind of hint? Or something akin to a reward?”

“That is why I’m calling you, boss! After clearing all the side quests, the computer screen started to bleed. The grayish style of the game started to change again, and this time, all the buildings turned blood red. Both keyboard and the mouse disconnected, and I lost control of Xiao Bu. She stood inside the game and waved at me. It was real scary. At that moment, I really thought she was about to drag me inside the game with her.”

“Focus on the important details please, what happened next?”

“She started to move on her own and entered one of the red buildings. Right then a new window popped up to reveal a line written in blood—Mommy is probably here.” Fan Chong took a big gulp of water, still reeling from excitement and fear.

“Was there any specific thing about the building that stood out?” Chen Ge quickly followed up with this question.

“It looked quite normal, nothing special about it, but there was a poster for a theme park pasted outside the wall of the building. Boss Chen, this is the most important reason I’m calling!” Fan Chong sucked in a deep breath. “The theme park on the poster should be New Century Park. Hell, I even saw your Haunted House on the poster.”

“You spotted my Haunted House inside the poster?” Chen Ge voiced the question out loud.

“Yes, I have no idea what this represents, but I believe that this means that the game creator probably knows you, and this should be some kind of super hidden Easter egg.” Fan Chong was practically buzzing with emotion.

“Nowadays, the theme park has already stopped relying on posters for advertisements. Furthermore, the appearance of my Haunted House hasn’t changed for decades, so the poster you saw was probably left behind by my parents.” What Chen Ge said only made sense to Chen Ge. He really did not expect to find a clue left behind by his parents inside Xiao Bu’s game.

He thought back to everything that Fan Chong had said. After clearing all the side quests, Xiao Bu entered a specific building, and the only thing she said was that her mother was probably inside this building. Chen Ge had no idea whether Xiao Bu had found her mother or not, but Chen Ge realized that his own parents had probably entered that building before.

Is this a clue left behind by them, or is the poster another trap laid by the shadow?

Since the shadow’s power was too unique, it could masquerade as anyone. After a brief pause to figure things out, Chen Ge suddenly posed this question to Fan Chong. “What is the brand of the e-bike that you’re currently using?”

“Huh? It’s from Ai Niao. What’s wrong?” Fan Chong was on a high—he had finally cleared the game after spending days trying to work through the game. He had been desperate to find someone to share the joy with, but he did not expect Chen Ge to suddenly ask a question like that. Without even thinking about it, the answer had already slipped out of his lips.

“Nah, nothing’s wrong.” Chen Ge sighed in relief. Fan Chong was probably the real one, so he answered the question perfectly. “Anything else happen after Xiao Bu entered that red house?”

“I’m sorry, but I can’t tell. That is where the game was stuck. I’ve reloaded the game several times, but that is the furthest I can go. I believe this should be the ending. Xiao Bu, who was in search of her mother, stepped into the deepest part of her nightmare and found the room where her mother probably once stayed in this city filled with murderers and ghosts. The game decides to end there because it wants to have an open ending. This way, the players can come up with the ending that they prefer on their own.” Fan Chong had played this game endlessly for a month. He had already gotten attached to the experience without even realizing it; it was as if he had lived through the experience himself.

“You’ve already gotten addicted to this game, haven’t you? Just focus on your computer tonight. If something else happens, call me instantly.” Chen Ge had a feeling that more things were connected than he previously realized, and as the dots lined up, he was forced to continue moving forward. “Be careful. Something big might happen in Li Wan City tonight. No matter what happen, do not leave your home tonight.”

Chen Ge turned to look at the strange and weird passengers on the bus; all of these ‘people’ were heading toward Li Wan City. That was their final destination.

“Don’t worry, I’ll stay to watch over Xiao Bu tonight, and if there’re any changes, I’ll call you at first notice to bring you the latest update.” Fan Chong just finished saying that when there was door knocking coming from the speaker. “Boss Chen, is there someone knocking on the door on your side?”

“That’s impossible. I’m outside, and there’s no door around me. The knocking came from your side.” Chen Ge narrowed his eyes. “Don’t go to open the door, and don’t disconnect the call.”

“The knocking is from my side? But how come it sounds like it came through the phone?” The excitement slipped away from Fan Chong’s voice—in its place was uncertainty and confusion. The knocking in the phone became clearer. Chen Ge held his breath to hear better. Fan Chong was also holding his breath, but in his case, it was because he was scared.

“Please don’t harm me, I’ve not done anything bad in my life.” There was the sound of a chair being moved; it sounded like Fan Chong had moved to hide inside his bed. However, that did nothing to stop the constant door knocking.

Chen Ge heard clearly from his side. The knocking should have started at the living room door before slowly moving to the bedroom door, like something had entered Fan Chong’s room, and the thing was slowly moving toward him.

“Don’t panic. Turn on your camera and face the camera toward the door—I’ll help you take a look.” Chen Ge was worried for Fan Chong as well. However, he was not physically in Li Wan City, so even if he wanted to help Fan Chong, he could not.

“O... okay,” Fan Chong stuttered. He worked his phone as the sound of knocking grew. Before he managed to fix the camera, Fan Chong’s scream suddenly echoed through the phone. “Big Brother! Save me! Inside the room! He’s inside the room!”

The scream was followed by a loud struggle. The cupboards and chair sounded like they were toppled over. The knocking on the door became intense until ten seconds later when the knocking disappeared as suddenly as it appeared, and it became eerily quiet on the other side of the phone.

“Fan Chong?” Chen Ge called softly into the phone, but there was no answer from the other side.

Several seconds later, there was the sound of slippers brushing against the floor as someone jogged over. Then it was followed by Fan Dade’s surprised yell. “Xiao Chong? Fan Chong!”

Through Fan Dade’s yelling, Chen Ge could confirm that something had befallen Fan Chong. He shouted into the phone, trying to get Fan Dade’s attention.

“Hello? Boss Chen? Were you on the phone with Xiao Chong earlier?”

“Is Fan Chong injured? Can he still speak? Can you pass him the phone?” Chen Ge was worried about that overweight shut-in.

“But he’s not at home! The living room door and bedroom door are both open. It feels like he has just run out of the house!” Fan Dade’s words were like a bomb, shaking Chen Ge’s heart.

“Not inside the room?” Chen Ge was instantly reminded of the shadow. “Why would he go after Fan Chong? And how did he even manage to locate Fan Chong?”

“Was it you who asked him to go out?” After hearing Chen Ge’s voice on the other end of the phone, Fan Dade felt much calmer. He placed immense trust in this Haunted House operator who was much younger than he was. With his help, many problems could be resolved easily.

“Someone broke into your home earlier; it was probably a murderer on the loose called Jia Ming. I suggest you call the police immediately and tell them everything you know. Other than that, inspect all the locations that you can use to hide inside your house. Make sure to keep yourself safe before the police arrive,” Chen Ge said in a serious tone.

“A murderer? Why would he come to our home? There is no way Xiao Chong would have provoked someone like that!” Fan Dade’s voice rose several pitches out of panic.

“I’ll be there in a minute. Focus on what you need to do now. Call the police and take care of yourself.”

“Okay, I will call the police now.” After Fan Dade hung up, Chen Ge looked at the phone screen, and his fists slowly tightened. His adversary practically kidnapped Fan Chong while he was on the phone with the man. The enemy this time definitely placed some huge pressure on Chen Ge.

“The approaching sound of knocking signifies that the shadow is on the move, but does this mean he is doing this alone or with the help of some other ghosts?” Chen Ge put the phone away. He gripped his hands together with his head lowered to rewind the events in his head. Suddenly, his eyes grew as big as saucer. “Something is weird. Before everything went quiet, the last thing Fan Chong yelled out sounds quite weird now that I think about it. It sounded like someone was clamping their hands over his mouth, and he yelled out those words while he was struggling.”

Chen Ge took out some paper and pen from his backpack and wrote down everything Fan Chong yelled.

“Big Brother! Save me! Inside the room! He’s inside the room!”

Four terms that sounded like they had nothing to do with each other. At first glance, it probably signified Fan Chong was screaming to get help from his big brother, who lived in the same house as him, but thinking of it from another perspective, if the ‘save me’ was not directed at his big brother but at Chen Ge, then the whole meaning of the sentence changed.

“Is it possible that Fan Chong opened the door to Fan Dade’s room, but he realized how strange his brother was acting compared to usual, like perhaps he was holding a knife in his hand. In that situation, he gasped out for his brother and then turned to the phone to plead for help from me. The ‘he’s in the room’ will come to mean the strange big brother has entered the room to detain him.”

The same sentence had a completely different meaning based on whom Fan Chong was addressing.

“Could the shadow have possessed Fan Dade after escaping from the hospital? Then how does that explain what has happened to Lee Zheng and Jia Ming?” Chen Ge felt the hair on his back standing on end—he was getting increasingly unsettled. “Hopefully, I’m simply overthinking this.”

If Fan Dade had fallen victim to the shadow, then Fan Chong’s home would be a death trap. The shadow would be waiting for Chen Ge to arrive to claim his life.

“Shall I go save him?” Chen Ge’s eyes scanned the other passengers in the car. His eyes narrowed as a plan started to form in his mind.

The residential area that Fan Chong stayed at could be very dangerous. If Chen Ge went there, he might fall into the trap set up by the shadow, so he turned his focus onto the other passengers. Sending others to fight his enemy, Chen Ge had done something similar when he was playing Xiao Bu's game.

These people aren't idiots, and it is not going to be easy to influence their perception and get them to willingly scout on ahead for me. I'll need to plan this carefully.

From how Chen Ge saw it, whether it was the smiling man or the red high heels, they could become an asset to him. He did not care about whether they wanted to harm him or not; he only cared about their power level. If they were too weak, Chen Ge feared they might not even be able to fulfill the simple task of scouting ahead. Chen Ge did not share his thoughts with others. If the doctor knew what he was thinking, he would definitely believe that Chen Ge had lost his mind.

Things are getting more and more interesting.

So many accidents had happened before he even arrived at Li Wan City. Things had gone out of Chen Ge's control, and no one knew what would happen the next second.

I can't possibly go back to New Century Park now. Lee Zheng is packing a gun, and if he is really under the influence of the shadow, then I'll be in serious danger if I return to the park.

If the shadow could take control of Lee Zheng, then he could very well possess any other police officer. Hell, even the kind and gentle senior guard at the park could be used against Chen Ge. This was the hardest opponent that Chen Ge had ever faced thus far. Ever since the game started, he could no longer trust anyone around him.

To take down the shadow, the best solution was to rely on his own two hands. Instead of waiting to fall into its trap, Chen Ge should cut his way into the shadow's lair, find its original body, and kill it.

Dealing with such a high intelligence and extremely cunning enemy, Chen Ge had already come up with a complete plan. Focus on his advantage and avoid the disadvantages—under the premise that his own safety was guaranteed, try to mow down the enemy as soon as possible. No matter how deep the shadow's plot spun, if Chen Ge did not give the shadow the time to plan, his great IQ would be wasted.

I have no idea where the shadow is hiding currently. He might be laying in ambush at New Century Park, or hiding behind the door of Fan Chong's home, or even be on this bus. I have to maintain a high alert. He will only show his real self when he is one hundred percent confident that he'll be able to kill me.

Chen Ge had an accurate assessment of the situation; Eastern Jiujiang was the shadow's territory, and Li Wan City was the shadow's lair that it had managed for years already. It was never a fair battle between him and the shadow since the beginning.

"The bus is entering the next stop, please remain seated!"

Just as Chen Ge was sorting through his thoughts, the bus reached the next stop. The bus door opened, and the howling wind carried the heavy rain into the bus. The bus windows creaked noisily, ravaged by the rain, and it sounded like they would break at any moment.

"Daddy, I'm scared..." A juvenile voice came from outside the bus.

"It'll be fine, we'll reach our destination soon, and daddy and mummy will be going with you." A middle-aged man with blanched face hauled a young boy about five into the bus. Following behind the father and son was a woman whose hair needed more than a little combing.

Different types of strange passengers could be found on the eerie public bus. The boy stood helplessly in the aisle, unsure where to place his hands. From the expression on his face, it appeared like he was going to cry soon.

"It'll be fine. We'll reach our destination soon." The man sounded like a broken record. He placed his hand on the boy's head, forcing him to turn away from meeting the eyes of the other passengers. The wife who trailed behind did not utter a word. Just like that, this strange family of three ascended the bus, and they took the fourth row in the middle of the bus.

A family outing to Li Wan City? Chen Ge studied the family of three for a while. To his knowledge, Li Wan City was the location where many children would go missing. To help the ghost fetus, the shadow had been on the lookout for children, and with that danger in mind, the family dared to bring their boy to Li Wan City. Strange did not even start to describe the situation.

More and more passengers are getting on the bus; it is possible for the shadow to be masquerading as one of them.

The addition of a child on the bus meant that the quiet from before was shattered.

“Daddy, let’s go home.” The little boy kept pleading, and tears could be heard in his voice. “That uncle over there has been staring at me, and he looks very scary.”

The boy used his finger to point at the smiling man. When his father saw that, he quickly grabbed and put the child’s finger away and scolded him sternly. “Don’t use your finger to point at other people. That is very rude.”

“But he kept staring at me.” The boy wanted to say more to his father, but the man applied greater force on his grab until the boy’s arm was red from the pressure. Sensing the acute pain that came from his arm, the boy finally lost control of his emotions and beadlike tears slid out from his eyes.

“Stop making a scene. If you continue to act like this, I’ll send you off the bus, and your mother and I will do this alone.” The father’s threat was effective. The boy forced the tears back, kept his head lowered as he sat at the corner of the seat.

“That’s my boy. You are the man of the family; how can you weep at the smallest thing?” The middle-aged man let go of his grasp. A deep red welt could be seen on the spot where the father had grabbed the boy. “Haven’t you been wishing to see your big sister? When we reach our destination, we’ll be able to meet with your big sister.”

“Big sister? Really?” The boy raised his eyes to reveal a pair of blinking eyes; they were like the most beautiful pearls in the world, clear and shiny. It was as if the boy’s eyes had captured the glistening stars in the sky.

“Of course, when have I ever lied to you?” The middle-aged man forced a smile, and he tussled the boy’s hair.

“But...” The boy continued hesitantly, and his eyes spoke of the same innocence. “Big sister told me that she was killed by Mommy, and Mommy came to tell me that big sister went missing. And now Daddy is telling me we’re going to find big sister. I have no idea who to believe any...” Before the boy could finish, he was roughly cut off because his father yanked his hair harshly, practically lifting his boy off the seat by his head.

“Ouch! Sorry, Father, I will not speak of this anymore! Forgive me, Father!”

“Shut the f*ck up!” Still gripping the boy’s hair, the middle-aged man shoved him back against the seat. The man’s face was as dark as the far side of the moon.

Children rarely filtered their words before they spoke, so sometimes, they would say something incredibly inappropriate.

The doctor and Chen Ge, who sat at the back of the bus, overheard what the boy said, but neither of them decided to do anything about it. Silence returned, but it was occasionally punctured by the silent sniffing of the boy.

The rain continued to pour, and the bus moved away from the stop. By now, they were extremely close to Li Wan City. In fact, there were only three or four stops left between them.

“This should be the last of the passengers, right?” Chen Ge stood up, deciding to put his plan into action. Activating the recorder, Chen Ge walked to the front of the bus, and with the smiling man and the doctor watching him, he bent over to pick up the pair of red high heels.

Chapter 624 - The Difficulty of a 3.5-Star Scenario

Chapter 624: The Difficulty of a 3.5-Star Scenario

“Where did this pair of high heels come from?” Chen Ge picked up the shoes like this was the first time that he had noticed it. Hearing that, the driver, Tang Jun, glanced at the rear-view mirror. His cold sweat kept falling—his new boss was indeed different from a normal person.

A person with no mental defects would not actively approach a ghost under any circumstances, but his boss was completely different. He willingly headed toward the mountain even though he knew that was the tiger’s prowling ground. Hell, he would gladly enter the tiger’s cave if he could get something out of it—this was the type of person who had no concern for consequences.

He thought about persuading his boss, but he did not know where to start, so he kept his mouth shut and focused on driving. No one in the car would dare answer Chen Ge’s question—they all stared at him like he was dumb.

“What is the man up to now?” The doctor wrapped his face tighter with his scarf, showing only his two eyes. Considering the fact that he might not be able to save himself, he naturally would not step forward to help Chen Ge.

For the family of three, the wife and son kept their heads lowered, and neither of them spoke. However, the husband smiled wickedly like he was glad that something bad was about to happen to Chen Ge.

The drunkard had been the first passenger to get onto the bus. Then, he had collapsed at his seat and fainted, and ever since, he had remained unconscious.

The smiling face placed his eyes on Chen Ge, and coincidentally, Chen Ge was also staring back at him.

“You are closest to this seat. Do you have any idea who left this pair of heels behind?" Holding the pair of red high heels in his hand, there was a strange feeling that came from his palm—it felt like he was touching bloodied human skin. Chen Ge held the shoes with one hand and slowly walked toward the smiling man.

"Has this man lost his mind? Riling one up is not enough, so he's going for two at the same time? Does he not believe there are actual ghosts in this world? Does he think I was lying to him last time we were on this bus?" The doctor was worried for Chen Ge. He was certain that he had told Chen Ge earlier that the smiling man had killed a whole vehicle of people, but Chen Ge still proactively went to provoke the man. This action baffled the doctor.

Holding the pair of heels, Chen Ge stopped next to the smiling face. He waved the shoes before the man's eyes.

"You look so pressed." Chen Ge very naturally placed the heels right next to the smiling man's leg. "The owner of this pair of heels must be very beautiful, because her good taste is exemplified by how gorgeous the heels are, what do you think?"

The smiling man slowly raised his head. With the smile still on his face, he forced out the words from his lips. "Take them away."

One could read into a person's personality to a certain degree based on their voice. There was not a trace of laughter in the smiling man's voice, and he would pause longer than necessary between every word like it had been so long since he last spoke.

"Do you hate this pair of shoes that much? Why? This is such a pretty pair of red high heels." Chen Ge's legs were tense. He was ready to retreat should the situation ask for it.

For other people, it might look like Chen Ge was playing with fire, or to be more precise, playing with death. They had no idea where Chen Ge got the courage to do something like this and could not figure out why Chen Ge was doing all that. The bus had almost reached Li Wan City already, and there was not much time left for Chen Ge. If he could make use of the passengers on the bus, they could become a great asset; however, if he failed to wrangle them to his cause, he would enter the battlefield already suffering from an injury. He did not want to have to be cautious about these passengers when he was dealing with the shadow, so he decided to try out their reaction first.

To use the red high heels to test out the smiling man, this was something that Chen Ge decided on the spot. The red high heels first showed up on the middle of an empty bus stop. Chen Ge had no idea how they got on the bus—he only noticed only that they showed up and that they took the seat at the first row.

Initially, Chen Ge did not think much of this, but the strange action by the smiling man caught his attention. The doctor told him that the smiling man had once massacre a whole bus of people, so he should be a very dangerous character, but after he got on the bus, he actively avoided the pair of red high heels and took the seat at the second row without much hesitation.

The smiling man gave the pair of heels a wide berth, what was he cautious of?

Chen Ge would never underestimate his enemy, thinking that the more physically powerful they were, the dumber they would be. In reality, the more powerful the spirits, the sharper they were. They knew how to hide and cover themselves. They waited until their prey put their guard down and then snapped their neck with one swift move.

The smiling man ignored the pair of red high heels to avoid conflict, but he did not anticipate Chen Ge, a character who would do the things that one least expected.

Chen Ge did not have that much concern for his personal safety because he followed a higher philosophy, and that was to make what the enemy did not want to materialize in real life a reality.

Looking at the red high heels beside his leg, the smiling man's face was dark, but even under such circumstances, he kept the edges of his lips curled up. Perhaps the monster had gone through some trauma when he was young, or maybe he suffered from some kind of illness where this was the only facial expression that he could make.

The smile did not change, but the white in the smiling man's eyes started to take on a gray hue, and twisting dark lines started to leak out from his pupils. It honestly looked quite disgusting. The change to his body was beyond that. The neck that was already longer than normal started to grow, and the folds on his neck were torn open to reveal a deeply-gray skin. This monster was different from the Red Specters that Chen Ge had met in the past. He did not possess any quality that made him a ghost; in fact, Chen Ge was sure that this was a quintessential living human being. However, the presence that radiated from the smiling man was way beyond that of a normal individual. And yet, Chen Ge could not find any sign of a ghost on the man.

“Take them away!” The chilling echo of a voice forced out from the man’s mouth. The man’s mushroom head swayed lightly, and the smile on his face grew bigger. The monster’s teeth appeared sanded smooth. They were different from normal human teeth. As a matter of fact, they looked more like the jaws of an animal.

The sound of static appeared in Chen Ge’s ears. Only when Chen Ge was in mortal danger would Xu Yin come up with such reminder. The last time this happen, it was when Chen Ge was facing the shadow at the fresh water plant.

This man is that scary? Xu Yin was only one step away from becoming a complete Red Specter, and he was the kind who would only fight stronger when he was injured. He never showed any sign of fear, but when facing the smiling man, he was quick to give Chen Ge the warning.

This man is far more dangerous than I imagined.

Xu Yin was solidly the second-best fighter that Chen Ge had. If he gave the warning, then things were definitely quite dangerous.

Such a monster already appeared on the bus before I arrived at Li Wan City. It is really hard to imagine what kind of monsters Li Wan City has collected over the years.

In the end, Chen Ge did not take the heels away; he left them next to the smiling man and strode toward the driver. This was his vehicle, so he made the rules. He was going to have Tang Jun drive the bus to the residential area where Fan Chong stayed. No matter what kind of trap was waiting for him, he could charge through it with smiling man and the red high heels in tow.

*Am I acting a bit too rashly? Oh, f*ck it, there’s no time to slowly ponder about this anymore!*

Chapter 625 - The Last Passenger

Chapter 625: The Last Passenger

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Chen Ge whispered to Tang Jun to have him change the final stop. When they reached Li Wan City, the bus would head toward the residential area where Fan Chong stayed. After they reached an agreement, Chen Ge walked back to his seat at the back of the bus. When he passed the smiling man, a visceral chill rose from his heart.

Turning to look, the smiling face was staring at Chen Ge with his gray pupils.

“Looks like he has plenty to tell me. Why wouldn’t he just move the pair of heels away if he dislikes them that much? How come it feels like he doesn’t even want to touch the shoes? Could there be some curse related to the shoes?”

As Chen Ge mumbled to himself, he was struck awed by the words that left his lips. From the smiling man’s reaction, perhaps there was indeed a curse that was placed on the shoes.

“Oh well, in any case, I’ve already touched them. Worse comes to worst, I’ll just swing the heels at the shadow when I run into him.” Chen Ge did not mind too much about curses. After all, he had already received a cursed love letter way back when he first obtained the black phone. A curse was not scary—the scary thing was the ghost that was behind the curse.

Returning to his seat, Chen Ge stopped provoking the smiling man. He reached his hand into the backpack while he turned to look out the window. From who knew when, it was a slate of darkness outside the window. Soon, the bus would reach the last stop before they arrived at Li Wan City.

The door opened, and there was sound of chain rattling cutting through the rain. A pair of hands that were soaked white in the rain reached into the car to grab the rails. Rain slithered down the man's fingers, and a weird, sharp chuckle interspersed the rattling of a chain. When all the passengers' faces were turned to the front door, a face teetered into the aisle.

The man's face was exquisite, and one could see how handsome he had once been if one looked past the large gash that ran from the corner of his left eye to the edge of his lips. From afar, it looked like the man had two mouths on his face, one running horizontally and the other vertically.

The gash appeared to be a recent injury. The wound had not completely healed, and with the aggravation from the rainwater, the injury had signs of festering and secreting puss. The thin lips slowly opened. He used his tongue to lick at the edge of the wound just above his lips. He grimaced from the pain, but weirdly enough, he tried to make it appear like he was enjoying the sensation of pain.

"What kind of mad man is it this time?" Chen Ge came to this conclusion after giving the latest passenger a glance.

The man seemed to enjoy the spotlight that was placed on him. He used his fine fingers to comb his hair that was messed up by the rain. The fingers were white before they touched the hair, but after fixing the hair, the fingertips were dyed red. There appeared to be an open wound on the man's scalp, or there was some dried blood that had clotted up in his hair.

"What is so funny?" This new passenger was even crazier than Chen Ge expected. The first thing he did after getting on the bus was provoke the smiling man. He did not seem to notice the danger, and his bulging eyes stared at the man whose smile hung persistently even though it was clear that he was not in a jovial mood.

"What is the source of this man's confidence?" With his attention to detail, Chen Ge noticed part of the wounds on the man's face had already festered, and the rest had started to scab. Therefore, based on this observation, he believed that this man was alive, but why would a living person purposely go and provoke the smiling man? Was it due to courage from ignorance, or was he hiding some kind of unique trump card?

The man was already raging from Chen Ge's provocation, and now, he was treated with yet another man looking for death. The black lines in his pupils squirmed like worms, and the gash on his lips that counted as a smile opened wider.

Everyone knew something bad was going to happen... except for the new passenger. In fact, he upped the ante by pointing at the wound on his face. "Are you trying to copy me?"

After he got into the bus, the passengers realized that the new passenger was covered in blood, and he had a pair of scissors, about thirty centimeters long, in his left arm while he dragged an old bag that was still leaking blood on his right arm.

"A murderer?" Chen Ge studied the man, and the more he did, the more confused he became. The passenger was wearing a white T-shirt. If he had just committed a murder out of passion, his mistake was understandable, but he looked too calm to have done something like that. So obviously, this was a premeditated murder. But why would someone who could maintain his rationality even after a killing choose to wear a white-colored shirt on which blood would appear most conspicuous?

Would it not make more sense to wear darker colored clothes for better camouflage?

"Is this the man's hobby? This man is a crazed serial killer?" This should be the logical explanation. The man was too distracted from the high of the murder, so that would explain the illogical things that he had done.

"But something still doesn't feel right." Chen Ge's eyes moved to the man's arm. A pair of scissors was a strange weapon of choice for a murderer. Would an axe or a kitchen knife not have worked better for his purpose?

Then, he turned to focus on the bag the man was dragging. The rain had soaked the bag, and blood kept leaking out from within. If the bag was hiding human body parts, blood would not have leaked from the top but pooled at the bottom. Furthermore, human blood from body parts would eventually coagulate and would not keep on pouring out like a foundation. So, for Chen Ge, it felt like the bag was not filled with body parts but instead shoved full with leaking blood bags.

Mostly likely, Chen Ge had spent so much time with crazed murderers that he was able to pick out many details in the shortest amount of time.

"I'll ask you again, are you trying to copy me?" The provocation in the new passenger's voice made what Chen Ge did earlier pale in comparison. Even he had not been so direct when he was trying to stir the pot—he had merely placed another ghost next to the smiling man. Be it physically or verbally, he did not pose any affront toward the smiling man.

The smiling man's patience was dwindling. The black lines crawled out from his pupils and slithered down his cheeks.

“Are you mute? I'm asking you a question!” The new passenger continued to press; he did not show any trace of fear at all. He leaked the edge of the scissors and voluntarily walked toward the smiling man. “Let me guess what drives you for taking this bus at midnight...”

When he lowered his head to pretend to think, he spotted the red high heels next to the smiling man. Then it seemed to dawn on him. He reached out to grab the pair of heels. “Are you going to look for your wife?”

When the new passenger said that, the smile on the smiling man's froze, and that made his expression incredibly strange. He stopped being angry at the new passenger. He glanced at the red high heels and wore a stranger smile as he returned to his seat.

“Looks like I was right.” The new passenger's words were rife with madness. He dangled the heels by the edge of his scissors as he replaced them. “I'll leave you be on account of the loyalty of your love.”

It felt like he was finding an excuse for himself to run away from the smiling man. After that, he dragged the bag and headed down the aisle, but he only took one step when a strange thing happened.

After he took the first step, there was the sound of high heels clicking against the ground; it felt like someone was tailing him. Turning back to look, the red high heels were still sitting where they were.

The stubborn new passenger took two other steps, and whenever he moved, the sound of high heels followed.

“The heels are sitting on the seat, so where did the sound come from? What is following me?”

Probably due to his nervousness, the new passenger voiced out his thought, and he sounded slightly different from the courageous man who had threatened the smiling man earlier.

Chen Ge, having observed from the back, saw everything. The smiling man probably did plan to end the man's life, but the man turned to provoke the red high heels, and the high heels decided to deal with the man before the smiling man could make his move.

"This man is ultimately too inexperienced. I praised the beauty of the shoes and made sure to applaud the owner's taste before proceeding to deal with the smiling man." Chen Ge sighed. But then, something unexpected happened. After the new passenger failed to deal with the sound of the high heels, he made a beeline toward Chen Ge and the doctor, who were seated at the back of the bus.

Why is he walking toward us? Chen Ge was confused by the man's action. Wait, does he plan to offend every single passenger on this bus at least once? I'm not sure that is a good idea, buddy.

Naturally, the passenger did not hear Chen Ge's thoughts. Whenever his shoes landed against the ground, there would be two footsteps, one directly behind the other. It was creepy to say the least.

...

Chen Ge started to fidget as the man walked toward the end of the bus. After all, this man was carrying the curse of the red high heels with him. He nudged into the seat. It was not that he was afraid, but he simply refused to be dragged into a problem that he did not create. The passenger noticed Chen Ge's silent move. His eyes alternated between Chen Ge and the doctor, and eventually, that slightly deranged smile fell on Chen Ge.

"You are afraid." The tone was firm, the eyes unfeeling, and the lips of the new passenger curved upward like he had taken control of everything, like nothing in this vehicle could escape his eyes.

"I am, slightly," Chen Ge admitted without shame.

"The more afraid you are, the worse thing will happen to you." The new passenger seemed to have decided his seat. He held the scissors and bag with one hand while his free hand went to grasp Chen Ge's backpack and travel bag.

He did not attack Chen Ge but targeted his carry-ons. That was the first time that Chen Ge had come across someone like that. He frowned involuntarily, wondering if the passenger had seen through the group of ghosts hiding in his backpack.

However, two seconds later, Chen Ge tossed that suspicion out of his mind. With a weird smile, the new passenger held the straps of the backpack tight and tried to lift it up. Out of almost every other passenger's expectation, the backpack did not even budge. The passenger who looked so savage was unable to lift up Chen Ge's backpack with one hand.

"He he." After a brief chuckle, the new passenger gave it another try. The ropy muscles on his arms tightened, and it felt like he had used the maximum limit of his strength before he could manage to lift Chen Ge's backpack up and toss it on the ground.

BANG!

The backpack was heavily loaded. It created a dull thud when it landed on the ground.

"What is inside the bag?" The new passenger raised his chin and pointed the sharp ends of the scissors at Chen Ge's eyes.

"I'm a prop maker affiliated with a theme park. The backpack is filled with my everyday tools, the tools of my trade so to speak." Chen Ge raised both of his hands in an attempt to appease him. He had seen the police officers doing something similar at crime scene to avoid unnecessary conflict. The smoothness of the action and sincerity of the tone meant that this was not the first time that Chen Ge had done something like this.

Chen Ge's 'cowardice' satisfied the new passenger greatly. He scanned the whole bus, and this young man before him appeared the most easily-bullied. He extended his tongue and tried hard to lick at his wound before finally taking the seat next to Chen Ge.

Slowly putting his hands down, Chen Ge turned his head to look beside him. After hearing what the new passenger had to say, even he had thought that the man was about to attack him, or at the very least, open his backpack to take a look inside. However, as it turned out, the man's bark was greater than his bite. He did not even find an excuse for himself and sat down directly.

"Er... Are you heading toward Li Wan City as well?" Chen Ge was amused by this new passenger. The first thing he did after getting on the bus was provoke the other passengers. His actions and expression were over the top like he was worried others would not tell he was a crazed murderer.

"Who would take this last bus that is prepared for the dead at midnight if they're not heading toward Li Wan City?" The new passenger studied Chen Ge at close distance. It was his impression that of all the passengers on the bus, Chen Ge looked the most normal and was most likely a good person.

“A bus that is prepared for the dead...” One would think that Chen Ge had taken acting lesson before because he assumed the role of a frightened individual at the snap of his finger. He took in a cold breath like he was trying to suppress his fear, but his action belied his ‘real’ emotion. The fear radiated out from within. Even though his facial expression did not change much, he made sure the edge of his eyes shuddered and his pupils darted anxiously around.

The new passenger was increasingly satisfied with Chen Ge’s reaction. He loved those who were ‘weaker’ than he was. “What is your name?”

“My name is Chen Ge. I’m a theme park worker. What about you?” Chen Ge curled deeper into his seat like he was afraid that his question might offend the man, so he quickly added, “But it’s fine if you don’t want to tell, I’m just asking for fun.”

“You can call me Scissors. I’m going to Li Wan City to look for a person, a dead person.” Chen Ge did not ask for the details, but the new passenger simply unloaded his story on Chen Ge.

“I’m also going there to find a person. One of my friends has gone missing, and the last clue that he left me was this bus. I initially refused to believe it until I saw the bus appear with my own eyes. You have no idea how long I hesitated before I could summon the courage to get on the bus...” Chen Ge’s description was incredibly detailed, and it sounded suspiciously familiar to the doctor who sat in front. He realized Chen Ge had edited the high-schooler’s story and placed it on his own.

“Looks like I’m not the only one with such an experience.” The smile on Scissors’ face slowly rescinded. A look of contemplation cast over him, and when he was not consciously putting on a show, the expression on his face returned to normal. This was how he looked in his everyday life.

“We’re all the same.” Chen Ge bent down, pretending to tie his shoelaces. His fingers silently brushed against the blood stain that had landed on his shoes when the passenger was waving his scissors around. Chen Ge rubbed his fingers together and surreptitiously moved his fingers to his nostril. His senses were heightened, much better than a normal person, but even at such a close distance, he could not detect a scent of blood from the ‘blood stain’.

This is not blood. Chen Ge's suspicion was confirmed. Normally, if one was carrying a bag of 'body parts', unless they were specially treated with coal or plastic wrap, there would definitely be a smell.

This man should be no different from the doctor, a normal person who is heading toward to Li Wan City to find their 'final hope'.

Chen Ge could place himself in the passenger's shoes. He knew that it was dangerous on the bus and knew that the destination was filled with murderers and ghosts, so he decided to put on this disguise to hide among the maddened and insane.

As detailed as the wolf disguise, a lamb will always be a lamb. Chen Ge looked at the man's fine fingers and he shook his head slightly. He grumbled internally, With the way he's holding the scissors, the first person he'll hurt in a confrontation is himself. In a heated struggle, there is no way he will still have enough calmness to remember to cut his enemy. The better way is actually to hold the scissors by the point where the blades were attached and use the sharp edge as some kind of pick.

This man who called himself Scissors had exposed way too many weaknesses. A normal person might be scared by his scary appearance and maddened speech but not Chen Ge. He was a Haunted House operator, and from a professional perspective, Scissors' work had left much to be desired.

Scissors did not pose much of a threat, so Chen Ge turned his focus back to the other passengers. They were reaching Li Wan City soon; he could not allow these passengers to wander too freely. Before a plan was formed, another contingency was introduced—the phone in Chen Ge's pocket suddenly vibrated. Chen Ge put on the earphone and answered it. It was Fan Dade's voice that came through.

"Boss Chen! I notice a problem! Since the living room door was open, I headed out to take a look. There were only footprints that headed up in the staircase and none that went down. That thing is still probably inside the house! Should I leave this place while I still can?"

"There are only footprints that head up?"

"Yes, something just doesn't feel right tonight. Everything appears out of place! Boss Chen, where are you now? I don't think I can hold out any longer!"

"Hang in there a little while longer, I'll be there soon!"

“Boss Chen, I don’t think I’ll be able to stay in this house any longer. I’ll wait for you downstairs,” Fan Dade stammered. The footprints in the staircase made him panicked, and the man’s flight of footsteps could be heard through the phone.

“Don’t panic, he might be hiding under the staircase. Tell me the size and shape of the footprint...” Before Chen Ge could finish, the call was cut off. “When one is caught in panic, they will do things that are illogical, but I can’t tell for sure if Fan Dade was someone who would react in this way.”

Putting phone away, Chen Ge picked up the backpack from the ground, with his eyes zeroed in on the road ahead. “The next stop is Li Wan City. I’m here, but where are you?”

Darkness and rain blotted out everything. No one could tell that countless monsters who lived in the shadows were all heading toward a small city at the fringe of the metropolis. Li Wan City was right ahead!

The driver, Tang Jun, slammed on the gas pedal. The old bus rushed through the rain, continuing its acceleration. The rain pelted the windows, and the bus was shaking so badly that it felt like the whole vehicle might collapse on the spot. However, none of the passengers on the bus seemed to mind.

When the blurry shapes appeared, everyone held their breath. Lighting flashed across the sky, and that brief moment of brightness lit up the many shadows that were shuffling through the darkness, and in return, the shadows also spotted the bus on Route 104, which was trundling through the rain.

“We’re almost there.” The doctor was the first to stand up from his seat. He could perceive the changes in the atmosphere of the hearse and how it differed from normal. He refused to spend yet another second on the bus.

“Hey, the three of us should leave together,” the doctor whispered to Chen Ge and the man who referred to himself as Scissors. “There is a passenger in front who is very dangerous. Once the three of us are off, we will split up and run in different directions. Whoever he ends up chasing, that will be the luck of the draw.”

These passengers who had managed to survive after taking a ride on the hearse could not be underestimated, so the doctor did not hide his plan and shared it with others openly.

Neither Chen Ge nor Scissors spoke. Scissors was suspicious that this was a plot by the doctor—the doctor was trying to get him isolated so that he would become an easier target. However, Chen Ge had his own plan. He planned to drive the bus directly to Fan Chong’s residential area and grab the red high heels and smiling man to force their way through the trap laid down by the shadow, rescuing Fan Chong who possessed crucial information.

It was easy to get onto Chen Ge’s bus, but it was very difficult to leave. From a different perspective, one could say that this bus had gotten a lot more dangerous compared to when it was in the service of the shadow.

Walking to the exit, the doctor grabbed the rail. He had heard stories about the smiling man before, and his plan was to find a safe refuge to hide after getting off the bus. The bus had already driven into Li Wan City, and they neared the small town’s bus stop. The doctor’s heart pounded, and his muscles in his arms and legs were tense. He was prepared to jump out once the door opened.

That was the plan, but reality had other plans in mind. The bus did not stop when it passed the final stop; it did not even decelerate and rushed past.

“It’s not stopping?” A bad omen rose in the doctor’s heart—he knew something bad was about to happen that night. The bus did not stop at the station that it usually stopped at.

Other than Chen Ge, all the passengers turned to look at the driver. Tang Jun was under great pressure, and his body was shaking. He also had no idea what was waiting for them ahead—he was merely following the direction given by his boss.

“Hey, why aren’t you stopping? Hey!” From the family of three, the middle-aged man stood up from his seat, and his expression was drawn. The boy who sat next to him also poked his head up to surreptitiously look around. He did not quite understand the world of the adults; everything was always too complicated for him to grasp.

“Stop the bus! Stop the f*cking bus now!” The middle-aged man stomped toward the driver’s seat. Seeing this, Chen Ge grabbed his backpack and walked over. He kept his head lowered, and everyone thought that he was also going toward the driver with a complaint. Seeing Chen Ge step forward, the doctor decided to follow behind the man—he wanted to find out what was happening.

“Can you hear me?” No matter what the middle-aged man was yelling, the driver’s lips were shut, and if his face was any whiter, it would have appeared like he was wearing powder on his face. “I’m f*cking telling you again! Turn the bus around! Don’t drive ahead any further!”

Tang Jun ignored the middle-aged man and focused fully on driving.

“Don’t drag us with you even if you want to die! We cannot drive ahead anymore!” This probably was not the middle-aged man’s first visit to Li Wan City. He knew more than he showed. He raised his leg and tried to kick Tang Jun’s feet again to step on the brake.

“Friend, what you’re doing is illegal.” A powerful man reached out to grab the middle-aged man. Chen Ge dragged him back and placed him next to the smiling man.

“Let me go! You have no idea what awaits us! Quickly, let me go!” The middle-aged man screamed as he struggled. “Stop the bus! Do not go further ahead! That is not a place where we are supposed to go!”

“Looks like you know some things, why don’t you come and share them with us?”

“Fog, blood red fog, we won’t be able to leave once we enter it! Quickly stop him!” The man’s face was twisted in fear. He hollered as he charged toward the driver’s seat, but he was once again held back by Chen Ge.

“What kind of fog? You have to explain clearer than that.” Chen Ge was hell bent on getting the answer out of the middle-aged man when he noticed that the bus had slowed down. The doctor tapped him lightly on his shoulder, and he raised his head to look in the direction that the doctor was pointing at.

A strange scene greeted him. Half of the city was shrouded by heavy rain, and all lights were swallowed up by darkness and despair. While the other half was completely dry. Instead of rain, a thick blood fog roamed the streets, pulsing with various types of negative emotions.

This is... a world behind the door?

Chen Ge had plenty of experience when it came to visiting the world behind the door, but this was the first time that he had seen the world behind the door in the real world and a blood fog of this scale.

This is unbelievable. It replicates the world behind the door perfectly!

The shock in Chen Ge's heart could not be put into words. Li Wan City was practically torn in two, one half covered by heavy rain, and the other swallowed by blood fog. It was amazing how clear the distinction was between the two worlds.

Is this the effect of the door going out of control? The city will be consumed, and nightmares become a part of reality?

On that rainy night after midnight, Li Wan City revealed its real appearance. During Chen Ge's previous three-star missions, the world behind the door had often been a building shrouded in blood fog, but before Chen Ge's eyes was half a city that was swirling with blood fog!

"Do not continue any further!" Even though the middle-aged man's voice was hoarse from shouting, the bus did not stop.

Tang Jun glanced at Chen Ge through the rear-view mirror. The extremely courageous Chen Ge gave him the signal to keep driving while facing away from the other passengers. After receiving the order, Tang Jun stopped hesitating and stepped on the gas pedal.

His new boss appeared kind and gentle on the surface, but in reality, he was a mad person who was even crazier than the shadow. Compared to the blood fog, Tang Jun was more afraid of his boss.

The bus sped up without any warning.

The sound of high heels clicking echoed in the bus, and the smiling face sprung up from his seat with a frozen smile plastered on his face, but both of them were too late.

The last bus on Route 104 plunged headfirst into the blood fog and raced down the street that was dyed red!

Chapter 628 - Reason After Reason

Chapter 628: Reason After Reason

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

After the bus charged into the blood fog, the sound of heels disappeared, and the expression on the smiling man's face froze. Things had gotten so out of control that even the ghosts had no idea how this would end.

The rain slid down from the bus windows. When the fog touched the bus, it would transmute into tiny blood vessels attaching themselves to the exterior of the vehicle. From the outside, it looked like the old bus had been given a new paintjob. Turning back to look, the road from whence they came had already been swallowed up by the blood fog. They would not be able to return even if they wanted to now.

...

This place is still different from the actual world behind the door. In the fog, the buildings haven't been completely dyed red. If I'm not mistaken, the process that is happening here is not completed yet.

As the man who had caused this to happen, Chen Ge was the calmest. His fingers dangled outside his pocket, and when the bus charged into the blood fog, the black phone vibrated several times.

The situation could change at any minute, so he did not plan to take out the phone to look yet. He decided to wait until he reached a safe location first. Based on Chen Ge's previous direction, Tang Jun headed toward Fan Chong's home. However, as the blood clotted around the vehicle, the bus started to slow down. Even if Tang Jun slammed on the pedal, the speed did not pick up.

"What is happening?" All the passengers in the car demanded an explanation, and the pressure on Tang Jun grew. He had followed Chen Ge's order, but now, the collective anger of all the passengers was directed at him. Gripping the steering wheel, Tang Jun was really afraid that Chen Ge might abandon him.

As a spirit who only knew how to drive a bus, it was really not worth it to make enemy out of the smiling man and the red high heels. The car slowing down was not good news for Tang Jun. He failed to complete the mission that his boss had given him, and now he had to suffer the wrath of the passengers—he had offended people on both ends.

He did not know about Chen Ge's plan and had never thought about asking for it. It would be lying to say that he did not feel any regret.

"Where do you plan to take us?" the middle-aged man demanded with an outraged face. He struggled loose from Chen Ge's grasp and went to step on the brake again. This time, Chen Ge did not stop him. The bus was already running slowly, so Chen Ge did not see the point of stopping the middle-aged man.

"Stop the f*cking bus!" The middle-aged man stepped on the brake and started to fight for control of the steering wheel. Out of his instinct as a bus driver, Tang Jun attempted to push the man away. The wheel spun in the tussle, and the hearse veered from the road, careering toward the rails by the roadside.

"Be careful!" Chen Ge screamed and moved forward to push the middle-aged man away, replacing him. When he was in the blind spot of all the passengers, he signaled for Tang Jun to open the door and leave immediately. Tang Jun grasped Chen Ge's signal and decided to trust Chen Ge one last time. After Chen Ge got hold of the steering wheel, he gritted his teeth, shoved the driver's door open, and jumped out.

"Hey, where are you going?" Chen Ge's scream was the loudest. He slammed on the brake, and before the car stopped properly, he grabbed his backpack and jumped out, following the driver.

"Stop right there!" he yelled at the top of his lungs as he gave chase.

"Stop running after him! Quick come back!" The doctor knew about the danger lurking in the blood fog. He wanted to stop Chen Ge, but he failed. After turning the corner, even though Chen Ge was screaming for Tang Jun to stop, he yanked open the backpack and pulled Tang Jun back into the comic.

"Stop chasing the man!" The doctor's voice echoed from behind him. Chen Ge jogged backward to the bus.

"Where's the driver?" The middle-aged man's expression couldn't have been uglier.

“I failed to catch up to him. This was probably premeditated. After all, he’d even figured out his escape route already.” Chen Ge had just finished when the middle-aged man barreled forward to grab Chen Ge by his collar. “This is all your fault! If you didn’t stop me earlier, we wouldn’t have ended up in this godforsaken place!”

“You’re blaming me? Do you know how fast the bus was travelling earlier. During the physical altercation, if both you and the driver had lost control of the bus and it knocked into the nearby building, do you know how dangerous that would have been?” Chen Ge had a point as well.

“Damn, damn, damn!” The middle-aged man slammed his fist against the bus. He gripped his hair so tightly like he was going to pull it out, and his expression was colored with despair. “To escape from these things, I’ve already sacrificed my daughter, and today, I even brought my son with me, so this is just perfect. Wonderful, it’s all f*cking over now!”

“Sacrificed your own daughter?” Chen Ge’s brow rose. He had encountered many bad guys before, but one like this middle-aged man... that was truly his first experience dealing with someone like that. The middle-aged man’s emotion was unraveling—he wanted to vent the anger in his heart, and the kind-looking Chen Ge became his sole target. A string of words that would have caused this author to be banned sprayed out from his lips.

Forming a great contrast to the middle-aged man was Chen Ge, who was respectful and polite. His eyes jumped over the man to look at the little boy who was frozen solid in fear. There were several bruises on the boy’s arm. He wanted to take a look at what was happening, but he did not have the courage to do so. He peeked up occasionally and quickly moved his head down whenever he noticed that someone was looking at him.

“This is for his own good. If we are unable to shake that thing loose, my whole family is going to die!” The more he spoke, the angrier he got. He grabbed Chen Ge’s collar again. “This is all your f*cking fault!”

“If you use other people’s despair to rescue yourself from your own despair, you’ll only end up gaining more despair. Only by resolving the problem from its roots will you be able to seek true salvation.”

Chen Ge seized the man's hands. "This is the second time you've grabbed my collar; I hope there won't be a third time."

"It's pointless for us to argue among ourselves now. It's much more productive for us to try to come up with a solution instead." The doctor came out to act as the mediator, standing between the middle-aged man and Chen Ge. "There has to be someone who gave the driver the order to suddenly change his route and drive the bus into the blood fog. I've taken this bus many times in the past, and there has never been an accident. That driver is just a small lackey, so it is someone else who is out to get us."

The doctor's analysis was correct, but due to a lack of information, the direction of his analysis was wrong. "The last bus on Route 104 cut through Jiujiang, connecting its eastern and western sides. This is in service of the mastermind in Li Wan City, so it is probably the intention of said party that we're stuck in this blood fog. There is probably something or someone he needs on this bus."

"You're right, that's what I think as well. Even if the hearse had stopped at the bus stop, the mastermind would have just found another way to force us into the fog." Chen Ge grabbed his backpack and stood next to the doctor.

"The mastermind in Li Wan City? You sure know a lot of things." Seeing the doctor stand up for Chen Ge, the middle-aged man's tone softened because he was outnumbered. "Then, tell me, what do you think this so-called mastermind is after?"

"He probably wants to deal with a certain someone who is standing here with us." The doctor's words caused Chen Ge's heart to skip a beat, but when he turned around, he noticed that the doctor was actually staring at the smiling man.

"Every one of us carries our own secret, like the man next to you. He once massacred a whole bus of passengers, ruining the mastermind's plan." Since he was the reason they were dragged into this mess, the doctor thought it was pertinent to expose the smiling man.

Maintaining the creepy smile on his face, the smiling man's neck extended, and his eyes that were crawling with black lines turned to focus on the doctor. "I've killed a whole bus of people, including the driver, leaving no survivors, so... how do you know about something like that?"

Facing the smiling man's interrogation, the doctor appeared surprisingly calm like he had considered this question already. He nudged to stand behind Chen Ge and pulled the scarf to cover even more of his face. "It was a friend who told me the news about you."

"Then how did your friend come to know about it?" After his secret had been exposed, the smile on the man's face bloomed like a spring flower. Both his tone and demeanor were different from before; it felt as if the man would only experience true joy when he was murdering.

...

"You only killed the people on the bus. At the time, my friend was outside the bus, and he witnessed everything." (Boxno vel. co m)

"Is that so? Then, where is this friend now?"

"He's dead now. He never returned after entering the ghost apartment." When he heard that the doctor's friend was dead, there was a slight shift to the smiling man's expression. It felt like regret.

"So, I made the mistake of leaving a witness last time, but it doesn't matter. That only reminds me to be more cautious this time." The smiling man stopped hiding his murderous intention. He shuffled out to the aisle, and dark lines surfaced on his skin—they looked like black-colored blood vessels.

"Is this a man or a ghost?" The middle-aged man knew that he was no match for the smiling man either way. He abandoned his wife and son without a second thought as he ran to the front door and prepared to slip out.

"Please try to calm down. Even if you kill us, you will be unable to escape. Just as the doctor said, the real target of the mastermind is you, and we are just collateral damage." Chen Ge stood to shield the doctor. "We're in the same boat. If we turn on each other, it'll only benefit the mastermind. Doesn't it make more sense for us to work together to deal with what's to come?"

His fingers gripping the bag, Chen Ge's palm was coated with sweat. Xu Yin had warned him earlier that this smiling man was very dangerous. When the doctor was speaking earlier, the smiling man had shed his disguise. However, when Chen Ge took the podium, he had hesitated but only for a moment.

"You have a point, but why should I follow your order?" The black lines under the man's skin had connected to form something that looked like a net. It looked like they were about to yank the man's skin and flesh out. For a normal person, this would have been an insurmountable pain, but the smiling man did not show any sense of being in pain; rather, he was smiling even brighter.

He seemed to have gotten used to the sensation of pain. His hands reached toward the corners of his lips, and as he pulled on his skin, the literal yanking back of his skin helped him shed the disguise. His spine grew taller, and the already unnaturally long neck grew longer.

"Perhaps you believe that it is very easy to murder all of us, but don't forget, there is a pair of red high heels on the bus, and the owner of said heels might be following behind one of the passengers. I believe you have the capability to murder all of us, but what kind of advantage will that bring you?" The mention of red high heels gave the smiling man pause, and his hands that pulled on his cheeks lowered.

"We are not enemies. You once killed a whole bus of people, and that made you the enemy of the mastermind, but what does that have to do with the rest of us? The mastermind has dragged us into this to deal with you, so from a certain perspective, we should be ally because we have the shared enemy!" Chen Ge pointed at the blood fog outside the window. "The road we took to come here has already disappeared. We know nothing of this world, and no one can tell what will happen next. Under these circumstances, are you still confident that you'll be able to escape this place alone?"

The blood in the fog stuck to the bus windows, and the old bus was already completely red.

"There is not much time left to think. If you are willing, we'll both benefit, but if you aren't, then we'll have to fight it out. We might not be able to kill you but before our death, I'm sure we're able to injure you somehow." Chen Ge felt for the handle of the hammer through the backpack's fabric. He had no idea whether the smiling man would cooperate or not, and he had to prepare for all contingencies.

No one spoke, and silence fell. The smiling man seemed to be balancing the scale in his mind. Just as the tension rose, a sudden thud came from the center of the bus.

"What the f*ck? Where the hell am I?" The drunkard rolled down from the seat and collapsed to the ground. He glanced out the window, and when he saw the thick blood fog covering all the buildings, he woke up instantly.

The body gag from the drunkard softened the mood inside the bus. The black lines under the smiling man's skin slowly disappeared, and his body returned to normal. It was as if everything earlier did not happen, and the smiling man returned to his seat.

"What is going on?" The drunkard pinched his cheeks. "I just took one nap, and where have you people taken me? Where's the driver?"

"The driver has already deserted the bus. We too have to no idea where we are, but one thing's for certain, it is very dangerous here." Chen Ge sighed in relief when he saw the smiling man return to his seat. The fact that they did not resort to violence was good news for Chen Ge because, after all, he still planned to borrow the smiling man's power to deal with the shadow.

"The driver has deserted the bus? Wait a minute, this is so messy. Let me sort through it for a moment first." The drunkard counted on his fingers. "First, I had a bit too much to drink, then I waited at the bus stop for a bus. I appeared to have fallen asleep on the bus, and there's nothing wrong with that!" The haze of alcohol surrounded the drunkard. He spoke with a heavy nasally voice, and he slurred his words. "By the way, why did the driver desert the bus? Did we get hijacked? Why didn't you wake me if something like that happened?"

If there was anyone who dared to hijacked Chen Ge's bus, then they were truly the luckiest b*stard alive.

"Nothing like that happened, but then our current situation might be ten times more dangerous than a hijacking." Chen Ge did not ignore the drunkard simply because he was just a normal person. "There might be crazed murderer hiding inside the blood fog. If you fall into their hands when you're alone, you might end up getting dismembered."

“Murderers? Dismembered? What the f*ck? I’m calling the cops!” The drunkard yanked out his phone, but there was no signal after they entered the fog.

“The fog has blocked all signal. Save your energy. If we aren’t able to escape from this fog, we’ll all die here.” Chen Ge consoled the drunkard and turned to face everyone else. “The bus attracts too many eyeballs being stuck in the middle of the road. I think we should find a place to hide first and observe our surroundings before deciding our next step.”

“I have no issue with that.” The doctor was the first to agree, and the other passengers soon followed suit.

“Okay, then we should leave the bus. Staying here will make us an easy target.” Chen Ge grabbed his backpack and the travel bag with the white cat inside and was the first to leave the last bus on Route 104.

He used Yin Yang Vision to scan the surrounding buildings. His expression shifted. “I’ve seen these buildings in Xiao Bu’s game before!”

At the time, to look for the first save point, Chen Ge had practically run up and down the streets in the game countless times.

“The game mirrors real life; this should be very advantageous to me.” With the map of the city still memorized in his mind, the disturbance of the blood fog on Chen Ge had dropped to the lowest.

Chapter 630: Thriller Paradise Begins

The 'door' in Li Wan City had already gone out of control, and the blood fog had consumed half of the town, blurring the line between nightmare and reality. Currently, Chen Ge had no idea whether he was inside the door or not because with the blood fog covering everything, blood vessels crawled on the surface of all the buildings.

If we walk down this path, we'll be at the building where the phone spirit's body was discovered. Maybe I should go to the roof to check the water tank.

In real life, the body of the phone spirit, Tong Tong, had already been taken away by the police, so if there was still a body inside the tank, then it could only mean that Chen Ge was in the world behind the door. The world behind the door had been created from the memory of the door-pusher, so as long as Tong Tong's body existed in Xiao Bu's memory, there would be a high probability of a body being abandoned inside the water tank.

Of course, this was merely Chen Ge's speculation, and he had no way of verifying it.

Fan Chong lives in the same residential area as Xiao Bu's classmate. It is quite far from here, and if I go there, we will definitely run into some things.

Chen Ge looked behind him. Everywhere he saw was the blood fog. The road they took had already disappeared, and this world behind the fog appeared to be one-way only.

Assuming that this is really the world behind the door, the only way to leave this place will be through the door. Li Wan City's door is in the building opposite from Fan Chong's home, so it looks like no matter what, we'll have to take a detour to his home tonight.

Finding the excuse, Chen Ge planned to share the result of his analysis with all the passengers and ask them to follow him to the residential area.

"I'm giving them a clear direction, helping them to find their way home."

The blood vessels gathered on the exterior of the bus. It felt like the fog was alive and was slowly consuming everything that came from outside.

"What are you grumbling about?" The passengers left the bus one after another. The doctor sidled up to Chen Ge. "We should stay together. No matter what, we can't afford to get separated."

"Okay." Chen Ge turned to look at the bus door. The drunkard stayed with the family of three, the smiling man stood to the side, and the 'murderer' who called himself Scissors stayed alone at the back.

"Before ensuring the safety of the building, it's best not to wander too close to the buildings. Scary stuff like chopped arms or floating heads might come out from them." Chen Ge had seen similar things in Xiao Bu's game, and in a way, he was very experienced.

"I hope you're joking." The drunkard was completely awake—how could he not be? If he could leave Li Wan City alive, he would not go near alcohol anymore.

"Of course, I am. I have no idea what will really happen—it might be scarier than what I described." Chen Ge pointed at the building where the phone spirit's body should be found. "Let's go take a look. We'll scan through every floor, and after confirming there is no danger, that shall be where we should hide temporarily."

"It looks like you know this place well," the middle-aged man uttered with a drawn face. The distrust in his voice could not have been more obvious. "There are so many buildings around us, so why would you point us toward this building? You have set a trap inside there, haven't you?"

"You're being unfair." Chen Ge smiled at the middle-aged man. "I wouldn't have to rely on traps to kill you."

The middle-aged man's face shifted immediately, and then Chen Ge shrugged. "I'm joking of course; I've never even killed a chicken in my life before. The only reason I can maintain my calmness now is because I play horror games for a living."

Chen Ge turned around to point at the building that he had chosen. "Of course, there is a reason for me to choose that building for us. As they say, knowing your enemy is winning half the battle. We will hide inside the building and observe the bus through the window. Since the mastermind sent us into the blood fog, he will definitely send someone over to check up on us. We have to at least know our adversary's appearance and ability to come up with a valid plan. Furthermore, visibility is low in the fog. If we stay too close to the bus, we might be discovered by the enemy, but if we stay too far, we won't be able to see anything, so after combining all the above factors, I believe this building is the most suitable."

After giving his argument, even the smiling man nodded in agreement. The middle-aged man could not argue with such solid reasoning, but he still felt weirdly unsettled. "Then you will walk ahead, and we'll follow behind you."

"No problem, but make sure you don't get left behind," Chen Ge promised easily. He carried his two bags and scouted ahead. The doctor followed closely behind him.

"There has to be something wrong with this guy." The middle-aged man grabbed his wife's arm. His wife was like a puppet, allowing him to take charge over her without resistance.

"Really? I think he makes really solid points in his argument." Since the family did not move, the drunkard stayed as well. The family of three looked the least threatening to him, so he decided to stay with them.

"He sounds logical, but it'll be too late for regrets if he's hiding something from us. It's never wrong to be careful." The middle-aged man picked up the boy. They moved to follow Chen Ge but maintained a fair distance between them.

The smiling man did not choose to follow Chen Ge but walked to the other side of the street alone. From Chen Ge's side, he could only see a blurry shape through the fog.

Scissors was at the back of the group. His face was pale, and whenever he moved, there would be two footsteps. The few walked through the fog. When they neared the building, someone pulled on Chen Ge's shirt.

He turned back to look and saw the doctor pull down the scarf to whisper, "I don't think it's wise for us to enter any building inside the blood fog. We'll be lucky if it's empty, but I'm afraid they might be occupied."

"It'll be fine. I promise to be careful." Chen Ge noticed that the doctor was suspiciously knowledgeable like he had been to this place before. The pair entered the building. In the dark corridor, surrounded by the peeling paint on the wall and the blood fog that pervaded every inch of the building, just standing there would make anyone uncomfortable.

The weird-smelling wooden doors were pushed open, and Chen Ge went into every room to check.

"You really plan to inspect every single room?" The doctor appeared hesitant. "What if we run into something?"

"Finding them proactively is still better than allowing them to ambush us." Chen Ge moved quickly; he did not stop to rest. It was like he did not understand the feeling of fear. They soon reached the top floor.

On the ground floor, the family of three and the drunkard stayed. They were grouped together, not knowing whether they should climb up the stairs or not.

"That man seems to have reached the top floor already." The drunkard stood at the stairwell and looked up through the gap.

"There's no reason for us to follow him. Staying on the ground floor will grant us a quick escape." The middle-aged man was quite a cowardly person.

"Daddy..." The boy in his arms seemed to notice something as he stared at the dim corridor behind the middle-aged man.

"You're right." The drunkard kept looking upward, but it was too dark to see anything. He narrowed his eyes and had a sneaking suspicion that there was something on the stairs of one of the upper floors that was poking out. He wondered if that was some kind of decoration.

"Let him scout the way forward—we'll just wait until he's confirmed it's safe."

The middle-aged man wanted to say something else when the boy whispered again, "Daddy..."

"Yes? What is it? I can hear you just fine, shush!"

“There is a doorknob in the corridor that’s moving. Look, there.” The boy raised his hand to point at a spot deep inside the corridor.

The wife who had not spoken a word, the middle-aged man, and the drunkard all turned to look in the direction that the boy was pointing. A strange sound came from the end of the corridor. The doorknob for one of the rooms was lightly jostling like there was someone locked behind the door trying to get out.

This strange sound coming from the eerily quiet residential building made all of their hearts squeeze.

“The man who’s leading the way went upstairs, and he said there aren’t any tenants here.” The more the middle-aged man thought about it, the more scared he became. “I’ve been to Li Wan City before, how shall I say this? Sometimes, you’ll come across things that can’t be explained scientifically here.”

“For example?”

“You wouldn’t want to know the examples, trust me. All we can do is avoid them to the best of our ability.”

“What if we can’t avoid them?” The drunkard leaned against the wall, and his eyes narrowed in on the end of the corridor.

“If we can’t avoid them, then we’ll have to pretend not to see them and act as normal as we can. Keep telling yourself it is just a part of your imagination.” The middle-aged man’s face paled like he was reminded of some horrible memory. Cold sweat poured out from his forehead, and he looked like he was about to puke. “The Li Wan City I visited back then was not like this Li Wan City. Back then, there was no red fog; it seems like things have changed since then.”

“Stop trying to scare me. F*ck, how come it feels like someone is blowing into my ear and there’s a woman speaking!” The drunkard turned to look behind him. The ‘murderer’ who called himself Scissors walked past the corridor. With his every step, there echoed two footsteps. His expression was strange. It was supposed to be a man's face, but once one looked at him longer, one would feel like they were looking at a woman.

The person did not follow them into the corridor but continued to walk ahead.

"Is that a man or a woman?" This strange feeling made the drunkard extremely nervous. He patted the middle-aged man's shoulder. "Just now, someone walked past."

"Really?" When the middle-aged man turned back to look, the blood fog had already covered the whole corridor, and he could not see anything. "Ignore him, we have to take care of ourselves first."

In just the blink of an eye, the doorknob at the end of the corridor stopped moving, and everything became silent again. The fog thickened, and the surroundings turned eerier. Occasionally, there was the sound of wind howling, and that worried the group even more.

"Has the person behind the door given up?" The drunkard grabbed the rails of the staircase. He was standing at the mouth of the corridor, preparing to run should the situation require it.

"Perhaps, or maybe the thing has already escaped from the room." The middle-aged bent over to retrieve a phone from inside his pocket. The drunkard noticed that the model used by the middle-aged man was from many years ago. He adjusted the brightness of the screen to its highest. He raised it before him, and it appeared like something else had joined them in the corridor. However, they were too far away to see what it was.

"This is strange." The middle-aged man used his elbow to nudge the drunkard. "I feel like this corridor is different from before. Come and take a look."

As the wind caressed the tips of his ears, it felt like a madman was whispering to him. The drunkard accepted the man's phone and looked closer. "It really does seem like there is something that wasn't there earlier."

He stepped involuntarily forward with a frown on his face upon surveying the decrepit ceiling, closed doors, and trash that crowded the cramped corridor.

"Hmm?" The drunkard's attention was suddenly caught by something.

“What did you see?” The middle-aged man rushed over to look at what the drunkard had found. He could not see anything out of place—there was no ghost or dead body.

“I’m not sure, wait a minute.” The drunkard returned the phone and took out his phone to activate the flashlight function. The light refracted in the fog, and that meant that they still could not see things clearly.

“It was this door that made the sound earlier.” The drunkard suppressed his fear as he moved forward, with his neck pulled back, his arm holding the wall. After several steps, he finally saw the additional thing that had not been there earlier. “A mop?”

There was a mop that had been added to the corridor, the kind used in everyday life. He wondered who tossed that there.

“It’s just a mop. Why are you trying to scare me like that?” The middle-aged took a deep breath as he placed the boy on the ground. His arms were getting sore.

The drunkard sighed in relief, and he scratched his head embarrassedly. “I guess I was being too nervous... but was there a mop in this corridor earlier?”

“There probably was. I can’t remember anymore.” The middle-aged man stood with the drunkard, and they looked down the corridor with the lights coming from their phones.

The drunkard, who wanted to move forward, suddenly stopped. He asked the middle-aged man next to him with some uncertainty, “Did the mop move? Wasn’t it back there earlier? I remember it was leaning against the door of the third room from the back. How come it feels like it has moved one door ahead?”

“Really?” The middle-aged man turned to look at the mop.

Under the two’s scrutiny, the mop suddenly moved, and the black trails of cloth started to shake to slowly reveal a human face underneath!

The drunkard and the middle-aged man did not anticipate something like this happening. Their limbs were cold, and before they reacted, the mop started to slither toward them. When it got closer, the people saw clearly that it was not a mop but a person with long hair.

“Run!”

The drunkard held the phone and turned to run away. The middle-aged man abandoned his wife and child and followed the drunkard. The boy was spooked. He started to cry until his mother carried him into her arms.

The sound of running footsteps echoed throughout the building. The drunkard was the first to exit the corridor. He hesitated for a moment, between going up the stairs to find Chen Ge and running out of the building directly. He lifted his head to look up the staircase. A curtain of black hair fell down onto his face, and a pale face was sliding down the rails of the stairwell.

Accompanying a scream, he threw caution into the wind and raced out the building. In the foggy street of the city where reality and nightmares weaved together, every building looked like a man-eating monster.

His heart still pumping, the drunkard did not dare stay any longer. He yelled at the middle-aged man behind him, “Run, this way!”

Then he ran to hide inside a two-story building next door.

The gate of the house was not locked, but the plants in the courtyard were all dried and wilted. The most eye-catching was a large dog house in the deepest corner of the yard.

It was a small construct built from iron poles and moldy wooden boards. Bite marks were left on the many surfaces. Other than inside the building, the only place that could hide a person was the dog house.

Footsteps and a woman’s laughter came from outside, and it muddled the drunkard’s mind. It made him feel like nowhere was safe.

He rushed to the dog house and squatted down behind it. It might be dangerous inside the house. Who knows what kind of thing I might run into in there? It’s better for me to hide here for now.

The drunkard supported himself by holding the wooden boards that formed the dog house’s roof. He considered hiding inside the dog house, but before he poked his head in, a pungent stench assaulted his nose.

“What is producing that smell?” The drunkard covered his mouth and nose as he shone his flashlight into the dog house. Out of his expectations, there was nothing inside. “This looks perfectly clean, but if that’s the case, why is it so smelly? Even ruined meat wouldn’t be this smelly!”

Resisting the urge to vomit, the drunkard picked up the nearby branch to sift through the dirt inside the dog house. “There’s nothing buried underneath either, so where is the stench coming from? It smells like the stench has soaked into the wooden boards...”

...

The echoes of harried footsteps neared. The drunkard took a step back. Unable to stand the smell, he jumped through the open window into the building.

“Hopefully, the family won’t lead the monster here.” The drunkard started to regret calling the middle-aged man to follow him—that had completely exposed his location, had it not?

Holding his head in his hands, the drunkard squatted beneath the window and pinched his skin. “This is not a dream, but what the hell was the thing that I saw? How can a head move so fast? And how did it move anyway? Using its chin?”

The drunkard believed that tragedy had already struck the family of three, but he had no thoughts of going out to save them either. “Other than me, all of the other passengers on the bus have probably died already. No one would have the courage to face these things, no one...”

He was still feeling light-headed; however, that was not from alcohol but from fear and shock. With cold sweat pouring out of his every pore, the drunkard shivered. “What should I do now? Without a signal on the phone, I have no idea where I am. I guess I’ll just hide here until the fog disperses.”

After what happened earlier, the drunkard did not dare wander aimlessly anymore. He cowered under the window, and several minutes later, he suddenly heard the door of the yard creak open.

“Someone’s here!” Holding his breath, the drunkard focused on his hearing. After the gate opened, there was no other sound.

“Did the thing just come in to take a quick look? Did the monster not discover me?” This time, the drunkard had learned from his previous lesson; he did not poke his head up to look through the window, worried that someone might be looking back at him. Instead, he got his phone, adjusted the angle, and used the camera function to look out into the yard. The gate was half-open, but there was no one in the yard.

“I guess that was lucky.” The drunkard stood up, and when he put the phone away, his elbow brushed against the bottle left on the windowsill.

“An air-freshener?” The drunkard replaced the bottle and did not think too much of it. Standing up, the drunkard finally had the time to study his hiding place. Perhaps it was his heightened nerves, but he felt like there was a strange voice whispering into his ears. It sounded like the tingle of a wind chime.

This was an old tradition, hanging wind chimes above the door. When they jingled, it represented that someone had entered the room. If this was normal, the drunkard would not have cared, but this situation was different. There was a feeling that someone was wandering near the entrance, and it was moving fast.

Just the thought that there was something else in the house with him caused his heart to constrict. Footsteps shuffled on the ground. The drunkard was facing away from the window, and he suddenly noticed the light behind him dimming like something was standing at the window, blocking the light.

Who’s standing outside the window? As that thought crossed his mind, the drunkard’s head was about to explode. His body was frozen in fear, and the wind chime jingled more intensely. Something is approaching!

The drunkard summoned all of his courage to turn back to look, but there was nothing at the window.

“I’m just scaring myself.” He retreated to the window, and when his hand brushed the windowsill, he felt something under his skin. Using the light from the phone, he saw there was a lot of black dog fur stuck in the cracks on the windowsill.

PA!

The window on the second floor was swung open. The drunkard's hands shuddered, and the dog fur in his palm fell to the floor. He clearly heard that it was the window directly above him that was swung open!

Perhaps this was a coincidence, or maybe someone was trying to toy with him. He did not dare jump out of the window, but at the same time, he did not think that it was safe inside the house. Just as he was hesitating, more dog fur fluttered down from the ceiling.

"Why is there so much dog fur?" He was reminded of the empty dog house in the yard and that thick stench!

"What is happening?" The drunkard did not dare look up; he had no interest in finding out what was staring at him from above. At that moment, he just wanted to be left alone.

"I can't stay here anymore; I need to leave!" Just as he made that decision, the gate in the yard was pushed open again, and in the dark, something that looked like a mop went to block the front door.

Seeing the face underneath the hair, the drunkard's heart was plunged into ice. He did not even close the window and ran away from this room that was closest to the yard.

"F*ck, when did it show up?" The drunkard ran into the corridor, and the sound of the wind chime came from the end of the corridor. Pairs of old slippers littered the ground, and the place was quite a mess.

"The dog fur floated down from above, so there must be something scary on the second floor as well! I mustn't go up there, and I need to stay away from the stairs!" The drunkard took a deep breath to make himself calm down. He slunk into the room furthest from the stairs.

The floor creaked noisily, and a strange child's singing came from who knew where. It felt like someone had activated a dead person's recorder.

"I saw slippers for both adults and children in the corridor, so there might be more than one thing occupying this house..." The more he thought about it, the more afraid he became. The drunkard's back was wet, and his body was cold. "Hopefully, they won't come in here."

After silently closing the door, the drunkard noticed that there were empty cans left behind the door. They looked similar to the one he found on the windowsill. "Why are there so many air-fresheners in the house?" He tossed the cans aside and then came to notice that there were many perfume bottles and packs of deodorant abandoned in the corner of the room.

"Why are there so many fumigants in this house? What happened here?" The drunkard kept getting reminded of that stinky dog house. "The dog house is well kept, but it is disgustingly smelly. The rooms for human beings are such a mess, but they smell fragrant. Something must be wrong here."

He looked around and discerned that he was in a young man's room. There were fashion magazines and body-building magazines strewn on the bed, and there were dumbbells and weights underneath the table.

The room could not have looked more normal, but for some reason, the drunkard felt very uneasy.

He opened the drawers of the study table. In the bottom drawer, he found a stack of pictures recording scenes of animal abuse. It made the hair on his back rise. However, that was not the scariest. As the drunkard continued to flip through the picture, he noticed, for the first quarter of the pictures, it was a faceless teen who was torturing animals. However, for the remaining three quarters of the pictures, it was the teen who was being tortured in return.

Chapter 633 - No Where to Run

Chapter 633: No Where to Run

“Is this animal abuse or human abuse?” The cruelty and savagery that the pictures portrayed made the drunkard uncomfortable. He shoved the pictures back into the drawer without looking through all of them. As he pulled his hands back, he suddenly felt something wet and sticky on his palm. Using the phone to see, the drunkard’s eyes jumped. His palms were wet with reddish-black blood.

“But I haven’t touched anything other than the pictures? Could the blood have seeped out from the pictures?” Standing alone in the strange room, with things scurrying in the corridor, the wind chime singing, and a mop-like monster blocking the front door... even if the drunkard had one hundred times his courage, he would not have left the room.

“The monster that threw the dog fur out of the window was on the second floor, and this room was the furthest from the stairs, so it should be the safest room.” He did not dare to leave, worried that the monster would be right outside the door once he opened it. However, he could not help but panic, staying inside the room. “But why would the pictures leak blood? I should have accidentally brushed against a certain part of the drawer, or maybe there’s a hidden compartment inside the door.”

Summoning his courage, the drunkard yanked the last drawer off its hinges and placed it on the ground. This time, he clearly saw that there were indeed the pictures inside the drawer.

“Wait, so did the blood really come from the pictures?” His assumption was overruled, and there was a sudden urge for him to escape from the room. His eyes fell on the pictures, and the drunkard noticed something strange. In all the pictures where the man was abused, the man’s face was hidden, but in all the pictures where the man was abusing the animal, when the animals were on their last breath, there would be a hand gripping the animals’ neck, turning their heads to the camera like the man was brandishing his victory spoils.

“Such a maniac.” Perhaps he had been staring at the pictures for far too long, but the drunkard suddenly noticed that all the animals in the pictures seemed to be smiling.

“This is the first time that I’ve seen such an expression on an animal, or I think they should be smiling, right? A smiling dog?” The drunkard shivered. He did not dare get any closer to the pictures on the ground. He looked around, and the longer he stayed in the room, the more scared he became. “How come it feels like this place is scarier than the one from before?”

He rubbed his hands on the bed, trying to rub the blood stain away, but his fingers touched something else. After some hesitation, he pulled the bedsheet back, and the stench hit him like a wall. On the mattress of the wooden bed, there was a human-shaped blood pool that had already dried.

From the shape alone, he could tell the victim must have been in great pain before he perished. The blood splatter exploded around the stomach. It looked as if the victim had been pounced on by some kind of beast, and the beast had torn open his stomach and neck.

The drunkard was a salesman; he had not experienced something like this before. His body petrified, and his brain went into shut down. His scalp was numb, and a blast of air was rushing out of his lungs. At the last minute, he bit on his own hands to stop himself from screaming.

“Someone has died in this room! This bed is his last resting place!” This conclusion came easily. He did not dare stay there any longer. For a man who lived in a peaceful world, this was the first time the drunkard had come so close to an actual murder. His eyes darted about, and he finally came to after a long time. The first thing he did was toss the bedsheet away.

His eyes moved to his feet, and the animals’ faces seared into his mind. “That dog is smiling; he is really laughing! I’m not mistaken!”

The drunkard was a bit crazed from all the scares, but this was not his fault. After waking up inside the bus, it felt like his whole world had changed. He had not experienced anything like this before, not even in his nightmares.

“I need to leave this place; I cannot stay here anymore!” The drunkard leaned against the wall and walked to the window. He gripped the curtain, but he did not have the courage to pull it back, worried what he might see behind it.

His heart was gripped by hesitation, and his legs were shaking. As Murphy's Law stated, what one wished would not happen would always happen. A strange sound came from inside the room—it sounded like a rat chomping on something.

“It sounds like it's coming from underneath the bed...” The drunkard was not crazy enough to bend down to look under the bed. When the noise grew too loud, he yanked the curtain back.

The bedroom window was already half open. Through the window, when the drunkard looked out, a face was looking in. The black hair that looked like cloth plastered on the face and the pale head was trying its best to squeeze through the window!

PA!

The drunkard used all of his strength to slam the window shut, creating a loud noise. His brain was drawing a blank, and it was his body's reactive nerves that compelled him to slam the window shut.

The head slithered up the thin glass of the window. Its lips opened and closed slowly, and the last few remaining teeth ground against the glass as if it was saying, “I've finally found you.”

After locking the window, the drunkard felt like he had exhausted all the energy he had. He collapsed to the ground and looked up at the head at the window. Before he could recover, he felt something wet staining his pants; the sudden cold sensation made him uncomfortable.

With a shuddering gaze, he turned his head down to look. He had fallen on top of the pictures, and blood was spreading on his pants.

Other than that, the drunkard noticed that all the animals' head had gone missing from the pictures where the animals were abused. The reddish-black blood was seeping out of the stumps where their heads should be.

The drunkard felt the air being sucked out of his lungs, and he crawled swiftly away.

BANG! BANG!

The human head knocked against the window, but the drunkard was not going to take a look. He forced himself up and ran back into the house.

“Help, help, where are all the other people?” He crawled back into the corridor, intending to find a different room to hide, but once he got out, he saw a shadow leaning at the corner of the stairs leading to the second floor. It looked like a dog but also like a man!

“What is that?” Too afraid to get close to the stairs, the drunkard turned and hid inside the closest room. He closed the door without even realizing what kind of room it was. He locked the door and gasped hungrily for air while leaning on the door. For a normal person, he was already quite mentally strong considering the experience that he had been through.

“No, I can’t die here! I need to leave and group up with the rest!” The drunkard now realized how important it was to stick together. He moved the table to block the door and started to observe his surroundings.

A stove, a fridge, and a large kitchen cupboard.

“Is this the kitchen?” The drunkard looked around and realized that this was not good for him. He had entered the kitchen, and the worst thing was that there was no window in this room.

There was the sound of glass shattering coming from outside, and the wind chime in the corridor screamed even louder. The drunkard refused to give up. Compelled by a strong will to survive, he started to rummage through the kitchen to look for anything useful.

The kitchen could not really be called big, and the most conspicuous object in the room was the cupboard. There were many delicious looking dishes placed inside, but strangely enough, all of them were wrapped inside plastic wrap, and most had been left there for so long that the rot had started to set in. “Why would they use the cupboard to store the food when there’s a perfectly fine fridge?”

The situation was too urgent for the drunkard to stop to figure out a question like that. He rushed to the stove and noticed that the exhaust fan that was installed on the wall.

“This fan...” Perhaps it was special design, or maybe it was the family’s peculiar habit, but the exhaust fan installed in the kitchen was larger than normal, and it was just large enough for a child to fit through.

“There’s no window in the kitchen, so to help ventilation, a large exhaust fan is installed?” The drunkard stepped on the chair and yanked the fan down forcefully. He looked at the hole, and his expression was colored with hesitation. The hole was too small for an adult. If he was stuck inside, he could not imagine what would happen.

(Boxno vel. co m) “What should I do now?” Just as the drunkard was hesitating, he saw the cleaver that had been left on the chopping board. Blood and bone chips were stuck to the blade. He looked up at the hole and looked down at the cleaver. A strange idea appeared in the drunkard’s mind like everything so far had been cleverly arranged by someone.

The hole was too small for a normal adult, but if one chop off their scapula and sheared off their hipbone, they should be able to fit through the hole easily. Holding the cleaver in his hand, the handle was sticky, and it made the drunkard uncomfortable. As if trying to rush him, he heard the sound of the doors behind opening in the corridor like someone was opening every single room to check them one by one.

“If I escape from here, who knows what kind of crazy thing I’ll run into next. Only a real idiot would harm themselves.” He held the cleaver in one hand. He bit on his lips, and suddenly, an idea popped into his mind. “I could pretend to have escaped from the exhaust fan, but actually, I’ll be hiding somewhere else. When the owner comes to check the room, I’ll use that opportunity to escape.”

The drunkard looked around before walking to the fridge.

The kitchen was not big, but there was a very large double-layer fridge. The drunkard opened the top layer, and it was stuff full of various deodorants and air-fresheners—some unopened, some used.

“What’s with these things?” This was the first time that he had seen such things being stored inside the fridge. He bent down to open the bottom layer, and it was filled with several black plastic bags.

“These couldn’t be dead bodies, could they?” Alas, there was no other option for the drunkard—the only hiding place large enough to fit a man was the fridge. He moved the black plastic from the bottom layer to the top layer. During the moving process, a dog’s head fell out from a gash in one of the bags.

“These are carrying dog meat?” To cover his trail, the drunkard picked up the dog’s head, but when he shoved the head into the fridge, he accidentally glanced at the head. The pupils were frozen in fear, and the longer he looked at it, the more he felt the head looked like a human. He could not really explain why, but it just felt he was not staring at a dog’s head but a frozen human head.

“F*ck this!” Unable to stare at the dog’s head anymore, the drunkard slammed the door shut after he finished moving all the black plastic bags.

BANG!

He was just finished with his work when the doorknob of the kitchen was being turned. When the person noticed that the door refused to open after giving it multiple tries, the shaking became more violent.

“I’ve been discovered!” The drunkard placed the chair under the exhaust fan, grabbed the cleaver, and crawled into the lower section of the fridge before closing the door. The kitchen door was slammed into multiple times, but it held. The monster outside the door seemed to have given up already. The footsteps moved away, and the room instantly became quiet.

The drunkard was shivering due to the chill. He did not dare leave his hiding spot, afraid that this was a trap. About half a minute later, the footsteps reappeared, followed by the key being pushed inside the lock. The locked door was opened, and the table was pushed aside.

“It’s here!” The drunkard had no idea what the owner looked like, but the thought of the pictures that it had taken chilled him to his core. Footsteps echoed in the kitchen. Soon, the chair was moved around like the owner was inspecting it.

“Hopefully, that’ll be able to fool him...” That was the drunkard’s wish, but not a moment after that prayer began in his heart came the sound of the fridge door being pulled open. The door of the top section was opened, and the black plastic bags that he had stuffed hurriedly into it earlier tumbled out like an avalanche.

The drunkard’s face paled instantly; he knew that he had been discovered!

“I need to leave this place!” Perhaps holding the cleaver gave him courage because the drunkard slammed the door open from inside. The whole floor of dog meat entered his eyes, and the dog’s head that had a human expression was placed right before the drunkard.

Even though he had already mentally prepared, the drunkard was still given a great scare when he saw this. His eyes darted to the side, and he saw an ageless person standing amid the strewn dog meats.

A sheath of dog fur was dangled over his body, and the expression on his face gave the drunkard a sense of familiarity.

“That face is the smiling dog from the pictures!” His body felt soaked in cold water. Using every ounce of his energy, he crawled out from the fridge and charged toward the door.

“The dead dog’s expression is like a human, but the living human has the smiling face of the dead dog in the pictures.” Such a conclusion appeared in the drunkard’s mind. If he did not see that in person, he would not have believed such a thing. “The dead dog has taken over the living person’s body, or have they exchanged souls? Could this be some kind of curse, the curse of the smiling dog?”

The drunkard could not explain the thoughts that flowed through his mind. He charged toward the first room that he had jumped into like his life depended on it. In comparison to a scarier thing, the thing that scared him earlier became less scary. As the drunkard raced into the room, at the corner, he turned to look behind him. The strange man landed on his four limbs and chased after him like a mad dog. The folds of skin on his face were scrunched together to reveal a smile that was all too similar to that of the dog in the picture.

Slamming the door shut, the drunkard jumped out the window. Without turning back to look, he escaped from this two-story building. Energized by fear, the drunkard did not stop running even after he left the compound. He raced for about ten meters down the road and only stopped when he confirmed that no one was chasing him.

“What are these monsters? How come it feels like every single building here is harboring at least one of them?” The blood fog rolled through town. The drunkard stood in the middle of the road. He looked left and right and realized that the bus that was supposed to be parked there had disappeared.

“Did I run in the wrong direction? Was the bus the other way?” The drunkard stood by the roadside, not daring to wander too close to the buildings. “Compared to the buildings, it feels safer out on the road. I should try to move down the street and remember any landmarks on the way. The bus should be around here somewhere.”

The drunkard followed the road, but it did not take long for him to run into someone standing ahead, waving at him. The blood fog lowered the visibility greatly, and he could only just make out the shape of a human.

“Who is that? He looks familiar. Could he be one of the passengers from the bus?” The drunkard had just been saying seconds ago that the streets should be safer than the building, but before he even finished, he had been proven wrong. He suspected that there was a pair of eyes following him from a place that he could not see, observing his every move.

“Is he waving at me? With the fog, I can’t see his face, so he shouldn’t be able to see mine either. In such circumstances, a normal person wouldn’t proactively greet others.”

A person’s potential was often forced. After going through the experience earlier, the drunkard had become noticeably more cautious, and he had more to think about before making any move. The shape of the man in the fog became clearer—the person seemed to be walking toward him.

“No, I need to stay away from him.” The drunkard noticed the person pick up his speed. He did not dare to answer and turn to run away.

“If he’s a living human, he should have said something. Just standing there to wave and running toward me without saying a word is too suspicious.”

Even the streets were not safe, so the drunkard was feeling trapped. He did not know where to run to.

“The most important thing now is to meet up with the other passengers; it’s too dangerous for me to stay alone.” The drunkard jogged for a while, but the bus was nowhere to be seen. The more he ran, the more unsettled he felt. “F*ck, I think I’m really lost now. The buildings here all look almost the same, and the bus is my only frame of reference.”

He could still see the vague shadow behind him in the fog. The man who had waved at him was still behind him, maintaining a safe distance between them.

“And what the hell is this? Why is it following me?” The drunkard ran faster and did not stop until he reached the next junction. He still could not find the bus, and as he was hesitating over which route to take, he suddenly noticed the shadow that had appeared on the opposite side of the road. It was waving at him!

“When did the thing pass me? He should be way behind me!” Despair crawled into his heart like a stubborn vine. The drunkard was at a loss; it felt like wherever he went, he would run into this person.

“What should I do now?” Thirty years of life experience was unable to give him any aid. The man on the opposite side of the road was still waving at him. With the vague silhouette, the oscillating arms looked like the ticking hands of death’s clock.

“Even if I run down another path, the monster will still follow me. There’s no other option; I’ll have to fight it!” The drunkard gritted his teeth and tightly gripped the cleaver that he had brought out from the kitchen of the dog-man’s house. He had never even killed a chicken for cooking in his life, but at that moment, a cruel thought entered his mind.

“Calm down, there’s no need to panic!”

Staying too long in the blood fog would influence one. The drunkard had not noticed this himself. The corners of his eyes were red, filled with blood vessels. It looked like he had not slept for days, completely different from how he looked when he first got on the bus.

Since this was his first time, the drunkard’s heart raced at an impossible rate. He gripped the cleaver with both hands and used a strange posture as he walked across the road. The vague shape kept waving at him. As he got closer, the drunkard got a better look.

“He looks so familiar. I should have met him somewhere before, was he a passenger from the bus?”

The drunkard stopped in the middle of the road and yelled at the man, “Hey! What’s your name?”

There was no reply other than the fact that the angle of the waving dwindled, and suddenly, the man walked toward him. In the blood red city, on the empty street, the distance between the two closed. As the man slowly approached, the sense of familiarity in the drunkard's heart grew.

"He feels too familiar; I swear I've seen him somewhere before." The drunkard nudged forward and finally crossed the thick fog, standing before the man. The man was covered in blood, and his stomach was the most gruesome. The waist where the lower body and upper body should have been connected was replaced by a dark line. It felt like the man's body had been halved but had then been reconnected.

Seeing the man's appearance, the drunkard thought about retreating. However, other than fear, he could not shake the sense of familiarity. He was sure that he knew this person from somewhere.

"Who are you?" His brain was blank, and the drunkard could not really explain this question that slipped from his lips. His hand that gripped the cleaver was shaking.

"The road ahead splits—one for the living, the other for the dead." The strange man slowly raised his head, and underneath his messy head of hair was a face similar to that of the drunkard. The pupils filled with fear, and hatred popped outward. With the broken spine supporting his body, he lunged toward the drunkard. His lips tore open, and a shrill voice different from the drunkard's escaped from his throat. "I am you! You who have died a horrible death!"

When he saw that the monster looked like him, the last mental defense in the drunkard's mind collapsed. Without any fight left in him, he held the cleaver, turned, and ran. This time, he wasn't even paying attention to his direction. His every nerve was fraying, and he barely registered the legs that were carrying him forward. He had no idea where his destination was because he did not know where was safe. All he could do was run.

Pain coursed through his body, and his lungs felt like they were burning up. The world in his eyes faded away as the air was sucked out of his throat.

"I can't run anymore..."

This was a world made from despair. The only choice for the living was to enter the building of their choice and opt for their preferred way to die.

"No one will be able to survive here. Everyone will die..." His consciousness falling, the drunkard used his last breath to run into the closest building. The main color scheme was white. This appeared to be the only private hospital in Li Wan City. It was not big, just a small three-story building.

“Daddy...”

“Shut the f*ck up.” The middle-aged was catching his breath. He hid inside the safety corridor and kept turning to look behind him. Several minutes later, when he could not hear the footsteps anymore, he leaned against the wall and slowly slid down to the ground. “I’ve seen uncooperative passengers being sent into a door inside the ghost apartment; the world behind the door is similar to this place, suffused with blood fog. This is not a place meant for the living; this is all that man’s fault! If there’s a chance, I’ll definitely repay this favor!”

The more he thought about it, the more angered he became, and that only got worse after he saw the woman and the boy cowering next to him. Without warning, he kicked the woman roughly on her leg. “Ever since I married you, I’ve never enjoyed a good day in my life! This is all your fault, you f*cking mute!”

The woman groaned incomprehensibly. She seemed to be deathly afraid of the man. Covering her legs, she moved backward and still made sure to shield the boy from his father’s vengeance.

“Daddy...”

“Stop calling me, you little f*cker! You’re sounding more and more like my debt collector!” The middle-aged man looked around and his face was drawn. “We were much too focused on running to notice we’ve ended up inside the hospital. This place is definitely cursed somehow. After that monster leaves, we’ll need to get away from this place.”

“Daddy...” Even though he had just been scolded, the boy kept calling his father. Finally, the middle-aged man noticed something was wrong. If this was normal, the boy would have apologized or gone quiet once his fire started to burn. The boy would never go against him.

“What?”

“Earlier, there was a little big brother who stuck some paper on your back.” The boy pointed on the man’s back.

“On my back?” The middle-aged man shivered involuntarily. He reached behind him and pulled off a patient’s record.

The record showed that the patient had died, but on the back of the paper, someone had written in uneven handwriting ‘It’s your turn to come and find me.’

“When did this get there?” The middle-aged man held the medical history, and his eyes were bulging—he had no memory of this at all.

“I...” The boy was deathly afraid of his father, so he cowered behind his mother.

“Why aren’t you speaking now? It’s time for you to speak, but you choose to be silent?” The middle-aged man yanked the boy out from behind his mother. He grabbed the boy’s shirt and shook him. “When was this stuck there? Where were we at the time? What did the person who left this look like?”

“On the first floor, when we passed one of the sickrooms, the door was left half ajar. I saw a hand reach out and place the paper on your back.” It was unclear whether the boy was more afraid of his father or more afraid of that hand. “I wanted to tell you at the time, but then a face showed up behind the door. His skin was ashen, and he whispered to me to not reveal the secret because this was supposed to be a fair game of hide-and-seek.”

“When have you ever been so obedient? He told you not to say anything, so you didn’t say anything?” The middle-aged man raised his arm and was close to slapping his boy’s face. “Trash, all of you! You’re as useless as your mother. One day, I’ll die because of both of you!”

He stared at the paper that he was holding, and the uneven handwriting on it made his hair stand on end.

“It’s my turn to come and find you? Only an idiot would follow that order!” The middle-aged man crumpled the medical history into a ball and tossed it on the ground. Perhaps it was a coincidence, but the picture of the patient poked out from the ball, and it happened to stare right at the middle-aged man.

“So damn unlucky.” He stomped angrily on the ball of the paper. The middle-aged man glanced down the corridor. “The monster from the road didn’t chase us into this place—it should have given up already. We should venture deeper into the building. When we ran in here, I remember seeing a backdoor on the other side of the building.”

After hearing what his boy had to say, there was no way the middle-aged man was going to retake the route that they had taken earlier. He looked at the sickrooms that lined the corridor on both sides, and his palms were sweating.

“Aren’t we going to find that big brother?” asked the boy cautiously as he raised his head.

“Find him? Do you want to die that much? The most urgent thing we need to do now is leave this godforsaken place.” The middle-aged man grabbed his wife’s shoulders roughly. “Look after him carefully and don’t let him wander off. The people inside the ghost apartment have two different attitudes dealing with adults and children...”

As he spoke, he moved forward, but the edge of his pants were pulled back by the boy. “What is it this time?”

“Daddy, he’s playing hide-and-seek with us.”

“F*ck, of course, I know that.” The middle-aged man kicked the boy back. “Do you really plan on playing hide-and-seek with a ghost in this ghost-ridden place?”

“But if we didn’t go and find him, he’ll come to find us instead.” The boy used a serious tone to explain the game’s rule. However, his innocent voice transmuted into an indescribable sense of terror when it fell into his father’s ears.

“The ghost... will come and find us?” Based on the rules, there was indeed a chance of that happening. The middle-aged man’s face fell immediately. Whether it was looking for the ghost or being looked for by the ghost, both of these things were something hard to accept for him.

“No, this has to be a trap. Even if we find the ghost, after the role changes, it will still come and find us! We need to leave this place! We cannot stand here anymore.” The middle-aged man picked up the boy, called after his wife, and raced down the safety corridor.

Holding the sharp scissors in his hands, the ‘murderer’ who called himself Scissors stood alone on the first floor of the city hospital.

“Weak animals move in a herd; only a beast moves alone. Therefore, a murderer is always alone.” The backs of Scissors’ hands were pulsing with veins, which showed how nervous he was. “A small city covered in blood fog, this is completely different from the entry in my big brother’s diary. Did he get the description wrong, or did I get off at the wrong station?”

Scissors touched his face. When his fingers brushed against the wound, he grimaced from the pain. When the man was alone, he acted completely different from how he had when he was on the bus.

“To not become the prey, one has to act like the hunter. I cannot make the same mistake my elder brother did.” Scissors walked forward several steps. The hospital at night was much scarier than it was in daylight. And if the lights were not turned on, the terror factor would multiply several more times.

“I can’t panic. The most dangerous place should be the safest place. Going against the grain is my only option of survival.” That was what he told himself, but he found it difficult to even move his feet. His body was resisting this instinctually. “Do not be afraid, the more scared you are at those things, the higher the probability for them to come and haunt you. Along the way, people’s screams and wails kept coming from other directions, but I personally have not run into anything, so this is proof enough that my theory is correct.”

He gripped the scissors in his hand tightly. After giving himself some words of encouragement, he took another step into the long corridor on his left. After taking a step, two types of footsteps echoed in the lobby. One was his, and the other was the sound of high heels landing on the ground.

“That is just my imagination. There is nothing behind me, nothing behind him...” He repeated this again and again. Scissors was hypnotizing himself—he felt like he was almost getting used to the presence of this sound already. “I’m too nervous. The sound will naturally disappear once I leave this place. There’s only five to six hours until daybreak, so I only need to hold on until then.”

Scissors was definitely a heavy-storied person. He suddenly stopped and raised his hand to slap himself on his face. “You came to find your elder brother; how can you only think about yourself at a time like this?”

His older brother's image flashed across his mind, and Scissors burnished with determination. “I've prepared for five months for today. I still have so many trump cards up my sleeves, so there is no reason for me to panic.”

He forced himself to stop being afraid. He held the scissors in his left hand and the bag that had already stopped leaking in his right hand.

“My whole appearance looks unapproachable. There was a passenger on the bus earlier who looked similar to me—he should be someone with a story as well—but his preparation is not as complete as mine is.” Scissors had great, and some might say unfounded, confidence in himself. He ignored the echoing footsteps behind him and walked down the hospital corridor.

The hospital was not big, and there were not that many sickrooms. Scissors walked for a while before he heard a strange noise coming from the second floor.

“That seems to have come from the safety corridor. Who could that be?” Licking his lips, Scissors thought back to the classical demeanor of crazed murderers that he had seen on the movies and slithered his way up to the second floor.

There was a draft in the corridor, and the doors for a few of the sickrooms had been left half-open. Since there was no light, all the rooms were dark, and standing outside, there was no way of telling what was inside.

“Is someone here?”

Scissors was cautious with every step. When he passed one of the sickrooms, he suddenly noticed something. The footsteps that had been following him had disappeared.

“Why did the sound stop?”

Now that it was gone, he felt weirdly uncomfortable. Turning back to look, he realized that someone had stuck a piece of paper on his shoulder.

“Come and find me?”

Chapter 637 - We've Found You

[2 in 1]

Chapter 637: We've Found You [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

“Want me to go and find you? Have you lost your mind?” The uneven handwriting on the back of the medical history made him feel a certain kind of way. He was currently on the first floor of the hospital, standing in the middle of the corridor.

Even though the drafts had stopped, the doors that were left half-ajar moved back and forth, creaking noisily. Showers of dust fell from the old ceiling, and there was occasionally the sound of paper brushing against the ground filtering into his ears. Standing alone in that situation after midnight, it would be a lie to say that one was not afraid.

Scissors held the pair of scissors in his hand tightly, and he forced himself to appear as unfazed as he could be. “When did someone place this on my back?”

Turning back, Scissors studied the few sickrooms that he had just passed. “The person who was behind this prank should be from inside one of the rooms that I’ve just walked past.”

He was very afraid, but fear had not taken control of his rationality or sanity yet. He reminded himself consciously that he was currently playing the role of a cold-blooded, maddened killer and he needed to keep his cool no matter what.

The weaker I appear, the more I'll be bullied by the ghosts, so I cannot appear weak, I can't show any trace of fear.

He folded the medical history neatly and placed it inside his pocket. Scissors carefully pushed open the half-closed door that was closest to him. Inside the sickroom, the bedsheet had been shredded into pieces, and the mattress was toppled to the side; it was as if the bed was once the home of some feral beast that needed to be detained.

“Is this a hospital or some kind of mental institution?” Scissors did not enter the sickroom and only observed it from beyond the threshold. The bed was not big, and the only space to hide someone was underneath the bed or inside the dresser.

“The person behind the prank is not here.” He could see clearly into the space under the bed, and the doors of the dresser were hanging open. It was empty inside—all contents had been taken away. “He should be in the other sickrooms.”

Internally, his heart had been quivering like a leaf, but it did not translate to his expression. With unnaturally frigid limbs, Scissors retreated out of the room and moved toward the other sickroom.

“This one is empty, no one is here either...” Scissors moved quickly through the rooms until he reached the sickroom that was closest to the hospital entrance.

“After I entered the hospital, I walked straight into the corridor. I’ve only passed these few sickrooms since then. As all the other sickrooms were empty, then he has to be hiding inside this last room.” The hand that held the scissors was sweating profusely as he slowly pushed the door of the sickroom open. A strong pungent smell wafted out from inside the room, a mixture of blood and disinfectant.

“Someone has died here before?” The scene inside the room gripped and shook his head. The blood-dyed bedsheet had hurriedly been shoved under the bed, and from the window that was installed with anti-theft webbing hung a patient’s garb that had plenty of torn holes on it. A long wig stood inside the dresser, and the scariest thing was, on the snow-white wall, someone or something had written in fresh blood ‘Guess where I am?’

After comparing the handwriting, he noticed that the hand that had written the blood message on the wall and the hand that had jotted down the message on the back of the medical history were different. This discovery unsettled Scissors even more. “There’s more than one ‘person’ playing hide-and-seek inside this hospital?”

The urge to turn back and run burst forth. He retreated from the sickroom, planning to leave the hospital and temporarily stay away from it. “The most dangerous spot is the safest spot. That is theoretically true, but it is so difficult to put that into practice.”

Returning to the entrance of the hospital, Scissors’ expression changed completely. Someone had locked the giant iron gate of the hospital without him noticing!

“What do I do now?” Scissors was panicking due to helplessness. He bit on his lips, and that tore open the wound on his face. The pain helped him focus and calm down. “I should go look for any open windows.”

When he was looking through the sickrooms on the first floor earlier, he had confirmed that all of their windows were installed with anti-theft webbing, so he could only place his hope on the second floor. “I’ve trained so much for this day. The injury shouldn’t be serious from jumping down from the second floor, but I can’t say the same if the jump is made from the third floor. The risk will be too high.”

Holding the bag, Scissors leaped up the stairs to the second floor.

By then, he had completely given up on the idea of playing hide-and-seek. Then again, it had never been his intention to play games with ghosts. Running up the stairs three steps at a time, when he turned around the corner of the stairs, he spotted a pair of gray-colored feet from the periphery of his eyes. The pair of feet was slightly above his head. He instinctively turned to look up, and a pair of ashen legs fell into his sight, but when he looked up even further, the thing had already disappeared.

“What the f*ck?” The ‘surprise’ came so suddenly that it caused Scissors’ legs to weaken. He did not expect the thing to be so close to him. In fact, there were only several steps separating them. “He was just around here. Perhaps he has been watching me from some hidden corner!”

Stopping at the landing in the middle of the staircase, Scissors was unsure whether he should continue to move upward. He had gotten a good look earlier; the thing had indeed been waiting for him upstairs.

“All the windows in the sickrooms on the first floor are locked behind anti-theft webbing. There is no way I’ll be able to escape from them. So, the only way to leave this cursed place is through the windows on the second floor.”

Devoid of other choice, Scissors forced himself to walk up the stairs.

Please do not show up again.

Reciting a silent prayer to himself, Scissors jogged to the first sickroom on his left. He shoved the door open with hope in his heart, but that hope deflated when he looked toward the window. Pieces of torn clothes were stuck inside the iron anti-theft webbing.

“Even the windows on the second floor are installed with the webbing?”

His lips drying, Scissors’ heart was slowly festering with despair. He walked to the window and reached out to shake the webbing roughly. The metallic webbing cut into his fingers, and the pain that came from it was so real, but the blood fog right outside the window felt so surreal.

If this is a nightmare, I hope I’ll be able to wake up soon.

The anti-theft webbing was secure, so there was no way he was going to open it without tools. Scissors let his hands go and prepared to leave. But when he reached the door, footsteps echoed down the safety corridor coming from the other end. It sounded like people were running.

They sound like they are coming this way, and there are so many of them!

Without hesitation, Scissors closed the door and locked it. He moved to stand behind the door, hoping to inspect the situation outside through the window on the door. The footsteps came closer and closer. Scissors could see several shadows flashing down the corridor, seemingly heading his way.

I cannot allow myself to be discovered! It’s over for me if I’m stuck inside this room!

The shadows were incredibly close to his location. Scissors scanned the room behind him and, in the end, grabbed his bag to hide inside the dresser. The hospital was privately operated, and the amenities were different from the ones provided by big government hospital. The space inside the dresser was separated into two with a wooden board, and after removing the partition, the dresser was just big enough for a person to hide inside.

The footsteps drew close from afar before completely disappearing outside the sickroom.

They’ve stopped outside the door? Is it because they’ve discovered me?

Scissors did not think it was wise for him to leave lest he was captured by those things once he showed himself, so he decided to stay hidden inside the dresser.

Hide-and-seek, hide-and-seek, I have not even found them yet, so why have them come to find me already? Could it be because they have detected my intention to escape?

Holding the rhythm of his breathing, Scissors changed into a more comfortable posture, but as he adjusted his position, his shoes knocked into something. His heart froze, and cold sweat poured down his forehead. Scissors forced himself to maintain his calm as he searched for his phone from his pocket.

Activating the phone, background on the screen showed the picture of two young men taken in front of the entrance of a children's home. One of the young men had a goatee, very tall and buff, while the other one looked exactly like Scissors. At the time, he appeared to be quite camera-shy. When the picture was taken, he raised his hands like he was trying to shield his face from the camera.

"You have been taking care of me for so long—it is time for me to take care of you." Scissors let out a deep sigh and increased the brightness of the phone screen to its maximum. Then, he shone it underneath his feet.

The thing that his shoes brushed against was a patient's garb, and poking out from underneath the clothes was a diary. It was because Scissors had read his older brother's diary that he had decided to take the last bus on Route 104 to come to Li Wan City. Now that he had come across another diary on his journey, he picked it up without much hesitation and started to flip through it.

"Liu Feiming? That's the name of the diary's owner?"

As he flipped through the diary, he noticed a medical history chart slit inside the pages. The patient's name was indeed Liu Feiming, and according to his diagnosis, both of his legs were broken due to a fall from a high location.

How come it feels like it's narrating my future? The only solution to escape from this haunted place is to jump down from the third floor.

With more than a trace of anxiety, Scissors started to read through the content of the diary.

"1st June: I'll definitely go and settle the debt with that limping guy once I leave the hospital! Even though he's limping, his heart is still as dark as sh*t! At the very least, I've worked in his team for so many years already. He planned to get me to shut up with a few hundred RMB after I fell from the third floor, suffered from heavy injury, and went unconscious? No way! This will not be the end of this!

“2nd June: Due to the injury to the nerves and bones, I’ll need to stay in this hospital for at least one hundred days. I wonder when will I be able to leave this place. It’s so boring staying here at the hospital. I wonder how my family members are doing. I hope my buddy, Brother Lee, hasn’t told them about my injury. I don’t want to worry about me.

“3rd June: How come it feels like the nurses are purposely trying to avoid me? They leave the moment they finished changing the drip. It is like I’m some kind of evil god. Is it because they look down on poor people? They’ll regret this when I strike it rich.

“4th June: Oh god, I’m so bored. There’s not even a single person to talk to. The doctors and nurses have stopped coming. Weren’t they saying that they’re lacking empty beds? There is an empty bed right next to me, but they leave the patients out in the corridor instead of placing them next to them, letting them share the same room with me. What kind of discrimination is this? This bunch of people with eyes that grew on the top of their heads.

“6th June: What is going on with the patient next door? How does he plan for other people to fall asleep if he keeps up the noises through the night? The service at this old hospital sure is horrendous. I plan to write an anonymous letter to the relevant party to expose them.

“7th June: At 2 am this morning, the patient next door started to act up again. I really wonder if they have locked up a mental case next door. Why else would there be the sound of people ramming against the wall?

“8th June: I finally lost it and yelled back at the neighboring patient tonight. I thought they would roar back at me, but they’re a bunch of wusses. There was not a peep from them in return. Actually, I was rather thankful for the distraction. After getting bored out of my mind for so many days, the yelling was quite a relaxation.

“9th June: When I woke up this morning, there was a child lying beside my bed. It gave me quite a fright. After I asked him, I realized that he was the child of the patient next door. His parents sure are brave to allow a boy as young as him to wander about like that. Then again, the boy is quite cute, and he’s not afraid of strangers. I’ve stayed here for so long, and this is the first time someone’s approached me willingly to talk to me.

“10th June: I became friends with the boy, and he was cleverer than he appeared. To evade the discovery of the nurses, whenever someone was about to enter the room, he would go into hiding, and so far, he had not been discovered.

“13th June: I’ve completely familiarized myself with the kid. He likes to play hide-and-seek and comes to visit me in the middle of the night. Isn’t it surprising for someone like myself to be loved by kids? I promised him that once I can get out of bed, I will play hide-and-seek with him inside the hospital. By the way, the kid’s parents must be good people—at least they don’t seem to look down on me like the nurses and doctors at the hospital. I wonder what kind of illness they’re suffering from to still be hospitalized after so many days.

“14th June: Tonight, a cancer patient in Room 305 died. Many doctors and nurses came and went. But strangely enough, I noticed they still gave my sickroom a wide berth when they had to pass it to go downstairs. They’d rather take a longer journey in this case of emergency and refused to walk past my sickroom. Is it because I’m on some kind of black list?

“15th June: It’s finally the day to remove the cast, and here I thought the doctor had forgotten all about me. It’s a windy day today, so I think I’ll just stay indoors.

“15th June: Something is not right tonight. How come I still hear a familiar sound coming from next door? The voice sounds similar to the old man who died yesterday. I asked the boy about it, but he didn’t wish to tell me anything. All he wanted was for me to play hide-and-seek with him at night. If I can find him, he’ll tell me the answer. My legs are still recovering, and if I wonder out at night, I will definitely give the nurses on duty a big scare.

“16th June: Oh God, what is happening to me? Today, I woke up early in the morning and went outside with the crutch. When I wanted to go next door to visit my neighbor, I realized that I was leaving in the first sickroom on the left of the staircase! Beyond my room was the storage room, and there was no sickroom beyond mine! But I could hear the conversation every night and that boy! F*ck! Now I finally understand why the doctors and nurses refused to come close to my room.

“16th June: The doctor refused to let me leave. After all, I still owe them plenty in medical bills. None of my friends can be trusted! I don’t care, I have to leave this place tomorrow, but the biggest issue is... how am I supposed to survive tonight? Will that boy appear again?

“17th June: No way, I need to leave, I need to go. Last night, the boy has returned and asked me to join him in a game of hide-and-seek! He stayed in my room and ran about. Have I lost my mind? Why did I promise to play with him earlier? I cannot stay here anymore. Even if the hospital forbade me from leaving, I will find a way out. If I stay here any longer, they will eventually claim my life!

“17th June: What do I do? What do I do? I think I’ve finally lost it! When I wanted to leave this afternoon, I stood on the top of the stairs, and I suddenly felt there was someone behind me. I turned and saw the boy. He asked where I was going and demanded to know why I hadn’t played hide-and-seek with him!

“18th June: None of my colleagues have returned my calls, and the leader has already escaped. The hospital refused to let me go, and the medical bills are piling up. Even if I survive, the debt will crush me to my death! However, I don’t care anymore—escaping this place should be my highest priority.

“18th June: When I was running down the stairs, someone pushed me from behind, and it caused my legs to break again. The doctors said that according to the surveillance, I threw myself down the stairs on my own, but I saw it with my own eyes that it was the boy who pushed me! He did not wish for me to leave; I’m telling the truth, but why won’t anyone believe me?”

“1st July: This should be the last entry in my diary. Both of legs are broken, my eyes have been poked blind, my throat burns from the acid, and my digits are bent—there is no way I can run from this place anymore. I know the boy is staying by my side. There is no sickroom next to mine. They are all inside this room with me. I’ve found them, but that means I’ll never be able to leave anymore.”

Reading through the last page, Scissors’ heart was cold. “There is no sickroom next door? They are all inside this room?”

A chill ran down his spine. Scissors refused to stay a second longer in the room, and he pushed the door open.

After rushing out the dresser, Scissors looked toward the door next to him, and his brain instantly drew a blank.

In the glass window of the door, many pale human faces were peering in. “We’ve found you.”

Hiding inside the fully-quarantined hospital room, reading the horror-filled diary that was left behind by the victim, and having the terror described in the dairy appeared right before his eyes the moment he closed the diary, Scissors could not keep up his pretension anymore. He believed that anyone would have lost their mind in a situation like that.

The small window on the door was crowded with multiple pale faces, and even through the door, Scissors could clearly see the expression that these human faces were wearing.

“They’re all looking at me!” Scissors had trouble breathing, it was as if a pair of cold hands had reached into his chest and squeezed on his windpipe. Energy left his body, and he realized that it was very difficult to make the smallest movement.

“Found you.” That creepy voice echoed in his ears once more. Scissors’ legs were quivering. His entire focus was distracted by the faces outside the door, to the extent that it took him a long time to realize that the voice that he heard earlier did not seem to come from outside the door. Fear seared his every nerve like a flash of lighting. Scissors’ eyes bulged out of their sockets, and he almost instinctively turned to look behind him.

Squatting inside the dresser that he had been hiding in earlier was a man in a patient’s garb. The man was not tall, and he had casts on both of his legs. His left eye had been poked through by a pencil, his nose was broken, and his ten fingers were hidden inside his sleeves. Scissors’ footprints and the blood that dripped from his scissors could be found on his patient’s garb. Obviously, the man had been ‘hiding’ inside the dresser.

“Found you.” The tone was robotic and detached, sounding more like a puppet than a person. The expression on his face was very unnatural; he was happy with some measure of excitement like a child who had been given a new toy to play with.

The ghost had been staying inside the dresser. Thinking back to the time that he had been spent inside the dresser, Scissors' body was covered in goosebumps. The 'patient' who wrote the diary appeared before his eyes, but the man should have died long ago.

Scissors stood between the owner of the diary and the sickroom's door. He was stuck between a rock and a hard place.

"Calm down, do not panic. You've watched more than ten horror films and played more than ten horror games before coming here. You've done all the preparation you could, so there has to be a solution to this problem." His brain turned quickly, but he could not find any inspiration from either horror movies or games. This was because there was not a scene in those films where the main character was forced to choose between a ghost and a group of ghosts.

The cold sweat on his forehead kept falling, and his heart could not stop racing. "There's a ghost behind me, and a bunch of ghosts in front of me. Normally, it should be safer by staying inside the room, but if I don't escape from this room, it'll be a slow death, slowly losing my autonomy until I'm unable to seek death even if that is your wish. At least, that was the destiny of the diary's owner. His eyes were poked blind, his legs were irreparably broken, and in the end, he could only stay behind to play with the rest of the ghosts here forever."

Considering the possibility that the fate described in the diary could befall him, Scissors shivered involuntarily. "Since I still have my mobility, I need to try my best to escape."

His rising chest slowly returned to normal. He held his breath and turned to look at the window on the door. "There's no choice! I'll have to fight them! I'll cut my way to the third floor and jump out of this place from the window!"

(B oxnovel.c om) Scissors felt like he had chosen the best solution considering the despairing options that he was given. He gripped the scissors, and with the 'patients' watching, he suddenly roared and charged toward the door. Just as he made his move, something else happened coincidentally; footsteps came from the other side of the corridor. The footsteps seemed to come from the safety corridor on the second floor, and it sounded disorderly like there was more than one person running down the corridor.

His sudden scream spooked the other party that was rushing his way. When he reached the door of the sickroom, Scissors happened to hear the voice of a middle-aged man coming down the corridor from about six to seven meters away. “F*ck! The ghost is here! Go back! Go back!”

The human faces on the window dispersed immediately. Scissors abandoned his caution. He charged out of the room, waving his scissors wildly as he made a beeline toward the third floor. On his arms, legs, and shoulders, he felt like there were several hands reaching out to grab him at the same time!

“Let me go!” He aimed the scissors in his hand at the bag that he was holding. He poked through it, and something inside the bag was pierced. A large amount of reddish-black liquid burst out from within. Like a maddened patient, he waved the blood inside the bag around, splashing all over his body and the space around him.

As he showered the liquid around him, he laughed madly. He might not have lost his mind for real, but in terms of presence, Scissors had managed to hold the ‘patients’ who wanted to play hide-and-seek back.

After pouring out the blood, Scissors did not spot for a second and charged toward the third floor. However, when he reached the third floor, something even more despairing was waiting for him. The windows on the third floor were not fitted with anti-theft webbing but were all sealed by wooden boards.

It would take plenty of time to remove the wooden boards, time that the monsters in the hospital would not have given Scissors. “Once I stop, the monsters will definitely come to harm me. They will come up with all sorts of method to have me stay and play the game with them. If I resist, I will end up in the same situation as the patient whose eyes were blinded and whose legs were broken.”

Scissors forced himself to calm down. He looked behind him at the floor that was splattered with blood. The hospital looked a lot creepier than when he arrived, but most of the new decoration had been done by his own hands.

“I wonder if the blood of a black dog has its uses or not? Some time ago, I saw someone on the forum asking for help after being haunted by a ghost. He stood inside the toilet, summoning a spirit through a mirror, and some expert in the comments said that a black dog's blood has the effect of hampering evil spirits..."

Pa!

The sound coming from downstairs caused Scissors' heart to freeze. He turned to the stairs and saw footprints appearing on the pool of black dog's blood that had not congealed. There were only footprints and no people attached to them, so it was clear who these footprints belonged to.

"Thankfully, I still have other trump cards." Scissors tried to console himself. He dragged his bag and ran down the corridor, deeper into the hospital. "The windows in all the sickrooms have been sealed up, but I wonder if that is the case for the storeroom and toilet. They might have forgotten about places like that."

Harboring one last shred of hope in his heart, Scissors crawled into the toilet that was at the end of the corridor. Once he walked into the toilet though, he was greeted with a strange scene. Five of the cubicle doors were closed, but four of them showed that they were occupied!

Stop toying with me! Scissors screamed inside his heart. He raised his head to look at the window inside the toilet, and a new flame of hope ignited in his heart. The window in the toilet was not fully sealed. Someone else had probably tried to escape from this place before, and they had already peeled down two of the wooden boards. "After removing another wooden board, the space should be large enough for me to squeeze through!"

Running toward the window, he planned to use the large scissors in his hand to yank the wooden board out, but the ghosts inside the hospital appeared like they were purposely toying with him. Suddenly, the echoes of running footsteps came from the corridor—they were quickly approaching.

"I need to move fast!" Every single second mattered. Scissors put every ounce of his strength into his deconstruction. He paid his full focus on the window, so he did not expect the toilet's door to be knocked down in just a few seconds. The loud bang caused his heart and his entire body to shake. Weak in his fingers, the large scissors that were sitting between the wooden board and the window slipped through his grasp and slid through the window!

"What the f*ck!" His only weapon had fallen outside of the hospital.

The stunned Scissors stood where he was for almost a full second. Then, he grabbed his bag and slithered into the only cubicle that was not locked. He felt the immense urge to pound his chest, but considering that the sound it made might attract the attention of the ghosts, he resisted it.

“It’s over now! The scissors have left this place, but I’m still inside! If I’d known this would happen, I never would have given myself this nickname!”

Gritting his teeth, the muscles of his body was tense. Scissors covered his mouth and nose, afraid to breathe too loudly.

He chanted inside his mind madly, Please don’t discover me, please don’t discover me!

However, when he looked down, the despair in his heart only grew. Earlier, when he was showering the corridor with a black dog’s blood, it had landed on his body as well. Therefore, he left a bloody footprint with every step. His trail had been completely exposed. As long as the ghosts were not blind, they would definitely find him.

“This is completely different from my expectation! What did I do wrong?” His face was blanched. Scissors had completely given up; he was now just waiting for death to arrive. “Unfortunately, I failed to locate my elder brother...”

He hid inside the toilet cubicle for several minutes, but even so, no one came to get him.

“They failed to discover me? But that’s impossible. The footprints that I inadvertently left pointed to the fact that I’m hiding inside this cubicle. Even an idiot would know that I’m hiding here.” Scissors nudged his body slightly forward. He wanted to open the door, but once his fingers landed on the cubicle door, he immediately bounced back. “No wait, they are probably just outside the door! Once I open the door, several faces will squeeze inside the cubicle. They’re just waiting for me to surrender and open the door.

“Yes, that has to be it. I cannot leave; I’ll just wait here. If that can earn me another second, then so be it!” Scissors maintained his posture to the best of his ability, not even daring to move his head. “As long as I cannot see them, they are not real.”

Black dog’s blood stained his body, but Scissors, holding the old bag with both of his hands, did not feel dirty or disgusted. “The toilet is a common set inside any horror film. It is a very dangerous place, but let me think, have there been any characters that managed to escape from a toilet before?”

He scanned through the films in his mind for a long time, but the longer he thought, the more afraid he became. The toilet in horror films was definitely a death location. He failed to come up with the way to escape, but instead, he was reminded of the few scary scenes inside the toilet from several famous horror films.

“All the doors of the cubicles next to mine are locked, which means that there are definitely people inside them! Damn, that is exactly the plot for one of the ghost stories I’ve seen. In the bathroom at night, a hand reaches into my cubicle, asking me whether I need blue toilet paper or red toilet paper.”

(B oxnovel.c om) Cold sweat slid down his face. He was living the scene inside the horror movie, and the plot that he imagined could happen at any moment!

“What should I do if a hand reaches inside my cubicle asking me which type of toilet paper I want? Tell him I’m actually a girl wearing a boy’s clothes so I’m sitting because I need to? I don’t need any toilet paper? But will the ghost fall for a stupid reason like that?”

Bang!

The toilet’s door was knocked open again, and the sound was much louder than the one before. It sounded like something scarier had entered the room. Scissors immediately stopped his wandering mind. He held his mouth shut, and he was shaking in nervousness.

Bang!

The door of the first cubicle was knocked down by brute force, and Scissors’ heart tightened with that thud. It’s inspecting the cubicles one by one. Please don’t come here, please don’t come here!

Naturally, things did not go the way that he had hoped. All the doors of the previous cubicles were consecutively taken down. In the end, the footstep stopped right outside his own cubicle. God, it is really over this time.

...

A scream floated up from downstairs, and the doctor stopped moving.

He told Chen Ge, who was in front of him, “This place is not right. Why don’t we go back down? It’ll be safer if we stick together.”

“Being together with them is how tragedy will happen. Don’t forget that the smiling man is still downstairs. Perhaps it was him who reached out to harm the other passengers.” Chen Ge came to the highest floor, and under the doctor’s quivering gaze, he removed the hammer from his backpack and broke down the door that led to the roof.

“You... look like you are very familiar with this place. Have you been here before?” the doctor asked carefully.

“I have an employee that lives in Li Wan City, so I’ve actually been here before. Even though the blood fog has covered up the city, the general structure of the buildings hasn’t changed.” Chen Ge climbed onto the roof.

“Your employee?”

“Yes, I’m a prop maker at a theme park. This hammer here is one of my creations. It looks scary, but it’s more style than substance.” Chen Ge walked directly toward the water tank. He opened all of them and failed to discover the phone spirit’s body. “We should still be residing in the real world.”

The ‘door’ had gone out of control, and the blood fog from behind the door floated out to slowly consume this small town. Probably after some time, Li Wan City would be completely taken over and transformed by this blood fog, becoming a link between the real world and the world behind the door.

“What are you looking at?” The doctor walked forward to join him.

“I wanted to check if there’s any obvious sign of danger around us, but the fog is too thick for me to see anything.” Chen Ge came up with a random excuse. “Let’s go back down.”

Returning to the ground floor, the bus was still where it had been, but none of the passengers could be seen.

“There should be something inside the building, but we were lucky enough to have not run into it.” The doctor’s heart was shaking. He stood next to Chen Ge, and after a moment’s hesitation, he opened his lips to say, “Actually, I’ve come to this place before. The blood fog...”

“We’ll continue this conversation later. I think I heard screaming coming from that way.” With his heightened senses, Chen Ge grabbed his backpack and travel bag before running down the street.

“Hey, be careful!” The doctor’s advice fell on deaf ears. Unable to do anything else, the doctor chose to continue trailing behind Chen Ge. Running down the street, Chen Ge came across a vague shape waving at him from a junction, but the shape was facing away from him.

“Finally found a local.” He jogged faster, but the waving silhouette slowly disappeared into the fog. Chen Ge was unwilling to let the ‘person’ go so easily. He chased after it for a distance before finally stopping when he passed a hospital.

“Why is this man lying here?” Chen Ge came across the drunkard shaking spastically outside the hospital with white foam on his lips. It looked like he was about to leave the world soon.

“It appears like he was given a great shock.” The doctor shook his head. “I’m a physician, and this is not my field of expertise. I’ll try my best, but it’ll depend on his luck whether he’ll wake up or not.”

“Hold this.” Chen Ge passed the backpack to the doctor. “I have more experience with this.”

He unbuttoned the drunkard’s collar and loosened his belt. He leaned the drunkard’s head back so that he was lying flat on the ground. Then he massaged the man’s temples in a steady rhythm, and that was followed by a steady press on his chest. There was no flaw to his resuscitation technique; it was as standardized as if it was copied directly from the textbook.

3 minutes later, the drunkard slowly recovered. He did not scream when Chen Ge’s face came into his eyes, but after realizing where he was, he started to get nervous. He pointed in a direction and said, “Don’t go into that house. There’s a smiling human-faced dog in there—it’s a bloody curse.”

“Don’t worry, let me send you back to the bus.”

Chen Ge wanted to support the drunkard, but the man reached out to grip Chen Ge instead. “We cannot go back! There’s a mop ghost in that building and a hanging ghost in the staircase! We cannot go back!”

“There are so many ghosts here?”

“Yes! I’m not lying to you! Now I suspect there is at least one ghost story hiding inside each building. In other words, there is at least a ghost inside each of the buildings here!” The drunkard’s body was shivering.

“A ghost inside each building? Doesn’t that mean each of the buildings can be turned into an isolated horror set?” Flash crossed Chen Ge’s eyes. He scanned the buildings around him, and the expression was different from when he first arrived.

“I guess you can see it that way.” The drunkard had no idea what Chen Ge was thinking. “Oh, and this hospital next to us. Do not enter it. I heard several screams coming out of it earlier!”

“Screams coming out from the hospital? But the iron gate is locked, and the surrounding windows are all installed with anti-theft webbing. People from the outside would not have been able to gain entry.” The doctor was afraid that Chen Ge might commit to some crazy decision, so he stepped forth to say, “Yin energy is often gathered in locations like hospitals. After all, it is the location where death is an everyday thing. I suggest we stay away from it.”

“You have a point.” Seeing the hospital, Chen Ge was reminded of the four-star hospital-themed scenario in Eastern Jiujiang, and from his previous experience, hospitals were indeed not lively places. “Then, we’ll come back later. We’ll go to other places first. Actually, I’m quite interested in that smiling dog.”

“That doesn’t mean that we should go there! Did you hear what I said earlier? Do you think I was joking? You have no idea what I’ve been through!” The drunkard struggled and, in the process, pushed Chen Ge away. “Please listen to me. Do not go there. When you come across that human-faced dog, it’ll be too late for regrets!”

“Is the human-faced dog a dog or a human? Can you give me a more detailed description about his appearance?”

It was obvious that Chen Ge was not grasping the message that the drunkard was trying to impart, and this caused the drunkard to stomp the ground angrily. “Let’s just return to the bus. It’s not safe here. Every building here is hiding a ghost. I’m not lying to you!”

“I know you’re not lying.” Chen Ge was about to say something else when there was a crisp sound interrupting his words. It sounded like someone had dropped something onto the ground next to them.

“The people inside the hospital have discovered us!” The drunkard jumped up from the ground immediately, and his chest rose violently—his reaction was perfectly that of a frightened house cat. “We need to leave this place immediately!”

“Calm down, the closer we are to danger, the more we need to stave off the panic.” Chen Ge walked toward the origin of the sound. The doctor followed closely behind him. The drunkard did not have the courage to stay there alone, so he could only follow with an unwilling expression on his face. Walking through the fog, Chen Ge ended up at the other side of the hospital, and he saw a pair of bloodied scissors lying on the ground.

“Isn’t this that crazed man’s weapon? Why’s it here?” Chen Ge looked up the building with Yin Yang Vision. The wooden boards for one of the windows on the third floor were shaking. “Is he hiding inside the hospital? But why would he toss out the scissors? Isn’t this his weapon? Even if it’s to ask for help, wouldn’t it make more sense to toss out something else?”

Chen Ge was confused by Scissors’ action. He kept the scissors for himself and returned to the front door of the hospital.

“Let’s go before it is too late. I don’t want to get stuck here.” The drunkard squeezed next to the door. “Earlier, I forgot to tell you about another ghost that I saw. Even the streets here aren’t safe. When you cross a junction, there will be a ghost waving at you. He’ll keep on following you, as he adopts your facial feature. When he appears, you’ll see how you look like when you’re dead.”

The drunkard tried his best to persuade Chen Ge to change his mind, but it did not affect the latter at all as he tried to wiggle the iron gate of the hospital alone.

“What is he doing?” The drunkard touched the doctor’s arm.

“Perhaps he’s if to see whether the iron gate is sturdy enough to hold the ghost inside the hospital in,” the doctor guessed with a bitter smile. He also had trouble understanding what Chen Ge was doing.

“Wait, do you guys still think I’m rambling in a drunken haze? Do you think what I saw earlier was part of my drunken imagination?” The drunkard grabbed the doctor’s shoulders with both hands. “I’m not lying to you, I swear! Please trust me! I’m trying to save you here! Every building here is home to at least one ghost!”

His emotion was running wild. He turned toward Chen Ge and tried to forcibly lead the man away. “Stay away from that door! You’ll get pulled in if you get too close!”

The drunkard had just finished when he saw the sunny looking young man take out a scary-looking large hammer from his backpack. The four eyes met, and the drunkard's eyelids twitched.

"You can tell me the rest after we get into this place." Chen Ge raised the hammer high and slammed it down on the lock.

Bang!

Due to the oppressive presence of the blood fog, the sound did not echo far into the distance. Knocking at the same spot three times, Chen Ge finally got the lock to break. "Stick close to me. If you wander too far, I might not be able to guarantee your safety."

When the doctor heard Chen Ge say that, he started to follow without much hesitation.

"Hey! What's going on? Why are you carrying a hammer with you when you're just going to ride on a bus?" The drunkard held the doctor back by his shoulders. "Have you two been to this place in the past?"

"He used to make props for a theme park, so isn't it perfectly normal for him to carry a hammer on him?" The doctor rattled off the same excuse that Chen Ge had given him earlier to the drunkard.

"A prop maker?" When the drunkard was trying to tie up the relationship between a hammer and a theme park, Chen Ge and the doctor had already entered the hospital. "Hey, wait for me!"

Standing on the first floor, Chen Ge activated the recorder, held both bags in one hand, and carried Doctor Skull Cracker's hammer in the other. The sharp edge of the hammer elicited a creepy sound as it ground against the hospital floor. Chen Ge narrowed his eyes to take a better look as he stared down the corridor on the left.

"Did you discover anything?" The doctor seemed to know it was very dangerous there and stuck close to Chen Ge.

"A few visitors have recently been to this hospital." Chen Ge pointed at the footprints on the ground. "Due to the heavy rain from earlier, most of the passengers on our bus were drenched. So, these footprints must have been left behind by them. Then, you take a closer look at the size and shape of these footprints. Four large ones and one small one. So, they should belong to the family of three and the madman who called himself Scissors."

Chen Ge's observation was precise and accurate. "All the footprints pointed to the left side, so they must have entered the left corridor."

"Jesus Christ! You sure have amazing eyesight! How can you see these things so clearly even though it's practically pitch black in here?" The drunkard had a renewed admiration toward Chen Ge.

"Follow me." Chen Ge entered the left corridor. He placed the white cat on his shoulder and took out his mobile to activate the flashlight function. "There are sickrooms lining both sides of the corridor. The doors are left ajar, so I suspect that something might come out from them at any moment. Be cautious of everything."

"Big brother, please don't scare me."

"I'm not trying to scare you; I'm just telling you the truth." Chen Ge stooped lower. "Come and take a look at these footprints. At the start of the corridor, they were evenly spaced, but after crossing the third and fourth sickroom, the footsteps started to overlap and randomize. This means that something unexpected happened to them when they were passing the third and fourth sickroom. They probably stopped here for a while."

"In other words, you're trying to say that there might be something inside the third or fourth sickroom?" The doctor grasped Chen Ge's intention instantly.

"There's a great possibility of that, but that does not preclude other possibilities. Just be more careful when you're crossing these two sickrooms." Chen Ge looked at the two doors that had been left half-ajar. Through the dark gap, it felt like some scary monsters would poke their head out at any time.

"Try to keep up and make sure you don't get left behind." Chen Ge dragged the hammer and walked down the corridor. This place was eerily quiet. When they passed the first and second room, Chen Ge did not notice anything out of place. However, when he got near the third sickroom, the white cat on his shoulder meowed and curled behind his neck.

At almost the exact moment when the white cat gave him the warning, Chen Ge raised the hammer in his hand and slammed into the half-open door of the third sickroom without any hesitation. The door swung heavily from the force and slammed into the wall.

Bang!

It exposed the shadow who was originally hiding behind the door. He was wearing a patient's garb. He had ashen skin, and underneath his pair of messy bangs was a pair of stunned eyes. He froze where he was, holding someone's medical history in his hands. The uneven handwriting on it read 'Come and find me.'

"Why are you hiding here? Are trying to play a game with me?" Chen Ge revealed an interested smile. He needed to come up with more games to increase the playability of his Haunted House to attract more visitors.

The patient behind the door seemed to have noticed something. He wanted to drop the medical history in his hand, but Chen Ge was not going to give him the chance. He burst into the room, and to prevent the doctor and the drunkard from seeing what he was up to, he even closed the door after he charged past it.

The doctor and the drunkard were frozen solid on the corridor and had no idea what happened. Their attention had been too enraptured by the loud bang when the hammer slammed against the door.

"Where did he go?"

"I don't know, I think he was dragged into that sickroom?"

"Are you sure? How come it appears like he charged into it willingly?"

Static noises came out from the sickroom, and ten seconds later, Chen Ge walked out from the room with a satisfied smile, holding a comic in his hands.

"This hospital is quite dangerous, so you have to be careful." Chen Ge put the comic away and continued to walk deeper into the corridor alone, grumbling about something that neither the doctor nor the drunkard understood. "So, a game of hide-and-seek? This is quite interesting. Fine, I accept your challenge! I'll definitely find all of you!"

The group stopped moving when they came to the second floor. The area before the first room right after they turned out of the staircase was splattered with fresh flood. Even a crime scene would not have looked this bloody.

The doctor frowned. He was a professional, and he was feeling uncomfortable by the sight. The drunkard, on the other hand, had his hand over his mouth because he had started to dry heave.

“The ghosts in this hospital only like to play games, and they normally wouldn’t injure people, so why is there so much blood in the corridor?” Chen Ge bent down to study the blood pattern. He looked exactly like an experienced forensic doctor. “The blood splatter has no uniformity to it at all, and there is too much. No matter which part of the body was injured, there is no way for one to create a crime scene like this.”

Chen Ge brushed the blood with his pinkie, and he put it under his nostrils after rubbing it on his fingers. “This does not smell like human blood.”

When he said that, the doctor and the drunkard behind him reeled from fear. How familiar did one have to be with human blood to be able to make an identification on the spot like that?

Dragging the hammer, Chen Ge very naturally walked through the pool of blood. “Don’t be afraid, this was probably set up by someone. I would often do something like this inside the Haunted House.”

Seeing his back, the drunkard and the doctor started to have hesitation of following him.

“There footprints mixed into the blood pool, and they look similar to one of the footprints at the entrance of the hospital. This means that one of the passengers from the bus has been here before.” Chen Ge looked at the bloody footprints on the staircase, and his expression was curious. “It feels like he left these behind on purpose, waiting for us to follow the trail to find him. Will there be a trap waiting for us considering how obvious this trail is, or could it be that someone has taken his shoes to lay down this trap for us?”

Chen Ge was very calm. After giving it some thought, he decided to follow the footsteps up to the third floor. After the footprints got to the third floor, they ran directly into the toilet. The footprints went only one way—there was entry and no exit. In other words, an idiot would be able to tell that the owner of the footprints should still be hiding inside the toilet.

“This is too obvious; I suspect this is really a trap. The two of you should wait out here.” Chen Ge gripped the hammer and entered the third-floor toilet alone. He slammed the doors of the front few cubicles open, but there was nothing inside them.

“The footprints disappeared into the last cubicle, and the scissors fell from the third-floor toilet.” Chen Ge was on high alert. He did not break the door of the last cubicle directly but crawled on the wall of the cubicle next door and peered inside.

Scissors, who was covered in blood, gripped the old bag tightly. He was collapsed inside the last cubicle with his hands tightly squeezed over his mouth and nose, afraid to make even the smallest voice. The man before Chen Ge was so different from the Scissors that he had met on the bus.

“This man’s courage is small to an unimaginable level, but he dared to come to Li Wan City for the sake of his older brother. With enough training, he will be incredibly useful.” A trace of admiration flashed through Chen Ge’s eyes. He slowly retreated from the wall and out of the cubicle. He did not expose Scissors but knocked lightly on the door of the last cubicle. “Is someone in there? I’m a passenger from the bus earlier, and I saw a pair of scissors drop down from the window earlier, so I came to see if there’s anyone here.”

When the familiar voice entered the cubicle, to Scissors, who thought it was already over, the voice was like the first ray of a new spring. It pushed back the fog and melted the frozen river.

Strange noises came from inside the cubicle, and Chen Ge recognized that as Scissors smoothing down his clothes and putting on his ‘appearance’. He did not disturb the man. “Whether you are a fellow passenger or not, I’m sorry to have interrupted you at this sensitive moment.”

Chen Ge walked backward, purposely letting Scissors hear that he was retreating. Moments later, the door was pushed open, and an insidious voice came from within. “You managed to find me?”

The bloodied Scissors walked out from the cubicle. He carried a maddened smile on his otherwise expressionless face. He kept up the habit of licking the wound on his cheek even though he could barely suppress the grimace of pain that came from it. “We’d better leave this place. There are many strange things inside this hospital. You should have seen the blood splatter on the second floor, right? That was my doing when I cut a bloody path through the crowd of ghosts that surrounded me.”

His eyes were rolling with anger, his expression scary. Chen Ge looked at the Scissors before him, and he had a hard time reconciling this man with the weak and helpless little soul that he had seen inside the cubicle earlier.

“Stop staring into my eyes, it’s very dangerous.” Scissors grabbed the bag with one hand and issued a cruel laugh. Perhaps because he had been squatting too long inside the cubicle, his legs were wobbly like noodles, and it gave him a limping gait while he walked.

“I understand. We’d better leave this place then.” Chen Ge did not move forward to help Scissors. ‘Murderers’ were often lone wolf, and lone wolves did not need help. “Here. Your scissors. I found them outside the hospital.”

Taking back his weapon, Scissors’ gaze sharpened even more. “Very good. If not for the fact that the cunning ghosts caused me to lose my scissors during the last struggle, they definitely would have regretted running into me.”

“Understood, I believe you.” Chen Ge dragged the hammer and walked out the toilet. It grated against the floor and made a spine-chilling noise. “Actually, we are not so different. We both have a past that we do not wish to bring up, and I’m also here to find the two most important individuals in my life.”

Chen Ge's words resonated greatly with Scissors. He had grown up at an orphanage. He was a loner that preferred his own company, and the only friend that he had ever had was his older brother. When he was bullied, when he was treated unfairly, when he could not find the meaning to live caught in a web of pain and despair, his elder brother would step forth to lend him a hand, to shield him from the ravages of life.

For Scissors, his older brother was the most special person in his life, and it was due to the connection that they shared that after his older brother disappeared, Scissors would stop at nothing to come and investigate.

Looking at Chen Ge, who was wandering away, Scissors was reminded of how Chen Ge had appeared when he was forced into the corner by those things inside the hospital, when he was at the brink of giving up. That warm and kind voice had pulled him up from hell right into heaven. It was such a roller-coaster ride of emotions. Even though Scissors did not voice it out, internally, his heart was gushing with appreciation.

Due to the appearance that he needed to maintain, he did not openly thank Chen Ge, but he made a promise to himself that should he survive this ordeal, he would stop at nothing to repay the man's kindness.

Those who appeared distant on the surface often had a blazing heart. Since their warmth was normally encased within a thick layer of ice, only when that layer of ice cracked would they reveal their real emotions.

Licking the wound of his face lightly, Scissors turned around to spit out the black dog's blood on his lips. He followed behind Chen Ge, and for a moment, he saw his older brother's shadow overlap over his savior.

I should calm down; he still might be a real murderer. It'll be better if I don't stay too close to him, but I should be there to lend a hand should he get into any trouble.

Scissors' impression of Chen Ge had changed drastically. He silently moved to follow behind Chen Ge.

Realizing that Scissors had become more honest, Chen Ge's lips curled into a grin. From his perspective, Scissors was quite a hard to find talent. It was fine that he was in reality a coward—the most important thing was that he had the courage and determination to put everything on the line should the situation call for it.

Chen Ge turned his head around to ask Scissors, “By the way, I spotted different types of footprints downstairs. Other than yourself, there should be other passengers trapped inside this hospital. Did you see them earlier?”

“I came in here alone.” Scissors grumbled internally, What is this about footprints?

When he entered the hospital, he had not paid attention to that at all, but since Chen Ge had brought it up, to maintain his appearance, he could only follow the thread of conversation. “I’ve noticed the footprints that you mentioned... Yes, if I’m not mistaken, when I was caught in a deathly bout with the monsters on the third floor, I heard echoes of footsteps coming from the second-floor security corridor. So, they might have run down that direction earlier.”

Chen Ge nodded as he stared at Scissors, giving him a once-over.

“What are you looking at?” Scissors quivered under Chen Ge’s incisive gaze.

“The pair of red high heels on the bus disappeared. I remember distinctly that there were two echoes of footsteps whenever you moved, so that thing should be following you.” The other reason Chen Ge valued Scissors was due to the pair of red high heels. Even the smiling man had to be cautious around the pair of heels, which was a sign that it was at the very least a Red Specter.

“When I entered the left corridor, the sound disappeared. She probably sensed the danger and escaped.” Scissors lifted the pair of scissors in his hand, staring at the sharp edge of the blade. “It’s obvious that she was afraid. She was a coward, too frightened of my presence.”

Chen Ge really wanted to lurch forward to clamp his hand over Scissors' lips. There should be a limit to the act that he was putting on. If his words fell into the ears of the pair of red high heels, he probably would not even know how he died.

"Alright then, consider I've not asked that question. Let's go find the other passengers first." Chen Ge led Scissors out of the toilet. The drunkard and the doctor were waiting for them in the corridor. When the two of them saw Scissors, who was covered in blood, they were so scared that they did not dare move one step closer to the supposed serial killer. In their eyes, Scissors' whole persona fitted their traditional idea of a murderer perfectly. He was covered in blood and carried a crazed smile on his face. He partook in the pleasure of pain as if only pain and murder could give him the only sense of joy in his life.

"Somehow it feels like I've fallen into the wolves' den." The drunkard stood at the edge of the group alone. His face was blanched and staring at the blood trail underneath his feet; he felt like vomiting. Of everyone that he had come across so far, he was the only one who appeared relatively like a normal person.

"You fought the monsters alone for so long—you must be drained. Leave the clean-up work to me then." Chen Ge very kindly helped find an excuse for Scissors before he started to explore the rooms one by one.

The hospital was only three stories tall; it was not that big, but since Chen Ge's exploration was detailed, they took half an hour before they managed to finish a tour of the place. They found the footprints for the family of three and the pair of shoes for a boy at the second-floor security corridor. The footprints trailed down the security corridor, heading toward the other side of the hospital.

The family of three happened to cross Chen Ge's group by. When Chen Ge crashed through the door, they slipped down the stairs on the other side of the hospital and slithered away.

"These few people sure are something else. We came to save them, but they fled without even leaving a message for us. They only care of themselves, how selfish can they be?" The drunkard placed himself in the shoes of Chen Ge. He felt like if he was Chen Ge, he would not have been such a busybody.

"This is hardly their fault. It is simply human nature to choose to escape when faced with fear.”

“You sure have an open-minded attitude about everything.” The drunkard thought that Chen Ge had a positive outlook on life. Following their interaction, he realized that Chen Ge was a good ol’ man with no cunning in his heart. “Since the people that we’re here to save have already left, isn’t it time for us to leave this place as well?”

“There’s no need to hurry. We’ve circled around the hospital at least once already, and there are three locations that we need to pay close attention to.” Chen Ge stood where he was to think for a while. “In the first room on the left after turning up the stairs on the second floor, there’s a diary. It recorded how a patient was forced to the brink of insanity by the ghosts inside the hospital before becoming a ghost himself. That should not be an isolated case.”

Naturally, Chen Ge knew that was not an isolated case. The poor spirit whose legs were encased in plaster and had his eye poked blind was currently residing inside Yan Danian’s comic. With the guidance from Scissors, he had rushed toward the dresser once he stepped into the sickroom, and it did not take long for Chen Ge to locate the spirit that possessed the diary.

“But what does that have to do with us?” The drunkard had a bad feeling about the hospital. It felt like it was more dangerous than the ‘doghouse’ that he had stayed in earlier.

“If the patient decides to play the game of hide-and-seek, they will be trapped inside the hospital, becoming a part of the game after they die. However, have you ever considered this question—who was the first person who started this game of hide-and-seek?” Chen Ge turned to look at the other passengers. “There has to be a person who came up with the idea of the game, only then would the string of ghost patients follow.”

The few passengers looked at one another; this question naturally had not crossed their mind before. Chen Ge gave up completely on asking for their opinions. The perspectives that they adopted were completely different. The way that they viewed this strange world was too different to reconcile.

“Like I said earlier, there are three locations inside this hospital worth noting. The first location is the room where the diary was found, and the second room will be the filing room. Just now, I’ve looked through the information regarding the problematic sickroom roughly, and I noticed something weird. Basically, any patient that stayed in that room would encounter a less than peaceful ending, and because of that reason, that sickroom—Room 201—became the room that should be avoided among the doctors and nurses.”

Ignoring the response of the other people, Chen Ge continued his analysis. “The files recorded very clearly that the first case in Room 201 happened five years ago, and coincidentally enough, it was within that same year that this private hospital accepted a patient that was transferred over from another hospital.”

He took out a case file from his backpack and it was stained dirty. Most of the content could not be read anymore, and the name of the patient’s original hospital was conveniently smudged. Only the term ‘Hai’ could be roughly discerned.

“Do you know any hospital that has this character in its name?” Chen Ge turned to look at the burn unit doctor.

The good doctor shook his head. “It’s too difficult to tell with just one character. This could be many things.”

“The last time we took the bus, there were a few female patients wearing hospital gowns. Do you remember that?” Chen Ge stared at the doctor.

“I do.” With the reminder from Chen Ge, it got the doctor’s brain moving. “There appeared to be a Hai character on their patient’s gowns as well.”

“You’re right.” When Chen Ge first saw the female patients, he had immediately suspected they were related to the other four-star Trial Mission in Eastern Jiujiang—the Cursed Hospital. Now, with the strange happenings at this hospital, it was also probably to do with the patient that was suspected to have transferred over from the cursed hospital. In other words, the game of hide-and-seek was a continuation of some kind of curse at the four-star scenario.

This discovery might not mean anything to anyone else, but it was a key piece of information for Chen Ge. A three-star scenario and a four-star scenario could not have been more different, and any clue would be immensely important.

“But even if we know that this situation might be related to that hospital, it does not provide any help to get us out of Li Wan City.” The drunkard was the most realistic. He just wanted to leave this place with his life intact.

“I think you’ll change your mind after giving this a read.” Chen Ge turned the file to its last page. It contained the information of the transferred patient. The patient who arrived from the other hospital was a child around six and a half years old. The doctor’s diagnosis was that he suffered from rabies. Whenever he acted up, he needed to be tied to the bed. He would scream in extreme pain and contort his body into impossible angles.

However, even when he was not ravaged by sickness, the boy’s condition did not appear normal. He would say very weird things like telling people around him that he was being chased by something incredibly scary. He would tell them that he must not be found by the thing, and for that sake, he had to make sure that he hid himself very well.

Of course, if that was the end of the story, the doctors would not have isolated his case file from the rest. After the boy’s death, stranger things started to happen.

First, it was the disappearance of the boy’s body from the morgue. Even now, it had not been found. Then it was the nurses who worked the night shift claiming that they would often see the boy running through the hospital corridors at night. Then strange words would start appearing in printed materials, words like—come and find me.

Initially, these incidents were not paid serious attention to by the hospital until a worker died inside the morgue. No one knew why he would wander to the morgue at midnight. However, the police found a medical history sheet stuck to the back of the body, and written on the back of the piece of paper were the words ‘come and find me’. They were written unevenly like they came from the hands of a child.

After the death of the worker, a tale spread within the hospital. Anyone who had that paper stuck on their back would need to play the fatal game of hide-and-seek with the child. The file had probably been sealed around that time. The file did not describe the action taken by the hospital, and that was pretty much all the information the file could provide on the child.

Closing the file, Chen Ge’s gaze swept the rest of the group. “Some of you have had the paper stuck on you before. If we do not undo this curse, you’ll still be in danger even after you leave Li Wan City.”

“Then what do you think we should do now?” Scissors started to panic. He distinctly remembered seeing something like that being stuck on his back.

“I say we go to the third location of interest now—the morgue. That was where the worker was found dead and where the boy’s body disappeared from. We should be able to find some useful information there.” Chen Ge patted the white cat on its head and led the way forward holding the hammer. He had only managed to round up two lingering spirits in the hospital, which was quite a disappointment for the man.

“But if we are still unable to find the method to undo the curse at the morgue...” Scissors’ expression was shifting—he was having difficulty holding onto his disguise.

“Since this might be dangerous, I suggest we stick together and see how things unfold first,” Chen Ge told Scissors. “I’m currently staying at the Western Jiujiang’s New Century Park. If you have any problem, you can come find me. We should be on the lookout for each other.”

Scissors nodded slightly. He repeated Chen Ge’s address inside his mind, committing it to memory.

“Okay, let’s go take a look now.” The group went back to the first floor and entered the security corridor, which was on the right wing of the hospital. The morgue was in the basement. When Chen Ge led the group to the entrance, he suddenly stopped. The lock that was supposed to be on the door was lying on the ground. The steel door was left half-open like something had just entered it earlier.

“The doors to the morgue are normally close,” the doctor whispered to Chen Ge. “There should be something inside, be careful.”

“Okay, stick close to me.” There was no safe space inside the city shrouded in blood fog. Chen Ge did not wish for any accidents to befall his fellow passengers, so he had them follow him closely.

Pushing open the door, the chill swamped them from all sides. Chen Ge studied and memorized the layout of the morgue inside his mind. He realized that he might need to recreate this location for his Haunted House in the future.

“Big brother, do we really need to do something like this?” This was the drunkard’s first visit to a hospital morgue. He gripped the doctor’s arm tightly.

“We can’t be fearful if we want to break the curse.” Chen Ge once stayed the whole night inside a sprawling underground morgue, so this was nothing for him. Walking deeper into the morgue alone, Chen Ge noticed traces of a recent brawl. Many iron platforms where dead bodies were supposed to be placed had been flipped over, and some white clothes littered the ground.

“What happened here?” Chen Ge noticed a few of the white clothes had stains of blood left on them. He laid the clothes according to the shapes, and they eventually combined to form the blood red silhouette of a person.

“It looks like the shape of a six or seven year old boy.” Chen Ge studied the pattern. “It appears like someone pulled up the boy and slammed him against these white clothes, and that caused this blood silhouette to be left behind. But who would do something like that? This boy that I suspect to have escaped from the cursed hospital should be the scariest presence inside this private hospital, the source of the hide-and-seek game. So, who would be powerful enough to assault him like this?”

After more detailed search, Chen Ge found a strange bloody footprint on another white cloth. It appeared to have been left behind by a pair of female heels.

“The pair of red high heels stopped following Scissors because she turned directly to the morgue? She personally dealt with the boy haunting this hospital?” Chen Ge noticed that one of the windows at the back of the morgue was broken, and there were sticky blood vessels that were gyrating around the broken glass. “They left through here?”

Looking at the broken window, Chen Ge realized that he had greatly underestimated the power level of the red high heels. The fact that she was able to deal with the boy so easily meant that she should be quite powerful even among Red Specters.

“It’s unfortunate that I arrived too late. I only found two lingering spirits. Hopefully the red high heels will spare the boy. I still hope to get some information about the four-star scenario from his lips.”

Chapter 641: Black Dog [2 in 1]

Watching the shuddering blood vessels around the window frame and the white clothes nearby that was stained with blood, Chen Ge had the impression that this was a one-sided slaughter. To be able to become the scariest presence at the Li Wan City's hospital, the boy at the very least should be a half Red Specter, but before the red high heels, he was so fragile and weak. The blood on the windowsill and the white clothes should have been left behind by the boy.

"I was wondering why the hospital was so quiet. So, someone dealt with the biggest threat before we arrived." Chen Ge's face was filled with regret, and this caused the three who followed him to frown.

"It's a good thing that they're fighting among themselves! Earlier, when we ran into ghosts, you did not even sigh, but after realizing they're fighting among themselves, you as an outsider appear so dissatisfied." The drunkard could not understand Chen Ge's thoughts at all. He had no idea that Chen Ge had already seen this place as his property. At least before Yan Danian's comic pages were filled up, he would not allow any of the ghosts to escape.

"The ghosts here aren't evil by nature. Unfortunately, they have fallen under the influence of the evil mastermind. It is out of kindness that I feel like they deserve a better home." Chen Ge looked around some more and confirmed that there were no more spirits in the hospital, so he left with the group.

"Where should we go now?" The drunkard, doctor, and Scissors followed closely behind Chen Ge. They knew that separating was not a good idea, so they decided to just move as a group.

"The smiling man once butchered a whole bus of people, and that ruined the mastermind's plan, so he should share a bad relationship with the mastermind in Li Wan City. The red high heels should be as strong, if not more powerful than the smiling man. Since she harmed a local of Li Wan City, it obviously means that she is not the same camp as the mastermind as well. These two are annoying presences around Eastern Jiujiang. Since they're on the move, they will be able to distract the attention of the mastermind for us," Chen Ge analyzed calmly.

No matter how dire their situation was, he would be able to spin it into a positive outlook like it was them who currently had the upper hand. "There's no need to rush. Why don't we go visit the doghouse that you mentioned earlier? I wish to see for myself this so-called smiling dog."

"You still want to go? If I knew this, I wouldn't have told you about it." The drunkard unwillingly led the way for the group. The 'doghouse' was very close to the hospital. When they neared the building, the expression on the few passengers were completely different. The drunkard was anxious, the doctor was cautious, and Scissors was pretending to be calm. Chen Ge wiggled the hammer in his hand and walked ahead, looking like a boy excited to go on the ride at theme park.

"Is this the place?" Chen Ge pushed open the gate of the courtyard. Before he even stepped into it, the white cat called out. It was acting very nervous, like there was something that it hated greatly residing inside the building.

"Are cats afraid of dogs? But that shouldn't be." Chen Ge patted the white cat's head, trying to calm it down.

"Big brother, you'd better be careful. This monster is very feral. I've run into it once. It was moving with its limbs on the ground like a hunting hound." The drunkard still had more to say, but when he saw Chen Ge already walking into the courtyard, his lips sealed instantly. "This man is too brave for his own good."

Chen Ge actually was more cautious than the group realized. They merely could not see his safety precautions. With protection from Xu Yin and the warning from the white cat, Chen Ge was as protected as he could be.

"There is really a doghouse here, and it is incredibly well made, but..." Chen Ge carried his backpack and stood at the corner of the yard. He studied the doghouse that was radiating the horrible stench. "This size is already big enough for a human being. So, there is a chance that this isn't made for a dog."

"I also felt that way when I first entered this place. The whole house is filled with air-fresheners. It was a place meant for humans, but it was decorated like it was meant for a dog. But the place that was supposed to be for the dog was built for the size of a human being.” The drunkard was rambling. Just the thought of what happened to him earlier caused his body to involuntarily shiver. His mind was buzzing dully like he could collapse at any moment.

For a normal person, having this kind of reaction was totally acceptable. Seeing these reactions from the drunkard, Chen Ge nodded slightly. He was not agreeing with the drunkard per se, but he had finally confirmed that the drunkard should be a normal person.

Chen Ge had been silently observing the passengers from the bus, and so far, the people that he could take off his suspect list, the people that he was sure had no problem were only the drunkard and Scissors.

“It’s fine. If you’re really afraid, just stand together with them.” Chen Ge walked through the yard and felt something itchy on his neck. He reached out to scratch it and realized that he came back with black dog fur in the middle of his palm. It was hard and prickly.

“Where did this come from?” Lifting his head up, Chen Ge narrowed his eyes and saw a man’s face in the window of the second floor. The man was wearing dog’s skin and carried a creepy smile on his face.

This was the first time that Chen Ge had seen a smile like that as well. It did not appear to be humanlike in any way. The musculature involved in that smile was completely different from the pull of the muscle when a human would smile. It caused the whole face to poke forward, looking extremely uneven.

Staring at the human face on the second floor, when it first appeared, Chen Ge’s heart did start to race for a while, but two or three seconds later, he returned to normal. Raising his hand, he waved at the smiling face and returned a smile of his own. “Stay right there and don’t move, I’ll be there to get you in a minute.”

It was supposed to be a man standing on the second floor, but Chen Ge could not get even a sense of a living human from him.

“Li Wan City is so big, and I don’t think I will have the time to look through the buildings one by one.” Chen Ge entered the two-story building. Just as the rest of the group moved to follow him, he raised his palm to say, “Why don’t the rest of you stay outside and wait for me?”

“We should stick together. Now is not the time to act like a hero!” The drunkard knew how powerful or rather how scary the monster was, and he was worried for Chen Ge.

“I guess you’re right, but the space inside the house is rather cramped. Try not to stay too close to me—I’m afraid of accidentally injuring you.” The unexpected reminder from the drunkard comforted Chen Ge. His impression of the man improved greatly, and he swore to try to keep the man alive until the end.

“Understood, we will be sure to not create any trouble for you.” The drunkard glanced at the skull cracker’s hammer that Chen Ge was holding, and he sighed internally—this man before him was definitely one who treated his life with less importance than he should. The group all entered the room. They walked down the small corridor and were about to head upstairs when the sound of a wind chime entered their ears, and the half-open doors slammed shut on their own.

“Damn!” The drunkard and the doctor looked behind them at the same time. Their exit had already been cut off. The few stopped where they were.

Scissors’ face was unnaturally white, and he whispered darkly, “This is the most common scene in a horror movie. The doors close on their own, and not long after this, the ghosts will appear. In fact, they might already be hiding somewhere close by watching us already.”

“This is why I said we shouldn’t rush into things!” The drunkard was panicking. “We should find a room to hide inside first. As long as we stick together, the ghost probably won’t assault the four of us.”

“You have a point.” The doctor nodded in agreement. After the few finished their discussion, they all turned to Chen Ge, wishing to get his approval.

“What are you guys talking about? Why should we go into hiding? If the door is closed, then why don’t we open it?” Chen Ge shook his head slightly. He really had trouble catching up to the thoughts of these passengers.

Hearing Chen Ge’s reply, the drunkard wanted to say something else, but Chen Ge did not give him the chance. He charged to the door and raised the hammer to slam into the door. That created a loud boom that echoed through the entire building. After the door was slammed open, Chen Ge did not stop. He aimed the hits at the hinges until he removed the door from the frame completely.

“Now he won’t be able to close the door even if he wants to.” He kicked the warped door to the side. Dragging the hammer, he walked back to the group. “Don’t just focus on running or hiding—you have to learn to analyze the situation.”

Chen Ge thought that Scissors had quite the immense potential, so he decided to pass down some knowledge to him. “The man that I saw earlier was on the second floor, but since the door on the first floor closed on its own, it probably means that there is more than one ghost in this house. This supposed classic scene from a horror movie can give us plenty of information about the ghosts that we’re dealing with. We need to learn to make use of them to come up with analysis that is beneficial to us.”

Hearing the wind chime that was still going as if there was someone pacing up and down the corridor, Chen Ge turned to look at it and said, “Sometimes, the ghost will try to increase the fear in our heart through the usage of everyday items in our lives. For example, that wind chime. But the solution to that problem is actually very simple.”

Chen Ge walked to the door to remove the wind chime and placed it inside his backpack. After the wind chime was removed, that strange sound disappeared completely.

“It’s that simple.” When Chen Ge said that, both the doctor and the drunkard’s faces were frozen in fear. They both pointed at the space behind Chen Ge.

“Big brother! Behind you! It came out from inside the wind chime!”

Chen Ge turned back to see a face filled with hatred and anger. Interestingly enough, this man’s face was similar to the face that he had seen on the second floor. At the moment, the man’s lower body was trapped inside Chen Ge’s backpack. The upper body tried its best to crawl out, but endless hands reached out from inside Chen Ge’s backpack, holding him into place before roughly pulling the man back into Chen Ge’s backpack.

After the man’s pained spirit disappeared, Chen Ge turned back with a smile, telling the rest of the passengers, “That was merely an illusion. This is the second point that I wish to tell you. Ghosts often rely on tricks of the sight to toss us into self-suspicion.”

The other passengers were silent. Honestly, when the male ghost showed up, they had been afraid, but when they saw the ghost struggling and screaming before it disappeared behind Chen Ge, their scalps were numb, and even the blood in their veins curdled.

“If you’re really that afraid, then just stay on the first floor.” Noticing the air fresheners that littered the ground, Chen Ge did not give the others much time to think as he headed up the stairs alone. The man inside the wind chime looked exactly like the man on the second floor. Chen Ge suspected that the male ghost should be the original owner of the body, but due to some strange reason, the soul of the man and the dog had been swapped, and it was now the dog who was possessing the body of the man.

“This sure is an interesting ghost story.” As the chairperson for the ghost stories society, Chen Ge felt a responsibility to collect all the ghost stories he had come across. After reaching the second floor, he summoned Xu Yin to stick by his side. He was ready for a battle, but the scene that unfolded by his eyes surprised him.

The strange man who was smiling at him from the second floor earlier was now standing in the middle of the second-floor corridor. He was still wearing dog skin and that strange smile on his face. Strangely enough, Chen Ge could not feel any hostility from him—it was just like Chen Ge had met this man before, and more than that, they were old friends.

“He chose to show himself earlier because he spotted me wandering in from outside?” Chen Ge’s alert went up since this was so out of the ordinary. Chen Ge had Xu Yin test the man, but the man did not resist at all. In fact, he looked at Chen Ge with confusion in his eyes like he was asking, ‘Why are you attacking me, aren’t we supposed to be friends?’

“This man used to know me? That’s impossible! This is my first time meeting him, or is it the effect of the title, Specter’s Favored?” Chen Ge walked closer to the man, and the latter did even try to evade. He was very obedient like a tame pet.

“This sure is curious.” Chen Ge was one who was more conducive to persuasion than force. The fact that the man was so pliable and did not even resist any possible attack from Chen Ge confused the heck out of Chen Ge. He tried to use the comic on the man, but it had no effect. The man had the body of a living human, so naturally, he could not be pulled into the comic.

In other words, the man was actually still alive, but he had survived using the soul of a dog. Chen Ge tried to communicate with him, but unfortunately, no communication could be formed.

“What is this man up to?” Chen Ge had Xu Yin look after the man while he walked into the room next door to conduct his exploration. He found something in the room where the man was staying in earlier. One of the walls in the room was full of pictures. It recorded the life story of a man, or rather, a dog.

The start of the pictures recorded a young man torturing various kind of animals. He used all sorts of cruelty, and the pictures were an indelible record of his sin. This continued until one day, he came back with a black puppy. The puppy was surprisingly tenacious; no matter how hard he tortured it, the puppy would manage to survive.

The man saw the potential in the puppy to become a permanent vent to release his stress, so he kept it as his own. While torturing the puppy, the young man did not stop his assault on other animals.

The puppy saw the string of his master’s torture of other animals with his own eyes until he one day grew up. One time, after the man went through another session of cruel torture, he thought that he had finally managed to kill the dog, so he did not chain it back to its doghouse.

That very night, the dying black dog crawled up on his limbs and slithered into the young man’s bedroom through the window.

Chen Ge studied the last few pictures. The black dog used the little remaining energy it had to kill the man, and in the end, both the man and the dog lay in a pool of blood. Then, the black dog collapsed for real. However, when the man sat up from the pool of blood, the expression on his face had already changed to that of a dog.

Seeing the pictures, Chen Ge finally understood why the man would act this way, but there was still one more question that remained unsolved. Why would the dog act so friendly around him?

Going through the pictures again, Chen Ge believed that he had found the answer. When the black puppy first appeared, other than the young man and the puppy, there was also a shadow that looked suspiciously like his own. He inspected the rest of the pictures, and almost every single picture had the shadow’s presence in them somewhere.

The reason the black puppy was able to survive so much torture is because the shadow has been protecting it? The shadow looks just like me so this could explain why the black dog does not have any hostility against me—it has gotten the wrong person! It mistook me for the shadow!

Then a brave speculation entered Chen Ge's mind. Could the shadow really be the younger version of myself? He grew up in isolation, in a completely different manner?

Being mistaken by an outsider could be explained as a coincidence, but even the locals in Li Wan City could make this mistake, which made Chen Ge realize the severity of the problem. The shadow one hundred percent had something to do with him!

Perhaps he really looks like me, but that is merely in terms of looks.

Looking at the pictures on the wall, Chen Ge could see the similarity. He had once rescued a tortured animal before—the white cat on his shoulder was the perfect example. From this angle, he was indeed similar to the shadow, but the way their personality differed could also be seen from how they dealt with the extenuating circumstance.

After saving the white cat, Chen Ge gave it a home at the Haunted House. But after saving the black puppy, the shadow not only did not save it but allowed it to be continuously tortured until it was pushed to the necessary outcome of murdering its own order.

Hatred, pain, despair, and hostility. From the way the shadow aided the black puppy, one could discern his personality.

This thing is too dangerous.

Chen Ge replaced all the pictures and walked out from the room. The man was still squatting on the ground. He tilted his head to the side as he studied Chen Ge. It was as if he had finally noticed something was wrong.

“I should keep this poor soul with me. The shadow can morph into many different shapes and disguises. Perhaps I may be able to use the black dog's help to help me ascertain the real identity of the shadow. If possible, I wish to sit down for a serious chat with that shadow.”

Chen Ge stooped down before the man. Using Yin Yang Vision, he stared into the man's eyes, capturing the soul that was hiding underneath the skin of a man.

After a lengthy persuasion from Chen Ge, the expression on the man’s face slowly changed. Several minutes later, a seriously wounded black dog struggled to claw its way out of the man’s body.

Using the comic, Chen Ge collected the black dog. The moment that happened, the black phone in his pocket vibrated. He took out the phone to take a look. There were, in total, five unread messages.

When the bus charged into the blood fog, Chen Ge had felt the vibration from the black phone, but he did not look at it due to the sensitive situation that he had been in. Currently, he was standing alone on the second floor with no one around him. He could finally read through the black phone without worry. Clicking the screen, Chen Ge's eyes narrowed as he read the messages on screen.

"Congratulations, Specter's Favored, for obtaining a rare ghost—Black Hound. It is made up from ninety percent dog spirit and ten percent human spirit. It was a Specter formed under unique circumstance due to influence from unnatural forces.

"Special power: Mania (Can enter a living human's people to cause said person to lose their mind and turn them into a mindless beast of aggression. This power can only be activated once every seven days, and every usage will contribute to irreversible wound on the Black Hound's spirit."

The first two messages were related to the black dog. Chen Ge was surprised that this 'pet dog' that did not appear so powerful would be given such high praise by the black phone.

"Wait a minute, why would the black phone directly treat the dog as an employee at the Haunted House? I didn't really tame it; all I need was to come into contact with it. Is there a mistake with the black phone? Or when then Black Hound saw me, did he immediately imprint me as his new master?"

Chen Ge had no idea what the relationship between the black dog and the shadow was, but based on the dog's current reaction, he had a guess in his heart. "Looks like this dog might be the shadow's few real 'friends'."

The meaning of the word friend went both ways. "Should the shadow turn into another person to approach me, I could release the black dog when I am unsure. Perhaps it might lead to unexpected result.”

Having the Black Hound join his team was good news for Chen Ge, but considering how violent the Black Hound’s power was, he temporarily did not plan on setting it loose. Sliding down the screen, Chen Ge clicked open the remaining messages. These messages arrived into his phone when he first entered the blood fog.

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored, you have entered the scenario for Li Wan City, a 3.5-star Trial Mission. The mission has been forcibly triggered!

“The scenario is extremely dangerous; many unknown changes await. Would you like to choose to retreat now?

“Warning! If you retreat in the middle of the mission, the scenario will be locked forever!”

After reading the three messages, Chen Ge heard the sound of footsteps coming from the stairs. The other passengers were moving up the stairs. They were worried about him since Chen Ge had not come down after so long.

“After all, I’m already inside Li Wan City. Even if there is danger, there is no other option but to move forward.” Chen Ge chose to not surrender the mission.

“Congratulations, Specters’ Favored, you’ve accepted the 3.5-star Trial Mission—Li Wan City.

“Li Wan City: The door has gone out of control, and the group of murderers and Specters party in the shadows of the city. Whenever night falls, every ghost stories turn into reality. The hotel that offered souls for sale, the boy playing hide-and-seek in the hospital, the human skull knocking against the wall next door, the God of Death waving at the junction, the spirit always facing away from you in the elevator, the smiling dog underneath the bed, the red eyes in the armoire...

“Mission Objective: Escape from Li Wan City. The rescue of each innocent victim will add another hidden reward!

“Mission Hint: I’ve watched you cry; I’ve watched you laugh. I’ve watched your joy; I’ve watched your tears. I’ve been watching you; I want to be you. I wish to be your best friend, but why do you keep all the happiness for yourself and only leave the sorrow to me?”

After reading all the messages, Chen Ge memorized them in his heart and then put the phone away.

“Thank God, you’re alright. Don’t scare us like that!” the drunkard yelled a bit too loudly once he saw Chen Ge standing in the middle of the corridor after he got up the stairs.

“Don’t be afraid, I’ve already dealt with the human-faced dog.” Chen Ge pointed at the fainted man on the ground. After reading the message on the phone, his attitude toward other passengers softened. After all, saving one innocent victim would award him with an additional prize. Therefore, be it out of morality or his personal benefit, Chen Ge would try his best to protect them.

“This man was the monster? He doesn’t look that scary.” Scissors held the man’s chin. “There are no visible wounds on his body, and we didn’t hear any sound of fighting downstairs. So, how did he end up being fainted here?”

“You’d better stay away from him. He is just unconscious; he could wake up at any moment.” Chen Ge did not answer Scissors’ question but found a rope inside the house to tie up the man. Then he led the few to leave the building.

After reading the mission notification on the black phone, Chen Ge had a better understanding of Li Wan City. There was a brief introduction on the town given by the phone. It mentioned the hotel, hospital, junction, and neighbor’s home. Combining that with Xiao Bu’s game that he had played earlier, Chen Ge suspected that the hotel and the neighbor’s home mentioned by the black phone were the locales that he had visited when he was controlling Xiao Bu.

The door is in Fan Chong’s residential area. Whether the door is still usable or not, it behooves me to pay the place a visit. It is rather unrealistic for me to visit all these places, so I think I shall only drop by the places that I will pass along the way.

With the decision made, Chen Ge led the few passengers back to the bus. The exterior of the bus was completely covered by the blood vessels, and the engine could not be activated.

“I have a friend who lives in Li Wan City, so I’m quite familiar with this place. Stay close to me. If we’re lucky, we might be able to escape before dawn.” Chen Ge was not lying. There was no sunlight or hope in the world shrouded in blood fog. The sun would only greet them when they managed to escape.

That could be considered Chen Ge's special power, which was to view the most despairing situation with a positive outlook, to reintroduce hope and brightness into the situation.

To save time, Chen Ge did not enter every building, and to that end, he felt like it was a waste.

If there was more time, I would have the other passengers enter the building first while I hide behind. If anyone dares to harm them, I would instantly jump out.

Using other people as bait when he fished for the reward, Chen Ge had already planned everything. Many dangers hid behind the blood fog, but to their surprise, not many things stood in their way.

"Can we stop for a moment? I wish to take a look inside this residential area." Chen Ge suddenly stopped. He looked at the apartments next to them and showed an unreadable expression. He was familiar with the buildings there because this was the place that Xiao Bu and her stepfather had lived when she was inside the game.

"This doesn't look safe; the place is so dark and eerie." The drunkard was the first to veto the idea.

"Based on our previous experience, the larger the building, the scarier the monster hiding inside. Therefore, there has to be a very scary monster using this place as its nest." The doctor grabbed his scarf and did not want to move either.

"I do not deny the danger, but as long as you listen to my orders, I can guarantee that you'll be safe," Chen Ge said and walked away.

"Hey, you have to be more careful!" The drunkard could not help but grumble. "How come it feels like you're walking around your house in this place where you could lose your life at any moment?"

"Such a coward, I really don't understand what you're so afraid of." Scissors wiped away the fresh blood from his lips.

"This place is filled with ghosts, murderers, and monsters, and you're asking me what I'm so afraid of?" Even so, the drunkard summoned his courage. Although he was afraid, he refused to leave Chen Ge's side.

"Be quiet, I have something to tell you." Chen Ge interrupted the drunkard and pointed at the bush close to them. "There is a murderer chopping up his victim inside there. Try to keep your footsteps light when you walk past, do not alert him to our presence.”

Hearing Chen Ge’s words, the few passengers looked at each other. Chen Ge was speaking normal words, but when the words were strung in the manner that he arranged them, they had no idea what Chen Ge was trying to express.

“Murderer? Chopping up his victim? Don’t alert him? What is going on here?” The passengers’ minds were befuddled.

“The murderer will come into use later. There’s no time to explain, so just follow my lead.” Chen Ge moved ahead and purposely moved far away from the bush. “The murderer inside the bush is still here. I wonder if the raincoat murderer is still inside the elevator or not...”

Slowing down their footsteps, the group followed Chen Ge's order as they moved past the bush.

How did he know that there is someone in there?

...

When Scissors passed the bush, he turned to look out of curiosity. There were inconspicuous traces of blood seeping out from the deeper end of the bush. There was no wind, but the bush was lightly swaying. Afraid to stay for long, the few quickly followed behind Chen Ge and entered the apartment.

"I need you guys to step away for a moment. Someone might come out from the elevator in a bit. There are so many of us, and we might unnecessarily spook him." Chen Ge was very cautious. He saw the changing number that was above the elevator and signaled for the rest of his group to go into hiding.

"If the person can be spooked by us, they probably aren't that powerful. Why don't we attack in unison to apprehend them?" The doctor was calm, and he offered his own opinion.

"We can't do that yet. I have need for this person during the next step of my plan, and the plan requires each link to perform their required deed." Chen Ge pushed the doctor slightly backward. "There are scary things in this residential area. We should try to keep a low profile whenever we can."

"If you told us to keep a low profile, just how scary are the things hiding here?" The drunkard was the first to request a retreat. "Let's go, I don't think we should be stopping here anyway."

When the few were arguing, the elevator was about to reach the first floor. Chen Ge stopped wasting time with the other passengers and shoved them into the security door that led to the stairwell.

After the few went into hiding, Chen Ge turned to look at the elevator door. “The bad guy inside the elevator is targeting Xiao Bu because Xiao Bu is extremely weak. For these madmen, torturing and bullying the weak is a form of enjoyment. If I come off too powerful, they might hesitate to attack me. But if he does not follow me upstairs, then the rest of the plan cannot be put into motion.”

Chen Ge decided to follow the guide that he had perfected in Xiao Bu’s game. The plan was to turn the ghosts and monsters at the apartment against each other. Theoretically, his plan was perfect, but there were many extenuating factors when he wanted to put it into motion.

The number on the display finally turned into ‘1’, and the stained old elevator door opened to unload its passenger. A man wearing a black colored raincoat stood in the middle of the elevator, and he was holding a large black bag in his hands. The bag looked heavy, and it was hard to tell what was being carried within. The man did not seem to expect there to be someone outside the elevator. He reached out to pull the rim of the hoodie attached to his raincoat down to fully cover his face.

“Hello, how are you?” Chen Ge voluntarily gave his greeting. While he was wondering how to lure this mad murderer to follow him upstairs, the man walked out from the elevator. The elevator door was only so wide. Chen Ge carried two large bags, and the raincoat man was also carrying one that was not small in size. When they brushed past each other, it was to be expected that their carry-on would bump against each other.

Blood leaked out from the man’s bag. Both Chen Ge and the raincoat man noticed the blood stain that was spreading.

Chen Ge’s expression shifted. His brows scrunched together, his calves shook, and he leaned back. All of his actions implied that he was trying to escape. In a flustered manner, Chen Ge jogged into the elevator.

Fear, panic, and anxiety—various emotions were expressed through his body language and micro expression. It was such a waste that Chen Ge was not an actor. He rushed into the elevator and pressed the button on the elevator panel several times. The panicked reaction belied the anxiety burning inside his heart, and the darting gaze amplified the terror that was grasping at his heart.

No matter the angle, Chen Ge looked like a genuine victim. Naturally, the raincoat man studied all of Chen Ge's reactions. He turned around, and since the rim of the hoodie covered his eyes and hair, Chen Ge could only see the cruel smirk that appeared on the man's lips. Chen Ge was very familiar with this expression; this was a smile that would be revealed by a beast when they discovered an unsuspecting prey.

The fish is hooked. As the elevator door slowly closed, Chen Ge allowed his expression to relax, and he sighed in relief internally. If I'm not mistaken, he would catch up to me.

As the gap between the elevator doors narrowed, and Chen Ge was trying to come up with the next step of the plan, he suddenly saw a pale hand reach into the gap of the elevator doors!

The doors that were closing reopened, and the raincoat man stood outside the elevator with his head lowered. The atmosphere in the lobby turned oppressive, and the smile on the raincoat man's face became more manic. He lifted his legs slowly and walked into the elevator.

This was an unexpected change. When he was playing Xiao Bu's game, the raincoat man had not gone after Xiao Bu immediately, and that had given Chen Ge the time to come up with a course of action.

The dim light in the elevator showered down on the two's faces. The raincoat man stood next to Chen Ge, and an uncomfortable presence radiated from the man. It was as if he was not a living human but a beast trying to reign in his feral nature.

The elevator started to move upward. Inside the completely enclosed space, there was no chance for Chen Ge to evade any incoming attack.

To introduce clarity into his line of sight, the raincoat man yanked off the hoodie of his raincoat. That action exposed the wound on his forehead and the birthmark that was near his left eye—these disfigurements took away from the man's charm. Sensing the raincoat man's movement, Chen Ge nudged deeper into the elevator. However, the space inside the elevator was only so big, so realistically, where could he possibly retreat to?

"Earlier, you saw the stuff inside my bag, didn't you?" The raincoat man turned to address Chen Ge. The birthmark on his face was torn from the movement, and it looked quite scary.

"No, I didn't see anything." Chen Ge was telling the truth; he only saw the fresh blood that leaked out from the bag.

“Is that so?” The raincoat man dropped the bag to his side and took out the knife that he had hidden on his back. “It’s fine if you haven’t seen anything. When I shove you inside it, you’ll have plenty of time to work out what is inside the bag!”

He looked at Chen Ge with a wicked smile and enjoyed the despair that swirled in Chen Ge’s eyes. He lurched forward with the blade, aiming at Chen Ge’s body. He was prepared to hear the pained wail coming from Chen Ge’s lips, but when his knife was half a meter away from Chen Ge, he saw the young man before his eyes grip the edge of his backpack and try to swing it heavily at him.

He had no idea what was inside Chen Ge’s bag, just like Chen Ge had no idea what was inside his bag. With a moment’s thought, he guessed that there was nothing more than everyday objects inside Chen Ge’s bag and that it would be fine for him to suffer a blow from it. After all, it was different for his blade. One thrust from the sharp blade, and someone’s blood was bound to flow.

The expression on his was twisted by hatred. Then, the raincoat man saw the young man swing the backpack harshly and powerfully on his arm.

CRACK!

The sound of bone shattering echoed clearly in his ears. The raincoat man’s focus was completely on Chen Ge, and until then, he could not discern where that sound came from. A large force toppled him to the ground and the blade fell from his fingers and clattered to the ground.

Intense pain shot through his body, and that triggered the bestial nature in the raincoat man. Like a savage animal, he tried to reach toward the knife with his uninjured hand. The sharp blade was just right before his eyes, but when his fingers curled around the handle, a shoe stepped firmly on the blade.

The raincoat man looked up, and he saw the young man open the zipper of his backpack with a despairing expression.

“Even though the guide has proven its usefulness, it appears like I cannot rely on it fully.” Chen Ge lowered his head to look at the raincoat man and his face bloomed into a smile. All the fear, terror, and panic on his face disappeared instantly. He mimicked the tone adopted by the raincoat man before. “Earlier, you saw the stuff inside my bag, didn't you?"

"No! Wait!"

The zipper opened, and Chen Ge grabbed the handle of the scary-looking Doctor Skull-Cracker's Hammer. He proceeded to lift it out from his backpack. "It's fine if you haven't seen anything. When I shove you inside it, you'll have plenty of time to work out what is inside the bag!"

"Wait a second! Help!"

The elevator returned to the first floor. Chen Ge dragged the fainted raincoat man out of the elevator. "He looks quite thin, so why can't he fit inside it? Is it because there are too many unbroken bones? Oh well, at least he's lost his mobility. I am not going to break all of his bones—that is too much of a waste of time."

All the other passengers jogged over to regroup when they saw Chen Ge walk out from the elevator. When they saw the raincoat man foaming at the mouth, mumbling incoherently, all of them shivered uncontrollably.

"You saw it yourself. It was him who insisted on following me into the elevator. I was merely defending myself." Chen Ge dragged the raincoat man and his bag to the pile of trash near the entrance and hid them with the bags of garbage.

"What shall we do next?" The few passengers could not understand Chen Ge's thoughts at all.

"Since we've already been exposed, it's time to adopt a different strategy." Chen Ge dragged the hammer as he walked toward the bush that was not far away. "Follow me."

The chilly wind caressed the back of their necks. Chen Ge did not slow down even as he entered the bush. A spine-tingling noise came out from inside the bush—someone was busily at work.

Slowing down, Chen Ge, who was covered in blood stains, finally caught a look of the murderer inside the bush.

The man looked a lot scarier than the raincoat man. His body was covered in many ashen gray spots. It appeared like he was suffering from some kind of skin disease, but upon closer look, Chen Ge realized that they bore startling similarity to cadaveric spots.

“Gray skin?” Staring at the gray spots on the murderer’s body, he was reminded of the few monsters and humans that he had met so far at Li Wan City. They all had the same similarity on their bodies—their skin was unnaturally gray.

These people appeared to have stayed too long in Li Wan City and had been corrupted by the world behind the door at Li Wan City, causing this strange transmutation to their physical body.

“Those gray spots are moving.” After using his Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge saw that the gray spots appeared to have their own consciousness. They seemed to be treating the human body as their warm bed to proliferate and spread. “These should be the negative emotions that are accumulated behind the door. These emotions attach themselves to these people, causing their mind to go out of control.”

Negative emotions could slowly drive a normal person crazy, and the scarier thing was that the living humans themselves could be turned into a vessel to contain these emotions. They used their skin to feed these gray spots, and as this continued, the entire human being would be taken over by these gray spots.

Having entered the world behind the door, Chen Ge understood the horror of that world. If he was unable to resist the negative emotions, he would eventually fall under the effect of these negative emotions, becoming their puppets and turning into the resident behind the door.

“Based on the information given by the door, the shadow once sent endless despairing passengers into the world behind the door. This murderer before my eyes should be one of them.”

These people with the last trace of hope came to the city, not expecting that the thing awaiting them would be a chasm with even deeper despair. The shadow never wanted to rescue them in the first place—he only saw these unfortunate people as nutrients to sustain the world behind the door.

The man inside the bush noticed Chen Ge as well, but probably because he saw the hammer Chen Ge was holding, he did not act rashly. He might be murderous, but he was not an idiot. He could sense an indescribable horror coming from Chen Ge.

“Wow, there is really someone hiding here. How did you know from so far away?" Scissors followed behind Chen Ge. Just in terms of appearance, he might not lose to the man in the bush. At least, the first impression that he gave was quite scary. He gripped the scissors in his hands, and he did apply Chen Ge's advice and held the blade at its middle and not at its edge.

"F*ck! This is too much!" The drunkard only poked his head out to take a look before cowering behind the doctor.

"Can you stop hiding behind me every time?" The scarf covered his face, but one could see the doctor's brows crease together. The sudden appearance of four people startled the murderer. He had not experienced something like this before—he felt like an animal at the zoo being looked at. He took a deep breath and silently reached for the tools that he was using earlier to cut up the body parts. His eyes were filled with sin. If he had the chance, he would not hesitate to kill the group of people before him.

"Don't worry, I just want to ask you a few questions and also ask you for help." Chen Ge tossed the white cat aside and pressed the button on the recorder. Even though the man before them was a living human, perhaps he had stayed here for too long. His body was seriously corrupted by negative emotions, such that he appeared more like a monster now.

"How long have you been here? And how many other humans are like you living in this small town? Have you seen the person who is responsible to look after this city?" Chen Ge was about to ask the fourth question when the man took advantage of the quick moment Chen Ge blinked and sprung toward him. He raised the weapon in his arm, aiming at Chen Ge's neck.

His speed was conspicuously faster than a normal man. Thankfully, Chen Ge was already prepared for an ambush. He reacted fast and used the hammer to block the incoming attack. However, the hammer was very heavy, and it was not that easy to operate, especially during moments that required speed. In the end, Chen Ge only managed to raise the handle to block the attack.

To Chen Ge's surprise though, when he was attacked, Scissors next to him did not retreat from fear but raised the weapon in his hand to help Chen Ge block the incoming attack.

"Nicely done, but you're still too slow." Chen Ge jumped backward to introduce some distance between them. Then he gripped the hammer with both hands and slammed it at the murderer in the bush. In terms of presence, it was a landslide victory for Chen Ge. “I just want to ask you a few questions, and you wish to take my life?”

The two raced through the bush. Chen Ge held the hammer and chased the murderer three laps around the apartment before the latter collapsed under the strain of exhaustion and was detained by Chen Ge.

“You’re still too weak to contest me in terms of endurance.” Chen Ge’s body was very well trained. Of course, it had plenty to do with the ghosts that he needed to escape from daily. Walking to the trash site, Chen Ge found some rope to apprehend the murderer. “Be careful, it’s about time for us to face real danger soon.”

“Wait, these crazed murderers aren’t the real danger?” The drunkard really did not want to stay there anymore. He had a feeling the longer he stayed here, the crazier he would become.

“You’ll see in a bit.” Chen Ge whacked the raincoat man in the trash heap a few more times.

“Don’t look at me like that. There are many living humans in Li Wan City with blood on their hands. The reason I’m doing this is because I’m afraid they might expose us after they wake up. Even though most murderers work alone, it is never wrong to be cautious.” Chen Ge then grabbed the murderer from the bush and hauled him into the apartment with him. “You should wait for me downstairs. When I signal for you to run, just run out of the apartment.”

“That doesn’t sound like a good plan at all.” The drunkard wanted to ask for more clarification from Chen Ge, but Chen Ge had already started to move up the stairs.

He led the murderer to the door to Xiao Bu’s house. Seeing the familiar scenario, Chen Ge had this strange feeling of the game world overlapping with reality.

“I shall enter to take a look first. If there’re no helpful clues, I’ll figure out a way to lure out the Red Specter from Xiao Bu’s neighbor home.”

Xiao Bu stayed at a normal apartment; her stepfather did not appear to be that well-off.

“Shall we knock?” Standing in the corridor, Chen Ge held the murderer that he had caught from the bush and wondered aloud. “This is after all Xiao Bu’s place, so it doesn’t seem right for me to break the door down.”

...

Chen Ge tried the doorknob, and to his surprise, the door was not locked. As the lock clicked, the door was pushed open. A faded stench drifted out from inside the room. Chen Ge narrowed his eyes, and his pupils constricted, a sign that he was using Yin Yang Vision.

Coffee table, sofa, television cupboard... All the furniture looked normal—there was nothing unique about them.

“Someone has died here; you’d better not go in.” His hands tied behind his back, the murderer uttered with his head lowered. He looked like he was talking to himself.

“How do you know that? Did you kill the person living here?” Chen Ge pushed the murderer from behind and entered the room with him.

“There is the smell of dead here; it is unmistakable.” The gray spots on his skin creased together as the man’s nostrils wiggled. He turned to look at the bedroom. “The smell came from that room; the victim should have been dead for a long time already.”

The ruffled hair covered the man’s face, and he kept his voice low. Instead of saying he was guiding Chen Ge, it was more like he was trying to make use of Chen Ge’s curiosity to create a chance for himself to escape.

“Inside the bedroom?” The only possible victim there could have been Xiao Bu’s stepfather, but when Chen Ge was playing Xiao Bu’s game, Xiao Bu's stepfather died in the living room and not the bedroom.

The location of the dead body has changed. Has someone else been inside this room? Was it the raincoat man or Xiao Bu herself?

Chen Ge opened the bedroom door and peered inside. All the books on the shelves were arranged neatly, there was no trash on the ground, and several abstract paintings hung on the wall. There was no dust on the frame, and it appeared like this place was regularly cleaned.

The thing that appeared out of place was the wooden bed. Strangely enough, the bed had been moved away from the walls so that it sat perfectly in the middle of the room. A thick, comfortable bedsheet was spread on the mattress, and on top of it lay a middle-aged man.

"Xiao Bu's stepfather?" Chen Ge walked to the bed, and when he saw the man at a closer distance, his fingers gripped the hammer involuntarily. A large part of the man's skin had been replaced by cloth. He looked like an abandoned rag doll that had been roughly sewn.

In Xiao Bu's game, such a choice was given. It was to sew the stepfather's wounds together, to transform him into a doll.

Seeing the man before him, Chen Ge finally understood that when faced with the choice, Xiao Bu had chosen not to ignore her stepfather and figured out a way to make sure that he would stay by her side forever.

Such a cruel method of body preservation.

The murderer got closer to take a look as well. There was excitement dancing in his eyes as he admired the sewn skin on the middle-aged man's body. "This man should be the most precious piece of art in this room. The person who created him must be a complete maniac!"

The murderer led to an unhinged laugh. He did not stop until there was a knocking sound that came from the wall adjacent to the neighbor's home.

"Your assessment is wrong." Chen Ge pointed at the edge where the skin connected to cloth. There was gray color on the edge of the skin. "The killer probably removed all the gray skin from the man's body. She was trying to figure out a way to rescue this man, or rather, she did not want this man to turn into a monster like you."

“Monster?” The murderer started to laugh wickedly. “It wouldn’t take long for you to turn into a monster that you’ve mentioned. Despair has already taken root inside your heart, and when the mind of a heavily determined person breaks, they will turn into the craziest spectacle!”

He was like a ready cobra. After he recovered his strength, he was ready to retaliate against Chen Ge.

“You should spend more time worrying about yourself, because if I really go insane, my first target will be you. I will use this hammer and whack it endlessly on your fleshy body until I feel better.” Chen Ge was just saying that to scare him, but the murderer took his words at face value because he really thought that Chen Ge would do something like that.

“But that will be useless. When you start to lose your mind, no matter what you do, your heart will never return to how it once was, so while you still can, you’d better take control of yourself.” The murderer’s eyes darted about the room to search for something useful. He felt like it was too dangerous to stay around Chen Ge—he might die at any moment.

“Even if you can’t do it, it doesn’t mean other people can’t. I once met this girl, she should be the most despairing existence behind the door, but she has not lost herself.” Her stepfather was made into a doll, but Chen Ge was still defending Xiao Bu. He desperately wished that the child who was threatened by the shadow retained her kindness.

Dong, dong...

A strange noise came from the wall. It was not loud, but it had attracted Chen Ge and the murderer’s attention.

“Looks like someone is complaining about the noise,” the murderer whispered. He caught the shine of a fruit knife left on the coffee table from the corner of his eyes, and he silently moved toward it.

“If you ask me, I think you’re complaining that you’ve lived for far too long.” Chen Ge smiled at the murderer. He did not tell the man what this knocking sound represented.

The bed was placed in the middle of the room, away from all the walls. This strange arrangement hinted at many things. The knocking sound grew. Chen Ge calculated the time in his heart and started searching for useful things in the room. After a few minutes, he felt like the headless woman next door was about to go berserk already, so he grabbed the murderer and raced out of Xiao Bu's home.

"What are you doing?" A bad feeling entered the murderer's heart.

"The neighbor kept knocking on the wall. They might be asking for help; we should go take a look."

"Even if the whole family is dead, what has it got to do with you? Stop minding other people's business. There are no innocent people here. All your kindness will only be repaid with sinful retribution!" The murderer's heart was racing due to a reason that he could not understand.

"There are no innocent people here?" Chen Ge was suddenly reminded of the mission requirement on the black phone. By saving every innocent life, he would be given an additional mission reward. Looks like it won't be so easy to get the reward from the black phone.

"We cannot stay here. After we leave this place, you can do anything you wish with you. Kill me if you want."

"Perfect, after making sure the neighbors are fine, we'll leave immediately." Chen Ge dragged the murderer to the neighbor's door. He twisted the doorknob and realized that the door was not locked.

Dong, dong...

The strange sound echoed from the deeper part of the house. Chen Ge and the murderer stood at the door. They looked down the dark corridor, and neither dared to make the first move.

"There appears to be something inside this house..." The murderer started to mumble, and that caused Chen Ge to become tense.

As the knocking sound grew, a heavy stench of blood came out from the bedroom. The blood slithered on the ground, and from their point of view, the whole place was dyed a crimson red!

A pair of bloodshot eyes opened in the dark. The skull that leaned against the bedroom wall, slowly turned around to stare at Chen Ge and the murderer who stood at the entrance. At the same time, a headless female voice walked out from behind the living room door. Her clothes were completely drenched by blood, and the red was blindingly stark in the dark.

"A Red Specter!" When they saw the woman, Chen Ge had already turned around and run. When the murderer recovered from his shock, Chen Ge and his hammer were already five meters away.

“You...” The blood weaved into a net, and it dragged the murderer into the room. Several seconds later, that scary female skull rolled out of the house. Covered in blood, it started to move toward Chen Ge!

Afraid to take the elevator, Chen Ge burst through the security door and flew down the stairs. He yelled loudly at the passengers who were waiting for him, dull-eyed. “Run! Turn left once you leave the residential area! Hide inside the hotel!”

The murderer only managed to buy a few seconds for me—this is completely different from the game! That Red Specter is also impossibly powerful. With only Xu Yin, I won't be her match! There's no other choice now but to lure her to the hotel!

Chapter 645 - Mad Rush

Chapter 645: Mad Rush

The Red Specter in Xiao Bu's neighbor's home was far more powerful than he remembered. Actually, this was partly his fault as well. He had put his guard down after spending too much time with Specters, forgetting the terror that gripped him when he first came across a Red Specter.

That extreme crimson represented danger and horror. When the female ghost showed up, the survival instinct within Chen Ge's bones kicked in. Before the murderer even realized what was happening, Chen Ge was already miles away.

When Xiao Bu first pushed open the door, she should just have been a normal child. How did she manage to survive behind the door for so long?

Murderers, ghosts, and gray-skinned monsters—in this city, that was no different from a nightmare. Even an adult would have problem surviving, so how did a little girl managed that? That confused Chen Ge.

Dragging the hammer, Chen Ge ran for his life. He did not dare look back. The knocking sound and sound of washing water that came from behind him was enough motivation to keep him running. He knew that the Red Specter was just behind him.

The few passengers originally stood in the middle of the residential area. They looked at the small town shrouded in blood fog and squeezed close together, afraid that in the blink of an eye, they would be dragged into the fog by some monsters. After separating from Chen Ge, they were like unmoored cargo, missing stability, and security.

"Run!" Chen Ge's voice came out from the apartment, and this was the first time that the passengers had heard Chen Ge use such an urgent voice. In their mind, no matter what happened, this man would be serenely calm like terror was something beyond him. Reality proved that they were wrong. The man was not immune to fear—it was just that, so far, he had not run into something that could terrorize him!

After hearing Chen Ge's voice, the passengers slowly turned their heads to Chen Ge's direction. His left arm holding the travel bag and backpack, right hand dragging a 'prop hammer', his shoulder gripped tightly by a nervous white cat, Chen Ge arrived with his expression twisted into a grimace. His legs moved like the wind as he raced toward them. "Run to the left! Go to the hotel! The hotel!"

Initially, the passengers had no idea what had come over Chen Ge. One second later, their eyes looked past Chen Ge. A headless female carcass walked out from the dark corridor. Countless blood vessels crawled out from the stump where her neck should have been to weave into a large blood red net. At the end of the net was an incredibly scary-looking human head!

"What the f*ck!"

"What have you done this time?"

"Run!"

The Red Specter's presence was far more intimidating than a normal Specter. When the passengers saw her, their reactions were similar to that of Chen Ge. They started to run. They could barely imagine what would happen should they are captured. Their brain was blank, and only one command remained— Run! Run as fast as you can!

The female ghost's speed was much faster than in-game. Chen Ge was on a death rush, but even so, the distance between them still closed.

Thankfully, I sent the murderer in to scout the place for me first. If it was me who opened the door, without the few seconds to act as a buffer, I would have been dragged into the room already.

Unable to summon Zhang Ya, Chen Ge only had Xu Yin who might be able to stop the headless woman.

After completing the mission here, no matter what, I need to help Xu Yin find his heart!

Running through the streets, the scene from Xiao Bu's game was replicated perfectly. In the hazy street, the few people screamed wildly as they ran down the street toward an unknown destination.

"I can't run anymore! My legs aren't moving!" The drunkard gripped his heart. "It feels like my heart is giving up!"

"If you stop, that thing will personally yank your heart out of your chest! Do not stop!" Chen Ge screamed in warning. Perhaps his encouragement proved useful, as the drunkard gritted his teeth and continued charging forward.

"Now I know why you told us to wait for you at the entrance! If you'd told us something like this would happen, we would have waited for you at the hotel!" Scissors yelped. Even the scariest murderer would be scared when running into a Red Specter, much less a fake one.

Chen Ge's attitude was kinder around Scissors. After all, he planned to cultivate this young man into his employee. "It's fine, there isn't a big problem! As long as you can run fast enough, the ghost will not be able to catch up to you! Just listen to me! We'll be safe once we arrive at the hotel!"

When one was caught in a supernatural event, the worst thing was to get oneself trapped inside an enclosed building. As long as he could run, then there was hope. This was the conclusion that Chen Ge had arrived at after his many experiences dealing with ghosts. Since the ghost was already on their heel, it was too late to say anything now. The only thing to do was run.

The buildings on both sides of the street elicited strange noises. It felt like things might reach out at any moment from the half-open windows.

"Stay in the middle of the road! Do not get too close to the buildings!" Chen Ge still remembered the scene from Xiao Bu's game. Danger lurked everywhere in Li Wan City after dark. The monsters and ghosts hiding in the building would often use the cover of the night to assault the 'lambs' that crossed the street.

"Most monsters and ghosts do not leave their own building, but this rule doesn't apply to Red Specters." Chen Ge turned slightly around to look behind him. He had no idea what he had done to provoke the woman thusly. The woman refused to let him go. "Looks like in Li Wan City, Red Specters at the top of the food chain. This is probably the perfect reflection of the state behind the door as well."

Chen Ge was a kind person because he ran alone at the back and took on the biggest risk. After running down the streets for several minutes, the doctor and Scissors, who ran ahead, finally saw the hotel that Chen Ge had mentioned. This was a building that combined both a restaurant and hotel. It was situated in the middle of the city and looked old, probably built decades ago.

“There it is! Get in there” Chen Ge was dangerously close to the ghost. The most direct effect from this was that the white cat that originally dangled from his shoulder had now moved to hide in his chest. Its claws gripped Chen Ge’s clothes tightly, and it kept making this hissing sound.

As the passengers charged into the hotel, Chen Ge sighed in relief. He raised his hammer and aimed it at the door. With a swing he tossed the hammer away, then he picked up speed and narrowly escaped through the door.

“Close the door!” The door slammed shut, and then came a loud bang. The passengers hurried to help by moving furniture to block the entrance. Several minutes later, the door stopped vibrating, and only a constant knocking sound came from outside the door.

“It’s fine now. We can rest for a while.” Chen Ge picked up the hammer and shoved it back into his back. He picked up the already drained white cat. The cat seemed to have its bones leak out from its body, and it leaned against the bag weakly.

“Brother, are you sure it’s safe now? The woman outside is using her head to knock against the door!” The drunkard looked through the gap. “She’s really using her head as some kind of object to knock against the door!”

“Don’t worry, everything is under control.” Chen Ge stood up to nudge his joints about. Compared to the state of the other passengers, one could see how physically well-trained Chen Ge was.

“This hotel is under the territory of another Specter, so that headless woman temporarily won’t dare barge in.” Chen Ge patted the white cat’s belly. The creature was so spooked that it did not push Chen Ge’s hand back, which it normally would.

...

“Wait a minute! What did you just say? What do you mean by this place belongs to another Specter’s territory? Don’t tell me... there’s another thing like that monster staying here!” The drunkard had grown a bit too much mentally that night. His brain had become more agile.

“I guess you can see it that way. But don’t worry, that female Specter is still asleep. For now, she’s not going to wake up.” Chen Ge walked toward the restaurant, leaving the few stunned passengers.

“He admitted it so easily? There’s really another female monster here? What is this?” The drunkard turned to look at the doctor and Scissors. “Hey, why aren’t you two saying anything? There’s a female ghost outside, a freaking ghost!”

“Be quiet. So what if it’s a ghost?” Scissors swatted the drunkard’s hands back and uttered in a chilly tone, “If they dare come for me, watch as I put down a ghost.”

Of the few, the doctor was the most collected. “Did you notice the terms that he used are all temporarily? This means that the ghost outside might come in, and the ghost inside might wake up any time soon, and should that happen, we will need to deal with two ghosts at the same time.”

“What do you mean?” The drunkard believed that the doctor was the most trustworthy of the group, and he was trying to grasp the meaning hidden in his words.

“I mean, you should try to preserve your strength. Our situation might get worse than this.” The doctor was also panting heavily. Of the three passengers, Scissors was the most physically powerful. After all, he had prepared aplenty for that day, and that must have included intense physical training.

“You must be joking... Just what kind of nightmare have I walked into. I just went out for a drink, that’s all...” Drunkard climbed up from the ground. Listening to the echoes of the knocking coming from the door, cold sweat slid down his face.

“Is someone there?” Chen Ge walked to the counter. The hotel was decorated in the style of nineties—it looked similar to the location in Xiao Bu’s game. After waiting for ten seconds, a man’s voice came from one of the rooms deep in the corridor. “Please wait a moment! I’ll be there shortly!”

One minute later, the passengers saw a rotund man waddle his way out from the corridor. His hands were tying the apron, and the apron looked new because there was no stain on it.

“How can you be so slow? The lack of efficiency is showing. As one in the service industry, you have to remember that customers always come first.” Chen Ge scanned the man with impatience.

“A thousand apologies, I was helping in the kitchen.” The middle-aged man was not angry. In fact, he had a smile on his face that, coupled with his overall demeanor, made him look friendly and welcoming.

“Helping in the kitchen?” Chen Ge noticed the man’s hands were wet—they had just been washed. However, he did so in too much of a hurry, as there were some dark red stains left under his fingernails.

“Yes, we only have a single cook here, so sometimes, I go back there to help him.” The fat man guffawed. His eyes were beady from the folds of fat. If he did not turn his neck, it was hard to tell who he was looking at.

“Are you the boss here?” This was the first time that the drunkard had come across someone whom he could communicate with normally, and his heart was more than a bit excited.

“I have to help the kitchen, work as the waiter, and keep the books.

Even though I'm technically the boss, I feel like less than the hired help here." The man squeezed behind the counter. "Are you going to stay here, or are you just here for the food?"

"How are the prices?" The doctor frowned. He knew that something was not right. To be able to operate inside this small town, something was certainly wrong with this place.

"You can stay for free on the first night, but if you wish to continue staying, on the second night, we will pick something from you to take as the room fee." As if afraid that there might be misunderstanding, the fat boss added, "Money doesn't mean that much to us. We prefer to charge by acquiring some unique moments."

"What if we wish to stay for a third night?" Chen Ge interrupted to ask.

"We'll take one more thing from you. We will only chase you away on the day you aren't able to provide us with the thing we need." The boss appeared reasonable. "I can guarantee that this is the safest place in this small town."

"I think I get it." The drunkard nodded. "This place is like the safe zone in games. How about the four of us stay here for the night?"

"These will be your room keys." As if afraid that the drunkard might go back on his word, the fat boss quickly took out four keys from under the counter. Each key was taped with a number.

"We don't need four rooms, two of us can share one room." The doctor was more cautious.

"Of course, please discuss among yourselves how are you going to decide the sleeping arrangement. I'll go back to the kitchen to have the staff prepare your dinner." The boss waddled back to the kitchen, but strangely enough, the route that he took was different from the one that he used when he walked out from the 'kitchen'.

After the boss left, the doctor chose two rooms that were adjacent to each other. "We'll take these two rooms, but all four of us will stay in the same room while keeping the other empty. We'll take turns staying guard through the night, paying close attention to these two rooms. Should anything happen, the guard will wake up everyone."

"That's a brilliant idea!" Hope reignited in the drunkard's eyes. "As long as we survive until morning or until the fog disperses, we will definitely be able to escape from this small town!”

Scissors agreed with the doctor. Of the group, only Chen Ge held a weird expression.

“This should be the safest arrangement.” The doctor turned to Chen Ge. After all, the latter was their spiritual center.

“If all of us hide inside this room, it means that we have surrendered our proactivity to others, giving them enough time to set up various traps, and we will only stay and wait inside the room.” Chen Ge did not even glance at the keys on the counter.

“Then, what do you think we should do?” The others were curious about Chen Ge’s thoughts.

“It’s very simple. The boss has said earlier that there is no one here other than himself and the cook.” A smile appeared on Chen Ge’s face as he reached out his hand. “There are two of them but four of us. Compared to living through the night anxiously, I wish to be more proactive and assume the role of the boss for one night.”

“You want to take over this place?” The drunkard felt like his world was going to explode. “Brother, the man was so kind and polite when dealing with us earlier, and you’re planning to steal the place from him? Isn’t that a bit inappropriate?”

“A shop that even a Red Specter did not dare to enter willy-nilly, do you really think the boss was being kind to us?” Chen Ge had played Xiao Bu’s game, so he understood the purpose of this ‘hotel’. The customers were all food, waiting to be sent into the stomach of the Red Specter who was trapped inside the fridge. “You’ll understand why I’m doing this during dinner.”

Chen Ge placed the white cat back on his shoulders and collected all four keys. “Do not expose the plan. I hope that you’ll be willing to trust me. I can guarantee you that I’m a good person, but my kindness comes with an edge.”

Chapter 647 - Removing the Disguise [2 in 1]

Chapter 647: Removing the Disguise [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Kindness was not blind tolerance, and it was not the kind of self-deception where doing good things would only lead to good rewards. Actual kindness was accompanied with strength, a way of living that pervaded one's life, a spirit materialized through constant everyday action.

Chen Ge was a kind person, but the way that he showed his kindness was incredibly unique. The group wanted to say something more when they heard what Chen Ge had to say, but after giving his words some thought, they fell silent.

This was Li Wan City, which was shrouded in blood fog, a place where murderers and ghosts could be hiding behind every corner. One wrong move, and they could have easily lost their lives. A trait like kindness was extremely rare here, but at the same time, kindness was also the cheapest thing.

"I'll follow your lead." The doctor was the first to expression his opinion. He had a great eye for people, and in his mind, he had already treated Chen Ge as his only hope of leaving this place.

"I'll temporarily listen to your orders." Scissors agreed as well. Of the three passengers, only the drunkard appeared slightly unwilling.

"The majority wins, so it has been decided." Chen Ge gave the four keys to the four individuals. "Later, try not to speak and leave everything to me."

About two or three minutes later, the fat boss waddled back out from the kitchen. "Have you chosen the rooms among yourselves? Please register here, and while you do that, I have a few important precautions that I need to tell you."

The fat boss took out a yellowed notebook from underneath the counter. The surface of the book was covered in a thick layer of dust, a sign that it had not been used for a long time already. He flipped open the book. It was filled with room numbers, and there was a human name written under each number. The strange thing was that some of the names were cut off, some were circled, and others were crossed out with a red 'x'.

Chen Ge had no actual idea what these symbols meant, but he had a feeling that every single name that was cut off represented a life that had been lost.

"I hope you'll remember in your heart what I have to say next." The boss raised both of his hands over his head to make a strange pose. "This lobby is the location where we'll have dinner. When it's time to eat, I will personally go to each of your rooms to get you. However, I hope that you will not wander around for the rest of the time. Turn around the corner, and it will lead you to the rooms. Before the first floor is filled up, the second floor is not open for business. I hope you won't go upstairs to take a look out of curiosity. If there's any accident that happens to you, the hotel will not take any responsibility."

"We cannot go upstairs? This place is not big, but you sure have plenty of rules." Scissors licked his lips, and the wound on his face quivered slightly.

The fat boss seemed like he had gotten used to dealing with people with scary appearances. There was no change to his expression as he explained patiently to Scissors, "This is for your own good. I might have other guests staying here at my humble shop, and I cannot guarantee that those other guests will not come out to harm you."

"You have a point; we will be extra careful." Chen Ge was the politest out of the group—there was no sign at all that he was planning to take over the shop.

"As long as you stay honestly inside your room, nothing will happen. Other than that, I hope that you'll remember this. When you enter the room, do not open the door for anyone, not even your closest friend." The fat boss' beady eyes were covered up by folds of fat, so it was hard to discern the change to his expression, especially when it was so slight. "I'm not trying to scare you. Sometimes, those who call themselves your friend might not have your best interests at heart, or they might not even be your friend in the first place."

Chen Ge did not take the boss' words to heart. Obviously, the man was trying to turn them against each other, to plant the seed of discord within them.

“Alright, that’s all I needed to tell you for now. I’ll get you in a bit for dinner. You should go take a look at your rooms now, the payment for the stay of the first night is free.” The fat boss left after that. His gait was light, completely disproportionate to the size of his body. “There are four more guests—it’s time to prepare more food.”

Chen Ge stared at the boss’ back. He had no idea whether the last sentence the boss said was to prepare more food for the four of them or to turn the four of them into food.

“Let’s go check out the room first. Relax, for now, there is no need to act so awkward.” Chen Ge was the first to walk into the corridor and use the given key to unlock the room. The interior of the hotel room was slightly different from the one in Xiao Bu’s game. It was much larger than the game.

The old man, high-schooler, woman, and police officer—I wonder if these guests would show up in real life.

In the game, the police officer was the first to be killed by the boss, so if the game was a full replication of real life, it was safe to assume that the fat boss was armed with a police gun, and that was one of the reasons Chen Ge did not challenge the boss directly.

“The rooms here are far cleaner than I expected.” The doctor held the key, and he was the first to enter the room. He opened the armoire and stooped down to look under the bed.

“What are you looking for?” The drunkard was confused.

“I was trying to see if there’s stuff like blood stain or human body parts.

“Can you please not do that? We worked so hard to find a relatively safe spot to lie down for the night, and now you’re making me worried again.” The drunkard followed behind the doctor. “How about we share this room for the night?”

The drunkard was really afraid. He was not only afraid of the potential danger coming from the other guests at the hotel, he was also afraid of the other passengers. Scissors was obviously not a normal person—his every move described him as a murderous madman. The other man with the hammer, even though he looked rather normal in appearance, the things that he did and the words that he said were definitely not those of a normal person. In comparison, the doctor was the most normal of them all.

After inspecting his own room, Chen Ge grabbed the backpack and started to wander around the doors of the other rooms.

The old man stays in Room 1, and the teeth that can summon the Red Specter are inside the drawer of Room 1 along with the spare keys for all the rooms here as well.

When Chen Ge played Xiao Bu's game, he had been given plenty of choices when he entered the old man's room. Xiao Bu had been limited to taking only one item away from the room, but that was the game, and this was reality. Chen Ge planned to grab everything that he could use and shove them inside his backpack to help him take complete control over this hotel.

"What is so unique about this place that it is placed right in the center of Li Wan City?"

When he was playing Xiao Bu's game, Chen Ge's only goal had been to survive, but now that he was there in person, he had to dig up all of its secrets. His eyes narrowed as he pushed the key in his hands into the keyhole and started to wiggle it loudly.

Naturally, his key was unable to open the door for Room 1. The only reason he was doing this was to attract the old man's attention and start the next step of his plan. The only presence that could threaten Chen Ge in the hotel was the Red Specter inside the fridge, and the teeth inside the old man's drawer was the key item to awaken the Red Specter. Only by taking the teeth away could he continue his plan without worry. He waited there for a long time, but there was no response coming from inside Room 1. It appeared like it was an empty room.

"What are you doing here? Our room is on the other side. Can't you see the room number that is hung on the door?" The drunkard jogged over to remind Chen Ge out of kindness. Chen Ge smiled and put the key back into his pocket. He stayed to stare at the door of Room 1 for a while. He gripped the handle of the hammer in his backpack tightly. He thought about it and finally decided against it. If he failed to find the teeth after breaking down the door, or if the old man had already moved the teeth away beforehand, then things could easily get out of control.

"The longer this is dragged out, the more troublesome it'll be for us.

After the boss notices the threat that we pose, it'll be much harder for us to do anything then." Chen Ge was a quick thinker and fast mover. He was looking for an opening. Once the staff at the hotel exposed a weakness, he would make his move.

"Brother, the only one posing any sort of threat here is you, so I beg you to please calm down!" The drunkard knew that Chen Ge was not going to listen to his advice. He ran to find the doctor, hoping that the latter would be able to come help him advise Chen Ge. However, just as he turned around, the door of Room 1 opened to reveal a gap.

"You got the wrong room." An old man's voice came from inside the room. Chen Ge narrowed his pupils and looked inside the room with Yin Yang Vision. The lights inside the room were not turned on, and a small and short old man was standing behind the door with his back bent.

"We are so sorry. We did not mean to do this on purpose." The drunkard quickly apologized on Chen Ge's behalf. He grabbed Chen Ge's arm. "Let's go, you're creating trouble for other guests."

The drunkard really wanted to pull Chen Ge away. His actions and expressions were a real reflection of the thoughts in his mind.

Perhaps because of that, after hearing the drunkard's words, the old man put his guard down. The hand that held the doorknob relaxed, and the gap opened wider to expose his other hand that was hanging by his side. The other hand was covered in wounds, and it was holding a red cloth and several teeth that had been grinded smooth.

"Found it!" Before anyone could give their response, Chen Ge reached out to hold the door to prevent the old man from closing it.

"What are you doing?" both the drunkard and the old man said in unison. They were both panicking.

"I just want to borrow something from you." With that, Chen Ge forced his way into the room and clamped his hand over the old man's mouth to stop him from screaming. "Come and help me! Pick up all the teeth that fell to the ground. Make sure that you do not miss any of them!"

The drunkard was stunned. Am I following a crazy person? He attacked a helpless old man without reason and without warning. And from the way he moved, it seems like he has been planning this for a long time already!

The old man who was ambushed forgot to resist. A normal murderer or ghost would wait until night fell to conjure up a despairing atmosphere and then slowly close in the trap, pushing their target to the brink of despair. Very rarely would someone act like Chen Ge and start to move as soon as the door opened enough.

“Big brother! The boss is still cooking dinner for us! Are you already planning to kidnap his guest?” The drunkard quickly followed Chen Ge into the room. He was afraid that they might make too loud of a commotion and attract the attention of other people.

“This old man is not a guest.” Chen Ge dragged the old man to the table while keeping him quiet.

“Then who is he?” The drunkard had the impression that Chen Ge knew more than he let on, and at that moment, he could not help but wonder if the old man was indeed a dangerous character.

“He is the father of the boss.” Chen Ge opened the drawer, and like he had returned to his own home, he took out the key, teeth, and all the other things from within.

“His father?” The drunkard had started to stammer. “Then, why are you kidnapping his father since we’ve just met the boss for the first time tonight?”

“Why do you have so many questions? Come and help me. Tear open the bedsheet and curl it up. We’ll use that as rope to tie this old man up.” Chen Ge cleared out the drawer. He placed all the teeth inside a bag and kept it inside his back. He turned to the old man whose eyes were widening and said, “I will not harm you. In return, I hope you’ll cooperate with us and stop with the pointless struggle.”

Even though the drunkard said that he was unwilling, ultimately, he was Chen Ge’s ally. He followed Chen Ge’s orders and turned the bedsheet into a makeshift rope to tie up the old man.

“Alright, now that we have the teeth, we only need to be careful of the pistol that the boss might be armed with.” Chen Ge sighed in relief and used the pillow cover to gag the old man. Hearing the commotion, the doctor and Scissors came over.

“Don’t look at me, he told me to do all these.” Helplessness was written all over the drunkard’s face.

“I have no idea how many living humans are required to feed a Red

Specter touched by gluttony, but one thing is certain, there is no one in this hotel whose hands are not dyed by blood.” Chen Ge did not have the time to explain the situation to the rest. “We’d better leave this place first. It’s too easy to have our location exposed when we gather like this. I’ll explain the situation to you later.”

The group had just left the room when the fat boss’ voice came from the kitchen.

“It’s time for dinner!” The fat boss and a large man wearing a chef’s hat appeared while putting a meal cart. The meal cart was painted a rare red color. It looked quite festive, with nine pieces of cake and a pot of red tea placed on top of it.

“A cake?” Seeing the cake, Chen Ge was reminded of the scene from Xiao Bu’s game. How were four people supposed to share nine pieces of cake fairly with just a cut of the knife?

Perhaps it was coincidence that history repeated itself. Chen Ge, the doctor, Scissors, and the drunkard—there happened to be four of them.

“I suppose this is not dinner but supper. If you’re hungry, feel free to eat first.” The fat boss had no idea what had happened inside Room 1 and looked at the guests with a big smile on his face. Under his scrutiny, Chen Ge, the doctor, and Scissors acted like nothing happen. Only the drunkard revealed some apology on his face.

“Please take your seat.” The fat boss was very friendly. He worked with the chef to place the cakes on the table. The doctor, the drunkard, and Scissors took their seat one after another. Just as Chen Ge planned to take the seat, his heart raced because the sound of static appeared in his ears.

“Xu Yin is warning me? Is there some problem with the chair?” Chen Ge stood up again and dropped the backpack on the chair instead. None of the guests moved to touch the cake. Even the drunkard knew how dangerous it was to consume strange food at such a dangerous location.

“Don’t tell me you think I’ve done something with the cakes.” The fat boss chuckled good-naturedly. “This is a famed establishment. Please enjoy the food without worry. Everything served on the first night is free, but if you wish to stay longer, then I’ll have to take some compensation from you.”

Then, the fat boss and the chef worked together to push the cart away, leaving Chen Ge's group in the lobby.

"The boss doesn't look like a bad person." The drunkard's gaze kept wandering to Room 1. "If he knew that we've kidnapped his father, he would explode in fury."

"Look at this table before you come to that conclusion." Chen Ge moved the plates of cake away to reveal the many knife marks on the wooden table. Some of the marks looked deep like they had been made with the full strength of the wielder. "Do you know why there are nine pieces of cake when there are only four of us?"

"Why?" The drunkard just finished his question when he felt a sudden lightheadedness and almost collapsed to the ground.

"This is bad!" The doctor and Scissors noticed something was wrong instantly. They struggled to stand up but noticed that their strength refused to come to them.

"How did we trigger the trap?" Chen Ge thought that he was being very careful already, but there was still accident. "How come I don't feel dizzy at all?"

Chen Ge moved the backpack away and used Yin Yang Vision to inspect the seat, and he finally found something. The chair was old, and the seat was uneven. Hidden by the stains was a very small blood red pin. Upon closer inspection, Chen Ge realized that it was a human nail that had been soaked in blood.

With the cakes placed on the table, everyone's attention would be pulled to the cakes. The chairs were pulled out from the table, and very rarely would someone pay attention to the seat of the chairs.

"No wonder this is a 3.5-star scenario. Even with the guide, there's a chance of failing the mission." Chen Ge held his backpack and looked behind him. The kitchen door was open, and two heads poked out from it. The fat boss and the chef had been observing them. After realizing that three guests had fallen for their trap, the fat boss and the chef walked out from the kitchen with bright smiles. They held bone-flying cleavers in their hands.

"You're the only one left." The fat boss' tone changed. He had taken off the disguise.

Seeing the cleavers in the fat boss and chef's grasp, Chen Ge slowly revealed a smile. “They’re coming at me with cleavers, so this means that it is highly probable that the boss is not equipped with a gun. I’ll make my move once they get closer, and then they will have no chance to turn this around anymore.”

Chapter 648 - How to Choose [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

The boss was plotting against Chen Ge, but who was to say that Chen Ge was not plotting against the boss as well? Three of the four had fallen for the trap. With the number's advantage, the boss thought that they could make their move. He had no idea that for the group that he had received that night, ninety-nine percent of their combat ability came from Chen Ge alone.

Chen Ge did not act rashly when he first entered the hotel because he was cautious of the trump cards the boss might have, like the gun of a police officer and the Red Specter inside the fridge. Now, both parties believed that they had the upper hand, so their faces were all smiles.

The man might have the gun hidden away, and since there is a limited number of bullets, he might not employ it unless it is an emergency. Therefore, I need to apprehend them as soon as possible. I need to break their hands before they can do anything—that is the only way I can stop them from using the gun.

The way Chen Ge dealt with a problem was very straightforward. To prevent an accident from happening, he often resolved an issue by dealing with the source.

“Stop resisting us. We come in peace. We just want all of you to play a little game with us.” The boss thought that he had the power to make the shots so the expression on his face was very relaxed. “I believe that you have already noticed the problem with the chair. The venom on it would slowly make you lose your immunity and mobility. You’ll eventually die under the ravages of extreme pain.”

The boss took out a glass of clear water from his pocket. There were blood vessels moving inside it. “I only have one antidote with me. Of the four of you, only one will survive.”

“Your threat is hollow toward me because I am not infected by the venom.” Chen Ge pulled open the zipper of the backpack and reached his hand into it.

“Very soon, you’ll end up like them. I advise you don’t resist anymore. It is meaningless and pointless. This is to save you from losing an arm or a leg, and that might give you an unfair disadvantage in the upcoming game.” The folds of fat on the boss’ face were jiggling violently from excitement. He seemed to enjoy having living humans turn on each other. That feeling of taking all the beauty in the world, slamming it on the ground, and stomping on it gave him an improbable rush.

“Game? What kind of game do you wish to play?” Chen Ge was interested when the term ‘game’ mentioned. His Haunted House needed more means of entertainment. A normal game did not match the atmosphere inside the Haunted House, but games that were designed by mad people? That would be perfect.

An eerie Haunted House coupled with murderers’ favorite game, the visitors’ scream was already reverberating in Chen Ge’s mind.

“There are many games like cutting the cake, fighting for the chairs, and hide-and-seek.” The fat boss thought that he had a firm grip over the situation, so he patiently explained the games to Chen Ge.

Cruel game rules and a gaming experience meant to elicit the maximum screams from its participants. Just hearing the description made Chen Ge feel uncomfortable. “If I copy the rules fully, the visitors might send themselves to the hospital, but the basic rules of some of these games are not bad.”

“Visitors? What are you talking about?” The fat boss and the chef were only several meters away from Chen Ge.

“Oh, my apologies. I am used to having many of my friends with me, so I cultivated the habit of talking out loud.” Chen Ge did not explain too much to the boss about the relationship between having too many friends and talking out loud. He had drained the fat boss of his value, and Chen Ge was planning to remove his disguise as well.

“You’re bullying me two against one, and both of you are armed with sharp weapons. Even though I’m on the weaker side, I’m not going to go down so easily.” Chen Ge gritted his teeth and snarled dangerously.

“Actually, compared to using venom, we prefer to deal with fresh kills. The more you struggle, the more exhilarating it’ll be for us!” The fat boss could not stop laughing. His whole body was shaking, turning him into a quivering meat mountain.

“The more the victims struggle, the more exhilarating it’ll be for you?” Chen Ge waited from the fat boss to walk toward him before revealing his smile. “Then it’s perfect because you’ll be in for much exhilaration tonight!”

Tossing the backpack away, Chen Ge gripped the handle that was shaped like a human spine. He raised the hammer high and swung it heavily on the fat boss’ chess.

Bang!

Chen Ge confirmed that the fat boss was a living person because the blood that he spat out was still warm. “Well, is that exhilarating enough for you?”

Considering that the meat on his body might soften the blood, Chen Ge raised the hammer again and hit with the maximum strength that he could summon. The fat boss’ large body was unable to suffer the blow and crumbled to the ground. Without taking a break, before the chef at the back could respond, Chen Ge rushed forward to break the fat boss’ arms and one of his legs.

Even though he had the upper hand, Chen Ge would not let his guard down. He was not sure if the fat boss was carrying any gun on him, so he opted for the safest method. Now that he had lost both of his arms, even if he was armed with a pistol, the boss would have much difficulty operating one.

Cruel, cunning, cautious, and determined—that was the impression that Chen Ge had left on the chef. He was still considering the type of menu he could make with the few guests when he saw his boss being hit with the hammer until he spat out blood!

Just how shameless and cunning did one have to be in order to hide such a large iron hammer inside the backpack and carry it by one’s side?

The chef’s eyes skipped with uncertainty. The cleaver that he held in his hand looked like a child’s toy in comparison to the iron hammer. He was combing his mind to come up with a solution. While he raised his head, he accidentally caught Chen Ge’s eyes.

The scary and cruel gaze caused him to shiver. Just as he thought that Chen Ge was about to tell him something, Chen Ge raised the hammer and lunged toward him. The man did not waste any time with words, and he was careful enough to not allow the chef to catch him off-guard.

Everything moved too fast. Before his brain could come up with a solution, the pain was already parsing through all of his body. The cleaver in his hand clattered to the ground. The chef looked as his arms weakened and his fingers released. It was an out of body experience.

“I...” The chef wanted to say something, but Chen Ge was not going to give him the chance. He was too careful to allow something like that. Before he gained control of the entire situation, he would not waste time with words and allow his opponents to disturb him with their words as well. With another few whacks from the hammer, even the chef collapsed to the ground.

“Alright, now is the time for you to speak. Tell me, where is the antidote that can help them recover their mobility?” Chen Ge first grabbed the antidote away from the fat boss’ grasp. Staring at the blood vessels wiggling inside the glass, he was reminded of the battle that he had a long time ago at Coffin Village with the ghost stories society. At the time, Wu Fei had been holding a bottle of blood vessels similar to this one.

“I...”

The chef was about to say something when the fat boss yelled loudly over him, “Don’t be tricked by him!”

“I haven’t even given you any promises, and other than that, I’m not one to go back on my word.” Chen Ge squatted down before the fat boss and started to search his body. The chef held his words in, causing his face to go red, but in the end, he still did not say a worthwhile word.

“If I were you, I definitely would not give this glass of medicine to them.” Even though the boss’ arms were incapacitated, a piece of his sternum was caved in, and blood kept pouring out from his mouth, his attitude was forceful and tough.

“Why?” Chen Ge knew about the fat boss’ trump card. He was probably waiting for the old man to use the teeth to summon the Red Specter.

“Can you really trust the words of your enemy? Actually, this is a glass of venom as well. I wish to enjoy your most despairing emotions; I would have the four of you kill each other and rewarded the final victory with this antidote that is actually a bottle of venom. Then, I'll enjoy the gloom of despair falling over his face as he slowly perishes from this world." The fat boss' mad raving was loud and booming. His eyes kept flitting to the door of Room 1.

"This is such a coincidence because I too enjoy the look of despair on people's faces." Chen Ge reached his hand into his pocket to pull out a piece of black cloth. He opened it before the boss' eyes, and inside the cloth sat many smooth teeth. "You keep glancing at the room, is it because it is the place where these things are hidden?"

The fat boss instantly went quiet. He tried to cover up the shock that was travelling through his body, but he was betrayed by his facial expression.

"Tell me, where is the antidote?" Chen Ge swung the hammer around. "My patience is limited."

Both the boss and the chef were silent. After one minute, the boss opened his lips slowly to say, "I can tell you where the real antidote is, but you have to promise to let both of us go. Take your friends and leave this place after you obtain the antidotes."

"No problem. Honestly, I have no interest in either of you at all." Chen Ge was telling the truth. All he was doing was for the sake of the Red Specter inside the hotel.

"The antidotes are kept at a very secure location; I'll bring you to them myself." The boss' face was filled with regret and sadness. He did appear like a man who had surrendered. "Mind giving me a hand?"

Chen Ge had shattered both of his arms and one of his legs, he could only hop now.

"Don't play tricks on me. Tell me the place first, and I'll consider whether to bring you there or not." Chen Ge searched the chef and discovered that he was carrying another bottle of the antidote. Perhaps these two bottles were prepared for themselves.

"Fine, I'll tell you. They're in the drawer of the third room after you turn left on the stairs leading to the second floor." The fat boss cooperated fully. The chef next to him had a flat expression like he was purposely making that face to prevent Chen Ge from getting any information from him.

“They’re on the second floor?” Chen Ge thought back to Xiao Bu’s game, and he did not think that he had even ventured up to the second floor. To prevent any unsightly accident, Chen Ge incapacitated the chef before helping the boss get to the second floor. The room that the boss described was actually his own room. The room was decorated with many old pictures, but strangely enough, all the pictures were of the boss and a woman.

“Is that your mother?”

“Yes, I have a bad relationship with my father, so I only keep pictures I have with my mother.” A happy smile appeared on the fat boss’ face. “My mother is very pretty, the prettiest person I know. Perhaps if there’s a chance, I can take you to meet her.”

That sentence would have sounded perfectly normal if said by a friend, but Chen Ge was not close enough to the boss to be invited to meet his mother. Plus, Chen Ge could not tell whether the boss was telling the truth or not—the woman in the pictures might not even be his mother.

“The antidotes are in here.” The boss had Chen Ge open the drawer. Inside were three sealed glass tubes and there were gray sediments inside them.

“You sure?” Chen Ge put all the sealed tubes inside his backpack and carried the fat boss back to the first-floor lobby. He walked to the dining table and placed the three sealed tubes on the table. “Can you still understand what I’m saying?”

“Yes, my mind is working perfectly fine. I simply cannot control my body.” The drunkard had just witnessed Chen Ge take down two enemies on his own, so his attitude became much friendlier.

“These three tubes were taken out from the boss’ room. He said that they are the antidotes, but I don’t think things are that simple.” Chen Ge then took out the two bottles that he had found on the staff and placed them on the table. “We cannot skip over the fact that the boss might be lying, and these two could be the real antidotes. Unfortunately, the boss only has three bottles of them. I am unable to find any extra. If we use one as an experiment, we won’t have enough antidote for everyone.”

Then, Chen Ge ran to pick up the white cat, which was looking at the scene, hiding in a far corner. He held the cat's little head in his arms. "You've consumed similar blood vessels in Coffin Village. I'll open these two different 'antidotes' in a bit, and I'll need your help to identify the correct antidote."

Chen Ge had no idea whether the white cat understood him or not. He first opened one of the tubes that contained the gray sediments and placed it before the white cat. A faded stench wafted out from inside the tube, and the white cat struggled to escape. Closing the cap, Chen Ge put it away and grabbed the glass with the blood vessel.

Just as he opened the lid, the white cat seemed to smell something. Its ears perked up, and the dual-colored pupils stared at the glass in Chen Ge's hand. When Chen Ge fully opened the glass, a wail escaped from the glass, and the blood vessels inside started moving like they were trying to wiggle their way out. The white cat's eyes became blood red like something inside its blood was being activated. It tried to leap at Chen Ge's hand.

Chen Ge quickly screwed the glass shut, and then the cat finally calmed down.

"These blood vessels are able to attract the white cat's attention, so they're definitely abnormal. They might be similar to the stuff the ghost stories society' member retrieved from behind the door." Chen Ge screwed the lid tight and placed all the containers together. "My cat had an extreme reaction to the bottles with the blood. Personally speaking, I think the ones with the blood are the real antidote, and the boss was lying to us."

Chen Ge voiced his thoughts, and the three passengers each had a different reaction, which he saw them clearly. "The choice is in your hands. I will not intervene, but I hope you'll consider it carefully before you make your choice."

"I believe you." The first to make the choice was Scissors. He used the last remnant of his strength to grab the glass filled with blood.

"The brighter the color, the more unsecure it is. That has always been the rule in the natural world. I've studied pharmacy and medicine before, and there is no way I am able to convince myself to consume blood that appears to be alive." After some hesitation, the doctor finally pulled one of the tubes with the gray sediment to his side.

Two passengers had made the choice, so the drunkard was the only one remaining. He had full trust in the doctor and Chen Ge, but at that moment, their opinions split, and he did not know how to decide.

Psychologically speaking, he was more leaning toward the gray tube, but he felt like the boss might be playing some reverse psychology trick, purposely making the antidote look like venom.

Three minutes passed in his contemplation. The sound of the knocking at the entrance grew. With the threat of the door being crashed through at any moment, the drunkard finally made his choice. He picked up the last remaining glass with the blood.

Now, who was going to try it first? That was another test human nature. After all, the first tester was putting their life on the line for the experiment.

“I guess I’ll be the first tester.” Scissors struggled to sit up. “Can you help me open the lid?”

“Sure.” When Chen Ge walked to the man’s side, Scissors took the chance to whisper to Chen Ge. “My phone is my left pocket of my pants. All the information about my big brother is inside it. If I’ve made the wrong choice, I hope when you come across him, you’ll be able to lend him a hand. Of course, that is if you happen to come across him. I don’t need you to purposely go looking for him.”

“I promise.” Chen Ge’s admiration for Scissors grew. A truly courageous person was not one who said that they were not afraid of anything but one who had the courage to make a decision that they would not regret even though they might be shaking like a leaf inside.

“Thank you.” Scissors raised the glass to his lips and tipped it back. The blood in the glass appeared to actively slither into his throat following the echoes of someone’s faraway cries.

Chapter 649 - Greater Red Spectre [2 in 1]

Chapter 649: Greater Red Spectre [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

There were not that many blood vessels in the glass, probably only one-fifth of the amount consumed by the white cat back in Coffin Village. After swallowing the ‘medicine’, Scissors was assaulted by pain. He grabbed his head as he collapsed to the ground. Various wailing ghost faces seemed to surface in his eyes, and the man’s facial expression kept changing to match the ghost faces that appeared in his eyes.

To counteract the pain, Scissors clawed out flesh wounds on his body, and the scariest thing was that underneath the fresh wounds were many thin, tiny blood vessels that were slithering around like fish.

The pain persisted for about ten minutes. Scissors’ entire body was soaked in sweat. After the last wave of pain faded away, he stood up from the ground with his teeth gritted. The wound on his face kept leaking blood, and the blood trailed down his face to dye his clothes’ collar. It added a unique presence to Scissors’ appearance.

“I’m still alive!” As he slowly regained control of his body, Scissors climbed up from the ground. This was a sign that the glass with the blood vessels was the real antidote. He gripped both of his fists tightly before slowly releasing them. Finally, he walked to stand before Chen Ge. “Thank you.”

“I didn’t do anything. It was all part of your choice.” After saying that, Chen Ge turned to look at the other two passengers. The doctor shook his head and put the glass with the gray sediment down. He had an apologetic look on his face.

The drunkard was hesitating over whether he should take the glass because he was afraid of the extreme pain. In the end, under the encouragement from Scissors, the drunkard tossed the glass of blood down his throat.

“Watch over him, I’ll go have a little chat with the boss.” Chen Ge picked up the tube with the gray sediment and walked over to stand before the fat boss. He twisted open the lid. "Inside here is the venom, right?"

"This is also the antidote; I'm not lying to you!" The boss still refused to admit his deceit. Chen Ge did not want to waste time arguing with the man. He pried the man's mouth open and was about to pour the tube of gray sediment down his throat.

"Wait a minute! Three of you were poisoned, and there are only two bottles of antidote. I'll tell you where the third bottle of antidote is!" The fat boss struggled violently while lying on the ground.

"The third bottle?" Chen Ge's interest was piqued. The blood vessels seemed to have had a positive influence on the white cat, so if there was an extra bottle, he could have brought it back to the Haunted House with him to study it slowly.

"Yes, this time, I will not lie to you!" The boss' forehead was covered in cold sweat as his beady eyes stared directly at Chen Ge.

"Fine, I'll trust you one more time, where is the third bottle of antidote?" Chen Ge yanked the fat boss off the ground and deposited him on the chair. As the pain ravaged him, the fat boss grimaced from the impact. "Actually, I placed the last antidote inside the fridge in the kitchen. It's inside the top, the freezer layer."

"The fridge inside the kitchen?" If not for the fact that he had played Xiao Bu's game before, Chen Ge might have believed the words of the fat boss, but he knew perfectly well that there was no antidote in the kitchen but a Red Specter.

"If you don't believe me, you can bring me with you." The fat boss' eyes started to drift, and they kept consciously and subconsciously glancing toward Chen Ge's pocket, which carried the teeth.

"You really won't ever learn your lesson." Chen Ge pried open the fat boss' mouth and started to pour the venom into the man's throat. Both of his arms incapacitated, the fat boss who could only operate one of his legs tried his best to struggle. He still had no idea that his plot had been seen through by Chen Ge already.

"I'm not lying to you! I really keep the antidote inside the fridge. If you don't believe me, you can go to take a look!"

"Even at this moment, you still want to harm me, your heart has completely darkened; there is no salvation for someone like you.” Chen Ge raised the hammer and ruined the fat boss’ other good leg. Then, he found a cloth and stuck it inside the fat boss’ mouth. The knocking sound from the hotel entrance grew, a signal that Chen Ge did not have much time left.

“How are you two recovering?” Chen Ge looked at Scissors and the drunkard, who appeared like they had just been salvaged from a body of water. Their bodies were drenched in sweat, and they looked much worse for wear.

“I’ve never felt better. My whole body is buzzing with energy. It’s like time has been turned back to ten years ago.” The drunkard climbed up from the ground. He waved his fists, cutting through the wind.

“If you’re feeling better, come and help me. Go and find some rope from the hotel to tie both of them to the chairs. If there is no rope, just tear up some bedsheets to make some makeshift ones.” After Chen Ge gave the two of them their assignment, he turned to look at the doctor. “Don’t worry, I’ll go look in the other corners of the hotel. There should be some other antidotes lying around.”

“Okay.” The doctor leaned on the table weakly. “You sure you’re not going to the kitchen to take a look? I’m curious, how did you know the boss was lying to you? Is it through micro expression or psychology?”

“If you’re that curious what’s inside the fridge, I can take you there to show you.” Chen Ge tied the fat boss and the chef to the chairs. Then he dragged them to deposit them at the entrance of the hotel. Once the headless ghost barged into the building, they would be the first to greet her. Once the female ghost attacked the two of them, Chen Ge would immediately initiate the next step of his plan—release the glutton ghost inside the fridge and have the two Red Specters fight it out. Then, he would stand to reap the reward in the end.

“The antidote is definitely not inside the fridge; we’d better make use of the time that we have left to search the other places inside this hotel.” Chen Ge found the white cat and dangled the empty bottle that carried the blood vessels earlier before its nostrils. Then he put the empty bottles away and pointed down the hotel corridor. “Remember this scent. Now, go!”

The pair of multi-colored eyes looked at Chen Ge with confusion, and all the white cat did was sit down and start to rest.

“Brother, why are you treating your cat like a dog?” The drunkard helped to carry the doctor off the table. Seeing how Chen Ge was acting, he had a really hard time reconciling him with the crazed man earlier who was dragging the hammer around.

“I’m just trying to unlock its full potential.” Seeing the white cat crawl under the table after much persuasion from Chen Ge, the latter was feeling a mounting headache. The cat had gotten a lot more easily scared compared to when he first got it. After clearing all the trash away, the group went up to the second floor.

There was a sign that said no entry placed in the middle of the corridor, and there were blood stains that had not been cleaned on the ground. Following the blood trail, Chen Ge pushed open the door of one of the rooms. The scene inside was a bit too gory to describe. In any case, it appeared like a great struggle had once happened in there, and every surface was covered in blood.

“Based on the viscosity of the blood, the time of the death for the victim should be within the past three hours. In other words, before we arrived at this hotel, a murder had just taken place here.” Chen Ge squatted on the ground. He had gotten used to scene like this.

The drunkard nodded in admiration, and then he lightly nudged the doctor behind him. “Are you sure he’s just a worker at a theme park? Could he be some kind of spy the law enforcement has placed inside the theme park?”

Facing the question from the drunkard, the doctor could only smile bitterly. God only knew why this young man was so familiar with the processing of crime scenes. The group searched through the second floor thoroughly. It turned out that the second floor was no different from a human meat packing factory. If the fat boss and the chef once had human nature, that had completely disappeared. Human lives were nothing but toys and food in their eyes.

“Let’s go back to the first floor to take a look.” They rummaged through the entire building, but they still could not find the antidote. The blood vessels inside the bottle appeared to be something incredibly rare even in the world behind the door.

“So sorry for being such a burden. How about we leave this place for now?” The doctor had trouble moving his body, but his mind was still very clear and conscious. “The female ghost is stalking us at the front door. So, if we sneak out through the backdoor, she probably will not discover us.”

“The ghost has already targeted us. The only way to leave this place without earning her ire is to get her to shift her hatred to someone else.” Chen Ge led the three passengers back to the first floor. He studied the fat boss and the chef who were tied up at the entrance. His cutting gaze caused the boss and the chef to shake like leaves. “This is not enough insurance. I have to figure out a way to ensure that the headless woman will attack them, or else the next step of my plan will have some problem taking off.”

Under the despairing scrutiny from the two ‘victims’, Chen Ge walked into the kitchen to find a large basin normally used to clean vegetables. He filled half of it up with pipe water before taking it out with him.

“What are you planning to do?”

A bad feeling curled around the chef and the fat boss’ hearts. Chen Ge ignored them and took out the three glasses with the gray sediment from his backpack. He opened them and tossed all the liquid inside the basin. After mixing them with a swirl, Chen Ge broke down the table and used the leg of the table as a support beam to hold the basin above the door frame. Once the female ghost pushed open the door, the basin would fall, and the content would splash on the person underneath. This was a very common prank, but the target this time was a Red Specter.

“I’m sure the gray sediment is nothing good. Once she is drenched in this stuff, the female ghost will definitely go on a murderous rampage and lash out against the living creatures who are closest to her.” Chen Ge turned back to glance at the chef and the fat boss. The despair in their hearts was already leaking out from their eyes. If they were given a second chance, they definitely would not have welcomed Chen Ge’s group to stay for the night.

“If there’s a devil in this world, I’m pretty sure it will look just like this.” The drunkard carried the doctor to stay away from the carnage. He sighed surreptitiously in relief upon seeing the trap that Chen Ge was setting up. “Thankfully, we’re currently on the same side...”

After Chen Ge dealt with the mechanism, he waved at Scissors and the rest. “Come with me.”

He picked up the white cat from the ground and herded everyone to the second floor. He turned into the first room on the left and then used Doctor Skull-cracker's hammer to shatter the wooden board around the windowsill. "The rest of you should stay in this room and try to make more ropes from any material in the room. If there's an accident, escape as fast as you can from this window."

"What are you planning to do?" Scissors sensed the discrepancy in Chen Ge's tone. He could not really describe it, but it sounded like a mixture of worry and excitement.

"Don't worry about it. For now, you won't be able to be of much help to me, so try your best to survive." Chen Ge looked out the window. "The residential area that we came from earlier should be clean for now. When I signal for you to run, jump out from this window and rush to that place. Go there and wait for me."

"Okay, you better be careful."

"Don't worry. Oh, by the way, take my cat with you." Chen Ge placed the white cat inside the bedroom. He was about to turn to leave the room when he felt a heavy pressure on his shoulder. He turned back to look, and the white cat had already jumped on his shoulder and assumed its perch there. The cat's eyes looked at Chen Ge with suspicion, as if asking, Are you going to abandon me?

"If you're willing, then follow along. Just make sure you don't go running amok once the Red Specter appears." Chen Ge carried his backpack and returned to the first floor. He opened the door that led to the kitchen. At first glance, it looked like a normal kitchen—there was nothing particularly eye-catching about it.

"If this place is the same as described in Xiao Bu's game, there should be a hidden room behind the fridge. The glutton ghost's head is inside the top section of the fridge, and her enormous body is stuck inside the hidden room." Walking to the fridge, Chen Ge noticed that the power of the fridge was not even plugged in. In other words, it was nothing more than a decoration.

"It should not be long now before the door of the hotel is broken down." Chen Ge reached out to grab the handle of the fridge, and he used Yin Yang Vision to stare at the entrance of the hotel. The headless woman was cautious, but anger and provocation slowly made her lose her rationality. She could sense that the person whom she was looking for was right inside this building. After a wait of a full ten minutes, the patience of the headless woman was finally exhausted. Blood vessels crawled over the entrance door like some kind of plant, and at the same time, Chen Ge could feel the fridge before him vibrating like something inside was about to awaken.

BANG!

Once the blood vessels covered the entire door, the hotel entrance was finally broken down. The female ghost cradled her head in her arms and entered the hotel with fury burning in her eyes.

Once she took the first step, the basin above the door naturally fell down pulled by the force of gravity. Countless blood vessels weaved to form a web to toss the iron basin aside. The female ghost was surprised that someone was so courageous as to play such a juvenile prank on her, but she reacted with lightning fast reflexes.

The basin was shoved back, but its content mixed with the gray sediment splashed onto the blood vessel, and something surprising happened. The gray sediment seemed to have some kind of restraining power over even a Red Specter's blood vessels. It melted through the web of blood, and the head in the female ghost's arms echoed a shrill scream. She tore the blackened blood vessels out and abandoned them.

Losing the support, the basin above the door fell down right onto the female ghost. It landed squarely on the stump where the neck should have been, and it even created a clear 'bang' sound.

"What is that gray sediment? Could it be related to the black blood that the ghost stories society carried inside the wooden boxes?" After gaining Doctor Gao's approval, Chen Ge had assumed the role of the new chairperson. Unfortunately, to deal with him, the society had exhausted pretty much everything that they had. Chen Ge had gained a lot of new information but zero practical advantages.

His adventure to Li Wan City though was different. The shadow had prepared many years for the cultivation of the ghost fetus, so there would definitely be plenty of 'unique products' found behind the door!

"I was too careless. The hotel was built in the middle of Li Wan City and is home to a powerful Red Specter like the glutton ghost. Therefore, I should have known the things that boss would collect must be extremely valuable." Chen Ge concluded the lesson in his heart. "If I have the chance to enter other buildings, as long as there's something worth studying, I should take it with me."

At the entrance, the headless woman stood at the middle of door with a basin over her shoulders. The head in her arms was twisted from anger. The blood red eyes were swamped by endless fury.

In less than a second, blood vessels about ten times the volume from before spurted out from her neck. They punctured all the objects, both living and dead around her! It did not take long for the blood vessels to cover half of the hotel!

It was too fast. In just the blink of an eye, the fat boss and the chef had lost any sign of life.

I cannot allow her to notice that I'm hiding here. If I'm stuck inside the kitchen, it's definitely over for me!

Chen Ge yanked the fridge open. The fridge was connected to the wall behind it, and a gaping jaw revealed itself before Chen Ge's eyes.

Without the time to study it closely, Chen Ge took two steps back and tossed the teeth in his pocket alongside the bag of cloth into the open mouth. After that, Chen Ge retreated out of the kitchen.

The fury of the headless woman at the entrance was still burning. Once her eyes landed on Chen Ge, she let out another scream. With her enemy standing before her, she broke the rules of Li Wan City and stepped fully into the hotel.

Being targeted by a Red Specter was not a good feeling. Chen Ge took a mad rush toward Room 1. He had just left the kitchen when he heard the heavy breathing coming from behind him. Turning back to look, the walls of the kitchen pulsed with many blood veins. The wall that was adjacent to the fridge started to crumble and collapse. An intensely ugly blood red monster finally showed itself.

“Such a big monster?” The first impression that the Red Specter inside the fridge left Chen Ge was her size. Her head looked relatively normal, just slightly bigger than a normal person’s, but her body was large enough to fill an entire room.

Chen Ge had seen many Red Specters before, but this was the first time that he had seen a Red Specter so large in size.

“That is also the ugliest thing of all the Red Specters I’ve encountered.” Working at the Haunted House, Chen Ge was used to painting some purposely-horrendous make-up, so he had a high threshold for the unsightly and ugly, but even so, when he saw the Red Specter inside the kitchen, he still moved his eyes away after a brief glance.

Pure terror and ugliness felt insufficient to describe this woman. A deranged expression hung on the basketball-sized head, and a blood haze leaked out from the gigantic body. Even though he was faraway, he could smell the stench that the haze carried. Chen Ge did not dare turn back again. The extremely ugly Red Specter gave him a very powerful sense of danger. The woman should be at the same level as the well ghost in Coffin Village. In other words, this Red Specter was powerful enough to carry an entire three-star scenario on her own.

“Li Wan City itself is a 3.5-star scenario. Not considering the influence caused by the uncontrollable door, this monster should be the strongest Red Specter in Li Wan City. No wonder the hotel is placed in the middle of the town.” His brain was moving fast. Chen Ge’s feet did not slow down, and soon, he reached the door to Room 1.

He grabbed the doorknob, but before he could do anything else, a skull dangling from endless blood vessels flew at him from afar. The eyes were shining with red fury—the headless woman swore to kill Chen Ge!

Calling Xu Yin in his heart, Chen Ge had done all the preparation to retreat, but at that moment, the door to the kitchen slowly creaked open, and the wall around it seemed to come alive. Many thick blood veins surfaced on the walls, and they pulsed dangerously like there was blood running inside them.

The wooden door creaked noisily. The headless woman stopped her attack toward Chen Ge. The blood vessels dragged the head back into her protective arms.

“How come it feels like she’s playing with her head like a kite?” Chen Ge made use of this opportunity to escape. The two Red Specters had crossed paths—his goal was successful, so he only had one last thing to do. Training his focus, Chen Ge looked into his heart.

“Zhang Ya? Are you feeling better?”

“Zhang Ya? Can you hear me?”

“Zhang Ya? I’ve found you many delicious treats!”

“Sis! It’s time to wake up! It’s time for dinner!”

Chen Ge, who did not have a shift to his expression when he faced off against the Red Specter, started to shiver in cold sweat. If ninety-nine percent of the combat power of the four passengers resided within Chen Ge, then ninety-nine percent of Chen Ge’s confidence came from Zhang Ya.

A Red Specter that could carry a three-star scenario single-handedly was far beyond the strength of Xu Yin. Even with Men Nan’s help, it would only drag the struggle out for another few seconds. As he called Zhang Ya’s name, Chen Ge rummaged through his backpack.

Chen Ge had many trump cards, he had the weakest of all Red Specters, Men Nan, and the strongest of Lesser Red Specters, Yan Danian. He had many friends, but none of them were powerful enough to help him stop the glutton ghost. When he was making up the plan, Chen Ge had considered many factors. He had made sure to not miss out on any details, but the only thing that he had forgotten was the contingency where Zhang Ya was unable to awaken.

“Once a Red Specter consumes too much, they will fall into a slumber. With Zhang Ya’s current power level, even if she consumed an entire normal Red Specter, she wouldn’t have fallen asleep. Does this mean that the few droplets of blood dripped out from Doctor Gao when we were inside the door contained more hatred than a normal Red Specter?" When Chen Ge was chasing after the water spirit, he had accidentally entered a burnt building. Behind one of the doors there, he had accidentally run into the missing Doctor Gao.

Even though it was just one glance, he confirmed that the 'monster' was Doctor Gao. To interrupt the shadow's plan, Chen Ge had even left a message for Doctor Gao to trick him to come to Eastern Jiujiang's Li Wan City. Now that he thought about it, if the worlds behind the door were interconnected, a large nightmare made up from endless nightmares, then there was a very high chance that Doctor Gao would come to Li Wan City.

Jiujiang's map appeared in Chen Ge's mind. Doctor Gao had destroyed the door in the underground morgue at Jiujiang Medical University. He had disappeared behind the door at that location, and the second time he appeared, it was at the residential area next to the rehabilitative school. After connecting Jiujiang Medical University, rehabilitative school, and Li Wan City, these three locations happened to form a straight line on the map of Jiujiang.

"Doctor Gao has been moving in the world behind the door, so the thing he's looking for should be in Eastern Jiujiang as well." After realizing that, Chen Ge did not feel relaxed but got even more nervous.

The glutton ghost was very powerful that she could support a three-star scenario alone. But when Doctor Gao was still alive, he could already make use of the many rules of the world behind the door to create a three-star scenario. Now, after his death, he would turn into something more powerful than a Red Specter. They were not even on the same level.

The door in Li Wan City had gone out of control, and because of that, the scenario was deemed a 3.5-star mission by the black phone.

At the underground morgue, Doctor Gao used his living body to suffer all the despair within the scenario and consumed an entire door. The door was destroyed with an unimaginable method, but as the door-pusher, Doctor Gao had gotten out of control. Chen Ge had the impression that Doctor Gao himself could be seen as a mobile 3.5-star scenario.

"Doctor Gao might appear in Li Wan City, and the shadow is serving the ghost fetus which forms a four-star scenario has to be cautious of his trump cards. That is not accounting for the door-pusher at Li Wan City—Xiao Bu. Even though I have Zhang Ya and my employees to accompany me for this mission, I might not run away with any advantage. Currently, there is no way of telling how this might end up.”

Chen Ge could not influence the perspective of Doctor Gao and Xiao Bu. All he could do was try to get stronger when the chance allowed him to. The two Red Specters did not hold the stalemate for long. As Chen Ge expected, when the glutton ghost saw the two bodies at the door, she went on a rampage.

The more powerful a Red Specter, the crueller and more savage they would be. The ugly Red Specter that came out from the kitchen had her obscenely large body connected to the entire hotel. The blood gaze that carried with it a horrible stench permeated through the walls, ceiling, and ground. The pulsing blood veins started to appear everywhere.

The scene before his eyes reminded Chen Ge of the world behind the door at the underground morgue. It gave him the feeling that he had been swallowed into the stomach of a monster.

“This is not looking good...” Chen Ge tried to call Zhang Ya again, but she did not give him any response. It appeared like she would only show up once he was in serious life-threatening danger.

“The fight between two tigresses will lead to many injuries—this is a perfect chance! But as a living human, it’s too difficult for me to attempt to take advantage of a Red Specter.” Chen Ge held his breath as he retreated to the stairs. However, he was unwilling to just leave like that, so he decided to wait for a while.

Chapter 651: Clearing the Scene [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

As an occupant of Li Wan City, the headless woman had to know that the hotel was the glutton monster's territory. However, she probably did not expect the ghost to awaken from its slumber the moment that she stepped into the hotel.

Assuming that they were not too far away from their prey, a Red Specter only needed one second to kill a normal person in ten different ways, and that was why she had been so willing to step into the hotel. From her perspective, she would have done the deed and retreated from the scene before the glutton woman woke up. She was unable to match the glutton ghost's strength, but the glutton ghost was definitely going to have a hard time chasing her across town.

The plan was indeed perfect, but unfortunately, her opponent was Chen Ge. The moment that she treated Chen Ge as a normal person was the moment that she had lost the game. In a Red Specter's eyes, a normal human was nothing more than food that could provide them with resentment, and in Chen Ge's eyes, a normal Red Specter was food that could improve his employees' power level. It went both ways, and that was the fairness in Chen Ge's eyes.

With the exceptional handling of the timing, the headless woman was so focused on Chen Ge that she charged to the spot where the kitchen led out to the corridor, and that was the moment that the glutton monster chose to leak out from the kitchen.

They were so close that the headless woman lost her chance of evading, so she had no choice but to suffer the first blow from the glutton monster. Then, she tried her best to escape.

The glutton monster seemed to have seen through the headless woman's plan. The enormous body that was possessed by hatred and hunger barreled forward like the stampede of a giant elephant. The haze dispersed, and the whole building rocked as if coming alive. The blood veins on the walls pulsed with their specific rhythm, and they detached from the walls like threads of chains. They intertwined over the entrance of the hotel, sealing up the headless woman's retreat.

Without attempting to shield the resentment in her eyes, blood poured out from the stump on the headless woman's shoulders. She knew that she did not have the upper hand, so she did not blindly go up against the glutton monster. Instead, she gathered her strength and pooled the blood vessels around her body.

The decapitated skull was sewn back to her body. This should be what she had looked like at the moment of her death. She was wearing a pajamas, every inch of the clothes dyed red by blood.

The lash of blood veins aimed at her. The woman tried to evade, but the blood was moving too fast for her. Unable to escape, she used her own blood to wreath her body to shield herself from the impact.

Without even moving a finger, the glutton monster only needed to manipulate those thick chains of blood veins to give the headless woman a hard time.

"The difference in power is so big!" The best possible result for Chen Ge was an evenly-matched situation, best if the two Red Specters were equally weakened after the battle. However, based on what he was seeing, the glutton monster was going to experience a landslide victory. She could easily torture the headless woman and kill her without suffering an injury.

In Xiao Bu's game, Chen Ge had controlled Xiao Bu to leave once the two Red Specters started fighting each other. He had no idea what had actually happened later.

"Should I try to help the headless woman even the playing field somewhat?" Now, three choices were placed before Chen Ge. One was to help the headless woman fight the glutton monster. After the glutton monster was apprehended, he would turn to deal with the headless woman. There were too many extenuating factors to this plan. For one, the headless woman could use Chen Ge as a shield and escape when he tackled the glutton monster. After all, there was no sign that she was willing to work together with Chen Ge.

The second choice was to do nothing. After the glutton monster heavily injured the headless woman, he would have Zhang Ya deal with the glutton monster. That was the safest plan, but the biggest issue was that Zhang Ya had given no indication that she was willing to show herself. No matter how hard Chen Ge tried to summon her, she gave him zero response.

The third choice was to turn and leave. Other than Zhang Ya, Chen Ge did not even have a complete Red Specter. He could rely on the advantage of numbers to take down a Red Specter, but when the enemy was a Greater Red Specter, his only choice was to run.

“Perhaps I’ve come too soon. If I had one week, I might be able to help Xu Yin find his heart, and Bai Qiulin might have successfully digested Xiong Qing’s heart. By then, I would have two Red Specters on my side, and the options given to me would be much greater.” Chen Ge lamented over the short number of hours in a day even though he had used every moment that he could to the maximum potential. He worked day and night—any other person in his place would have collapsed already.

Chen Ge stopped to consider for one or two minutes, but the situation inside the hotel had started to change. The large body of the monster started to split open to reveal many small gaps, and a woman’s voice could be heard coming from within.

“Hungry...” It was impossible to tell which of the gaps first issued this voice. Initially, the voice was very weak, but gradually, all the mouths started to make this voice. Endless mouths opened and closed in unison on the large body. It was a scene that was hard to describe. The headless woman felt the pressure, and she started to move even faster. From the beginning, she never thought of fighting—her goal all along had been to try and escape.

“Hungry, hungry, I’m so hungry!” The glutton monster wailed, and the mouths on the body tore open. A large number of blood vessels weaved together, and it appeared like numerous slimy tongues were reaching out from inside the many mouths.

“This thing is too powerful.” With his Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge managed to clearly see the minute differences of the many mouths on the monster’s body. It appeared like they belonged to different people. “She keeps the ‘mouth’ of the ‘food’ that is sent into her stomach? The mouths on her body belong to her victims?”

The blood red tongue slithered toward the headless woman. The space for the headless woman to evade was getting smaller. She was forced into the left corner of the lobby, but eventually, one of the tongues managed to curl around her leg.

“This is not good!” Chen Ge stood up. The power level between the two Red Specters was too drastically different. The battle might end in the blink of an eye. It was time for him to make the choice. “Even if I help the headless woman, she might not accept my help. However, if I escape, the glutton monster will only become stronger after consuming the headless woman.”

A normal Red Specter might go into a long slumber after consuming another Red Specter, but Chen Ge felt like this glutton monster might have the ability to shorten that hibernation time down to its minimum. She had been claiming that she was hungry. The monster’s body was like a black hole that could never be filled, so it was not crazy to assume that she might possess a digestive power that was far greater than other Specters.

“The gluttonous woman is tasked with protecting the hotel, and the hotel is placed at the middle of Li Wan City. Obviously, the shadow has great trust in her—that is the only reason he has given her such an important location to watch over. She’ll become scarier after consuming the headless woman, and that will not be good for me when I fight the shadow in the future.” Chen Ge looked far into the future. He did not limit his sight to the situation that was only before him. “If only Zhang Ya was here, this wouldn’t be that complicated then.”

Chen Ge turned back to look at his shadow. He had originally only intended to glance at it, but he noticed with a shock that his shadow was shifting at an incredibly slow speed.

“Zhang Ya has been hiding inside my shadow. What is she up to?” Chen Ge did not have the time to stop and think because the headless woman’s scream echoed throughout the lobby. Chen Ge turned back to the battle, and he saw the headless woman voluntarily break off her left leg that was caught by tongue. After it detached from her body, the leg dissolved into a mass of blood vessels, and they were dragged by the tongue back into the glutton monster’s body.

With the taste of fresh blood, the monster became more crazed. Her whole body was shaking with pure excitement. The lips kept opening and closing as more blood tongues reached out toward the headless woman.

Forced the corner, the headless woman knew that there was no way that she would be able to escape. The blood vessels on her body started to shrink and travel to the area around her neck. It appeared like she had decided to abandon her body and only escape with her skull.

BANG!

At the most crucial moment, the hotel entrance that had been locked by the gluttonous woman was suddenly shoved open. A little boy wearing a patient's garb ran into the lobby, crying and yelling. He looked just over four years old, and the shirt that he was wearing was tattered and torn. He looked so pitiable.

Chen Ge was about to make his move, but when he saw the boy, he stopped. Even in this situation, Chen Ge still maintained his superhuman calmness. With one glance, he realized that the boy was wearing a patient's garb that was different from the ones that he had seen at Li Wan City's hospital. Therefore, this boy should be the patient that had transferred over to Li Wan City from the cursed hospital, the scariest existence in Li Wan City's hospital.

"With those blood stains on his body, he has to be a Half Red Specter, but since the boy has appeared now, it means that the pair of red high heels shouldn't be too far behind!"

The hotel was the most dangerous but also the safest location in all of Li Wan City. To be able to push a Half Red Specter to such a state, that went to show the power level of the red high heels.

After the entrance of the hotel was broken down, the boy ran into the lobby without stopping to take a look. From his perspective, the thing behind him was the scariest presence, but to his despair, after he strode into the building, his understanding of terror was given an update.

The thick, large blood veins interconnected, and not far away from him, a monster with many mouths was rampaging. Tongues slithered out from the blood veins like they were trying to consume all the living organisms inside the building. The boy's face blanched instantly. He wanted to retreat, but that chance was deprived. A pair of red high heels was placed just outside the hotel entrance.

Compared to the pulsing blood veins and the disgusting monsters inside the hotel, the pair of red high heels looked so elegant and pretty.

Chen Ge did not expect the red high heels to show up at a time like this. However, to his greater astonishment, even when the red high heels had noticed the glutton woman, they still stepped into the hotel without much hesitation. He had no idea whether this was because the red high heels had such great confidence in her power or because she desperately needed to get some information from the boy, which compelled her to commit to such a rash act.

The hotel door opened, and this gave the headless woman the chance to escape. The blood vessels that had gathered on her body exploded, and her skull dragged her lifeless body out of the door. The headless woman had been holding back her power. She was not as strong as the gluttonous woman, and she was in her territory, so she did not have the geographical advantage. This was the best solution that she could come up with.

The needles of blood vessel pierced into the blood veins and tongues like knives. The gluttonous woman and Chen Ge had greatly underestimated the headless woman. Knives seemed to present a great torture to the headless woman when she was alive, and knives were related to her cause of death. That pain and hatred were strongly seared into her soul. Even if she was dead, she could not forget that sensation. She channeled that feeling into her blood vessels, and that made the blood vessels that burst from her stump take on a different quality compared to the blood vessels wielded by other Red Specters. Hers were exceptionally sharp.

This should be her trump card. The blood veins and tongues were sheared away, and the headless woman cut herself a way out.

For a food aficionado, having their feast interrupted was a very unpleasant experience. The glutton woman had just tasted blood, but someone had come to interrupt when she was about to feed. From her perspective, those who dared disturb her meal had to possess the realization that they would eventually be served on her table. She needed extra comfort from food to console her ugly, twisted heart.

“Hungry! I’m so hungry!” The walls peeled back, and Chen Ge discovered with a shock that the layout of the hotel was not so different from Doctor Gao’s underground morgue. The ceiling, walls, and ground were all made from flesh and bones.

“The walls of the underground morgue were made from dead bodies, and the walls of this hotel should be made from the remnant of the female boss’ meals.” From a certain perspective, the glutton monster’s hotel was like a miniaturized underground morgue. It was truly ironic that a restaurant had been combined with a morgue. If Chen Ge did not witness this in person, if he had just someone else tell this story, he would not have believed it.

The glutton monster possessed absolute control of this building; the whole hotel was like her second body. The ground was shaking, and the stairs were collapsing. All the decoration in the room toppled over, and the front door that the boy had crashed through was shut again. Blood veins crawled over the entrance to completely seal the exit. In other words, if they did not deal with her, none of them were going to leave this place, figuratively and literally.

“The only option now is to fight our way out; the situation now is more advantageous toward me!” Chen Ge was someone who could find the silver lining at any moment. If there was a single positive attribute about the man that was praiseworthy, he was able to find hope no matter how deep the abyss that he had sunk into. “With the red high heels’ appearance, if she works together with the headless woman, it should be enough to hold back the glutton monster. If I aid them from the side, even without borrowing Zhang Ya’s power, there should be a fair chance for us to take down this female boss!”

Chen Ge hoped that these Specters would live to appreciate his timely rescue. In any case, Chen Ge did not show himself instantly. He stood in preparation, hiding in the dark, waiting to strike when the time was right.

“It was little wonder that Li Wan City was deemed a 3.5-star scenario. Just the Red Specter inside a single building is this impossibly powerful. I wonder what the strongest monster here looks like.”

Whether the glutton monster was the shadow’s ally or not, Chen Ge decided to kill her. This monster had been consumed by her hunger. She could not be communicated with at all; in other words, the chance of her becoming an employee was zero. “Her life must have been incredibly painful; it’s time for her to find salvation.”

After locking the hotel, the glutton monster attacked the boy, the headless woman, and the red high heels at the same time. The ginormous body nudged forward, causing the entire building to shake. The monster and her disproportionately small head screamed in unison. The mouths on her body tore open at the same time, revealing teeth that were tainted by blood.

The blood veins inside the hotel continued to pulse. The glutton monster moved forward. She seemed to intend to use her many mouths to chew up the food before her eyes.

The situation grew dangerous, but from his hiding spot, Chen Ge's eyes lit up. "This female boss is not completely immune. Based on everything so far, she has at least two weaknesses. First, her movement speed is very slow, and she is not agile; second, even though there are endless mouths on her body, all those mouths listen to the command of the mouth on her head. Compared to that impossibly large body, the small head appears much too fragile!"

Chen Ge was unsure if the glutton monster kept any trump cards that she had not shown. He silently summoned Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin, planning to find the opportunity to attack the female boss' weakness.

Chapter 652 - Red Heart [2 in 1]

Chapter 652: Red Heart [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Inside the hotel, the glutton monster had the undisputed advantage—that was why she was confident enough to attack all the Red Specters inside her hotel at the same time. However, she had greatly underestimated the power of the pair of red high heels and the headless woman. When their lives were threatened, both Red Specters showcased immeasurable strength.

With the ability to cut with her blood, the headless woman was not exactly defenseless even though it was true that she was on the defensive side. Whenever her blood flew past, the flesh would be cut, and blood sprayed. From the direction she was moving, she was trying her best to meet up with the red high heels.

The enemy of my enemy is my friend.

The headless woman voluntarily moved to join the red high heels and the boy. However, it was unclear whether she was trying to share the glutton monster's aggression with them or wanted to join hands with them to defeat the monster.

The cage that was formed by the tongue and the blood veins was slowly tightening, and the space afforded to the three Specters was getting smaller and smaller. Initially, the tongues and the blood veins did not directly attack the pair of red high heels, but as time passed, more and more blood veins turned their attention to the heels. They appeared like they were going to swallow this pair of heels that carried curse and bad luck whole.

The thick blood veins lashed out from all sides like a cluster of evil snakes. At that moment, a woman's laughter suddenly rang out in the lobby. The laughter was clear and crisp. It was also seductive and mellifluous like one could picture the beauty of its owner from the sound alone.

"The laughter seems to come from the red high heels." There seemed to be a kind of unique magical power within the laughter, one that could influence the listener's emotions. After the laughter travelled into Chen Ge's ears, the blood in his body started to flow rapidly. Blood red rashes appeared on his skin like part of his blood vessels had popped from the sudden increased rush of blood.

Compared to the low snarl of the glutton monster, the laughter from the red high heels appeared to constitute an opposite extreme.

"Hungry, hungry... hungry!" The glutton monster obviously heard the laughter as well. Perhaps it was envy or some other reason, but Chen Ge could sense the anger coming from the monster.

"How come it feels like the red high heels are mocking the glutton monster? Is this some kind of provocation?" The crisp laughter echoed in the lobby and it slowly turned from a sweet melody to a maddened shriek. Near the end, a tall-looking woman started to materialize above the red high heels.

She was on the slender side and was taller than Chen Ge. Every inch of her body was wrapped in bloody bandages, so not one part of her skin was showing. There was a grace about the woman that could not be denied. She must have been a great beauty when she was alive. However, from the way she presented herself now, it appeared like she had done a full body skin transplant procedure before she died.

The bandaged feet reached into the pair of heels. The feet squeezed into the shoes, and blood leaked out from between the gaps of the bandages. It appeared as if the wound on her body had not recovered.

"This is sheer madness." Chen Ge did not even dare to imagine how seriously the woman must have been injured underneath the bandages. "If I knew this, I wouldn't have interacted with her on the bus."

The blood veins and tongues shot toward the red high heels. The woman stood where she was, showing no intention of moving. When the blood veins neared, the woman raised both of her hands. The bandage that was wound tight to her body showcased her perfect proportions, but none of the 'people' there were in the mood to admire her posture. Blood leaked out from the bandages, and an echo of unhinged laughter issued from the woman's lips. Pain was weaved into the madness and with ease, she tore down the tongues and blood veins. Then, she proceeded to move forward with quick speed.

"She's going to attack on her own?" Chen Ge could not understand what the red high heels was doing. Even though she appeared powerful in terms of presence, she was still weaker than the glutton monster in terms of strength. “Or is it because she has a very powerful special power?”

Every Red Specter had their own distinct special power, it had everything to do with their last memory during their moment of death. For example, the headless woman yielded blood that could cut through stuff; Xu Yin, on the other hand, became more powerful as the wounds on him increased; Xiong Qing, who suffered from hemineglect, had half of his body made completely out of blood vessels, and he could adopt it into any shape that he wanted.

Based on appearance alone, Chen Ge could not tell what the red high heels’ special power was, but since they were technically in the same boat, the more powerful the red high heels was, the greater the advantage Chen Ge could reap.

Trapped inside the cage made from blood veins and slithering tongues, the headless woman and the boy could not escape even if they wanted to. Based on their power, they were unable to fight against the glutton monster, so their only option was to follow behind the red high heels. With the headless woman and the boy’s help to deal with the attacks that came from the back, the pressure on the red high heels lessened. She tore down the blood veins and tongues in her march forward.

“What is she planning to do?” The sight before his eyes could only be described as a bloody hell as the red high heels, who looked impossibly small compared to her adversary, continued to move forward.

There were so many blood veins that some were bound to cut through the red high heels’ line of defense, but strangely enough, Chen Ge noticed that even though the blood veins hit the red high heels’ body, it did not seem to leave any serious impact.

It felt as if the bandages were not hiding a solid body but a glob of liquid blood. Under the control of the red high heels, when the blood veins attacked her body, she could move the structure of her body around to lower the damage received to the bare minimum.

Her attacks rendered ineffective, the glutton monster grew more agitated. The mouths on her body protruded forward like they were trying to reach toward the red high heels to tear her open with her many teeth. The glutton monster was normally hibernating in Li Wan City's hotel, and due to her size, she moved very slowly. The other Red Specters knew that she was not to be trifled with, so they rarely came to her territory. This also meant that the glutton monster rarely had the chance to feast on Red Specters.

Excited by the prospect of a rare meal, the glutton monster's body continued to grow. She turned into a mountain of meat and more blood veins crawled out from her body and they focused their attacks on the red high heels. She suddenly went on a rampage, and she controlled her blood veins to forcibly separate the red high heels from the headless woman and the boy. She used seventy-five percent of her power to focus on the red high heels while the remaining twenty-five percent attacked the headless woman and the body.

As many of the blood veins as the headless woman cut down, more tongues would take their place. This was an uneven battle. Even if she cut and slashed the blood veins until they burst, it caused no damage to the glutton monster. However, once she was captured by any of the tongues, she would lose the chance to fight back. She would be dragged toward the glutton monster and sent into her giant stomach.

"The female boss only needs twenty-five percent of her power to block the headless woman's way, and that does not seem like it's a hard thing to do either." Chen Ge's palms were slick with sweat. He was still looking for the perfect opportunity.

The threat posed by the red high heels was far greater than the headless woman. Even if she was surrounded by the majority of the glutton monster's forces, the red high heels still managed to slowly close the distance between them.

Initially, the glutton monster still had some caution around the red high heels, but later, her mind was probably taken over by the desire to feed. Her eyes were bloodshot, and she abandoned her previous caution. With a scream, she charged toward the red high heels. All the mouths on her body were gaping. It was as if she wanted to tear the woman before her into pieces and stuff her right into her mouths.

A silvery tingle of a laugh reappeared in the lobby of the hotel. The woman opened her arms. Her perfect body formed a great contrast to the unyielding sight of the female boss. The bandage around the former's body started to fall, starting from the top of her head.

"Do you think I'm pretty?" This simple question was like the most horrible curse. The red in the glutton monster's eyes dissipated immediately. The large body reared backward, but it was already too late.

The bandage came off completely. Every drop of blood on the woman's body carried intense hatred. They splashed onto the glutton monster. The blood acted like a burning flame. The blood haze was seared through, and all of the mouths on the glutton monster's body were wailing in pain.

"Each drop of blood represents a curse. Just what happened to this woman when she was alive? How could she manage to gather such a deep-rooted sense of hatred?" Chen Ge was thankful that he did not provoke the woman. Perhaps with just a drop of her blood, she would be able to curse a person for life.

Black and red smoke came out from the glutton monster's body. Her large body was dwindling at an observable speed. The cursed fire was still burning, and they left behind ugly wounds.

"Hungry! Hungry!" As the body withered away, the glutton monster's twisted head was screaming madly at the red high heels. It appeared like feasting was the only way for the monster to alleviate the pain. She did not care about the thing that she had just sent into her stomach. Even if it was a curse, she wanted to swallow it whole.

The blood veins tore away from the walls and formed a cage around the red high heels. The glutton monster leaned her still large body toward the red high heels, her mouths still open as she crashed toward the human shape that had previously been wrapped inside the bandage.

The glutton monster's physical body was incredibly strong because she was able to resist the curse. Even with the curse burning, she was able to move freely.

"The red high heels' curse is slowly making its way through the female boss' body. It'll take some time before either party will be able to take the other down." Chen Ge paid close attention to his surroundings. He was worried that the red high heels' blood might accidentally splashed onto Xu Yin, so he did not order Xu Yin to join the fray.

The glutton monster was weakening, and some of the blood veins were decaying. The walls started to crease, and a black liquid leaked out from them. The pressure on the headless woman decreased. Without any hesitation, she decided to abandon the red high heels and escape while she still could. The boy who wore the patient's garb next to her had the same idea on his mind.

The two Specters combined their strength to tear at the weakest part of the wall formed by the blood veins. The layers of tongues and blood veins were torn down. The glutton monster wailed from pain. After all, those blood veins and tongues were an extension of her body. Pain and uncontrollable hunger mingled together, which introduced a change on the glutton monster's body.

The large body started to shrink. The limbs that were previously covered by flesh and blood started to show. It turned out that the female boss had been crawling on the ground. There were dark chains tied around her four limbs. Perhaps they had been there for so long that the chains had practically grown into her flesh, and they could not be removed unless the limbs were chopped off.

"Wait, so the monster is actually forcibly detained here?" The monster tipped her head back and yelled into the sky. The chains that were connected to the hidden room inside the kitchen were yanked straight. Unable to move freely, various negative emotions coursed into her mind. She had gone on a complete rampage.

Her skin cracked open, and endless blood vessels poured out from her body. The thick blood veins on the walls also opened their lips. A normal person would have a hard time imagining a scene where everywhere was red, and amid the shade of red, there were endless mouths opening and closing.

"Hungry! Hungry!" Like Chen Ge suspected, the glutton monster possessed a super powerful digestive ability. The blood vessels that she had collected over the years had reached an impossible level. She let go of them all at once, and instantly, a crimson wave swept and swallowed the hotel.

The blood wave tore away half of the headless woman's body, and her most important skull was bitten down on by the lips that were appearing on the blood veins. The boy who wore the hospital gown turned practically invisible; he would be dispersed with the slightest blow of the wind.

Even with Xu Yin and Bai Qiulin blocking before Chen Ge, when the red wave reached him, the air in his lungs was sucked out of his body. It felt like if the wave persisted for another second, he would die from asphyxiation.

“This is such a scary opponent.” Chen Ge bit on the tip of his tongue to use the pain to supercharge his mind. Chen Ge turned to look at the red high heels who was closest to the glutton monster. She suffered the most when the red wave hit.

The red high heels were toppled on the ground, and the bloody bandage disappeared into nothingness. A blurry shape was lying on the ground, coiled by several blood veins. Even though the blood veins that dared to get near her would decay at lightning speed, the glutton monster did not care about it anymore. Hunger had taken over every faculty in her mind, and she swore to send everything into her stomach.

“Hungry! I am so hungry!” After unleashing all the blood that she had collected over the years, the female boss’ body started to shrink like a deflated balloon.

“Temporarily, she won’t be able to unleash another attack.” Chen Ge looked at the glutton monster whose attention was captured by the red high heels, and he realized that now was his chance.

He flipped through the comic he was carrying, “Men Nan!”

A boy who looked about five years old in a red shirt appeared beside Chen Ge. There was endless animosity in his eyes.

“There are three heavily injured Red Specters—consuming any of them will allow you to digest them for a very long time! I’m very generous toward you, aren’t I?” Chen Ge knew what Men Nan was going to say, so he cut to the chase first.

“Three Red Specters?” When Men Nan first appeared, he noticed the atmosphere was not right, but when he poked his head out from behind Chen Ge, he almost collapsed to the ground on his butt from shock and fear. “Greater Red Specters? Have you lost your mind? Why did you go after things like that?”

“After you consume her, you’ll become a Greater Red Specter yourself!” The opportunity was fleeting, and any hesitation would lead to a loss. Chen Ge knew that very well. He grabbed Men Nan and started to charge forward.

“Let me go!”

When Chen Ge stood up, the glutton monster immediately noticed him. She controlled the last few remaining blood veins that she had to stop Men Nan. At that moment, she was in desperate need of rejuvenation. The blood veins dragged the woman inside the bandage slowly toward the jaw that was waiting.

“Xu Yin!” Men Nan blocked the blood veins, and Chen Ge finally showed his trump card. Due to his personality, Men Nan was not a good attacker. So, Chen Ge’s initial plan was only to use him to distract the glutton monster’s attention, and the real source of his attack was Xu Yin.

“Head! Her weakness is her head!” Static appeared in his ears. Blood dripped, and the melancholic Xu Yin slithered through the intertwining blood veins like a sword. He leaped high into the air before landing on the female boss’ shoulders. He poked his ten fingers that were sharp like blades into the glutton monster’s neck!

Looking down on his prey, into the female boss’ eyes that were dominated by gluttony and hatred, his arms started to pull!

“Is it painful?” The blood sprayed, and instantly, it started to rain blood as all the blood veins started to collapse. Fighting two Red Specters at the same time, and if counting Men Nan and Xu Yin, one would take four Red Specters to deal with the glutton monster.

“Men Nan, go take a look at the Red Specter whose head was separated from her body. Bai Qiulin, I need you to go capture the boy in patient’s garb who was close to scattering!”

The female boss was dead, so Chen Ge started to take over the scene. Half of the headless woman’s body was shattered, and wounds covered the remaining half and her head. The situation of the red high heels was not much better. The body that was wound inside the bandage was slowly disappearing, and the shoes that once looked so bright started to lose their luster.

BANG!

The glutton monster’s enormous body collapsed to the ground. The red high heels’ blood curse was still burning. Xu Yin evaded the curse and returned to Chen Ge’s side

He opened his palms before Chen Ge, and sitting inside it was a red-colored heart that was still pulsing.

As large as the female boss was, her heart was disproportionately small. It glistened and refracted the light like a blood red ruby. It was not discolored or tainted in any way. “Who would have thought an ugly monster like that would have such a pure heart?”

Chen Ge reached out to touch the glutton monster’s heart. He wished to study and find out what exactly a Red Specter’s heart was. However, when his fingertip landed on the heart, negative emotions swept at him like a wave. Blood rushed through his body, and an indescribable desire to feast echoed in his brain. He was so hungry that he could have taken a bite out of himself.

“So hungry!” The desperate snarl escaped from Chen Ge’s lips. The man had to take several steps back from the heart before he felt more like himself again.

“Just how many living humans and ghosts has this thing ingested?” Gasping hungrily for air, Chen Ge’s back was soaked in sweat. He held his hands back and swore to not easily handle anything related to Red Specters anymore.

“The heart of the glutton monster is the pure desire to feast. It is an endless need that can only be satisfied with maddened consumption.” Chen Ge understood why Xu Yin did not take in the glutton monster’s heart directly. This was not something that could be handled by a normal Specter. “Back when we killed Xiong Qing, Xu Yin gave Xiong Qing’s heart to Bai Qiulin. Now I wonder if Bai Qiulin has been affected by Xiong Qing or not.”

Feeling Chen Ge’s gaze on him, Bai Qiulin thought that it was time for him to report to duty, so he dragged the barely-surviving boy over. In a perfect contrast to Xu Yin, for Bai Qiulin, only his heart was dyed red by blood.

“Ol’ Bai looks perfectly normal. Perhaps it’s because Xiong Qing was too weak to leave any effect on him.” Chen Ge opened the comic to pull the boy into it. He planned to slowly interrogate the boy and get more information about Xin Hai Central Hospital from him after the Trial Mission was over. After dealing with the boy, Chen Ge turned back to look at the heart in Xu Yin’s hand.

He could see that even just carrying the heart put a great amount of pressure on Xu Yin. He would definitely end up in trouble if he was ordered to consume the heart. Furthermore, Xu Yin had never shown any interest in consuming another person’s heart. Instead, he wanted to find a heart that belonged to him.

“Then, what should I do with this?” The glutton monster’s heart was a very valuable reward. It technically contained everything that was about the glutton monster. With this in Chen Ge’s possession, he might even have the chance of cultivating a Red Specter who could have a better handle of the hunger in the future!

This thing was too valuable. Even the shadow and Doctor Gao would definitely be interested in it.

“If Xu Yin is tasked with acting as the keepsake of the heart, he would separate out a part of his power to resist the negative emotions the heart will bring. That will definitely affect his ability during battle.” During dangerous situation, Xu Yin was Chen Ge’s main fighting force, so having Xu Yin handle the glutton monster’s heart was a giant waste.

“But other than him, who would be able to resist that overwhelming wave of negative emotions?” Chen Ge had Bai Qiulin give it a try, but he only persisted for several minutes before his expression became contorted. He had gone under the influence of gluttony, and it was clear that he was slowly spiraling out of control.

“Is there no other way than to give this away? But it will be such a loss.” The red high heels probably desired the glutton monster’s heart. Gifting it to her would probably earn Chen Ge a valuable ally, but the man thought that was such a ridiculous waste of resource.

“Normal Specters are too weak to sustain a consumption of such a powerful heart. They will most likely disperse from eating this heart. Only a Red Specter is able to resist that enormous will to feed.” Chen Ge stared at the beeping heart in Xu Yin’s hands. The blood red heart was buried deeply inside the meat mountain and was thus spared the effect of the blood curse.

“Leaving it with Xu Yin will only create a burden. The only choice I have left is Zhang Ya.” Chen Ge called Xu Yin to get close to the candlelight and had Xu Yin place the glutton monster’s heart on his shadow. Ever since he entered Li Wan City, Chen Ge’s shadow had gradually been changing. It was not until he was trying to madly summon Zhang Ya earlier that he had noticed this change. He had no idea why Zhang Ya was doing this, but he believed that Zhang Ya would not harm him.

The candlelight cast its flame on Chen Ge’s body, but the strange thing was that the shadow that he formed was in the shape of a woman. Chen Ge looked at his own shadow silently. Xu Yin had the obvious desire that he did not wish to get any closer. After getting permission from Chen Ge, he finally placed the glutton monster’s heart on Chen Ge’s shadow.

Then a strange thing happened. Once the heart that glistened like a ruby left Xu Yin’s grasp, it started to bounce violently, and soon, a woman’s shadow appeared above the heart. Chen Ge felt the woman looked so familiar. Eventually, he matched it to the woman that he saw in the boss’ room, the woman in the pictures, the woman that he called his mother. That should be the real appearance of the ruby ghost.

“So, she still had this trick up her sleeves.” Cold sweat poured out of Chen Ge’s forehead. If he had made his employee consume this heart, that employee might have transformed into a second glutton monster.

The woman’s wail gradually weakened before dissolving into droplets of blood that landed on Chen Ge’s shadow. His shadow was like a lake whose bottom could never be seen. The droplet of blood landed on the shadow and caused a ripple before disappearing completely.

After the glutton monster’s heart completely melted, Chen Ge’s shadow became even darker, and the silhouette of a woman became clearer. For some strange reason, Chen Ge’s heart started to race. He looked at his own shadow and had this sensation that a young lady was waving at him from the other side of the shadow. If he reached out toward the woman, he would be dragged into the shadow and stay there with her forever.

“Zhang Ya?” The name floated up in Chen Ge’s heart. The hair in the shadow bloomed like it was being caressed by the wind—this, Chen Ge accepted as a response.

“She seems to have grown stronger...” Chen Ge had been trying to increase the power level of his employees, but after such a long struggle, he realized that the combined strength of all of his employees still would not match that of Zhang Ya. To make matters worse, the difference between the power level only continued to grow. “Perhaps this is what they call talent.”

At Jiujiang Medical University’s underground morgue, even though Zhang Ya had been injured in the battle as well, she had still managed to get something from Doctor Gao’s wife. It was the same thing when she crossed swords with the shadow. Then, she forcibly stole a few drops of blood from Doctor Gao. Now, she had consumed the glutton monster’s heart. Just how strong Zhang Ya had become, even Chen Ge himself could not tell.

“I am not someone who likes to rely on others, but based on this situation, it does not appear like I have a choice.” His lips turned involuntarily upward. Chen Ge glanced at the headless woman and the pair of red high heels. “If you’re naughty, I’ll feed you to her.”

The red high heels were collapsed on the ground, and they looked no different from a normal pair of shoes. The woman had probably exhausted so much of her energy that she had trouble even holding her form. After all, during the battle with the glutton monster, she had single-handedly suffered seventy-five percent of the damage, and it was she who managed to land the crucial blow on the glutton monster, which provided Chen Ge with the opportunity that he needed.

“You’ve helped me once, so I’ll treat you in kind. I’m not going to take advantage of you. When the mission is over, I’ll bring you back to a safe place and even purposely construct a home for you.” Chen Ge had personally witnessed the terror of the red high heels’ curse. He picked up the heels using an abandoned table cloth and placed them on the counter.

“Then, it’s your turn. You chased me for a whole damn street, and I think you owe me an apology.” Chen Ge had Xu Yin, Bai Qiulin, and Men Nan apprehend the headless woman before he dared get close to her. The headless woman seemed to have some prejudice against men, and she refused to even look at Chen Ge’s group.

“It’s fine if you don’t want to communicate with males. I have female ghosts in my employment as well.” Chen Ge summoned Duan Yue to communicate with the headless woman. After a long communication, Duan Yue returned to relay the information. The headless woman's condition was definitely not good. She had lost half of her body, and her head was heavily injured. She had trouble maintaining her form from dispersing, much less getting into battle.

"Even though you've chased me for a long time, I am a generous person who will put aside most grievances. After we leave this place, I'll find you a safe place to allow you to recover." Chen Ge pulled the headless woman into the comic.

"Hey! I know you have limited space at your Haunted House. Why don't you just give her the spot that I normally occupy?" Men Nan said in the tone of an adult. He jogged with his short legs to stand behind Chen Ge. "I've not returned home for a long time already. There might be some problems at the Third Sick Hall. Once the door goes out of control, the consequences will be imaginably bad."

"I promise you, after the sun comes up, I'll immediately take you back to the Third Sick Hall." Chen Ge squatted down and very seriously reached out his hand. "Here, pinkie promise."

"My God, can you be more childish?" Even though he grumbled on his lips, Men Nan still pinkie promised it with Chen Ge. "But why did you suddenly change your mind? I swear you must be up to something since you granted me this so easily."

"I merely realize how dangerous it will be for a door to go out of control, so I understand it's for the best if I send you back as soon as possible." Chen Ge stood up and voiced the thought that was inside his heart.

"Yes, that is what I've been telling you since the beginning, but you refused to believe me. If something really happens, it'll be too late to start undoing the error." After getting the promise from Chen Ge, Men Nan finally sighed in relief. "Seeing how sincere you are, I'll help you one more time. By the way, where are we? Why are there so many Red Specters inside a small hotel?"

"We are currently inside a door that has gone out of control. This is Eastern Jiujiang's Li Wan City." Chen Ge said that in a matter-of-fact tone. He waited for a long time but did not hear a reply from Men Nan. He turned back to look. "What's wrong?"

Men Nan, who was only slightly taller than Chen Ge's knees, froze where he was. He seemed to have a hard time believing his ears. "We're inside a door that has gone out of control?"

“Yes.”

“Inside the world behind the door?”

“Bingo.”

After this simple exchange, Men Nan collapsed to the ground. He looked at Chen Ge blankly, and no words came out of his lips. It was as if the boy’s mind had suddenly short-circuited.

“What’s wrong with you?” Chen Ge quickly get down to look after the boy. He still cared about Men Nan after all.

“It’s nothing.” Men Nan waved his hands. “I just want to feel the ground underneath my feet. I fear I might not have the chance soon.”

“Stop being so dramatic. There’s no need to be afraid. I’m here, aren’t I?”

“It’s because you’re here that I’m so afraid! If not for the fact that I wouldn’t reach your neck, I would have jumped up to strangle you at least twice already! Have you lost your f*cking mind? It’s one thing for you to find your way into a door, but you had to choose one that has already gone out of control! I was wondering how you managed to find somewhere so dangerous! Is it so hard to live your life peacefully? What is so wrong with wanting a peaceful existence?” Men Nan was finally acting his age. He was on the verge of tears as he threw the tantrum.

“Understood, I know what you’re saying. Don’t worry, if we manage to survive this, I’ll definitely send you home.” Chen Ge was quick to console Men Nan. After a long time, when the boy’s emotion was stabilizing, Chen Ge tried to ask probingly, “Is it so dangerous inside a door that has gone out of control?”

“Of course! Think about it. It is an enclosed building behind a single door, so the number of Red Specters and monsters that you have to deal with is limited, but things are different for a door that has gone out of control. It will pull all the buildings around the area into the nightmare world, and no one is able to tell how many Red Specters and monsters are hiding here.” Men Nan waved his hands weakly and pain was clear on his face. “I am not good at fighting, and I’ve been tricked by the ghost stories society at least once. My power is incredibly weak, and that is why I want to quickly fix the window in the Third Sick Hall. If anything outside infiltrates the Third Sick Hall, then my home will be ruined.”

“But that’s perfect, isn’t it? If that’s the case, I can prepare a new home...” Chen Ge was halfway through his sentence when he noticed that the boy was going to go berserk again, so he quickly stopped himself. “You have a point there. After leaving Li Wan City, I’ll immediately send you back to the Third Sick Hall.”

After pulling Men Nan into the comic, Chen Ge summoned all of his employees to give the hotel a quick scrub. The curse of the red high heels was more powerful and terrifying than he had anticipated. The blood veins and the remains of the glutton monster that came into contact with the curse dissolved into ashes and dispersed into the wind, leaving behind the four iron chains.

“There are still many issues with the glutton monster; I need to get to the bottom of this.” Chen Ge entered Room 1 to untie the old man. “Do you see the iron chains on the ground? Are you the one who locked up the woman behind the fridge?”

Experience came with age. When the old man saw the situation at the hotel, he summed up everything in his mind. Therefore, he explained everything to Chen Ge.

The family of three were not locals of Li Wan City. They operated a rental apartment at another spot in Eastern Jiujiang. The upstairs apartments were rented out while the ground floor was made into a restaurant.

Then, one day, the old man’s wife suddenly contracted a strange disease. She would not be full no matter how much she ate, and once they stopped her from eating, she would be hurting and panicking like they were torturing her. They had taken her to plenty of doctors, but it was no use. The wife’s illness became more serious, and during extreme hunger pangs, she would even bite at other people.

They exhausted all their savings to cure her illness. Until one day, the wife and the old man who just came back from another doctor visit rode the last bus on Route 104, and they arrived at Li Wan City.

The old man was too cowardly to get off the bus, but his wife was led by a blurry shadow into a ghost apartment. When she returned, the wife’s illness had a conspicuous improvement. He was overjoyed, thinking that they had run into their savior, but that was just the beginning of the tragedy.

The wife would always wander out at night, and the old man eventually found out that his wife had gone out in search of ‘food’. To prevent discovery by the police, their whole family moved to Li Wan City, and what happened next matched the details in Xiao Bu's game.

"When she was alive, it was me who locked her up. If I didn't do that, she might even bite at her own flesh. After she died, it was a shadow who locked her up..." The old man glanced at Chen Ge and had trouble continuing. "That shadow has the same silhouette as you. He brought some 'food' to come and feed my wife regularly until she became the thing that you saw."

"The shadow looks like me?" Chen Ge nodded. He had understood everything. The glutton monster was the shadow's creation. The meaning of her existence was to stay guard over the center of Li Wan City.

"I've basically visited all the locations pinpointed by the black phone. It is about time to visit Fan Chong's residential area." Chen Ge's motive had been achieved. He pulled all his employees into the comic and used the rope to retie the old man and placed him in Room 1.

"It's time to leave." Chen Ge walked out from Room 1 and planned to go upstairs to find the other passengers when something unexpected happened. The entrance of the hotel was suddenly pushed open, and two men strode into the room.

"Don't run your mouth, and do not do anything extra! Understood?"

"Yes, I understood all that! But the problem is you've got the wrong person! Trust me! He has already left my body!"

Hearing these familiar voices, Chen Ge basically lifted his head out of habit. When he saw the two at the door, his pupils narrowed instantly.

"Lee Zheng? Jia Ming? Why are they here?"

When Chen Ge saw Lee Zheng and Jia Ming, the two at the door saw him as well.

“Chen Ge?” Lee Zheng and Jia Ming said in unison. Neither of them had expected to run into Chen Ge here.

...

“Why are you here?” Lee Zheng had one hand behind Jia Ming. Even though he was extremely surprised by Chen Ge’s appearance, his hand had not moved an inch.

“Don’t get too close to him, he might not be Chen Ge,” Jia Ming whispered in warning. He looked quite scared. “Have you forgotten what I told you before? The shadow looks exactly like Chen Ge!”

Standing from the perspective of an outsider, there was nothing wrong with what Jia Ming said. A living person appearing at the hotel in the middle of the night in a small town shrouded in blood fog... there had to be some hidden issues about this.

“You posed me so many questions, but coincidentally, I also have many questions to ask you.” Chen Ge also did not dare to put his guard down around Lee Zheng and Jia Ming. Before he arrived at Li Wan City, Lee Zheng had sent him a series of messages, telling him that Jia Ming had escaped from police custody and all the police officers were out and about trying to recapture the criminal.

However, just two hours after that, Lee Zheng and Jia Ming both showed up in Li Wan City. No matter how he thought about it, there was definitely something strange about this development. Lee Zheng had his hand hidden behind Jia Ming, so the barrel of his gun was probably poking right into Jia Ming’s back to prevent Jia Ming from doing anything irrational. Since the man was packed, Chen Ge did not dare act too rashly. Guns were ineffective against Specters, but it would definitely be effective against him.

“In any case, we should all calm down first.” Maintaining the stalemate in the lobby would only be a waste of time. Chen Ge decided to show his hand first. He took out his phone and showed Lee Zheng his call record. “Inspector Lee, I am Chen Ge. There is no doubt about that. I am here because I received an SOS call.”

Chen Ge pointed at the phone records between Fan Chong and himself. “This man was once my Haunted House’s visitor, and he has been acting strangely recently. He told me many strange things, and out of curiosity, I left him my contact number. But to my surprise, he went missing tonight, and I have no idea whether if he is still alive. I am the last person he contacted, so to investigate his disappearance more thoroughly, I rushed to Li Wan City as fast as I could.”

Lee Zheng asked Chen Ge a few more questions. Seeing as Chen Ge answered all of them correctly, he sighed slightly in relief. “After Jia Ming escaped from the hospital, we searched for him through the city and eventually the team managed to confirm his escape route was heading toward the eastern part of town.

“Initially, we thought he was trying to run into the mountains to hide, but after expanding the search zone, I discovered something weird through the surveillance. When he was walking past one of the junctions, Jia Ming covered up his face. Even though he was still wearing his original clothes, his gait was strangely unnatural. I compared the surveillance again and again before coming to the conclusion that Jia Ming probably found someone to take his place at that junction.

“After ordering the rest of the team to continue with the original search, I turned down the other side of the junction to continue the search. The heavy rain proved too difficult for the search effort. It was very hard to look through the rain, but thankfully, the effort was reward. In the end, I caught up to this b*stard at the end of the road. After a round of chasing, I only managed to detain this guy after we entered Li Wan City.”

After hearing what Lee Zheng had to say, Jia Ming waved his hands hurriedly. “Everything I did was because I was forced to by the shadow. If I did not follow his orders, he would have had more than one hundred ways to make my life a living hell.”

“You were forced? How come it feels like you’ve purposely been trying to lure me to this place? What are you planning with this shadow? Admit everything honestly, this is the last chance you have.”

Lee Zheng had entered Li Wan City because he was trying to capture Jia Ming, it was an acceptable reason, but for Chen Ge, it also felt quite forced. He had this feeling that there was something off about Jia Ming and Lee Zheng, but he could not really tell what was really wrong about them.

“Inspector Lee, this place is very dangerous. Come in here first, don’t stay at the entrance for too long.” Chen Ge activated the recorder and proactively walked toward the hotel entrance. “Did you run into anything scary on the way here?”

“This blasted place sure is strange. It is raining so heavily outside, but there is not one patch of ground in this small town that is wet. I believe it probably has to do with this blood fog.” Lee Zheng did not answer Chen Ge’s question. With his hand on Jia Ming, he shoved the man into the hotel.

Chen Ge was familiar with how scary Li Wan City was, this place was crawling with ghosts and murderers. Technically speaking, Inspector Lee could deal with murderers with his gun, but how did a normal person like him deal with all those ghosts and monsters?

From how they acted, Jia Ming and Lee Zheng were merely nervous—there was no trace of terror in their eyes.

“Could the shadow be hiding in one of them? Is that why the monsters and ghosts in Li Wan City actively stay away from them?” One was the police, the other a criminal, but Chen Ge had no idea whom might be the hiding place for the shadow. “I cannot jump the gun too soon. Both of them might be who they say they are, and the shadow might be hiding somewhere else.”

Ever obtaining the black phone, the shadow was the most difficult adversary that Chen Ge had faced. He believed that the shadow had gotten both Jia Ming and Lee Zheng here at the same time to confuse him. Chen Ge was cautious around Jia Ming and Lee Zheng, but the two did not trust Chen Ge entirely either. They already knew that the shadow had the ability to transform and mimic another person. Perhaps from their perspective, it was not that hard to believe that the ‘Chen Ge’ before their eyes might be a disguise taken on by the shadow.

“Take any seat you wish. Mind waiting for a moment? I have a few friends who are waiting for me upstairs.” Chen Ge headed up the stairs.

After he turned around, he heard Jia Ming whisper very softly to Lee Zheng, "I've told you everything I know about the shadow, and now you've met him in person. This proves that I am not lying! Chen Ge is the shadow! We need to leave this place as soon as possible before it is too late! He will definitely kill us to get us silenced!"

"You worked so hard to lure me here just to let me see something like this?" Lee Zheng retorted in a chilling tone. "Since you are able to lure me here, then you would have some method to lure Chen Ge here as well. Plus, it is still undecided whether he is the real shadow or not."

"It cannot be clearer, and you still want to suspect me?" Jia Ming raised his voice. "Think back to the things that this man has done in the past. Do you think those things are doable by a normal person? He is merely making use of you and the entire police force; he is using all of you to cover up his sin."

"Cover up his sin? Do you even understand the definition of sin?" Lee Zheng pressed Jia Ming onto his seat at the dining table. "Be honest and be quiet. Stop disturbing me with your misinformation, and don't do things that you shouldn't. I know how to make my own judgment."

Lee Zheng and Jia Ming conversed softly as Chen Ge walked away. When he reached the top of the stairs, there came a knock from the hotel front door.

"Is someone there?" A young man who carried a black schoolbag stood at the entrance. He looked rather polite and weak. "I wish to stay here for the night."

The young man was in the middle of his puberty, and his voice was changing. Other than that, he looked like a normal high-schooler who probably ran away from home. Pushing his spectacles up his nose, he took a long detour away from Lee Zheng and Jia Ming. He carefully moved to the counter. "Is someone here? Is the boss around?"

Chen Ge, who stood on the second floor, saw everything clearly. "The boy looks similar to the boy that I saw on the high-schooler's phone when I was on the bus. Therefore, he should be either Bei Wen or Bei Ye."

When he was taking the last bus on Route 104, Chen Ge had run into an unassuming high-schooler. He had gotten onto the bus because he was in search of his missing schoolmates, and he had shown Chen Ge the picture of his mates. In a pure stroke of luck, the high-schooler that he had described seemed to match the high-schooler who helped Gu Feiyu when he took the bus. To prevent an accident from befalling the high-schooler, Chen Ge had chased him off the bus and promised him to get to the bottom of the truth and help his friends if it was possible.

“When I was playing Xiao Bu’s game, I did run into a high-schooler at the hotel.” Chen Ge gripped the railing, and his gaze wandered between the high-schooler and Lee Zheng. “In Xiao Bu’s game, there were four tenants at the hotel, they were the woman, the high-schooler, the police officer, and Xiao Bu. Now that the police and the high-schooler have showed up, isn’t it time for the woman who can change her skin to show up?”

The world behind the door was created from the memory of the door-pusher. The world inside the game recorded Xiao Bu’s personal experience. Now that the door had gone out of control, all the nightmares that she had experienced would be turned into reality.

“Why would Xiao Bu have other people play this game? Does she merely want to prove that she is innocent? To garner sympathy from others? Or is this a tool to help her escape? The game contains the key that might release her from the nightmare, is that it?”

With Chen Ge’s aid, Fan Chong had cleared the game, and it was around then that the accident had befallen the guy. The shadow had reached out to harm his whole family. Fan Chong was currently missing, and there was a great chance that the shadow had already taken control of his big brother, Fan Dade.

“The shadow should know about Xiao Bu’s game, so why didn’t he destroy it? Is it possible that there is something he needs inside Xiao Bu’s game?”

“The door in Li Wan City was pushed open by Xiao Bu, and to have full control over this door, one must have full control over Xiao Bu. If I consider it that way, the shadow was probably laying a trap with the game as well. In any case, the most important thing now is to find and save Fan Chong—he is the one with the information about this issue.”

Chen Ge had assumed control of the hotel. After dealing with the glutton monster, this hotel was nothing more than a shell, so there was no reason for him to stay there anymore.

He pushed open the door to the guestroom. Scissors and the drunkard were squeezed next to the window. They already had the rope around the doctor. Should anything happen, they would send the doctor out first.

“How is the situation outside? Just now, it felt like the whole building was shaking. It was like there was an earthquake.” When the drunkard saw Chen Ge walk in, he rushed over to the man to ask for information with a worried face.

“The boss and the chef were killed by the headless woman, and then she died in a stalemate facing off against the ghost inside this hotel.”

“The ghost inside the hotel is also dead now?” The drunkard breathed out a long sigh. “Then we should take a rest here. When the sun comes up and the blood fog disperses, we should have no problem leaving this horrible place.”

“The hotel is not as safe as you think. Without the ghost to guard over this location, more people and ghosts will be attracted to this place.” Chen Ge walked to the doctor and lowered his head to inspect his body. “Can you walk now?”

The veins on the doctor’s neck were pulsing. He used every ounce of his energy to shake his head. “I feel much more conscious, but I still cannot lift up my limbs. Other than that...” Scissors next to him seemed to understand what the doctor was trying to do. He reached out to lift up the torn corner of the doctor’s pants. There was a large piece of skin around the doctor’s calf that had turned ash gray.

“Before I arrived at Li Wan City, I heard people say that once you stay too long inside the door, you’ll start to grow these gray patches on your skin. And if you have this skin discoloration, you are unable to leave the town anymore.” The doctor looked depressed. “I am stuck here forever.”

“The legs are grown on your body—no one will be able to stop you as long as you have the wish to leave.” Chen Ge’s original plan had been to drive the last bus on Route 104 directly to Fan Chong’s home and make use of the red high heels and the smiling man to force their way through the shadow’s trap. Obviously, the plan needed to change. With the blood fog swallowing up the small town, the door had already been activated before they even arrived. Chen Ge could only change up his plan to adapt to the situation. He would make use of the knowledge that he had garnered from Xiao Bu’s game to take down as many ghosts as he could and use the enemy to empower his own people.

Having visited most of the places mentioned by the black phone, Chen

Ge felt that it was about time to finish the main objective.

“We’ve received a few customers downstairs. I suspect they are locals here, so they might be disguised monsters and ghosts. Be careful when you go down. In any case, there is nothing wrong with being more cautious.”

After giving a few more orders, Chen Ge had the drunkard carry the doctor, and they exited the room. When they returned to the first floor, Chen Ge noticed that other than the police, Jia Ming, and the high-schooler, there was a newcomer.

She was a woman with voluptuous curves and a sweet, candy-like face. However, she was a conservative dresser with long sleeves and a jacket that covered her whole body. She was even wearing a pair of gloves to ensure that not one inch of her skin was showing.

“Where’s the boss? I need a single room.” The woman was dragging a large box. She ignored the rest of the people in the room. She turned toward the kitchen with a smile. “I’ve brought the thing that you need this time.”

When she walked past Chen Ge’s group, Chen Ge did not catch any trace of perfume on the lady, but instead, he could smell a light scent of decay.

“The boss is not available. He has left the hotel, and there’s no one inside the kitchen.” Chen Ge reached out to block the woman’s way.

“Who are you? Are you a close friend of the boss?” The woman’s beautifully-constructed nose leaned to Chen Ge like she had sniffed something unusual from Chen Ge’s body. When the woman leaned closer, Chen Ge caught a glimpse of the woman’s collar. There was a complicated wound around the woman’s neck that looked like a tattoo. It gave the impression that the skin underneath her clothes was sewn together.

“I am not familiar with the boss, but I hope you’ll conduct yourself more prudently. I am now the shot-caller in this place,” Chen Ge replied with a polite smile. In reality though, if there were no outsiders around, he would have summoned his employees to apprehend the woman and start to interrogate her about Li Wan City.

The woman stood on her tiptoes to peer inside the kitchen. Even though Chen Ge had already had his employees clean up the place, once one looked closer, one could still see the many suspicious problems.

“It doesn’t matter to me who the shot-caller is. I just wish to know if this place is still open for business.” The woman dragged the box forward. “There have been fewer and fewer people coming from outside lately, and do you know how much trouble I had to go through to gather these things?”

Chen Ge had a rough idea what was inside the box. “Of course, we’re open for business. Leave the box with me, and you can stay here for as long as you like.”

“Thank you. Do you mind if I go into the kitchen to grab something to eat? The blood fog this time is thicker than usual, and I am already feeling quite puckish.” The woman came up with many reasons to enter the kitchen.

“Then, you’d better get seated. Food will be served soon.” Chen Ge waved at the drunkard and told him to get Scissors into the kitchen, find some ingredients, and whip up something to eat.

After the two entered the kitchen, the door of the hotel was pushed open again. A man who carried a strange smile on his face entered the hotel. There was a large blood stain left on his shirt. He appeared to be injured. He did not say a word after entering the hotel but found a quiet corner and posited himself there.

Not long after that, a dripping sound came from the front door, and the smile on the man’s face froze.

Several seconds later, the door opened, and a woman in a red raincoat also strode into the hotel with her head lowered.

The scent of blood permeated the air. It was not raining outside, but the red raincoat that the woman was wearing was dripping wet. Her black hair stuck to her face, and the water droplet slid down her collar. The woman entered the hotel with her head lowered—she did not look up at anyone as she wandered to an empty seat and sat down.

“We should stay away from her.” Jia Ming opened his lips to whisper as he stood up and nudged to the other side of the table. He did not discuss this with Lee Zheng beforehand, so when he stood up and moved away from Lee Zheng, other people could see clearly that Lee Zheng was holding a gun in his hand.

“Sit right here honestly and stop moving!” Lee Zheng pressed Jia Ming back to his original seat. He used the corner of his eyes to silently scan the woman in the red raincoat and then lowered his voice to ask Jia Ming, “Do you know this woman?”

“She’s a madwoman. Everyone who wears red clothing in this place is a mad person. If you want to live, stay away as far away from them as you can. Do not try to interact with them.” Jia Ming’s body was shivering lightly. “This is what the shadow told me. If you want to die, then go ahead, but don’t drag me down with you!”

“The color red represents some kind of special meaning here?” Lee Zheng had more questions that he wanted to ask. Ever since he entered the small town, he had noticed many strange things, but since he possessed too little information, it was hard for him to tell whether Jia Ming was lying to him or not.

“Red represents extreme danger. Just stay away from them. That is the rule that you need to follow inside the door.” Jia Ming’s voice became smaller and smaller. “The shadow has left my body, but he used this body to conduct many things, so I still know some of his secrets.”

“Inside the door?” Lee Zheng jotted down every single sentence that came out of Jia Ming’s lips. “Are there any other rules that I need to pay attention to in this place?”

Probably realizing that he was unable to escape, or perhaps deciding to change his plan because he had encountered Chen Ge, Jia Ming became more honest and cooperative. “Do not enter any buildings with their doors closed, and do not walk past any buildings with their doors opened. Gray represents relative safety, and red represents danger. However, if you see the color black, don’t even waste time trying to run; it’ll be better to use the final moments that you’ll have to come up with your last words.”

When Jia Ming and Lee Zheng were conversing, the sound of footsteps once again came from the hotel entrance. Everyone turned to look in unison.

“This place sure is crowded tonight.” A man wearing a black coat and dragging a large case entered the room. Five bloody red female skulls were tattooed on his arm, and there was a bone whistle dangling on his lips. No one in the hotel answered his greeting, but that did not dampen his mood. He greeted the people inside the hotel one by one, but when he noticed the woman in the red raincoat, his body froze before walking swiftly past her to reach the counter. “Boss, I wish to stay the night.”

His voice lowered conspicuously as if worried that he might disturb the woman in the red raincoat.

“There’s another customer?” Chen Ge walked out from the kitchen pushing the cart. They had ransacked the kitchen, but other than some unknown meat that was already cut and prepared, the only food item that remained was some cake. Naturally, the boss did not prepare the cake for the customers. From the menu inside the kitchen, it was clear that all the items on the menu were those favored by the female boss. In other words, the menu at this restaurant was made just for one customer, the female boss. The cake still needed post editing before it could be completed. For example, there was ketchup or raspberry sauce in the kitchen, but parts of the cake were red in color.

“A Red Specter that likes dessert? That is quite an interesting feature.” Chen Ge pushed the cart out. He had decided to transform this hotel into a scary scenario related to food after the mission was completed.

He had been inside the kitchen for several minutes at most, but when he came out, he realized that the number of visitors in the lobby had grown. Of all of them, the appearance of the woman in the red raincoat surprised him the most.

Speaking of which, after the door in Li Wan City had gone out of control, it had transformed the small town into a unique location where living humans were able to be seated at the same table as a Red Specter.

“Perhaps such is the reality behind the door. There are ghosts formed from a persistent will and humans who stumbled into the nightmare.” Chen Ge served the cake that was not dyed on the dining table.

“Please enjoy the meal. I am not going to collect any fees; I just need you all to answer a few questions for me later.”

“Are you sure? You’re not going to open this to take a look? Perhaps you might see something that you might be interested in?” The woman was tightly wrapped inside her clothes. She dragged her box and walked toward Chen Ge. After straightening up, she removed her fingers from the box and placed it right under the seam of her clothes. The ‘this’ that could be opened probably referred to two different things.

“There’s no need. If it was necessary, I would have done it myself.” Chen Ge held the heavy backpack on a single arm. The hammer had just tasted the glutton monster’s tongues and blood veins, so the heavy scent of blood on it had not dispersed.

“Fine, suit yourself.” The woman dragged the box and retreated several steps. The coquettishness on her face had already disappeared, and she shifted her expression as fast as one would flip through the pages of a book.

“Hey, where is the boss? I need to talk to him. About the thing that he told me to investigate last time, I’ve already gotten some leads.” The man who was tattooed with women’s skulls walked to Chen Ge, also dragging his case.

“He has left the hotel and left this place to my care temporarily, so now I am the shot-caller. How may I help you?” Chen Ge had a smile on his face. In terms of service provided, he was definitely much better than the previous owner.

“The boss is not in?” The tattooed man was very clever, so he instantly caught up to the problem. He smiled in embarrassment at Chen Ge. "Then I suppose I'll return another day. Sorry for the disturbance. See you again."

Then, he was turning to leave without even taking his case.

"Wait a minute, perhaps you did not understand what I mean earlier." Chen Ge had Scissors stop the tattooed man. "I am technically the owner of this place now. Since the boss gave you some task earlier, you can just report the result to me, and I'll relay the information to him."

The tattooed man stood where he was, and his eyes kept darting involuntarily to the kitchen. The more he looked, the more agitated he became. "Are you sure that is a good idea?"

"Why would you think that is not a good idea?" Chen Ge leaned slightly to the side to allow the tattooed man to glance into the crumbled wall inside the kitchen.

"Since you are the boss' friend, then naturally, you are my friend. Since we are all friends, of course, this cannot be a better idea." The tattooed man instantly changed his stance. The honesty and sincerity on his face formed a great contrast to the five evil-looking female skulls tattooed on his arm. "There are too many outsiders here. Do you mind if we go to somewhere quieter?"

He turned to head up the second floor. It looked like he was very familiar with this hotel; he appeared to be a regular here.

"Scissors, come with me." Chen Ge had Scissors follow him—he did not treat the man as an outsider at all.

"Me?" Scissors was startled. He did not expect Chen Ge to bring him along when he was about to be shared some valuable secret. Just how much trust did Chen Ge have in him?

"Quick, our friend is waiting." Chen Ge and Scissors followed the tattooed man up to the second floor.

"Just now, I saw the hidden room inside the kitchen has collapsed, but that female monster was not inside it." The tattooed man sucked in a cold breath. "She is detained inside this hotel, but currently, she is not where she should be—the only explanation is that she has disappeared."

"You are a very clever person," Chen Ge said emotionlessly. "I do not like to interact with people who are too clever unless they prove useful to me.”

“Bro, don’t be like that! I assure you that I’ll be useful to you, and you’ll be surprised at how useful I might be.” The tattooed man held the bone whistle in his palm, and he paused for a long time before continuing, “I know the way to leave this place. It is related to a door.”

“This is barely considered a secret. All of you came from outside the door, so when you find the door, you’ll naturally be able to exit through it.” Chen Ge used a single sentence to choke the tattooed man. “Stop trying to play tricks. I know more than you might believe. I advise you start giving me a reason to keep you around.”

“Other than that, I know the door’s location.” The tattooed man’s fingers closed over the bone whistle tightly. “Everyone who was brought in here by the ghost fetus had black cloth over their head. When they woke up, they were already deposited on the streets. I’ve asked many people, and the location that they woke up at after removing the black cloth was different every time.”

“Wait a minute, you were brought in here by the ghost fetus? The ghost fetus is actually not a flash of dark shadow? Why would you not refer to him as a shadow but a fetus?” Chen Ge did not seem to care about how to escape from this place but showed more interest in the small details.

“Bro, the things that you focus on are just... something else. You must have seen the shadow since you’re here. After all, when you were asked to make the choice at the ghost apartment...” The tattooed man stopped himself halfway, and he looked at Chen Ge and Scissors with disbelief. “Wait a minute! Don’t tell me you entered this place on your own? You didn’t even pass through that door?”

“If you don’t want to die, I advise you just answer my question.” Chen Ge took out Doctor Skull-cracker’s hammer to show that he was serious.

“Bro, calm down. I was just shocked. Of course, occasionally, there are some unlucky b*stards that wandered into the blood fog due to various reasons, but they rarely survived here longer than an hour.” The tattooed guy looked at Chen Ge, who held the hammer, and Scissors, who looked scary. “A situation like yours is extremely rare.”

“Now can you tell me more about the ghost apartment and the ghost fetus?” Chen Ge lowered his voice, and his gaze was getting sharp.

“Patience is a virtue. Since you’re outsiders, I’ll tell you about some of the rules here. Believe me, this is for your own good.” The tattooed man looked outside, and after making sure that there was no one paying them any attention, he continued. “There are many unfortunate events happening all over the world every day, and this contributes to an endless parade of unlucky individuals. Some managed to survive the most difficult hurdle in their lives with hope and faith in their hearts, but others sunk deeper into despair.

“I’ve interacted with at least ten people that came from outside. They all ran into the shadow at the lowest point of their lives. Everything happened the same way. Initially, they would hear their own voice coming out from their shadows. With the guidance from the shadow, they were told to take the last bus on Route 104 to come to Li Wan City. Once they entered the ghost apartment, salvation would be waiting for them.

“The owner of the ghost apartment is also a shadow, but no one has ever seen his real face before. He has always been a shadow in our eyes, a shadow who might materialize next to you at any moment and transform into your identity. He is like the monster that is formed from the darkest shadow inside our hearts because he is incredibly familiar with our weaknesses and desires.

“The shadow refers to himself as the ghost baby. According to the previous hotel boss, the shadow was actually the shadow of a living person, but it was abandoned by that person. I know how preposterous all that sounds, but that is the truth. Li Wan City, the ghost apartment, and the strange things that happened in Eastern Jiujiang, those are all the shadow’s doing. He will stop at nothing just to accomplish a singular goal—to turn himself into a human and then transform the human who once abandoned him into a shadow.

“Resentment will fester and corrupt. Initially, the shadow was just a shadow, but as he consumed more despair and resentment, he has turned into a...” The tattooed searched his brain for a long time but failed to land on an appropriate term. “In any case, it is something incredibly scary. He placed most of his body and negative emotions inside an unborn child, and that is the original form of the ghost fetus. He only left a small part of himself at the fetus’ side to protect it while the rest of him continued to move his plan forward.”

“How do you know all this?”

The shadow was cautious and watched his every step. Chen Ge knew that it would not have voluntarily shared this information with some outsider unless this was the information that the shadow was willing to reveal to lay down a trap or something of that sort.

“The hotel boss and I were the earliest living humans to enter the door. We’ve lived here for so long and figured out the truth from the shadow’s words and actions.” The man removed his coat to show a black-red rope that was tied around his stomach. The rope seemed to have been tied a long time ago, and it had never been removed. In fact, the rope had grown into the man’s flesh. The stranger thing was, with the rope as some kind of margin, the tattooed man’s upper body was perfectly fine, but underneath the rope, his skin was ashy gray.

“This rope is made from the blood vessels taken from the boss’ mother. Without it, I would have died already.”

“But that cannot prove that you’re telling me the truth.” Chen Ge had his own judgement to everything. He would not believe everything other people told him, and that was one of the reasons he had been able to survive so many Trial Missions.

“I cannot prove conclusively the validity of my words. I am merely sharing with you everything I know. I hope you can sense my sincerity so that we can work together in the future to escape from this place.” The tattooed man put his clothes back on. He understood Chen Ge’s caution. In fact, if Chen Ge believed him too easily, he would have been concerned. “To continue the topic earlier, I’ve asked around and finally landed on one of the shadow’s secrets.

“Everyone who is here had a black cloth placed over their head at the ghost apartment. However, they would only pass through the door to enter this world after some time had passed.” The tattooed man’s eyes narrowed like he was about to say something important. “The ghost apartment is at a place adjacent to Li Wan City. It’s an abandoned housing project known as Ming Yang Residence.

“Many who were sent in there were not satisfied. They wanted to escape, and they’d move to explore the outer fringes of Li Wan City. However, none of them ever returned. Initially, I also thought that the door might be at the ghost apartment, but after asking many locals, I realized that the door might be in Li Wan City.”

The tattooed man felt like he had discovered a great secret. “After people entered the ghost apartment, their main consciousness would flag as the evil within their heart was purposely pulled forward. However, there were some who managed to keep their sanity intact. They did not lose themselves, and they remember that they were not pushed through the door but told to move down a particular direction for a very long time. After several years of investigation, without arousing the shadow's suspicion, I believe I've found the door's location."

"It's in a residential area on the outskirts of Li Wan City, right? If I'm not mistaken, it should be one of the rooms in the first block on the first floor." Under the tattooed man's shocked scrutiny, Chen Ge revealed the location that the former had taken years to uncover. "Never mind, I guess you've given me more than enough useful information. At least now I know that the ghost apartment is at Ming Yang Residence and the shadow has placed most of his 'body' into an unborn child."

Chen Ge asked the tattooed man a few more questions. He realized how unusual this man was. He had a natural closeness to ghosts and spirits, kind of like a weakened but adult version of Fan Yu.

Chapter 656: Shut the Door

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

The tattooed man told Chen Ge everything that he knew, but whether he could be trusted or not, that was up to Chen Ge's own discretion. Chen Ge narrowed his eyes as he scanned the five female skulls on the man's arm. With Yin Yang Vision, he realized that the heads were wailing, and they probably represented five different spirits.

"I'm not the one who killed them; I'm merely their vessel." The tattooed man quickly waved his hands. "Due to my unique body, I've been able to see ghosts since I was small, but that power weakened as I grew up. However, it is still there. Probably because of that, the shadow came after me and used my body to keep some unique spirits."

The man pointed at his arm. "These five women were once the ghost fetus' mother—they were personally handpicked by the shadow. They were living humans whose body features were different from others, but probably because there were too many negative emotions in the ghost fetus, it died five times in the womb. Its resentment was growing so much that sometimes I could feel it myself. Be it the mothers or the shadow, they seemed to be afraid of the ghost fetus."

"Even the shadow is afraid of the fetus?" Chen Ge could not understand why someone would fear their own creation, but he did not focus on this topic. "I am willing to cooperate with you, but the premise is that you have to listen to my orders."

"A wise choice. Actually, I still know some other secrets about the shadow. After we escape from this place, I will tell you more about them." The tattooed man was worried that Chen Ge might kill him after he had outlived his usefulness, so he quickly explained that he still had other values to be discovered.

"Sure." Chen Ge smiled lightly. He did not really care that much. After all, there was a momentous difference to his and the tattooed man's goal. The tattooed man wanted to escape, and most of the locals probably had that goal in mind, but Chen Ge's goal was to find a chance to kill the shadow. Of course, it would be better if he could capture the shadow alive.

Everyone understood the dangers of a door that had gone out of control, even Doctor Gao stayed away from this place, but for Chen Ge, once he had completed his preparation, even an uncontrollable door could be turned into a giant treasure.

Returning to the first floor, the tattooed man pushed the case to the corner. The bone whistle that he was holding earlier had disappeared—he had probably placed it inside his pocket. Seeing how obedient the tattooed man was acting, walking behind Chen Ge, the woman was confounded. She had met the tattooed man before and understood how powerful he was. “You two...”

The woman leaned forward and purposely brushed against the tattooed man when he passed her. She seemed to have something to say, but the tattooed man ignored her and walked on ahead. Considering the situation that he was in, he was not going to do anything to arouse Chen Ge's suspicion.

“Scissors, go to the entrance to take a look. See if there's anyone else out on the street and then close the door.” Scissors moved to oblige—he had complete trust in Chen Ge. There were flickering shadows in the fog, and there was even someone waving at them, but the shadows kept their distance like they did not dare wander too close.

“There are only some shadows on the streets—I don't see anyone alive.”

“Then close the door. It's their loss to not come in here.” With such a large commotion at the hotel, the locals of Li Wan City must have noticed it, so it was perfectly normal for them to come over to check out the situation.

After the door was closed, Chen Ge scanned everyone in the room. “Everyone, due to different kinds of reason, we've gathered here tonight. I suppose you can call it fate. I will not harm anyone and will not do anything disadvantageous to any of you. I merely wish for us to stick together to discuss some problems, like how to escape from this place.”

Once Chen Ge finished, the tattooed man started to fidget. He tried his best to meet Chen Ge's eyes. “The more people we take with us, the less likely we're going to succeed. The shadow can transform into anyone of us, and if he finds out about our plan, we'll fail one hundred percent!"

"Yes, the shadow can transform into anyone of us, and that is the second thing I wish to tell everyone. I hope no one here will do anything irrational—I will not harm any innocent party, but that does not mean that I will not harm the shadow." Chen Ge stood at the head of the dining table, holding his backpack.

"This is so like you..." The drunkard grumbled softly. Ever since he listened to Chen Ge's advice and selected the correct antidote, the drunkard had developed loyalty toward Chen Ge that could not be shaken. Even though the man could be very scary at times, he was really trustworthy to his friends.

"This man here has stayed for a long time in Li Wan City—he knows where the door that will lead us out of here is. We'll all follow him, and I will try my best to guarantee your safety and bring all of you out of this place." Chen Ge was sincere with his words. If possible, he wanted to rescue as many people as he could. After all, for the black phone's mission, the greater the number of innocent lives he had saved, the bigger his reward would be.

"I'm sorry, but temporarily, I don't plan to leave this place. I feel like it's not bad staying here," the bespectacled high-schooler said shyly.

Chen Ge stared at the high-schooler and noticed that whenever the latter looked through the glasses, he would need to squint his eyes like his sight became worse after putting on the glasses. "If I'm not mistaken, the pair of glasses should belong to your younger brother, Bei Wen, and your name is Bei Ye, right?"

"I have no idea what you're talking about—you must've gotten the wrong person." The high-schooler tried his best to keep his cool, but he was ultimately too young. Chen Ge could easily pick up the flaws in his acting.

"On the bus coming over here, I met one of your classmates, and he told me everything." Chen Ge grabbed the high-schooler's arm lightly. "You accidentally killed your own father, but to escape from the judgment of law, you murdered your younger brother who looked just like you in cold blood, and you made it look like you committed suicide. However, in reality, you've survived just fine, assuming the life and identity of your younger brother."

With each of Chen Ge's words, the male student's face whitened by one degree.

“Initially, only I knew about this, but now everyone here knows about your secret. I wonder, with your personality, will you kill all of us to ensure that your biggest secret is not revealed to the world?”

Before Chen Ge even finished, the tattooed man next to him spoke. “If he refuses to leave, then he will become one of our impediments. Now that we’ve found out about his secret, he’ll definitely find a way to take revenge on us. He will report our movement to the shadow. I suggest we deal with him before he has the chance to betray us.”

Touching the tattoos on his arm, the man turned to peer at the knife left on the cart. “Remove all sources of danger before it has the chance to grow. We only have one chance at this—we mustn’t be too careless if we wish to escape.”

“Everyone here has their own secret. I understand if you wish to stay, but once you hear about our secret, the power of choice is taken from your hand.” The black phone had requested Chen Ge to rescue innocent victims to improve his reward, but Bei Ye was clearly not a victim, so Chen Ge was not going to go easy on the young student.

Being stared at by most of the customers inside the hotel, Bei Ye finally relented. “Alright, I will go with all of you.”

Chen Ge was very satisfied with Bei Ye's reaction. He turned to the rest. "Is there anyone else who objects?"

Practically half of the people there were on Chen Ge's side, so they naturally had no issues with his arrangement. The small minority who objected were too afraid to voice their real opinion. Even if they did not agree with Chen Ge's action, they were too weak to go against it.

...

"Since there's no objection, we should not waste time and start moving. If we wait longer, more weird stuff might be attracted here." After Chen Ge said that, he took the pair of high heels on the counter and placed them inside his backpack. He then called for the white cat and Scissors before heading to the door.

"Didn't you notice how comfortable he is at this place? When all of us are assaulted by this feeling of discomfort, he is like a fish returning to the water. It feels like this chaotic and bloody small town is somewhere that is home-like to him," Jia Ming whispered to Lee Zheng.

"What are you trying to say?" Lee Zheng frowned deeply.

"Isn't it obvious? He is the shadow; this is where he lives; this place is his home!" Jia Ming kept trying to convince Lee Zheng. "I know that he's not going to lead us to the exit—his real goal is to kill all of us. You might not believe me now, but time will prove that I'm right. I hope you'll be more alert so that you won't cause me my death."

"Before you point fingers at others, you'd better take a good look at yourself first. The shadow escaped from your body, so of everyone here, you are the most suspicious." Lee Zheng had interacted with many cunning criminals before. He understood one thing—the more mentally twisted the person was, the more unreasonable their worldview was. A part of their brain was flawed, and from a certain perspective, their ability to study and learn was much greater than their emotional control. A real mad person could weave an unbelievable lie that they put their full trust in without showing any remorse or guilt.

Obviously, Jia Ming and the shadow who had committed more than a few murders fell into this category.

“You’ll regret ever trusting that man, and trust me, that day is going to arrive soon.” Jia Ming did not stop with his persuasion. He realized that it was incredibly hard to shake Lee Zheng’s conviction—this inspector had a resoluteness to his belief, and he was much harder to break through than he had anticipated.

I’ve cleared most of the dangerous spots mentioned by the black phone. It is time to go take a look at the door.

Chen Ge led the passengers out from the hotel, and the tattooed man followed close behind them.

“Are you sure you want to bring all of them?” The tattooed man looked at the large group of ‘people’ behind them, and he felt unsettled.

“What are my other options? Are you suggesting I kill all those who refuse to cooperate?” Chen Ge fired the question back to the man.

“You have a point. If we keep them around, we can use them as cannon fodder when there’s danger.” Tattooed man convinced himself. He started to question his decision of cooperating with Chen Ge. However, the arrow had already been loosed. His only choice now was to follow Chen Ge to the end of the road.

“Please move faster, stop wasting time. One second wasted here reduces the hope of us escaping by one more percent.” The tattooed man turned to yell at the rest. His eyes landed longer on Lee Zheng. There were many mad people at Li Wan City, one could have one’s pick of criminals, but they had never encountered a police officer. “No matter the history between any of you, no matter why you’re here, I hope you can put that aside until after we leave this place. Now we are a shared body, and if there’s anyone who wishes to drag the group down, we’ll have no use but to cut them loose.”

When the tattooed man spoke, the five female skulls on his arm seemed to grin wickedly like they were anticipating a shower of blood. Everyone left the hotel. The high-schooler and the student walked at the back—it was clear that they were the most unwilling.

“Is that everyone?” Chen Ge turned back to look, and he noticed that the woman in the red raincoat had disappeared. The rest, including the smiling man, were following behind him. “With numbers comes strength, I will lead you all out of this place provided that none of you do anything stupid.”

If not for him being worried about Fan Chong’s safety, Chen Ge would actually have cleared out the entire small town, not leaving even a single room behind. If he did that, he would have been confident that he could convince the residents of the town to join his camp.

Unfortunately, I’m starved for time. I can only pick the important things to do, but from the looks of it, I still have the upper hand. Chen Ge surreptitiously glanced behind him. His shadow had completely changed. After consuming the gluttonous woman’s heart, the wound on Zhang Ya’s arm seemed to have recovered. If she can hear my voice, then I have everything under control.

Chen Ge had the courage to face any difficulty that came his way, but that did not mean that he was overconfident. After the glutton monster was consumed, the balance of power was tipped. It was natural for the shadow to do something to revert the balance. Since the shadow temporarily could not harm Chen Ge, then the logical thing to expect the shadow to do was for him to harm Chen Ge’s helpers.

After the group left the hotel, they definitely created a scene. There were shadows in the blood fog watching them, but since Chen Ge’s group was so ginormous, none of them dared to approach.

“Hey, look there.” When they passed the first junction, the drunkard, who was carrying the doctor, pointed ahead and whispered to Chen Ge. At the other end of the street, there was a human shape that looked very similar to the drunkard, waving at them.

“This thing again. I wish to let you go, but you’re presenting yourself to me.” Chen Ge did not hold back this time and activated the recorder. When the sound of static appeared, Chen Ge pointed at the shadow across the road and said, “Xu Yin.”

The scent of blood caressed his nostrils, and Xu Yin stood guard next to Chen Ge. He did not rush forward as if sensing danger. After several seconds, another blurry silhouette appeared at the opposite side of the road. This new shadow though looked suspiciously like Scissors.

“A second one? No, wait! There are more!” The drunkard was already traumatized from dealing with these monsters who would wave at him. When he saw more human shapes appearing one after another, he could feel his legs going weak. In the blink of an eye, several shadows appeared on the opposite side of the street. Other than Chen Ge, almost everyone in their group was copied.

“What kind of monsters are these?” The drunkard, carrying the doctor, hid behind Chen Ge.

“These things are called Seizing Souls. They can mimic the shape of our shadows. They are formed from the excess negative emotions that overflowed out of the ghost focus. Remember, do not stare at them for too long, or they might seize the soul out of your body, and if that happens...” The tattooed man lowered his head. “If so many of them appear at the same time, it can only mean that our movement has been discovered by the shadow.”

“Seizing Souls? Such horrid things, but...” The drunkard turned to Chen Ge with confusion. “How come none of them copied your shadow?”

Chapter 658 - I Am One of You

Chapter 658: I Am One of You

The question from the drunkard stumped the tattooed man. He also had no idea why the Seizing Soul did not take on the shape of Chen Ge's shadow—this had never happened before. He sneaked a look at Chen Ge. The question was on his lips, but he was afraid of voicing it. In the end, he laughed awkwardly and changed the subject. “Just try not to stare too long at them. Seizing Souls rarely appear in a large number, and whenever they do, it means that something big is about to happen.”

When the two were conversing, Chen Ge did not interrupt them. He narrowed his eyes slowly as he stared at the few shadows across from the street. If I capture all these shadows and place them inside my Haunted House, will I be able to creature a unique scenario? To have the visitors see themselves inside the scenario and use these shadows' power to confuse them. If I can make use of them, then the more the participants in the group, the greater the horror effect will be because the real and the fake will be questioned, and no one can tell for sure if it is a ghost or their teammate standing beside them.

The tattooed man was worried, and he kept urging Chen Ge to move. “It's best if we leave in a hurry. These things are hard to shake off and harder to kill. Before they do anything, we'd better leave.”

“What's the hurry? Their resilience is perfect for a slow training. I will teach them to become individuals that will contribute to the wellness of the society. I will help them find worth in their existence and let them understand the joy of serving them and becoming the object of reverence for others.”

Other people did not know why the Seizing Souls did not dare to mimic Chen Ge, but the man knew the reason perfectly well. Zhang Ya was hiding inside his shadow. Instead of saying that these Seizing Souls were afraid of Chen Ge, they were more afraid of offending Zhang Ya.

“Please just listen to my advice. It is not safe to stay here—there is no need for us to get entangled with them. They are merely lackeys that the real shadow is using to slow us down. The real threat will come after this. The longer we stay here, the more time we’re giving the shadow to set up its trap. Do you understand that?” The regret of the tattooed man cooperating with Chen Ge grew with every minute. This man was smart, brilliant, and hardworking, but at times, he could become cunning, unreasonable, and brutish.

He would never follow the moral code binding the general public. He had his own way of doing things, but at the same time, he appeared like he had no control over his own actions. He lusted after the exciting and loved interesting things. The gene for violence seemed to be written inside his DNA.

The tattooed man had seen many movies about crazed murderers, and as a quintessential patient with psychopathic personality disorder, he knew how the movies had exaggerated the characterization. Even the most brutal criminal would not appear so openly maddened in public.

A real maddened criminal was someone like Chen Ge. When you passed them on the street, you would never realize and could never discern the imbalance inside their heart. They could not control the aggression that they were born with and rarely showed sympathy or remorse with the acts of violence that they had conducted. This was the common similarity shared by most psychopathic criminals. Incidentally, the tattooed man recognized this similarity in Chen Ge, and to make matters worse, the man did not seem to realize how dangerously unhinged he was.

The tattooed man had never once met Chen Ge’s eyes before, and he did not mean any offense by that—he merely did not dare to look Chen Ge in the eyes. He was the one of the first to move into Li Wan City, so logically, he had seen the shadow many times before. Perhaps it was his imagination, but he kept getting this similar feeling that he got from the shadow when he dealt with Chen Ge.

“You’re right; now is not the time. We need to find that door that has gone out of control first.” Chen Ge led the group toward Fan Chong’s home.

Several minutes later, after they passed another junction, Lee Zheng’s voice came from the back of the group. “Wait! Someone has gone missing.”

Lee Zheng had the most unique identity of everyone in the group, so everyone froze when they heard his voice.

“Who has gone missing?” The tattooed man turned to look and discovered that the woman who had been dragging the large box earlier had disappeared into the blood fog. “Did she run away?”

“There’s no need to search for her; she’s not coming back to us,” Bei Ye said softly. He pointed at the other side of the junction. “She went over there.”

Following the student’s finger, they saw the woman. The box that she was dragging had disappeared, and only half of her body remained. There were signs of sewing on the woman’s body, and all of her remaining skin appeared normal. It seemed like the woman had the habit of cutting off her skin that had gone gray and replacing it with the normal skin of her victims.

“When did she leave the group? Has she been preparing to escape?” To stabilize their morale, the tattooed man had no choice but to return to confirm the woman’s situation.

“I have no idea; I wasn’t paying her much attention. The woman stayed at the back of the group, and it sounded like there was something earlier that dragged her away.” The high-schooler carried his black schoolbag and carried a spring knife in his palm. Since Chen Ge had exposed his identity, he removed the glasses and abandoned the disguise.

“We’ve been targeted by the thing in the blood fog. We need to stay together, especially those at the back.” Chen Ge did not care about the woman and Bei Ye, but he did have his concern for Lee Zheng. After all, the inspector had helped him many times.

“Could the culprit be the woman wearing the red raincoat?” Jia Ming whispered softly. “When we left the hotel, I saw with my own eyes that she was walking behind us. But when we reached the first junction, she had disappeared. I find that highly suspicious.”

Chen Ge knew that the culprit could not be the woman in the red raincoat, but he did not want to expose his relationship to her, so he did not answer and merely urged the rest to pick up their speed. The blood fog surrounding them thickened like this creepy small town was awakening. The blood red eyes that hid inside the blood fog were following their moves with evil intention.

They strode down the street for twenty minutes before they reached the residential area where Fan Chong lived. The blood fog there was much thicker than anywhere else in the small town. Standing several meters away, they could barely make out the shape of the buildings.

"This has gone much smoother than I anticipated—the exit is right before us!" The tattooed man was practically buzzing with excitement.

"Calm down, the closer we are to the exit, the higher the chance of danger." With them finally arriving at their destination, Chen Ge appeared surprisingly detached. He lifted his head to look at Fan Chong's home, but the fog was too thick for him to peer through even with the help of Yin Yang Vision.

Both Fan Chong and Fan Dade have gone missing, and something has probably happened to the computer with Xiao Bu's game as well. It is to be expected that the shadow has laid a trap here. No matter what we do next, I have to be extra cautious.

"Quick! Look at this! There is a message left in blood here! Someone knew that we're coming here!" The drunkard stopped at the entrance to the residential area. On the gate of the compound, a sentence dripping in blood was written. "I am one of you?"

The blood was still wet, and it slid down the iron gate.

Chapter 659 - Who Can You Trust?

Chapter 659: Who Can You Trust?

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

The sentence left on the gate was meant to sow chaos. Whether the sentence was telling the truth or not, the sentence would plant the seed of suspicion inside their hearts, slowly breaking up their temporary union from within.

“This does appear like what the shadow would do, so he probably really did leave this behind.” Jia Ming nudged Lee Zheng’s shoulder. “He likes to hide the truth in the lie and the lie in the truth—the shadow is very good at psychological tricks like that. It’s not dissimilar to people who tell you what they’ll play during rock-paper-scissors. The shadow has a penchant for psychological warfare. He has possessed innumerable people, seen the darkness inside many people’s hearts, and lived through endless lives; he is a psychological master that no one can surpass.”

“Then do you think that the shadow is currently among us or not?” Lee Zheng gripped his gun tightly. In this unknown environment, only the gun could bring him some semblance of security.

“Based on my understanding of the shadow, he probably has already assumed the identity of one of us.” Jia Ming slowed down his words. “Anyone here could be him, including you and me. And I can tell you in assured tone that the one that he assumed will be the person that you suspect the least.”

“The person that I suspect the least?” Lee Zheng looked around the group before his eyes landed on Chen Ge. Of everyone there, he knew Chen Ge the best, and he had confirmed that Chen Ge would never be the shadow.

“When you think it is him, it will never be him; but when you think it is not him, then he will take you down when you least expect it. He will never give you a chance to resist,” Jia Ming said darkly.

“You’ve said so much, but it all amounted to nothing. How come it feels like you're merely purposely trying to confuse me?" Lee Zheng furrowed his brows. "You're just trying to clear the suspicion away from yourself, aren't you? To prove your innocence, you decided to drag everyone else into the mess."

"I've told you many times, the shadow has already left my body. Why won't you believe me? There is not a good person here. The two of us came from the outside world, so we are familiar with each other. Thus, in this situation, we should abandon our preconception and get to know each other again." Jia Ming did not trust anyone other than Lee Zheng. He had been possessed by the shadow before and knew firsthand how scary the shadow could be.

"Let's not forget you're the reason I'm here. So, this could be your plan from the beginning, and you're showing me these things on purpose. You want me to mistake Chen Ge as the shadow and then have me be your witness," Lee Zheng replied coldly.

"I had no choice when I lured you here. If I did not follow the shadow's instruction, I would not be alive, talking to you now. The shadow is much scarier than you can imagine and also much crueler. Those who are deemed useless to him are killed without hesitation. Do you know that? From his perspective, anything that cannot be used by him in this world could become his impediment, so killing them is the most suitable choice."

"I still cannot trust you fully, unless you can help me find the shadow." Lee Zheng lowered his voice. "The shadow lived inside your body for several years, so you are the one who understands the shadow the most. Who do you think he has taken the identity of now?"

"The biggest possibility is Chen Ge. Think about it, how can there be so many coincidences? We happened to come here, and we happened to run into him? He was trying so hard to prove his innocence earlier, and he had me lure you here to be his character witness. Things really cannot be clearer." Jia Ming shrugged. "This Chen Ge is a fake one; he plans to turn the false Chen Ge into the real Chen Ge because, after killing the real Chen Ge, he'll be the only one left, thus assuming the identity of the real Chen Ge."

With the repeated persuasion from Jia Ming, Lee Zheng's gaze started to change.

"Actually, you should have realized this sooner. Have you ever considered this questions—why would the shadow have the appearance of Chen Ge, and what is his purpose of doing all these things?” Jia Ming sighed in relief when he saw Lee Zheng’s conviction being shaken. “Of everyone here, we are the two who entered this place together, so we only have each other to trust. Other than yourself, anyone here can be the shadow.”

“I still cannot trust your words so blindly, but I will find a chance to test this guy.” Lee Zheng looked at Chen Ge, and his gaze was complicated.

“You can test him all you want, but I hope you’ll remember this. The shadow will transform into the person that we think is the least possible. He flits through the gaps in human hearts. We are no match for him, and the only way to survive is to not become his enemy.” Jia Ming knew about the relationship between Chen Ge and Lee Zheng. He was trying to persuade Lee Zheng when his eyes accidentally wandered to Lee Zheng’s shadow.

“The person you least expect...” Jia Ming’s eyes suddenly widened. He quickly turned his head around to pretend to look elsewhere to hide the panic in his heart.

“What’s wrong with you? What is it this time?” Lee Zheng pushed the barrel of the gun into Jia Ming’s back.

“It was nothing. I thought I saw something running through that building earlier.” When Jia Ming spoke, he did not turn his head around. His heart was quivering with emotions.

The more impossible you think it is, the more likely the shadow will be that person. I personally lured Lee Zheng here, and from my perspective, he is the only person that I can trust, but seeing this from another perspective, could it be that he has taken the bait on purpose? Use me as a meat shield to disguise himself? Actually, he is the real shadow, and I am the temporary pawn that can be abandoned at any moment. No one will believe the words of a criminal, especially when he is detained by a police officer.

The more Jia Ming thought about it, the more afraid he became. It felt as if cement had been poured into his neck, and it was unable to move. Now, he lacked the courage to even look at Lee Zheng—he was afraid that he might accidentally expose his weakness and ruin the shadow’s plan.

“Now is not the time to ramble among ourselves. Let’s go in. Even if the shadow is one of us, it won't make too much of a difference.” Chen Ge disliked this kind of guessing game. If not the presence of familiar individuals, he would have used his most familiar method of elimination to find out the truth. Ignoring the sentence on the gate, Chen Ge was the first to step into the residential area.

“I know the door is on the first floor, but as for the actual room itself, we'll need to search further.” The tattooed man followed behind Chen Ge. When he entered the area, the skulls on his arm all showed fearful expressions.

Chen Ge had been to Fan Chong's home several times, but the layout of the buildings there was different from the one in his memory.

“This place seems to have retained its look from several years back.” Chen Ge looked at the surface of the buildings, which was corroded by the blood fog. He could make out a few unclear words. “Li Wan Hospital's family apartments? This residential area once had this name, did it? Li Wan Hospital refers to that private hospital in the town, right?”

“That private hospital was built much later—the real Li Wan Hospital was taken down decades ago,” the tattooed man explained. “Li Wan City once had a hospital that specialized in the treatment of infectious diseases, but it was closed down for some mysterious reasons. Some of the more important labs have been moved to join Jiujiang People Hospital and a hospital in Xin Hai.”

Chen Ge knew that Fan Chong's residential area was old, but he did not realize it had once been the family apartment for hospital staff, and the bigger surprise was that there had once been a hospital specializing in infectious disease treatment located in Li Wan City.

"I heard that from the locals that stayed here," the tattooed quickly explained, afraid that Chen Ge might get the wrong idea. "Before the door in Li Wan City was opened, this was already a strange place. If any of you have stayed in Eastern Jiujiang, you should know that the older generation refuse to live near Li Wan City, on the account of how 'dirty' this place is. Actually, their 'dirty' has two meanings—one was because a serious infectious disease has swept this small town before, and the other was that there have been many inexplicable events happening here."

"Can you still find that hospital now?" Chen Ge stood before the first building.

"You're one with strange interests. How come it feels like the more dangerous a place is, the more interested you are?" The tattooed man thought about it before shaking his head. "I don't know its exact location. According to rumors, the hospital has been flattened to the point that even the foundation has been uprooted. They dug a hole around the building and basically allowed the whole hospital to sink into the ground."

"They buried the entire building? Is it because not even a brick of the old hospital is allowed to escape?" Chen Ge turned around to look at the tattooed man. "But how come I have not heard of such a big story before? Do you know what the disease that ravaged Li Wan City so many years ago was?"

"I'm sorry, I'm not clear about that. Some said it was leprosy; others said it was a mutated strain of smallpox. There are all kinds of rumors, and there are only two that I can confirm. This disease is not only airborne, but it can be contracted through water as well, and the chance of contraction through water was several times higher than airborne infection. The second fact is that patient zero was a child, but it is unclear whether it was a boy or a girl.”

“It is a waterborne disease, and the first patient was a child, huh?” Chen Ge was suddenly reminded of Eastern Jiujiang’s dam and the large hole at its bottom as well as the Eastern Jiujiang’s Fresh Water Plant that was strategically built next to the dam. That was the location where Chen Ge first crossed paths with the shadow.

Is the shadow intending to use the water plant somehow?

The lead in Chen Ge’s mind was getting clearer and clearer.

There’s monster hiding inside the underground hole at Eastern Jiujiang’s Dam, and that dam provides the water for the water plant to be cleansed. If the shadow mixes some kind of substance into the plant, then all the citizens in Eastern Jiujiang will be affected without even knowing it themselves.

Chen Ge did not voice his latter postulation, but he had a rough idea of the shadow’s plan. The shadow was made up from an impossibly large amount of despair and negative emotions. It was impossible for him to give birth as a man, and no mother was resilient enough to carry a fetus like that, so the shadow turned his focus to the method of Bury Seed.

He planned to plant himself into another child and use the whole of Eastern Jiujiang as his source of nutrients. Chen Ge still had not understood the actual steps of the shadow’s plan, but he understood that the scale of the shadow’s plan was much bigger than he had previously anticipated.

Ghost fetus is a four-star mission, but just what does a four-star mission look like? Will it involve all of Eastern Jiujiang?

Chen Ge had not conducted a four-star mission before. The only connection that he had was the several missions that he had completed to unlock the mission School of the Afterlife.

Ghost Fetus was a four-star mission, and the Cursed Hospital was a four-star mission. Coincidentally, Chen Ge had just confirmed from the tattooed man that after the hospital in Li Wan City was levelled, part of the staff had joined a hospital situated in Xin Hai, and the name that he mentioned was similar to the name of the hospital that he had seen sewn on the boy's patient garb.

The two new four-star scenarios provided by the black phone seemed to be connected, and this gave Chen Ge a headache. All the clues that he had found out so far crowded his mind, forming a death knot.

Four-star scenarios are too dangerous. Even with Zhang Ya, it might not be insurance enough. I have to squeeze every last drop out of this 3.5-star mission! As long as I can capture the shadow, I can force out the truth from his mouth!

To see through the levels of complicated connections to get to the core of the truth was an ability that Chen Ge did not possess, so he planned to use his own method to discover the truth.

Nothing is that complicated—everything can be made simpler!

It had not been that long since Chen Ge obtained the black phone, but he had grown at an impossible speed. However, the direction of his growth seemed to be against what the black phone anticipated. Chen Ge was barreling down a path that no one could really tell, but for now, it was smooth sailing for the man.

The shadow's earlier proclamation suggests that he is hiding among us, then I'll pay close attention to everyone here. If they're alive, I'll watch over their moves, but even if they die, I'll carry their bodies with me. If all else fails, I'll turn Li Wan City around from its foundation. I refuse to believe I am unable to find him!

If the shadow was a master at psychological combat, then Chen Ge was the other extreme. They possessed similar appearances and had commonalities in their personalities, but the way that they dealt with a problem was vastly different.

"There's not time to waste, follow me!" Chen Ge removed the hammer from his backpack and activated the recorder. He was very calm. Li Wan City was merely a 3.5-star scenario, and most of the isolated scenarios had been taken down already. With the guide that he had obtained from Xiao Bu's game, the difficulty of this mission had been lowered to its minimum, and he decided to abandon his previous disguise.

He called Zhang Ya's name, and the shadow behind him rippled—it felt like a woman putting on make-up, trying back to smile at him.

"Today, you appear to be more unusual than before."

Chen Ge dragged the hammer and entered the building. There was firmness behind his every step, and with his every step came a strange sound from his surroundings like there were many people crowded around him.

“Be careful!” The tattooed man stopped at the entrance. The five skulls on his arm were wailing like they were trying to escape from his body. This had never happened before. “None of these women killed by the ghost fetus are willing to come near this place—there has to be something very dangerous hidden here, but the door leading out of this place is situated inside this building as well...”

“Stop hesitating. Since you have made the choice to believe him, have faith in the man.” Scissors licked the wound on the corner of his lips. He had learned from the tattooed man how to put on a better disguise as a deranged murderer.

“He might not look like it, but he’s quite trustworthy at the most crucial moment.” The drunkard carried the doctor and also entered the building.

Seeing them enter, the tattooed man gritted his teeth, used his arms to cover the five tattoos, and strode into the building.

“Do you think we should follow them?” Jia Ming did not dare look at Lee Zheng. He thought that he had disguised it well, but even he did not realize that he had started to follow Lee Zheng’s opinion, and that was very different from when they first entered Li Wan City.

“Let’s follow him, I have some questions to ask Chen Ge anyway.” Lee Zheng and Jia Ming entered the building. The blood fog thickened. A man with a smiling face stood outside the building for a long time before joining the rest.

Chen Ge dragged the hammer and walked to the end of the corridor. He studied each of his teammates in his mind and realized that every single one of them could be suspected.

The drunkard had gotten onto the hearse accidentally, and he was the most normal of the group. He had hope toward life, fear toward death, and possessed the resilience of a normal human being.

...

Chen Ge had interacted twice with the doctor before. When the other passengers disappeared, the doctor who had been taking this bus miraculously survived.

The suspicion on Jia Ming could not have been clearer, but the person that alarmed Chen Ge even more was Lee Zheng. He had not forgotten about the messages that he had received on his phone before arriving at Li Wan City. The sender did not appear to be Lee Zheng. After he met Lee Zheng, he did not voluntarily bring this up because he wanted to observe the man some more.

For Chen Ge, the chance of the shadow assuming Scissors' identity was the lowest. He was trying his best to make himself look scarier and more unapproachable, and that was something incredibly difficult to mimic by others.

The identity of the smiling man was a total mystery. The shadow could have killed the man before he got on the bus and took over his identity. After all, since no one was familiar with the smiling man, no matter what the shadow did in the form of the man, everyone would think that was merely how the man was. He was the easiest to mimic, and because of that, he was the easiest candidate to suspect.

The sharp edges of the hammer created friction against the ground, creating a spine-tingling noise. Chen Ge walked alone into the darkness, and even the drunkard and Scissors did not dare to get too close. Chen Ge radiated a dangerous presence, and the man who had appeared so normal moments earlier took on a different kind of aura.

"I wonder what kind of surprises the shadow will have prepared for me..." The white cat leaned on Chen Ge's shoulders. Its ears were perked up, a sign that it was alarmed. However, Xu Yin had not given Chen Ge a warning. This could only mean that there was something very scary inside the building, but temporarily, it had not shown itself.

The building was not big, and Chen Ge soon reached the door to Jiang Long's family home. The door that had gone out of control was behind it.

"Soon, I'll realize what the difference between a normal door and an uncontrollable door is." Chen Ge raised the hammer and slammed the door down. Thick blood fog rolled out from the room. Strangely enough, the fog inside the room was much thicker than it was outside the town. A normal person could barely see three meters before them.

"I'll go take a look first." Chen Ge held the hammer in one hand and reached his other hand into the backpack to pick out a pair of red high heels. "Forgive me for this offense."

He tossed the heels into the living room and stood at the door to observe. Confirming there was no trap, he walked into the room. He felt weirdly uncomfortable when his body came into contact with the fog. Negative emotions rushed into his mind, and those without a hardened conviction would lose control easily. "I think the rest of you should wait outside for now. The fog inside here is very thick, and I'm afraid of collateral damage."

Picking up the red high heels, Chen Ge noticed that the fog would naturally thin when it approached the heels—it felt like the heels were absorbing the fog.

"This fog is beneficial for ghosts?" Chen Ge asked Bai Qiulin and got an affirmative answer. The blood around Bai Qiulin's heart had started to spread. However, Chen Ge did not summon all of his workers since he was not sure if there were going to be negative effects from consuming this fog.

"There's nothing here in the living room—the underground basement is behind the armoire..." Chen Ge was walking over when the white cat suddenly mewled. Chen Ge turned to look and noticed that the cat was hissing in the direction of the bedroom.

"If it is a Red Specter, the cat will be shaking in fear, but since it dares to put up resistance, it means that the Specter in the bedroom isn't too strong."

In any case, Chen Ge did not underestimate his opponent. He tossed the pair of heels into the room first before slowly entering it.

"Try to sense where it is hiding." The bedroom was small, but after they walked into it, the white cat seemed to be struck by confusion. It would hiss at the bed, and then it would turn to gnash its teeth at the window.

"Is it doing this on purpose to buy time?" Chen Ge felt like this might be a valid possibility. Just as he was about to leave, refusing to waste any more time, the bedroom door slammed shut. The sound of a music box echoed in the room, and the blood fog slowed down. The voice of a girl could be heard mixed into the music.

"Mother and Father have entered the basement. After Father came out, he locked the door. He carried a black bag with him. He touched my head and said, 'Disobedient children will be taken away by the ghosts.'

"I lay in bed, thinking back to what mother said.

"Before going to bed, I need to pull up the cover; before going to bed, I have to close the window; before going to bed, I need to check the armoire; before going to bed, remember to check the space under the bed... if I'm sleeping alone.

"Father left home carrying the bag, leaving me behind.

"I look under the cover, look out the window, look inside the armoire, look under the bed, but I cannot find mother."

The song echoed inside the room like it was detailing what had happened inside this bedroom.

"The father said that disobedient child will be taken away by ghosts, and the girl followed her mother's instructions. What is the song trying to express?" Chen Ge knew that this home had once belonged to Jiang Long's family. "At the time, Jiang Long was possessed by the shadow, and it was expected that he'd do many strange things. The underground missing, the missing mother and elder sister, those are probably his doing."

The music box was still playing, but this time, it was the voice of another woman.

“Red eyes are watching you. You can’t see me, but I can see you.

“I move with your gaze. I hide under the bed, inside the armoire, behind the window before crawling under your covers.

“I lay down behind you and above you, but you still cannot see my red eyes.”

Chen Ge examined the places that the female voice mentioned as he waved his hammer around. “Looks like it has been confirmed that something happened to the mother. She was placed inside this room, but the daughter cannot see her for some reason. Since I can hear both the voices of the daughter and the mother, it can only mean that they have both left this world. This matches the result of the police investigation; Jiang Long’s wife and daughter have gone missing and haven’t been found to this day.

“It was Jiang Long who killed his family, or rather, it was the possessed Jiang Long who killed the family. This thing doesn’t possess even a shred of humanity.” Chen Ge had no clue whether the wife and the daughter were innocent or not, but he planned to bring them back to the Haunted House to get more information out of them.

“You’d better come out on your own. I’ve blocked the door, there is no escape.”

There was no reply. The music box continued to play. Chen Ge decided to stop wasting time. He used the hammer to ruin the bed and the window. However, when he walked to the armoire, the sound of the music box suddenly stopped.

“This probably isn’t a trap by the shadow—it’s merely a trick to confuse me.” Chen Ge held the red high heels and used the heel to pull the handle of the armoire open. An exquisite music box was placed inside the armoire.

The music box looked old, and a family picture was placed inside. The mother was hugging the little brother, and the sister was happily leaning against the mother. There was someone standing next to them, but that part of the photograph had been cut off.

Picking up the music box, Chen Ge tossed it inside his backpack. He planned to have his employees to deal with this thing.

“The red eyes in the armoire mentioned by the black phone should refer to this music box.”

Chen Ge paused and realized that he had practically completed all of the isolated scenarios listed by the phone.

“Once the scenario of Li Wan City is unlocked, it’ll probably cause great chaos. Playing hide-and-seek at the hospital, the doghouse, the red eyes in the armoire, human head mop, an apartment filled with murderers and ghosts.

“Even if they escape from the building, the streets are filled with shadows who wave and take on the visitors’ shape. This kind of scenario is perfect, and the scenario will no longer be limited to a single building and will expand toward a multi-directional development. If I include more mannequins and machines, I can replicate Xiao Bu’s game in real life and have the visitors experience that extreme joy themselves.”

Chen Ge could already see the commotion that would happen on the internet once the scenario of Li Wan City was unlocked. There had never been a Haunted House that would do things on such an enormous scale.

Back at the Haunted House, some of the visitors had already started to figure out the guide to clear three-star scenario. Chen Ge needed to come up with a new scenario to maintain the freshness of the Haunted House, to keep the visitor's anticipation at an all-time high.

The 3.5-star Li Wan City was currently his best possible choice. As the bridge between three-star and four-star scenario, this special scenario would be able to provide his visitors with a much-needed buffer period. This was to avoid visitors who had just cleared three-star scenarios charging right into challenging a four-star scenario.

"Are you okay in there? Do you need help?" Scissors' voice came from the door, and when he spoke, Chen Ge could hear the tattooed man speaking over Scissors. "Be quiet! Try not to scream at a place like this. You have no idea what things you might attract!"

Hearing the voices that came from outside the bedroom, Chen Ge replied succinctly. "Temporarily, there are no signs of danger inside the house. You can come in here."

Picking up the pair of red high heels, Chen Ge walked out of the bedroom. Holding Doctor Skull-Cracker's hammer with one hand, carrying the pair of high heels in another, and with a white cat curled around his shoulders, with how Chen Ge presented himself then, it was incredibly hard for others to treat him as a normal individual.

"What did you discover?" That tattooed man walked over. The reason that he was followed Chen Ge was because Chen Ge was very powerful, so the chance of him escaping when following Chen Ge was the highest. His purpose was pure and simple.

"The door has been hidden. There should be a secret room in this place." Chen Ge walked to the cupboard in the living room and pushed it with the maximum of his might. The blood fog was palpable enough to look solid. It rushed out from the secret entrance, and like a wave, it shoved Chen Ge rudely back several steps.

"This is the source of the blood fog; we'd better be careful." The blood fog left a sticky sensation on their skin, and it felt strangely uncomfortable walking through it. Their clothes stuck to their bodies, and the blood vessels in the air felt like they were trying to crawl into the people's ears and nostrils.

"Are you sure we should be going down?" The drunkard's Adam's Apple was shaking. "How come it feels like we're voluntarily walking into a trap?"

He shook his head and took a step back while carrying the doctor.

After Chen Ge saw everyone in the group come closer, he voiced his opinion. "No one knows what is inside this secret tunnel. Half of us should stay out to watch over the surrounding while the other half will follow me to go down here. That is the safest solution."

"The people who stay outside mustn't be too weak. They must at least be able to give out a warning when they are attacked, so I suggest Scissors and the police stay behind." Chen Ge had his own consideration. Of everyone there, he trusted Scissors the most. "One is a crazed serial killer and the other is a police officer armed with a gun. With them watching the exit, there shouldn't be too much of a problem."

"Can I please stay outside as well?" The drunkard raised his arm high. "I am carrying the doctor, so I won't be able to run fast. If I follow you, one death might lead to two bodies."

"Are you sure that is the correct way to describe your situation?" The tattooed man pursed his lips. Actually, he did not want to go down this path either, but he could not come up with a suitable excuse.

"Alright, the two of you can stay, but the rest of you have to follow me." Chen Ge then turned to look at the smiling man. Actually, this man was probably the strongest aside from Chen Ge, but to leave the safeguard of the only exit to a stranger, Chen Ge was too cautious to do something like that. Out of Chen Ge's expectations, the smiling man did not say anything. He walked to the door and appeared as honest as they came.

"What happened to this man? How come he is so different from the man who was on the bus?" Chen Ge used his Yin Yang Vision to study the man closely. With that, he noticed how awkward and frozen the expression on the man's face was. There were droplets of blood red sweat sliding down the man's sideburns. He seemed to have run into a monster that was beyond his expectations in Li Wan City, so he desperately wanted to leave this place.

Chen Ge did not ask for details. He and the smiling man had some sort of a mutually beneficial relationship. They were working together because they happened to have the same goal. However, if there was a split in their thoughts, they would not hesitate to sell the other person out.

"This is the criminal that I was tasked to apprehend, so I have to watch over him constantly. Therefore, I apologize, but he cannot follow you to go down this place." Lee Zheng pressed firmly on Jia Ming's shoulders and his tone was very unshakeable.

"You can find dangerous criminals everywhere in this place, but a police officer working for justice cannot be rarer here." The high-schooler revealed a mysterious smile, and the expression on his face made others uncomfortable.

"No problem." Chen Ge wanted to separate Jia Ming and Lee Zheng and then use his own method to discern whether Jia Ming was the shadow or not, but since Lee Zheng had showed such firmness in his attitude, Chen Ge did not push. After all, Lee Zheng was only acting within his accepted personality. If he handed Jia Ming over without hesitation, then Chen Ge would have been suspicious.

"Help us stay guard over the entrance. We'll be back in a minute." The tunnel behind the cupboard was incredibly narrow, and only one person could squeeze through at a time. Naturally, Chen Ge was leading the group. He summoned Xu Yin, held the red high heels, and nudged forward one step after another. After moving about five meters, Chen Ge felt like he was no longer enveloped inside the blood fog but instead had fallen into a blood lake, and every single step was harder to make compared to the one before it.

What kind of trap will the shadow set? Collapsing the entire building to bury us alive? Or detonate the door that has gone out of control and kill all of us in the process?

Many different scenarios appeared in his mind, but before Chen Ge could figure out an answer, the door that had been pushed open by Xiao Bu at Li Wan City appeared before his eyes.

The door of the iron cage that was used to detain Xiao Bu's mother had been distorted out of shape. Thick vines of blood vessels crawled onto the door like they had a mind of their own. Compared to a normal door, there were several details that were unique to this door.

First, the door that was swimming with blood vessels was filled with cracks like it could crumble at any moment. Secondly, the four edges of the door were conspicuously ruined, and a large piece that was supposed to sit in the middle of the door was hollowed out. If the door was compared to a human being, it felt like a person's head and four limbs had been removed.

"Look at the bottom of the door." Chen Ge discovered the biggest difference with this 'door'—there were endless black-reddish fingers reaching out from underneath the door to pull at the wooden frame, preventing it from closing fully.

"I've seen many doors, but this is the first time that I've encountered something like this." The fingers had bumps and hollows like they were victims of boils and pox. In any case, they looked really scary.

"These fingers should belong to the lingering spirits of the hospital patients. When the epidemic swept Li Wan City, the death count that came from this place was undocumented, but it had shrouded the small town with a suffocating air of resentment." The tattooed man wiped at the cold sweat around his forehead. He made sure to stay as far away as he could from the fingers. "The shadow probably chose this particular door in Li Wan City because he wanted to make use of this pool of negative emotions."

Endless blood fog rolled out from behind the gap in the door. The fog was so thick with negative emotions that even Chen Ge who had nerves of steel would suffer from hallucinations when he went too close to the door, much less everyone else.

"We've found the door, but I don't think this is the exit." Chen Ge looked through the gap of iron cage; it was a total sheet of redness on the other side of the door. "How about we try to smash these fingers into the pieces? Will that release their power over the door?"

"We should ignore those fingers; they are merely a vessel for the pain and negative emotions. They do not affect us in any way." This was the first time that the smiling man had spoken in a normal tone. "The biggest issue here is that this is an incomplete door. So, if we wish to escape through this door, we need to fix the missing parts of the door.”

“Li Wan City is too big for a treasure hunt like that.” The tattooed man had already given up. “No wonder there is no one left behind to guard over this place—there is no need for that at all. The shadow has already planned everything—he is steps ahead of us.”

“Don’t be so quick to give up.” Chen Ge studied the seriously-damaged door and suddenly turned to address the tattooed man. “You mentioned earlier that most of the outsiders came through the ghost apartment to enter this place?”

“Yes, but the ghost apartment is just a smokescreen.” The tattooed man was hit by the powerlessness he felt before the shadow. His years of investigation had amounted to nothing.

“No, the shadow will not do something that pointless. There has to be a purpose for him building that ghost apartment.” Chen Ge walked to stand before the door. “The ghost apartment is situated at Ming Yang Residence. I once followed the police to Ming Yang Residence on one of their investigations, and we discovered the cut up remains of a girl at the place. There were four limbs and a head. Her dismembered body parts were hidden in the four buildings at Ming Yang Residence, and her head was buried right at the center of the residential area.”

“What are you trying to say?” The tattooed man still had not caught up to Chen Ge’s intention.

“The girl who was killed was the person who pushed open this door. Her remains were dismembered and hidden in Ming Yang Residence, which is the location for the ghost apartment. And the most important thing is...” Chen Ge pointed at the blood door that had gone out of control. “Doesn’t this door look like a person who has lost their head and four limbs?”

That knocked the sense into the tattooed man, and he was the first to elaborate. “For the door-pusher, the door is the vessel of their spirit or their body! I think I get it now; you’re saying that the parts that are missing from the door have been hidden by the shadow at Ming Yang Residence! The girl’s remains correspond to the broken door!”

“It was not the shadow who pushed open the door at Li Wan City, but somehow, it was taken over by the shadow. To fulfil his own goal, he purposely made this door go out of control. If that is the case, then where is the original door-pusher? Has she chosen to surrender, or was she brought under the shadow's control via certain means?" Chen Ge was not making a startling discovery, but most people would not have time to slow down and figure out these things under such extreme circumstances.

"Looks like locating the door is merely the beginning. I've underestimated the whole situation." The tattooed man had a bitter expression on his face. "So, are you going to the ghost apartment now? Over the few years, there have been people who tried to go there, but none of them ever returned."

"We need to find the missing parts of the door if we ever want to leave this place." Chen Ge waved for them to move; it was time for them to leave. "This tunnel is too narrow. If the shadow has set up any traps here, we'll have nowhere else to run. After we find the missing parts, I'll have to open up this tunnel further."

"The door that has lost control is the source of the blood fog covering Li Wan City. Actually, now that you mention it, I'm surprised we haven't come into more resistance. Unless, of course, the shadow already planned to give up this place." The tattooed man had a better understanding of the shadow. He moved cautiously, but before he finished, a scream came from outside the tunnel.

"That's Jia Ming!" Hearing the scream, the people in the tunnel moved faster. When Chen Ge rushed out, he saw pairs of red hands grabbing Scissors and dragging him upstairs. When Chen Ge started to chase after them, Scissors had already disappeared down the corridor.

The surroundings were eerily quiet like what he had seen earlier was merely a part of his imagination. Lee Zheng, Jia Ming, Scissors, and the drunkard... everyone who had waited outside earlier had disappeared. It had only taken several minutes for the whole thing to occur.

"You sure know how to jinx things." Chen Ge glanced at the tattooed man. The latter did not expect something like this to happen either.

"Then what should we do now? Go to the ghost apartment or go find them first?"

"We have to go rescue them." Saving innocent victims would bring Chen Ge additional rewards, and he had confirmed that all the innocent victims had been captured—those who remained with him were monsters and murderers. Chen Ge gripped the hammer and ran in the direction that Scissors had disappeared earlier. The highschooler and tattooed man followed closely behind him, but the smiling man stood where he was, unmoving.

“Are you all so desperate to die?” A chilling voice came out of the mouth plastered with a smile. The smiling man looked at Chen Ge. “This door is the source of the blood fog, and laying any trap here will cause unpredictable influence to the door. This is against the shadow’s purpose. So, he is more likely to use our discovery of the door to make us put our guard down and slowly lure us into the real lethal trap.”

“I have an opinion that is different from yours. The shadow is very good at psychological battles—he has given us endless hints to undermine our truce to achieve his own goal. For this kind of tactic, the more people we have on our side, the easier it will be for him to sow discord. There is no need for him to harm those people. If anything, I feel like he has started to panic because things have gotten out of his control. That is the only reason he would choose to intervene in such an obvious manner.”

The few had already disappeared down the corridor. Chen Ge, who was dragging the hammer, did not appear to be too much of a hurry. He checked one room after another. Since there was still space in his backpack and comic, he was going to take away anything that he thought might be useful.

“But neither of us has done anything, right? Is it because you have predicted the location of the door’s missing pieces and that unsettled the shadow?” In the tattooed man’s heart, the shadow was akin to Li Wan City’s god, and God would not make mistake or even panic.

“That should only be part of the reason. If I’m not mistaken, it might be because there are some other visitors who arrived at Li Wan City today, and the shadow had to exhaust part of his time to deal with said intruder.” Chen Ge had the feeling from the very beginning that the shadow had not come at him with its full strength. The shadow appeared to be busy with something else. Chen Ge had felt that feeling when he was dealing with the glutton monster at the hotel, and after he realized there were not as many dangers as he imagined at Fan Chong’s place, that suspicion only grew.

“No matter what, this is a good thing for us,” Chen Ge concluded. “I’m not afraid of the shadow coming for us. As long as he makes his move, his secret will be exposed. I’ll be more afraid if he keeps himself hidden. The deeper he hides, the more unsettled I’ll be.”

Mingling with the few real murderers, Chen Ge did not feel out of place. In fact, he did not notice that he had become the center of the group. Heading upstairs, Chen Ge noticed that there were many gray human-shaped stains left on the walls. Their bodies were contorted in different postures, but all of them spoke of pain.

“This place was once the housing apartment for Li Wan City’s hospital staff, and it was built before the advent of the epidemic. However, could this place have once housed the patients of the hospital as well?” Chen Ge did not touch the stains. He suspected that the shadow’s trump card was somehow related to these patients of the disease.

Chapter 663: When a Ghost Story Encounters Another Ghost Story

Eastern Jiujiang was so big, but the shadow had chosen Li Wan City—there had to be a reason for that. The human-shaped stains on the wall had no pattern that he could discern, and Chen Ge had no idea why these imprints had been left on the wall. It felt like the patients had used this strange method to record the pain that they had been through.

“Are these lingering spirits?” Chen Ge stood next to the stain and used the red high heels to touch one. The heels, which had remained relatively passive, suddenly leaked out a blackish-red blood. It felt like someone who cried tears of blood after being humiliated. Seeing the response from the red high heels, Chen Ge immediately pulled them back. “The stains on the wall are more than they seem. Even the red high heels refuses to get close to them, so these must be more than normal lingering spirits.”

Chen Ge looked through all the room, but he still could not find the rest of his group. “The apartment is only so big, where can they be hiding? Or have they been pulled into the wall and made into these stains?”

The small group reached the top floor where the stains on the wall became more numerous, and their color darkened as well. It felt like they were going to escape from the wall anytime soon.

“The bodies of all the stains were heavily contorted. Just what kind of pain must they have been in before they perished?” Li Wan City’s history had been forgotten. Even on the internet, there was not much information on the small town. In fact, it felt like someone had purposely removed them from the record.

“If they’re not inside the building, then they have to have been sent out through some hidden channel.” The tattooed man was feeling unsettled. “We should leave this place first. As long as our lives are intact, there are options open to us. If something happens to us as well, then no one will be able to save them.”

“When one of the passengers was dragged away, I noticed that the hands grabbing him were similar to the stains on these walls, contorted and pockmarked.”

“What are you trying to say?” The tattooed man could not figure out Chen Ge’s train of thought.

“You’ve lived here for so long, but haven’t you seen these stains before?” Chen Ge tossed the question back.

“No! To be honest, I’ve only been here once before, but when I came, these stains weren’t inside the building.”

“Meaning they have just appeared here.” Chen Ge could not afford to lower his guard. He knew that these human stains that even the red high heels refused to approach were one of the shadow’s trump cards. Before Chen Ge showed his, the shadow had already been forced to reveal one of his.

“Something must have happened in Li Wan City, or else the shadow wouldn’t have done this.” Chen Ge ignored the stains on the wall and opened the door that led to the roof. He walked through it.

The wind howled and carried the feeling of suffocation away with it. Chen Ge looked at the sky behind the blood fog and slowly moved his gaze around. The blood fog at Li Wan City seemed to have been attracted by something, and it moved like a wave toward the eastern side of Li Wan City. It felt like it was forming a wall to stop something from entering.

“The fog has conspicuously thinned.” This was the second time that Chen Ge had gained a bird’s eye view of Li Wan City. Compared to last time, his sight was better because with the aid of Yin Yang Vision, he could look further.

“Do you have other helpers?” It was the smiling man who spoke. The situation had cleared. Like Chen Ge mentioned earlier, a third party had arrived at Li Wan City, and this party had managed to attract most of the shadow’s attention. Chen Ge’s prediction caused the smiling man to be alert. He was afraid that this new force was related to Chen Ge, and in that case, it would shatter the already fragile scale of balance between them.

“It shouldn’t be my helper, and if I’m not mistaken, this new party is also my nemesis. His desire to kill me shouldn’t be lower than the shadow.” Chen Ge very honestly voiced out his opinion.

“You sure have plenty of enemies. Even at a time like this, you’d be pursued by an enemy. I don’t even know whether I should say you’re lucky or unlucky.” The smiling man continued to smile. Chen Ge was able to attract the ire of so many scary characters, which showed that this man was not a simple character.

“That’s merely my speculation...” Chen Ge wanted to continue when a loud boom came from the eastern side of Li Wan City. Even though they were far away from the point of impact, Chen Ge’s group could feel the building that they were standing on shake slightly.

“Just what kind of battle is this?” The tattooed man reminded Chen Ge. “The shadow is now being distracted by your nemesis; this is the perfect time for us to go look for the door’s missing pieces. When we have them, we can leave at any moment; that should be the objective that we focus on.”

The blood fog rushed toward the eastern side of Li Wan City to enshroud the entire part of the small town. Even with Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge could not peer through the fog. He could only tell that there was something attracting him inside the blood fog. Standing at the edge of the building, narrowing his eyes, Chen Ge saw chains lashing inside the fog. The thing that gave Chen Ge the sense of familiarity was inside the chains and fog.

“He seems to know that I’m here and is moving toward me.” Chen Ge was suddenly reminded of something and opened his backpack. With the smiling man and the tattooed man watching, Chen Ge pulled out a patient’s list, a love letter, a bunch of documents, and finally a flyer mentioning the ghost stories story.

“It is because of this!”

The original flyer had a dark red color scheme, and a half open blood red door was printed on it. However, that door that represented horror and despair was now not only pushed open, there was an arm twisted in chains stretching out from the gap.

The arm reached out of the door, gripping the door like it was trying to shove the door fully open!

“Why has this changed? Is it a sign that he’s returning?” Chen Ge had just produced the flyer, and his brain was still turning to figure out a solution, when the arm on the flyer reached out from the two-dimension without warning!

Bang!

Chen Ge was knocked back by a mysterious force. When he recovered, he saw that the arm was gripping Xu Yin's arm. Without much hesitation, Xu Yin dissolved his entire arm, surrendering it easily, and used his remaining arm to fold the flyer up.

The scent of blood caressed Chen Ge's nostril. Blood vessels crawled out from Xu Yin's body to manufacture a new arm. Yet, to his surprise, on this new arm, there was a red handprint around Xu Yin's wrist.

Xu Yin glanced at the handprint on his wrist, showing zero concern for it, before disappearing. A static appeared in Chen Ge's ears, a sign that the recorder was working fine. It seemed like Xu Yin was using this method to inform Chen Ge that he was fine.

"You didn't even stay for one moment longer. Is it because you have no idea how to accept my appreciation?" After Xu Yin put the flyer away, another few loud echoes came from the eastern side of town. It was clear that the fog was being pushed back, and the monster was slowly moving toward Chen Ge.

"A trap has been made in the flyer, and the door at my Haunted House has been marked. Looks like Doctor Gao did many things before he died—this old fox, just what was in his mind?"

Chen Ge confirmed that it was Doctor Gao who was in the battle with the shadow at the eastern side of Li Wan City. After all, the ghost stories society's remaining members were Chen Ge and Doctor Gao. Chen Ge would not set the trap himself, so the only person who would do that was Doctor Gao.

When Chen Ge was contemplating, the blood fog was again forced back. The old and new chairpersons of the ghost stories society crossed paths at Li Wan City, and the first unlucky casualty was the shadow who was pressed in the middle.

“They’re coming!” Just the mere sight of the thick rolling waves of blood fog and a glimpse of the black chains inside it caused the tattooed man’s legs to go weak. He looked at Chen Ge who stood at the edge of the building alone, and he wished to ask if the man was born without a sense of fear.

“I have a plan that might greatly improve our chance of escape.” Chen Ge was very calm. “Both the shadow and the party who just arrived at the scene want to kill me, but the shadow temporarily does not know that I am actually the newcomer’s target. He is putting up this resistance to ensure that his own plan is not ruined. If he finds out the truth, he will be more than willing to help the newcomer come kill me.

“So, currently, the situation is good for us, and the longer this drags on, the better it’ll be for us.” Chen Ge paused and called for the others to join him. “I have something on me that attracts the newcomer. So, in a bit, I will lead him and the shadow away, while leading a trail of destruction through Li Wan City. While that is happening, you should make use of the opportunity to go explore Ming Yang Residence and find the missing parts of the door.”

“Okay.” The tattooed man agreed, but after giving it some thought, he noticed the plan’s flaw, so he quickly added, “But what about you? Being chased by these things, if you’re not careful, it’s over!”

He was not worried about Chen Ge per se, he merely thought that if Chen Ge’s plan was to distract these two scary monsters, with his current power, he would not be able to buy them much time.

“This is the best solution for now.” Chen Ge took out a flip-phone that had gone obsolete on the market to summon Tong Tong, the phone spirit. “Try and see if you can send me a message while we’re inside this place.”

Tong Tong gave it a try, and Chen Ge’s phone vibrated. A simple message appeared. “I can, but it will tire me greatly.”

Chen Ge nodded. He then summoned Men Nan and Ol’ Zhou. “I need you to watch over Tong Tong and follow them to go look for the pieces of the broken door.”

Men Nan was a Red Specter, and Ol’ Zhou was experienced and cautious. Combined with Tong Tong’s ability to communicate over a long distance, this was the best and most trustworthy group that Chen Ge could come up with.

Men Nan did not complain since he knew the gravity of the situation. He glanced at the blood fog and chains far away and wiped away the cold sweat that did not appear on his forehead. “What about you?”

“I’ll lure these things away to provide an opening for you.”

“My friend, the thing that the newcomer is coming for is that piece of paper, right? I saw a Specter take that paper away. You could have ordered him to distract the shadow while you follow us to find the exit.”

Chen Ge was surprised that the smiling man would call him a friend. After all, Chen Ge had done many things including tossing the red high heels at him to antagonize himself against the man before. “I can’t do that. Just follow my instructions.”

“I believe the Specter would willingly take the paper away and did not return it to you because that was the plan in his mind as well. This is his choice.” For the smiling man, Chen Ge would not be someone who was god awful since he was well-beloved by Specters—that was the reason his attitude toward Chen Ge had improved.

“He is like family to me. Would you send your family into danger for the sake of your own survival?” Chen Ge had a severe expression on his face. When he said that, the scent of blood around him thickened, and the sound of static appeared. Some blood appeared around Xu Yin’s empty heart, but he soon returned to normal.

“No matter what, I would not let him suffer the pain alone anymore. He has made his choice, but I have my principles to follow.” Actually, Chen Ge had long discovered the problem with Xu Yin. For every battle, Xu Yin held nothing back—it felt like the man was actively seeking death. There was nothing worth preserving in his life, and Xu Yin had no idea why his spirit had lingered in the world.

He had no idea what he desired. He had no compulsion to destroy and nothing to protect. So, why did he choose to protect Chen Ge? He could not answer that either. Perhaps because he treated Chen Ge as the only person that he could trust, or maybe he was merely finding a reason to justify his death-seeking tendency.

Death was a serious matter. Chen Ge understood that, which only made him want to help Xu Yin even more.

It was not a coincidence that Chen Ge was called the Specter's Favored. He had something about him that could not be found in others. He could understand the truth of the pain that other people were feeling and use his own actual actions to help alleviate that pain, to give them a second chance at life after death.

"I will join him in luring the monsters away. Li Wan City is only big—I hope you'll move as fast as you can and find all the missing pieces before the enemies catch up to me." Chen Ge took out the hammer. "Leave now. I will run in the opposite direction from the one you take."

If not for the fact that they had spent more than enough time together, Men Nan would have thought that this man before him was filled with justice, a good boss who was selfless and upright.

"Be careful. I'm still waiting for you to send me back so that I can fix the broken window." The boy worked his short legs and left the building with the rest of his group.

Soon, Chen Ge was left alone on the roof. He leaned against the rails, and fire burned at the bottom of his eyes. "Doctor Gao who refuses to be a human and the shadow who wishes to be reborn as a human, the desires of these two are completely opposing. Either way, this should be fun. I wonder, in this city that is filled with terror and despair, who will be the scarier ghost story?"

The blood red moon shone its light on the road, and Chen Ge's shadow spread like a pool of blood. The blood fog was roughly pushed back, and an extremely chilling aura, full of terror and madness, slowly surfaced but soon dispersed.

Chen Ge looked at the blood fog, and the chains and his real expression slowly appeared. The corner of his lips curled upward. He dragged the hammer and ran downstairs.

“Doctor Gao is the thing that is closest to the existence above Red Specter of all the monsters that I’ve encountered. Even though the ghost fetus is related to a four-star scenario, the shadow here is merely a small part of the ghost fetus’ true power. So, even with the local advantage, he is probably no match for Doctor Gao.” Chen Ge ran out of the building and circled around Li Wan City as the blood fog around him slowly thinned.

“I need to be cautious of Doctor Gao. The biggest issue is I have no idea where he stands, and his true purpose eludes me even more. However, everything that he has seems to circle around my Haunted House.” Chen Ge raced down the streets, and strange noises came from behind him. Doctor Gao had probably sensed that he was moving and so picked up his own speed as a countermeasure.

The thinning of the blood fog made the echoes that came from behind him even clearer. The shadows in the nearby red building shuddered and swayed. The ghosts and murderers who were trapped there were astute enough to notice that something was wrong and all came out from their hiding place.

“It’s getting more and more exciting. Murderers, Specters, and ghost stories that you’d never imagine. This sure is a party meant for the darkness.”

Slipping down the streets, the smile on Chen Ge’s face grew brighter.

Chapter 665 - The Shadow's Trump Card [2 in 1]

Chapter 665: The Shadow's Trump Card [2 in 1]

The fog thinned, and the blood moon hanging in the sky became clearer. The blood moon showered its crimson glow on the small town, casting strange and ugly shadows on the ground.

Bang!

...

A window close to Chen Ge was pushed open roughly from inside, and a strange man with his head completely wrapped up in gauze poked his head out. He had been eyeing Chen Ge for a long time, and he had been waiting for this moment to attack. He had no actual purpose to assault Chen Ge. He probably thought that the young man was blocking the view or that killing Chen Ge could bring him temporarily joy and relief.

Such was the logic of a murderous monster. The way that their brain was wired was different from a normal person—they never cared about others and never had any concern about the consequences of their actions. There was often no planning to their decision, and they were easily provoked and angered since they came with an almost natural sense of aggression.

Blood seeped through the gauze. Chen Ge had no idea what the man looked like underneath the bandage, but he could not have cared less. When the strange man extended his wiry, muscular arms toward Chen Ge, wishing to drag the latter into the room, Chen Ge took a small step sideways and raised his hammer in return.

Even in Li Wan City, this type of murder weapon was extremely rare. The shadow pushed those murderers into a corral of sorts to cultivate negative emotions, not to create some kind of coliseum, so the weapons used by these mad people to commit murders were often everyday objects.

The shoulder of the strange man caved inward, and the gauze on his face slipped down slightly to reveal two eyes that were filled with confusion. He had no idea from where Chen Ge produced such a large iron hammer. Indignation at his opponent cheating but him being able to do nothing about it arose in the man's heart.

The man leaned backward and retreated into his hiding place. Normally, when a person was on the run for their life, they would not be distracted by unimportant lackeys, but Chen Ge was obviously an exception.

"I don't care whether you are a man or a ghost, but since you wanted to kill, you have to be prepared to be taken away by me. That is only fair." He jumped through the window into the house and continued the chase with the hammer raised. "Since you planned to kill me, you're definitely not an innocent party. Saving you will not get me more rewards from the black phone. If anything, it'll only cause more chaos in society, so I shall make use of this opportunity to deal with you."

The previously quiet house was in an uproar once Chen Ge jumped into it. The normal wooden door was something that could be solved with a hammer for Chen Ge—even when he was stopped by a security door, the man brought it down with less than five swings.

The strange man had not seen this kind of reaction before. Chen Ge was already on his tail before he even got the chance to escape from the house. Jumping through the window on the left and crashing through the window on the right, the whole process took less than half a minute.

Holding the rough gauze that he yanked off the man's face, Chen Ge studied it for a while before tossing it into his backpack. "Guess, I'll keep this as souvenir."

In Xiao Bu's game, the streets would become very dangerous after dark, and it was not so different from what Chen Ge was experiencing now. However, the biggest difference was, in game, the main character was the weak and powerless Xiao Bu, but the person who walked down the street in real life was the new chairperson of the ghost stories society.

"The biggest issue at the moment is that I still have no idea what Doctor Gao's goal is, so for now, I can only hope that they'll continue to fight one another, exhausting themselves." There was no observable pattern to the route that Chen Ge took. If someone or some ghosts attracted his ire, he would instantly change his route to chase after the offender, cutting his way through the small town.

Most of the buildings in Li Wan City were hiding baleful Specters and murderous killers. For a normal person, just the sound of that was scary enough, but for Chen Ge, it felt more like some kind of a lucky draw. Before he charged into the building, he would be overwhelmed by some kind of anticipation. He could not explain why—perhaps it was because he had a great sense of curiosity.

“I feel like some kind of street cleaner. If only the door in Li Wan City had not gone out of control, then I’d have been able to come back to clean up this place at constant intervals.” The blood moon shone, and the blood fog wavered. Chen Ge raced down the street under the scrutiny of countless evil eyes.

“The human-shaped shadows are still hanging around the junctions. The man with the tattoos once said that these shadows come from the shadow’s physical body. Therefore, there might be some kind of connection between these souls and the shadow.” Chen Ge understood that he had been given such a clear go at the monsters in Li Wan City only because the shadow was too busy dealing with Doctor Gao and could not distract himself to care about Chen Ge. If they found out that they were both pursuing Chen Ge, then the situation would drastically change.

“If I play this right, I should be able to drag this out further.” Chen Ge grabbed Doctor Skull-Cracker’s hammer and aimed it at a window. As long as he caught sight of human shadows in the building, he would cut through the building. With the hammer, wherever Chen Ge decided to travel, there would be a path. In other words, the man was cutting his own way through Li Wan City.

In a way, the blood fog was representative of the shadow’s presence. Now that the blood fog had thinned and there were strange echoes travelling through it, many trapped Specters and murderers realized that their chance had arrived. Initially, the strange noises only came from behind Chen Ge, but slowly, the whole of Li Wan City was filled with terror and screams.

The town was thrown into chaos. Li Wan City, which the shadow had managed for a long time, plunged into madness. The craziness that had been forcibly reigned in finally had a chance to explode as the maddened individuals crawled out from their hiding places.

Whether it was to escape or to release the darkness in their own heart, these human beings and Specters that represented the darker reaches of the human heart started to move. If the shadow had not been bogged down by Doctor Gao, he could have killed a few Specters to warn the rest and forcibly press them back into submission. However, he was unable to allow himself to be distracted, and the more he allowed this to happen, the more chaotic the situation became. The fear that the shadow instilled in their heart slowly dissipated as they gradually became consumed by negative emotions.

Wails and laughter echoed around the small town. The sound of fighting came from everywhere. The blood fog continued to thin, but the smell of blood only thickened.

“This is pure madness. It’s quite unsettling.” Chen Ge leaped over an unconscious murderer. At the same time, Xu Yin rolled up the lingering spirit that blocked their way into a ball. They split up their responsibility clearly—Chen Ge dealt with the living humans while Xu Yin faced off against the lingering spirits and baleful Specters.

In just a few minutes, many strange items were thrown into Chen Ge’s backpack. For example, there was a detached showerhead that had been yanked out from a bathroom. It was possessed by a man’s lingering spirit; he had a habit of leaning on the showerhead to sneak glances at other people when they were taking shower. His fighting ability was lower than zero, but the man looked scary. Chen Ge had a feeling that he had the potential to be a great employee, so he had decided to bring the man home.

Other than that, there were many other things, like a flashlight that would turn on by itself, the spirit hiding underneath the water glass, the female ghost that preferred to hide under the table, and so on.

Those easily portable, Chen Ge would collect as they were. Those less easy to handle like the female ghost who hid under the table, Chen Ge smashed the table into pieces and had the ghost possess a piece of the broken wood. He promised the woman that he would build her a new table in the future.

The reward from this mission was far greater than Chen Ge had anticipated. Opening the black phone, the page for the employee had a few new messages.

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored! You have just obtained a special-type lingering spirit—Lee Gui (Lingering spirit). Lascivious activities can lead to bitter consequences. He was electrocuted when he was trying to install a webcam inside the bathroom above the shower. His special power is Bad Karma, and it is able to influence the luck of himself and the people around him. Will you like to hire him as your employee?

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored! You have just obtained a special-type lingering spirit—He Beibei (Lingering Spirit). Killed in an accident by the water glass that fell down from the sky when she was walking through the residential area, she was very unsatisfied with her death. Until she finds her actual murderer, she can only hide underneath the water glass. When other people drink from the glass, she’ll be able to observe the person from underneath the glass. Special power, photoscope. Will you like to hire her as your employee?

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored! You have just obtained a special-type baleful Specter—Wang Mei (Baleful Specter). She suffers from a psychological problem where she prefers claustrophobic spaces over large, open areas. The smaller the space, the more secure she will feel. The cause of her death is a mystery. The police found her body inside a wooden box under a table, no one knew how she got in there, and they could not find a single fingerprint for a second person at the crime scene. Her special power is contortion. Will you like to hire her as your employee?

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored! You have just obtained a special-type Red Specter—??? (Red Specter)! Heavily injured and on the verge of disappearing. Real name unknown, power unknown, history unknown. Before you complete her quest, you are unable to hire her as your employee.”

Chen Ge glanced at the page and realized how big the reward was. There were at least three spirits with special powers and one headless woman who was a Red Specter.

“I’ll leave the question of hiring them after completing this mission.” To ensure the quality of a team, mere focus on the number alone would not work—the more important thing was that each member should be able to hold their own. Putting the black phone away, Chen Ge glanced around him.

Li Wan City was at the height of its madness—the shadow probably would not be able to tell where the origin of the problem was. The appearance of Doctor Gao was the factor that changed everything. As clever as the shadow might be, as careful as his planning was, he would not be able to predict that Doctor Gao would turn into a Red Specter and, more than that, show up at a time like this.

The information decided the direction that one took when coming up with a plan. The shadow had traded blows with Doctor Gao before. The shadow was a master at psychological manipulation, and coincidentally, Doctor Gao was the best psychologist that Jiujiang had ever seen. In the battle between the two, even though it was the shadow who secured a narrow victory, Doctor Gao must have left a deep impression on the shadow, and he was extremely cautious of this ‘man’.

Three quarters of the blood fog in Li Wan City was gathered at a specific spot. Flashes of blackish-red chains cut through the fog, leaving deep gashes on the surrounding buildings.

“The shadow is guarding a four-star mission behind him, so he must have other trump cards that he hasn’t used yet. I wonder how far Doctor Gao will be able to push the shadow.” Chen Ge paid close attention to the shadow and Doctor Gao’s fight. At that moment, a loud boom echoed out from the building where Fan Chong stayed. One could see that the blood vessels covering the surface of the building had started to shrivel up and die.

“Who did this? Their target seems to be the door that has gone out of control as well.” Chen Ge was quite surprised. Other than himself, Doctor Gao, and the shadow, there appeared to be a fourth force. “Is it the woman in the red raincoat, or have some of the murderers ganged up to form a group?”

The door was the source of all the blood fog in Li Wan City, so the shadow would never allow anyone to harm the door. A strange voice rang through the chains and the fog, it felt like it was calling a name.

“The shadow is finally going to reveal his second trump card?” Chen Ge was on high alert. He soon noticed that something was wrong. Even since the voice rang out, human-shaped stains had started to appear on the surface of the buildings of Li Wan City. It felt like they were the real occupants of these buildings.

“These look similar to the stains in Fan Chong’s building. Does the shadow plan to awaken all the people who have died a horrible death in Li Wan City?” Most of the murderers and Specters had been ferried there from other parts of the country. The human-shaped stains seemed to represent the actual locals of Li Wan City. They had died from an epidemic and been buried deep beneath the city.

The things all seemed to be moving. Chen Ge turned to look, and he saw a human-shaped stain behind him. It showed the shape of a girl, who looked around seven or eight and on the lanky side. Her hair was pulled into two ponytails.

Initially, it was just a faded shadow, but as time moved on, the shadow started to darken until Chen Ge could see the shape of the girl rather clearly. Her body was contorted into a ball. Perhaps to lighten to the pain, her arms hugged her body tightly, so tight that her bones had started to alter.

Creak, creak, creak...

The eerie sound kept occurring, and whenever it sounded, the stain on the wall would gain clarity like it was trying to peel off the wall. The static came from the recorder, and the white cat in the travel bag kept meowing at Chen Ge. They were both warning Chen Ge to stay away from this little girl.

“Why won’t Xu Yin allow me to stay near her?” The girl’s presence was far weaker than a Red Specter. In fact, she did not feel as strong as a powerful baleful Specter, but such a stain had alerted both Xu Yin and the white cat. The color was still darkening, and perhaps it was an trick of the eye, but Chen Ge felt like he could see the girl’s curled up body shudder. Then the girl lifted her head that was previously deeply buried inside her chest and slowly turned to look at Chen Ge.

It was a faceless face. However, being stared by that emptiness, Chen Ge felt like he had been dropped in cold water, and the hair on his body all stood on end. After being visited by specters, Chen Ge’s body temperature started to drop, and he had not experienced such a spine-piercingly chilly sensation in a long time already.

“This thing does not appear to be a Specter...” Chen Ge’s own definition of a Specter was that they were a kind of lingering spirit left behind by once living humans.

There were good and bad spirits, so there were understandably good and bad Specters. However, the human stain before his eyes did not appear to possess any emotion. Instead, it was filled with a pathological desire to destroy. Rather than saying it was a ghost, it was more like a living form of a curse. The purpose of its existence was merely to spread disaster and bad luck, to turn everything into a version of itself.

When the stain in the wall saw Chen Ge, the girl's body slowly unfurled, and her distorted limbs started to expand outward as she walked out from the wall.

The faceless features looked right at Chen Ge. The girl took steps forward, and she started to pick up speed before suddenly leaping forward to fly at Chen Ge!

At the same time, endless screams echoed around Li Wan City. The shadow seemed to have started an indeterminate attack—all the murderers and Specters in Li Wan City were his targets.

“I should retreat for now.” Chen Ge had no idea what might happen should he come into contact with the stain. He did not even order Xu Yin or Bai Qiulin to deal with it, but he evaded the girl and decided to observe the situation first before making his next move.

Chapter 666 - Stain, Elevator, Cigarette [2 in 1]

Chapter 666: Stain, Elevator, Cigarette [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

There were screams and wails everywhere; this was a mass cleansing. The shadow showed a sharp cruelty when the situation demanded it. He would rather kill one thousand innocents than allow the one criminal to escape. After Chen Ge ran out of the building, he soon realized the severity of the situation. The streets, walls, and nearby buildings... the human-shaped stains started to appear on every surface.

They attacked everything within their sight. Be it living humans or dead Specters, as long as they were discovered, the stains' attack was relentless.

"Get lost!" The window of one of the buildings to Chen Ge's left was cracked open. Through the security mesh, Chen Ge saw a man who was only in his pants slamming a table lamp against the corner of the room as hard as he could. The room door was pushed open noiselessly, and a dangerous aura spilled into the room following the human stain. It was an old man. His back was hunched over, and his faceless features turned to the man. Then with a speed that did not match his body, he charged toward the man at the window.

"F*ck! Don't come any closer!" The man gripped the ash tray left on the windowsill and lobbed it at the old man. However, the glass ash tray phased through the old man's body and, it did nothing to slow him down. The fear in the bare-chested man's eyes were overflowing. He grabbed everything that he could reach around him and tossed them at the old man, but like the ash tray, they did not hinder his approach at all.

"I fought for this house from a few other mad men. It was a hard fight." The man had seen many strange things during his years in Li Wan City. He had experienced many things, but he had managed to survive them all. He was a mad man and had been sent to the sanatorium multiple times by his family. He had an unshakable faith in the presence of God, but unlike the other cultish disciples, he saw himself as the divine incarnate. The proof was, no matter how harshly he treated himself, he would never really die. Immortality, that was his claim to divinity.

“F*ck you, old man! You’re making an enemy of your God!” The man was unable to escape through the window because it was locked behind a security mesh. The house that normally brought him endless security normally now became the man’s iron cage. A fight was his only option. The man grabbed the toppled chair next to him and aimed it right at the human stain’s head.

This hit should have caused massive blunt force trauma, but to the man’s despair, when the chair landed on the old man’s head, it felt like he was hitting a pool of liquid. The chair crashed through the stain. The man quickly released his grip on the chair, but by then, the old man was already standing before him.

The man ran to the bedside, and he finally noticed Chen Ge, who was watching outside the window. He called to Chen Ge for help, but it was already too late. The human stain climbed onto his body, sticking onto his back before slowly dissolving into the man’s body.

The man’s body turned gray at an impossible speed. His hands that gripped the mesh on the window slowly weakened. With the loss of strength, another face slowly appeared above his own, like it was superimposed over it. The new face was wrinkled, ashen, and dry.

The two faces overlapped. The man lost his rationality from extreme pain. He started to crawl toward the corner of the mesh where a small hole was cut out. This should have been the emergency exit that he had carved for himself. One would have a hard time noticing it if one did not pay attention. Now that Chen Ge thought about it, the man probably did not wear a shirt because it might get caught on the mesh when he tried to escape.

“Save me, save me!” Blood gashes opened on the man’s body like he was whipped. The man’s expression was beyond description. It felt as if something had crawled into the blood veins and was rupturing them from within. Grayish blood leaked out from the man’s body, which was wasting away. The pool of blood forming underneath him was completely dark and filled with gray specks.

Several seconds later, the gray specks gathered together, and they crawled out from the man's body.

That scene, Chen Ge watched extremely curiously. The old man appeared to have been reborn from killing his victim, and other than the desire for destruction, Chen Ge caught a second emotion from the old man—the rush of revenge. The man's dead body was stuck in the middle of the mesh, and the scary thing was, after the dead body dropped onto the ground, another small stain appeared on the location of his death.

The stain was still shapeless, but Chen Ge had a feeling that if it was left to grow, after another few years, another human-shaped stain would occupy the spot on the windowsill.

“Those killed by the stains will become a stain themselves—this thing works exactly like an infectious disease.” The man's death was extremely painful, and that decreased Chen Ge's wish to get entangled with any of them. “The shadow's trump card sure is scary. After the ‘mass cleansing’, more human-shaped stains will occupy Li Wan City.”

A strange sound came from behind him, and the faceless girl was still following behind Chen Ge. At the same time, the old man inside the house also discovered Chen Ge, and he started chasing after him.

“Everything has its weakness, but unfortunately, I don't have the time to go searching for it.” Chen Ge wished to run away from the girl and the old man, but he noticed that there were more human-shaped stains down the road.

“This is not looking good.” Chen Ge looked further down the street with his Yin Yang Vision. More and more human stains inside the buildings were waking up. Many murderers were forced out onto the streets, and generally, they were running in two directions. One was the direction where the shadow was fighting Doctor Gao. There were many human stains leading that way, but they were all forced out by the blood fog and chains.

Chen Ge had no idea where the other direction led to. To not expose himself, he followed quietly behind the crowd, mixing into the group of maddened murderers. For those who managed to survive in Li Wan City, no matter how powerful they were, at least there was one quality that they had in common—they all ran extremely fast. When one was chased by Specters, only those who could outrun the Specters would survive.

Li Wan City was not exactly large. Chased by the group of stains, the group of people soon circled around the town. Eventually, they stopped in front of an old-fashioned apartment building. This building appeared even older than the other buildings in town. It had an elevator with collapsible door that were only seen in old movies. Rarely were such elevators used in residential apartments—they were normally used for the transportation of large objects.

“Get out of the way!” There was only so many people that could fit inside the elevator, and everyone wanted to get inside it. When their lives were threatened, this group of murderers revealed their true nature. There was no meaning of group effort between them—they never considered the possibility of group survival, only wanting what was best for themselves.

The apartment was nine stories high and appeared to be the tallest building in Li Wan City. Chen Ge glanced at the building with Yin Yang Vision, and he soon discovered something strange about this place. Other buildings were covered with stains, but this building was curiously quiet. There were no stains and no Specters. In fact, it felt like the place was deserted.

“How come I feel like this building houses a terror more terrifying than the human stains?”

The murderer who was the fastest already charged into the elevator. He pressed for the elevator to close, ignoring those who were trying to get in.

BANG!

When the people outside realized the man planned to escape with the elevator alone, they tossed all their weapons into the elevators. As mentioned earlier, the door of the elevator was collapsible, meaning that there were gaps between them. Furthermore, it moved slowly. The result was that none of them were going to leave with the elevator.

“I think I’ll take the stairs.” Chen Ge had no interest in these murderers. They did not even possess the potential of becoming his employee. Instead of fighting with them, he would rather go and conduct the investigation on his own. He walked to the staircase, and before he even walked in, Chen Ge froze like he was electrocuted when he lifted his head upward. Right next to this building’s only staircase was a poster for New Century Park!

The poster was yellowed, and a large part was missing, but Chen Ge managed to tell what it was from the first glance because right in the center of the poster was his Haunted House!

Many years ago, when the theme park first started, Chen Ge's Haunted House had been the main attraction. At the time, it had been an age when information could not be spread so quickly. The theme park had thus pasted the flyer and ads all over Jiujiang, and the visitors who came to theme park would be given a delicately designed theme park poster. If they enjoyed their experience there, they would help promote the theme park.

If that was all, Chen Ge might not have been so shocked—he would only have been surprised—but he was reminded of something else. On the way there, he had once received the phone call from Fan Chong. On the phone, Fan Chong had said clearly that he had finished Xiao Bu's game, and the last scene of the game was Xiao Bu entering a building. On the wall of the building was a poster for New Century Park!

"I've found it!" While Chen Ge was wandering around Li Wan City earlier, he had been searching for this place. It had eluded him until now. "Xiao Bu is probably here, and so is the clue left behind by my parents!"

At the underground morgue, after Chen Ge fought with Doctor Gao, Doctor Gao had used the last trace of sanity that he had left to show Chen Ge a picture. Inside the picture, Chen Ge's parents were standing with a girl in red dress—the girl had been none other than Xiao Bu, so Chen Ge could confirm that Xiao Bu knew something about his parents because there had been some interaction between them in the past!

The more missions that he unlocked, the more he realized that the mystery behind his parent's disappearance was deeper than he had initially thought. The scale of that mystery kept growing, and it was far beyond his imagination. Whenever he thought that he was getting close to the truth, a deeper darkness would be exposed.

He reached out to touch the edge of the poster. Chen Ge looked at the corridor that led to the staircase. He summoned all of his employees and walked up it.

"It's sealed?" Chen Ge had no idea whether this was the shadow's doing or the building itself had been sealed a long time ago. The corridor was blocked off by a wall of bricks, leaving not even a gap.

BANG!

Chen Ge tried to hit the wall with the hammer. He realized that the wall was incredibly thick, and it would take him a long time before he could even get a crack on the wall.

“Looks like the elevator is the only way.” Xiao Bu might have been hiding inside the building. This was pertinent to the ultimate secret in Li Wan City and the truth behind his parent’s disappearance. Chen Ge switched up his usual kind demeanor. He grabbed the hammer and raced toward the elevator with Xu Yin in tow. “If any one of you dare to close the door, I’ll snap the rope that carries the elevator!”

Chen Ge yelled when he was ten meters away. His tone was flat and calm; he did not sound particularly pushy, but all of the murderers started to quiet down.

The building itself did not have any human stains, and the human stains outside started to slow down whenever they neared the building. However, they merely slowed down; they did not stop. This building seemed to be the second sacred location for the shadow. When he discovered that someone had entered this building, he issued that strange voice again like he was summoning people’s names.

Hearing his voice, the human stains picked up their speed and rushed at the building.

“If the shadow knows that Xiao Bu is hiding here, why didn’t he just come after her? This is his territory.” The few murderers were squeezed inside the elevator. Before Chen Ge arrived, they started to kill each other due to the overweight issue. No one was willing to voluntarily exit the elevator, so they had to toss the dead bodies out.

After Chen Ge entered the elevator, it finally moved. With a shudder, it started to move downward.

“Why is it moving down?” The murderer who stood next to the control panel gasped in shock. “I was sure I press for the top floor!”

“Don’t panic. Perhaps there were people downstairs who wished to get up.” It was cramped inside the elevator, but even so, there was a respectable space around Chen Ge.

This building had two basement levels, both rented cellars, mostly rented out to foreigners who could not afford the other rooms. A few years ago, the Jiujiang government had planned to focus its development around Eastern Jiujiang. Everyone had been full of hope for this project. They had built factories and skyscrapers, and that had attracted foreigners like Jia Ming who went there looking for work. Of course, no one would have expected Eastern Jiujiang to end up like this several years later.

The elevator moved very slowly, and strangely enough, when this elevator passed first floor basement, it stopped. The elevator opened to an empty space. The man who stood next to the control panel quickly pressed on the button that should lead them upstairs. Moments later, the doors closed, but the elevator still did not move upward, instead continuing to move down. Shortly after, it opened its door at the second-floor basement.

“What’s going on?” The man pressed the buttons a few more times, but the elevator doors refused to close. He tried for a long time before gasping in shock. “Why is it showing that we’re over the weight limit?”

The screens on these types of old-fashioned elevators were on the control panel. They were very small, and one would not notice the words there unless one paid close attention.

“No one has left or entered the elevator. Why would we suddenly go over the weight limit? Did something enter the elevator earlier?” Everyone in the elevator had lived for some time in Li Wan City, so they knew about the various situations that they might encounter there.

The problem placed before their eyes was whether to stay inside the elevator or leave. If they stayed inside the elevator, they would make company with ghosts, but if they alighted from the elevator, there might be more ghosts waiting for them outside.

“Perhaps something is wrong with the elevator. Is anyone willing to go out to see if it’s working?” someone suggested, but that quickly devolved into a non-decision because no one wanted to leave. Compared to the darkened underground, moving upward was a brighter choice, or at least that was what common sense dictated.

Maintaining this stalemate was not going to work, and Chen Ge was not going to kill the rest of the murderers—he did not see the point either. Thus, he volunteered to leave the elevator. Strangely enough, once he alighted from the elevator, it returned to normal.

“What’s the meaning of this? Can this elevator detect the weight of ghosts and added their presence to the weight limit?”

After Chen Ge left, the rest of them quickly closed the door as if afraid that the man might suddenly change his mind.

This time, the elevator doors closed honestly. At the last moment, Chen Ge caught sight of several human shadows in the elevator who stood facing away from him.

“I wish all of you luck.”

Chen Ge held the hammer and ran down the corridor. The strange things that he noticed grew. For example, there were well-preserved theme park posters on the wall and some abandoned machines, all of which were somehow related to his Haunted House.

He ran to the deepest part of the basement and stopped before one of the doors.

This door looked similar to the others, but there were many cigarette butts littered around the door, and the brand was exactly the one that Chen Ge’s father had a penchant for.

The familiar cigarette evoked Chen Ge's memory. He had never been an overly sentimental person, but at that moment, his footsteps slowed to a stop.

"Just how many things were you guys hiding from me to abandon me and come to such a dangerous place on your own?" Chen Ge knocked on the door, but there was no reply, then he called out softly, "Is anyone in here?"

...

As he finished saying that, a gasp of pleasant surprise came from inside the room. "Boss Chen?"

The iron lock behind the door slid out of place, and the intricate lock system started to move. After a long time, the door that looked so normal on the outside finally opened. Fan Chong dressed in his pajamas stood behind the door. There was sign of tears left on his face. When this overweight fellow over one hundred kilograms saw Chen Ge, he stampeded at the latter, preparing to bury Chen Ge in a bear hug.

"Please control yourself." Chen Ge took a step back. He could see how excited Fan Chong was.

"I knew you would come! Boss Chen, you have no idea how close I was to not being able to see you again!" Fan Chong's voice started to break when he was telling his story. He had many things to tell Chen Ge, but he did not know where to start. He paced back and forth in the room, the folds of fat on his stomach shuddering with his every step.

"Calm down first, do you have your phone on you? We spoke on the phone several hours ago, so let me check your phone records." Chen Ge was testing Fan Chong. When Fan Chong disappeared, he had dropped his phone inside his room. In fact, it was Fan Dade who latter picked up Fan Chong's phone and had a brief conversation with Chen Ge.

"I don't have it with me. I was in too much of a hurry when I was trying to escape, and I dropped the phone in my room." Fan Chong pointed at his extra-large pajamas that did not come with any pockets. Chen Ge nodded and looked into the room; this was a normal rental room. There were beds, tables, and electric fans—there was nothing that jumped out at Chen Ge.

"Why would you be hiding at a place like this? Who brought you here?" Chen Ge was under the impression that Fan Chong had been kidnapped by the shadow, but from the looks of it, that did not appear to be the case.

"Honestly, I have a hard time believing what happened myself." Fan Chong nudged his oversized body to the side and walked to the window.

"This is the underground basement. What's the point of building a window in the room? Is this some kind of self-hypnosis?" Chen Ge gripped the hammer tightly and stood at the door, afraid that this might be a trap.

"She brought me here." Fan Chong pulled back the thick curtains. The cement wall outside the window had a painting that had been done with cheap crayons. There was a mountain, a river, a smiling sun, flowers that would never wilt, and a family full of smiles.

Chen Ge's gaze followed the movement of the curtain before resting at the corner of the windowsill where a little girl was seated. She was in a red dress, staring at the painting on the cement wall like it was some kind of ageless art.

"Xiao Bu?" This was not the first time that Chen Ge had seen this girl, but every time, the feeling that he got from her was completely different. Sometimes, she came with a warning, other times detachment, and this time, there was a certain helplessness.

"It was she who dragged me away when we were on the phone earlier." Fan Chong's eyes twitched like he was still afraid when he thought back to what happened then. "Tonight, it was not my big brother who came home; it was someone else. I still have a hard time believing it. I failed to notice anything out of the ordinary and shared the same room with him for so long."

“Your big brother was replaced by the shadow?” What Fan Chong said matched Chen Ge’s earlier suspicion. “Is this what Xiao Bu told you?”

“Yes, my brother did not come home tonight, and I am worried about him.” Fan Chong sat on the bed, and the old bedframe creaked under its weight. It felt like the thing could collapse at any moment. Compared to his size, the bed seemed so small.

“These beds seem to have been prepared for children,” Fan Chong explained as he sneaked a glance at Xiao Bu. He was worried that he might damage the bed as well.

“Prepared for children?” Chen Ge sensitively caught the key term that Fan Chong used. “On the phone, you told me that after clearing the game, Xiao Bu entered this building. What is so special about this building? It looks not so different from other buildings in Li Wan City whether you look at its interior or exterior.”

“I’m not sure, but I heard this from Xiao Bu as well. Many years ago, an epidemic swept Li Wan City, and this was the only building that was avoided by the infected.”

“Only building avoided by the infected? What do you mean?” Chen Ge still did not quite get it.

“It’s a long story. You’ll understand everything once you finish Xiao Bu’s game. The game uses Li Wan City as the setting and perfectly replicates what happened in Li Wan City at the time.” Fan Chong had cleared all the side quests, so he was familiar with all the plot.

“Human nature is a very complicated thing. It can shine like the sun to bring warmth and comfort to the weak and helpless, but it can also be a dark abyss, dark and cold, dangerously bottomless.

“The source of the epidemic was Li Wan Hospital. The doctors were at a loss, and they could not do anything to stop the spread of the disease. Some of the patients knew that they were not long for this world, so some of them came up with the idea of taking revenge. They contaminated several medical devices and food supplies with their own blood, and soon, the disease started to spread.

“First, it was mostly the other patients, but eventually, it caught onto the doctors before spreading to half of Li Wan City. The epidemic continued to grow, and people were living in constant fear. Many who caught the disease contracted symptoms like they had gone mad. Even though they did not commit direct murder, many innocent people died because of them, so in reality, they were not that different from actual serial killers.

“At the time, the whole of Li Wan City was thrown into chaos, and the only serene oasis was this very building.

“Before it was rebuilt, the building was once an orphanage. The developer thought that there would be quick development in Eastern Jiujiang, so they bought the land and built new apartment buildings. At the time, they gave wonderful promises. They would reserve part of the new houses for the orphans and orphanage staff to ensure that the children had a place to stay. However, after the buildings were built, the supposed orphanage was only limited to the first and second floor basement.

“During the height of the epidemic, all the staff at the orphanage forbade the children from leaving. Then they went to guard the passage that lead underground. They had made the decision to stop anyone from entering the orphanage, including themselves.

“One day and one night later, help came. No one knew for sure what really happened, and there was no information about this online. In the game, it was merely stated that all the orphans were rescued, and none of them were infected.”

At this point of the story, Fan Chong’s voice started to take on a different shade. “Honestly, I have serious respect for the staff of the orphanage. They are quite possibly the only force of good that Li Wan City had.”

Human beings were an interesting thing species. Even in the ugliest and dirtiest environment, some could still bloom into the most beautiful of flowers.

“No wonder other buildings are filled with human-shaped stains but this building is so clean.” Chen Ge had the answer to one of the questions in his heart, but that only led to more questions. “But how come Xiao Bu came to this place at the end of the game? Is it because it is supposed to represent her kindness?”

All the door-pushers were wreathed in the deepest despair—self-salvation was something that was almost impossible.

“You should have noticed the posters on the underground corridors, right? One of the side quests in the game involved a young husband and wife who arrived at Li Wan City. They sought out Xiao Bu and constructed a haven for Xiao Bu with this building.” Fan Chong tried desperately to remember the last few scenes from Xiao Bu's game. "They wanted to help Xiao Bu, but in return, Xiao Bu had to promise to do them a favor."

"What kind of favor?" Chen Ge knew that the young couple in question was none other than his parents. The familiar cigarettes and the Haunted House posters everywhere pointed to that undeniable fact. Only his parents would be shameless enough to carry the posters for the Haunted House everywhere they went.

"Yes." Fan Chong turned to look at Xiao Bu. Seeing no response from Xiao Bu, he continued. "They wished for Xiao Bu to become the shadow for their child."

"Please explain that in detail." Chen Ge narrowed his eyes.

"You've seen the fonts used in the game—they are incredibly hard to read. I believe the message was that the shadow of their child has gone missing, so they wished Xiao Bu could become the new shadow of their child. I know that is very hard to believe, but that is exactly what the game said. In the game, Xiao Bu did not agree to their terms immediately. Therefore, they built this haven in Li wan City. After Xiao Bu made her decision, she should come to this place to wait for them, and then they would help her deal with the shadow." Fan Chong did not really understand the words that left his lips, and he had no idea how impactful these words were on Chen Ge.

"To make a Red Specter into a shadow, yes, this is truly an idea that only they'd come up with." Now that Xiao Bu had entered the haven, it meant that the girl was willing to become Chen Ge's shadow. However, his parents not only did not follow up on their promise to deal with the shadow but also disappeared. All this made Chen Ge feel awkward around Xiao Bu—he did not know how to face her. "Oh well. As long as the shadow is killed, no matter by whose hands, the promise should be counted as completed."

Entering the room, Chen Ge walked to the window. Xiao Bu looked not older than eight. The red dress that flowed like blood formed a great contrast to her startlingly pale skin. Just getting close to the girl caused Xu Yin to elicit a great warning.

"She looks very powerful." This was the first time that Chen Ge had dealt with a door that had gone out of control. He had no idea what kind of influence would befall the door-pusher once the door went out of control, but based on what he knew, the door-pusher seemed to get stronger once that happened.

“The people who made you that promise were my parents; I am the child who has lost the shadow.” Hearing this from Chen Ge, the eyelashes of the girl who had been spacing out moved. She slowly turned around, and a suffocating presence washed over Chen Ge.

“This...” The red dress floated in the wind. Xiao Bu was missing her arms and legs. There was a large missing gap at the spot where her heart should be.

This child is a perfect replica of that door! Other than the head, which has been represented by the heart, all the other missing parts represent the door perfectly!

Staring at the girl silently, Chen Ge finally understood why Xiao Bu would voluntarily enter the haven. No one would volunteer to give up their freedom.

Ignoring Xu Yin’s warning, Chen Ge took another step forward. His heart winced with slight pain. “I’m not here for any kind of promise. You are too heavily injured, and I trust that I won’t be able to understand even a fraction of your pain, so I will not stand at your perspective to provide you with empty consolation. I know the words must sound empty.

“But a promise is a promise. I will help you deal with the shadow so that you will never be alone again in the future.”

Chen Ge stopped before Xiao Bu and slowly squatted down to look at the expressionless face at eye level. “The view outside this window is painted. After the shadow is done with, I’ll bring you to see the world. We’ll go to places you want to visit, to see the world that is waiting for you.”

Chen Ge did not bring up the favor. He was not going to make Xiao Bu into his own shadow.

Perhaps sensing that Chen Ge was not lying, Xiao Bu blinked several times. Blood leaked out from the corner of her eyes, and the droplets of blood gathered to form a sentence.

“One without shadow is not long for this world. Are you sure you don’t want me to be your shadow?”

Blood leaked out from the windowpane, contaminating the painting on the wall, making it look more sinister than before.

“Even if I am facing death, I am not going to deprive you of your freedom. Furthermore, I’ve been supposedly living without a shadow for so many years already, but haven’t I been surviving just fine? There is a solution to every problem, and I’m sure that there are other ways to resolve this issue.”

...

Chen Ge was an optimistic person. Even though he was not particularly handsome, there was something about him that attracted other people’s attention, giving those close to him some semblance of hope.

The expression on Xiao Bu’s face did not change. The blood on the wall repeated that question again and again like she was trying to make sure that Chen Ge had thought this through. For those who had been repeatedly injured, they would rather suffer more pain than choose to put their faith in other people. This was because they realized that the feeling when one realized that one’s trust had been misplaced was far greater than the pain of knife cutting through one’s body.

“Let’s talk about that later. You have met my parents; did they tell you anything? Like what they planned to do next, the place that they might have been going to?”

At the very beginning, Chen Ge had invested everything that he had into the Haunted House because he wanted to keep the only thing that his parents had left him around. He wanted to protect it with everything he had. Searching for his parents had become his goal, so now that a lead was sitting before his eyes, he was going to grab onto it tightly.

Xiao Bu seemed to know that Chen Ge would ask such questions. More blood leaked out from the window, and another bloody sentence appeared on the wall. "They did not tell me directly where they were going, but they did mention Xin Hai Central Hospital during their conversation."

"The cursed hospital? One of the two four-star missions that was given by the black phone." Chen Ge leaned against the wall and fell into deep thought. "The shadow is related to the ghost fetus, and my parent's disappearance is related to Xin Hai Central Hospital. Both of these are four-star scenarios... I do not have any real need to tackle them yet. Other than that, the four-star scenario at Western Jiujiang—School of the Afterlife—is going to expire soon. After leaving Li Wan City, I should attempt that first."

For the Trial Mission in the black phone, the rise of one-star meant a momentous increase to the mission's difficulty. Honestly, Chen Ge did not have full confidence he was ready to tackle a four-star mission.

"Never mind, it's not the time to deal with these things yet. I should focus on the issue at hand first." Chen Ge moved toward Xiao Bu. He was already very close to the girl, but Xiao Bu showed no sign of evasion or even annoyance. This caused Fan Chong, who was watching from the side, to sweat profusely. After all, that was an actual Red Specter.

"Did my parent leave any information with you about the shadow? Something like his weakness or something similar?" Chen Ge wished to get more information from Xiao Bu, but Xiao Bu's reaction gave him more disappointment. The blood on the wall started to move again before changing to form that fateful sentence. "One without shadow is not long for this world."

The child should know more than what she is saying. I wonder why she refuses to come clean with me. Chen Ge stood up. Fan Chong had been baffled when he heard Chen Ge call Xiao Bu, but after he gave it some thought, it was true that the Red Specter was indeed just a young girl.

"What should we do now?" Chen Ge turned to look at Fan Chong. The latter had a helpless smile on his face.

"Don't ask me. The question that you posed me earlier is one that I normally direct at you."

Fan Chong had already told Chen Ge everything about the game; now he needed Chen Ge to make the decision.

“Those human stains are a big obstacle. Compared to Specters, they are more like evil intention that is purposely cultivated by someone. They are made from pure evil intention, and there is nothing human about them anymore.” These things had no value to them at all. Specters might be affected should they came into contact with the stains, so Chen Ge had been unwilling to have his employees take this risk.

“A Specter can consume and digest them. The stronger the Specter, the more curses they can consume without even being affected. If that is your concern, I can help you open the way.” The blood on the wall moved to form this sentence. Xiao Bu came up with the solution to deal with the human stains. “A small number of curses can be suppressed. Only a large number of curses will affect the Specter negatively.”

“You call them curses?” For some reason, Chen Ge was reminded of the four-star scenario given by the black phone—The Cursed Hospital.

“The thought that remains after death can transform into many different things—lingering spirits, curses, the supernatural, and so on. These stains are curses, built purely from bad luck and evil intention.”

“What will happen if a Specter consumes too many curses and assimilates with the curse?” Chen Ge asked.

“They will become a new curse. The stronger the Specter, the more sinister the curse that they will transform into.” The blood on the wall kept changing. Xiao Bu had not spoken a word, and she maintained this method to communicate with Chen Ge.

“Can something like a curse be controlled? Based on what you said, these curses will ruin everything in their sight. They cannot be manipulated at all, but somehow, the shadow has managed to do exactly that. How did he do it?”

“I have no idea. Perhaps the shadow has his own method, or perhaps the shadow itself is a curse.” The bloody words on the wall left Chen Ge with another shock.

“The shadow itself might be a curse?” The more Chen Ge thought about it, the more likely it became. His parents would not have lost his shadow for no reason. He had probably been cursed when he was young, and then his parent somehow channeled that curse into his shadow. However, he did not share his speculation with others—he kept them to himself.

“If the shadow itself is a curse, then it should be clear why he chose Li Wan City as his lair. He wants to make use of the deep curse and resentment buried underneath this small town.” The curse was the shadow’s trump card, and it was the problem that blocked Chen Ge’s way.

“You don’t need to be overly worried about this. Even the curse is unable to control itself, so the control that the shadow had over it is more likely some kind of trigger. It could not manipulate the curse to its heart desire. I told you earlier, the curse is made from pure evil. They will attack everything in sight until everything is turned into a curse. There are many strange and weird things in Li Wan City. They should be able to help us distract part of the aggression. So, we only need to depart from Li Wan City before everything is turned into the curse.”

Chen Ge looked at the bloody words on the wall, and the emotions in his eyes softened. Since Xiao Bu was willing to communicate so openly with him, it meant that their relationship was getting closer.

“Alright, we should leave this place first. We’ll decide what to do once we assess what’s happening outside.”

Inside the room, Fan Chong studied Chen Ge and Xiao Bu, and the fat on his body kept shaking.

He knew that Chen Ge was an ally, but he could not shake the fear from his heart. The sight that he was seeing was too peculiar. A man holding a murder weapon standing next to a Red Specter without her limbs. The Specter did not speak a word, and the man kept reading the changing bloody words on the wall with kindness and gentleness in his eyes.

“How did I get into this mess? I just want to go home...”

With Chen Ge leading the way, the group arrived at the elevator. “There are so many rooms here. Are we sure we haven’t missed anything?”

Looking at the closed doors, Chen Ge asked with a smile on his face, “Xiao Bu, you have stayed here for so long. Did you make any friend with the neighbors? We can bring them with us.”

Xiao Bu shook her head—she still needed time getting used to Chen Ge’s overt kindness. Chen Ge pressed the button to summon the elevator. Once the door opened, Fan Chong’s hands went to close his nose and lips. The interior of the elevator was filled with blood and knife marks, and the group from before had completely disappeared.

“It’s fine, you’ll get used to it.” Chen Ge had no idea why he would say that to console Fan Chong. The few entered the elevator. They slowly reached the surface, but the strange sounds from the surface had already disappeared. Returning to the first floor, as the elevator doors opened, Chen Ge armed himself with the hammer. The lobby was eerily quiet. There were no screams or cries for help. Strangely enough, there was no blood pool or dead bodies either.

“Where are all the people?” Chen Ge used his Yin Yang Vision to look around. The blood fog had gotten even thinner than before. Occasionally, he caught glimpses of shadows wandering the streets, and they were all moving in the same direction.

“Something is attracting these human stains.”

“All the curses are moving toward the door.” Xiao Bu still had not said a word. She raised her arm, and the words coagulated literally from the fog in the air. As the door-pusher, she was the real owner of the blood fog, but that had been forcibly taken away by the shadow.

“How much fog can you take back from the shadow?” A plan started to form in Chen Ge’s mind.

“About half. My limbs and head are hidden by the shadow outside of Li Wan City. It is outside of the territory that I can influence. Furthermore, the shadow is in possession of my heart, and he wishes to use that heart to control the door.” Every single word was pulsing with Xiao Bu’s pain. The readers, Chen Ge and Fan Chong, felt their hearts wrench from knowing her story.

“No wonder the shadow built the ghost apartment outside of Li Wan City. Li Wan City is used to collect despair and negative emotions while Ming Yang Residence is used to suppress Xiao Bu, to get Xiao Bu to follow his orders. He sure has ironed out the details.” Chen Ge told Xiao Bu to stop controlling the blood fog for now so that they would not attract the shadow’s attention. “A few of my friends have left Li Wan City to go in search of the ghost apartment. I believe that they will return with your limbs and head in no time. After that, you should surprise the shadow with your return, and we’ll work together to vanquish the shadow.”

Chen Ge’s plan was probable, but Xiao Bu did not appear to be that optimistic. “You are unable to kill him.”

“Why?” Chen Ge pressed to find out the reason, but Xiao Bu did not answer. No matter what Chen Ge asked after that, Xiao Bu stopped answering him. The few walked down the streets of Li Wan City. Xiao Bu was very familiar with the layout of Li Wan City; this was the door that she had pushed open, so theoretically speaking, the world behind the door was formulated from her memory.

With Xiao Bu’s aid, Chen Ge and Fan Chong avoided all the dangerous pitfalls and arrived at Fan Chong’s residential area. About eighty percent of the small town’s blood fog was gathered there, and the scary thing was that the curses that had gathered for who knew how long at Li Wan City was present inside the blood fog as well.

They morphed into black threads to entangle around a figure who was standing in the middle of the blood fog. The black threads chained said figure to the ground, refusing to let him to take another step.

“Xiao Bu, how many curses can a Red Specter support?” Chen Ge was afraid that Xiao Bu was not going to answer, so he added, “The man who is fighting the shadow now can be said to be the scariest presence among Red Specters. He once shouldered all the negative emotions behind the door on his own. Could a presence like that resist the accumulative curses gathered in Li Wan City?”

Xiao Bu shook her head. “No, but he should be able to resist the curses for an extended period of time.”

“Understood.” Chen Ge waved for Fan Chong to follow him. “Then, we’ll let them fight it out for now.”

“We’re only going to hide and watch from the sidelines?” Fan Chong was confused. “They are stuck in a stalemate. This should be perfect opportunity for us. Be it to escape or to launch an ambush, we should be doing something!”

Chen Ge came with promises of killing the shadow, but once they arrived at the scene, Chen Ge looked around and suggested that they find a place to hide. That did not feel right.

“We’ll make our move after they have finished the fight. These two have access to too many secrets. We mustn’t let our guard down. Furthermore, the longer they drag this out, the better it will be for us. Once we find the missing pieces of the door, we’ll have the upper hand. We’ll strike then.” Chen Ge looked at the blood fog that had gathered there. “Neither of them can be called an ally. Therefore, the only victory solution is to defeat both of them.”

“You plan to vanquish both of them at the same time?” Fan Chong held his heart. He did not dare to ask anymore question; things were fast getting out of his understanding.

“The shadow is able to contest Doctor Gao’s power by using the blood fog and the curses buried in Li Wan City. If he does not possess any other trump cards, he should be the first to fall.” Chen Ge understood that the curse needed some time to work its evil magic, and in that opening, Doctor Gao should be able to take down the shadow.

“The shadow? Doctor Gao? Sounds like you’re familiar with both of them.” Fan Chong did not expect Chen Ge to answer, and he kept his voice to a low whisper. The flyer for the ghost story society was on Xu Yin, but Doctor Gao probably felt the flyer’s approach, and he became more violent. In the blood red ocean, the chains continued to lash out, creating consecutive echoes of metal clangs.

“How did Doctor Gao become so strong? What did he experience behind the door? Has he consumed many Red Specters?” Chen Ge could not get it. When he was at Coffin Village, the ghost inside the well had also grown tremendously strong after she entered the door, but she was different from Doctor Gao. All she wanted was to be reborn as a human, so she did not focus completely on getting stronger.

While he was focusing on resolving that mystery, Chen Ge’s own phone suddenly vibrated. He quickly took it out to see. It was an unread message. “It’s from Tong Tong. Have they succeeded?”

However, after reading the message, all Chen Ge could do was frown. There was only a short message. “So many children! Quick, come!”

“Looks like something has happened over there.” Chen Ge put the phone away. Without wasting any time, he called after Fan Chong and Xiao Bu. They ran toward the outskirts of Li Wan City.

Just as Chen Ge made that decision, the blood sea behind them suddenly exploded. A shadow that looked suspiciously like Chen Ge slithered away, rushing toward the ghost apartment at the fringe Li Wan City.

The blood fog dispersed, and the voice that seemed to come from hell itself echoed in everyone’s ears. “Chen Ge...”

The white doctor’s coat was completely dyed red, and the red was even brighter than blood.

Heavy, thick black chains curled around the white coat. The man's lower body was dissolving into blackish-red blood. He was heavily injured, but he did not seem to register the pain.

Slowly looking up, his eyes that had once been filled with brilliance were now completely red. Chen Ge and the shadow were both reflected in his pupils.

“Chen Ge...”

Doctor Gao!

Picking up speed, Chen Ge rushed down the distance. “It looks like he has lost his mind, but how did he manage to remember in his condition? Is it because I’ve left too deep an impression on him?”

Chapter 669 - Endless Rush [2 in 1]

Chapter 669: Endless Rush [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

The shadow retreated, heading toward the outskirts of Li Wan City. Doctor Gao suffered all of the curses, and his condition did not look so good either. The blood fog dispersed, and the dress that Xiao Bu was wearing grew brighter. She tilted her head to the side to study Chen Ge. She felt like following this man might improve her luck.

“Let’s go!” Chen Ge carried his two large bags and started running. Fan Chong was the unluckiest of the group. Due to his size, all this running was literally killing him.

“Wait for me!” Fan Chong grasped his heart. At that moment, he had a sudden clarity about how funny destiny sometimes worked. The last time he ran like his life depended on it was at Chen Ge’s Haunted House, and this time, he was escaping with the man himself.

“Please do not stop! No matter what! I’ll go find a car or some kind of transport for you!” Chen Ge raced down the streets for a long time, but he could not find any means of transportation that he could use. With no other option, he had to stop and tell Xiao Bu, “When the doctor starts to chase after us, I need you to take Fan Chong somewhere you two can hide safely while I lead the doctor away. But try not to stay too far away from me, I’ll still need your help to deal with the shadow later.”

Chen Ge was already halfway across town when Doctor Gao, whose lower body was dissolving, started to make his move. The chains surged through the fog, making a sharp sound as they ground against the surrounding buildings.

“Chen Ge...” The pair of blood red eyes looked at Chen Ge and the shadow who were escaping. Perhaps the question going through his mind at the time was—Why do these two look so similar?

The curses that had brewed for so many years in Li Wan City almost all surged into Doctor Gao's body. Black blood kept pouring out of the good doctor's body. The blood was mixed with black and gray substances. If one went close enough, one could even hear the sound of something wailing inside the substance.

Seeing Doctor Gao's condition, Chen Ge shivered in fear. "The shadow's trump card sure is something else. If Doctor Gao did not show up, then it'd be me and my employees who were suffering most of the curse. If that was the case, even if I managed to kill the shadow, I'd probably lose more than half of my employees."

There was a limit to the number of curses a Specter could digest. If it went over the limit, the Specter would turn into a new curse. Furthermore, after they digested the curse, the negative emotions in their hearts would be amplified and brought to the forefront. When that happened, it would have been impossible for them to keep their employment at the Haunted House. Without the actors, Chen Ge would have to temporarily close down all the underground scenarios at the Haunted House.

If the Haunted House could not run properly, it would negatively influence New Century Park. During this momentous period when the futuristic park was about to open, this might become the straw that broke the camel's back.

On the surface, everything might look like it was turning for the better, but only Chen Ge knew the difficulty that was involved in this process. If he was careless, all the effort that he had put in prior to this would go up in smoke.

"The shadow chose to retreat and hurry toward the ghost apartment, meaning that Tong Tong's group has obtained something very important to the shadow. This could be seen as good news for me as well." Chen Ge saw everything that might slow the shadow down as a good thing.

Behind him, Doctor Gao had started his chase. However, the man's situation could only be described as weird. Chen Ge had no idea why Doctor Gao had such a relentless insistence on chasing him. "Didn't we clear this up before he chose to commit suicide? I even promised to help him look after his daughter, Gao Ru Xue."

When he was alive, Doctor Gao was already at the verge of losing in mind. Now that he was dead and entangled by a small town's worth of curses, of course, Chen Ge was not going to stay to chat with the man.

“There’s no time to draft a plan—I’ll draw everyone to the ghost apartment. If there’s a fight, the ghost apartment will be destroyed. Somehow, I’ll have to ruin the shadow’s plan.” With Chen Ge leading the way, Doctor Gao and Xiao Bu both moved toward the ghost apartment. The shadow noticed this and was enraged. He knew that Chen Ge was in Li Wan City, but he had not realized that Doctor Gao’s actual target was Chen Ge.

Sensing a thick, sharp point of resentment, Chen Ge looked around and saw the shadow moving down the street that was adjacent to his. Pointing behind him, Chen Ge made a signal at the shadow. “You’ve guessed correctly. It was me who led him here.”

The shadow gritted his teeth in anger, but he knew that Chen Ge had the protection of a Red Specter. He would not be able to take down Chen Ge in a short period of time. Therefore, he decided to adopt the tactic of ‘see no devil’ as he picked up his speed to rush to the ghost apartment.

“Looks like Tong Tong and the guys have really created a big problem for the shadow.” Chen Ge signaled for Xiao Bu and Fan Chong to move along. He rushed as fast as he could, trying to follow the shadow. Soon, a strange sight appeared in Li Wan City.

As the culprit, the shadow was chased by a living man carrying two bags like he had just come back from a shopping spree. That man was followed by a crazy Red Specter, and at the end of this strange procession was a fat man who looked like he was going to collapse at any moment due to a lack of air and a little girl who had no arms and legs.

The shadow was too worried about the ghost apartment to care about Chen Ge. So, to an outside observer, it looked like Chen Ge was chasing after the shadow. The ghost apartment was located at Ming Yang Residence outside of Li Wan City. When Chen Ge came to the edge of Li Wan City, he could sense very clearly that the blood fog there had thickened.

“The blood fog outside of the small town seems to be different from the one inside the town. There seems to be something extra in this fog.” Chen Ge used his heart to sense this strange fog, and he felt like something was calling his name from the western side. He looked in that direction and understood that somewhere around there was New Century Park.

The shadow did not give Chen Ge too much time to stop to think. He crossed the traffic-less street and rushed into the residential area. The blood fog covered up his tracks, and just like that, the shadow disappeared before Chen Ge's eyes.

The shadow had disappeared, but Doctor Gao was still following behind Chen Ge. He had to figure out a way to distract the doctor's attention. Chen Ge turned back to look—one of Doctor Gao's eyes had turned blackish-red. Endless black threads entwined together with blood vessels, and they flowed out of his eyes as ash-colored tears.

"Doctor Gao is becoming stranger and stranger. Xiao Bu once said that a Specter will be assimilated into the curse once they consume too many curses, and the stronger the Specter, the scarier the curse it'll turn into! If Doctor Gao becomes consumed by the curse, what kind of curse will this Specter that was the strongest Red Specter become?

"There's no time to waste anymore!" Chen Ge reached into his backpack, and he yelled Yan Danian's name. "Can you sense Ol' Zhou's location? Quick!"

Ol' Zhou had lived inside Yan Danian's comic for many years, and they shared a good relationship. Actually, Chen Ge was merely giving this a try—he had no idea whether it would work or not.

The pressure from a Red Specter was suffocating. Understanding the gravity of the situation, the comic in the backpack started to turn on its own. Then a ballpoint pen that was taped together with clear cellophane tape started to draw a picture on the empty page. Ol' Zhou and Men Nan were hiding inside one of the rooms, and outside the window that was next to them, one could see the bus station that fringed Li Wan City.

"So, they're here?" Chen Ge tipped his head back to study the four buildings at Ming Yang Residence before rushing toward the one at the most left side. He had once entered this building with Captain Yan before. He remembered seeing the bus station through one of the windows. At this crucial moment, the Pen Spirt had worked together with Yan Danian to provide Chen Ge with this important clue. Summoning Xu Yin, Chen Ge rushed into the building.

"Ol' Zhou! Men Nan!" He screamed as loud as he could, but once the voice left his lips, Chen Ge noticed that something was wrong. The building that he was in was completely different from the building in real life!

In real life, Ming Yang Residence was an abandoned project. Some of the windows were not even fixed, and the floor was merely cement and undecorated. However, the building that Chen Ge was in had a clean, tiled floor with painted walls, and there was even lighting installed on the stairs and corridors.

“The door that Xiao Bu pushed open was in Li Wan City, and she already said that her power cannot reach this place, so Ming Yang Residence was not made according to her memory. Then, why is this place so different from its condition in real life?” If not for the fact that Doctor Gao was chasing after him, Chen Ge would never have entered such a strange place so recklessly.

The world behind the door was a reflection of the real world, the manifestation of one’s nightmare. Upon closer inspection, he noticed that there were various pictures on the wall. There were children, animals, and various toys.

“These look like drawings by children. This is so strange. It feels like the feeling I had when I stepped into Jiujiang Children’s Home for the first time.”

There was no answer from Ol’ Zhou or Men Nan. Doctor Gao was right on his tail. Chen Ge did not think that it was wise to head upstairs. He would be trapped up there if Doctor Gao decided to block off the stairs.

“I should limit my exploration to the first and second floors.” With Chen Ge’s current physical condition, as long as he was more careful, he would not be injured if he jumped down from the second floor, but he was not confident that he would be safe if he jumped down from the third floor.

“Doctor Gao is still quite a distance away. His speed is decreasing. But one good thing is that after the shadow left Li Wan City, it’s clear that Xiao Bu has been getting stronger; the red on his dress is getting brighter and brighter.”

As Chen Ge called Men Nan and Ol’ Zhou’s names, he charged into the building. Whenever he saw closed doors, without stopping to think, he greeted them with a hammer to the face.

Once the doors fell away, the scene behind the doors surprised Chen Ge. There were no ghosts and no horrible scenes, only a few children drawing. Their eyes were filled with innocence, not knowing what hatred and pain was. They gripped the crayons in their hands and looked at Chen Ge with confusion.

These children were like pieces of empty paper. Chen Ge was not complimenting their innocence but felt like something important had been taken away from them. They had lost something that made humans human. Studying them, it felt like they were more like human-shaped puppets.

A ‘criminal’ with a scary-looking weapon burst into the room, but they did not react in any way. They held the crayons with a blank expression on their faces, staring dumbly at Chen Ge.

“The shadow must have done something to them!” Chen Ge knew that Ming Yang Residence was the ghost apartment built by the shadow. He had been under the impression that the place was supposed to house scary ghosts and Specters. Now he realized just how innocent he was. The shadow would not be kind enough to allow Specters to live there, so the real tenants of Ming Yang Residence were these children who had some value to the shadow.

“Did any of you see anyone walk in earlier?” The children had no response at all to Chen Ge’s question. They stared at Chen Ge for a while before returning to their drawing. It felt like their mental faculty had been taken away, leaving behind simple paintings in their mind, and the purpose of their existence was to use the crayons that they were holding to keep on drawing these pictures endlessly. Chen Ge looked through several rooms, and they were all filled with such strange children.

“In real life, Ming Yang Residence contains many broken dolls. Now that I think about it, each of those dolls probably represents an actual human life.”

With no time to waste, Chen Ge hurried to the second floor. While he opened the door, he did not stop calling for Men Nan’s name.

“The picture drawn by the Pen Spirit definitely points to this building, so it means that Ol’ Zhou and Men Nan are one hundred percent inside here. In that case, why aren’t they answering me? Even if they’re in danger, they should be able to give me some response, right?”

The message that Tong Tong had sent was a SOS message. Chen Ge knew that something must have happened to their group, but he did not expect things to become so complicated. Chen Ge hammered down the doors on the second floor—they were still filled with children. “Xiao Bu’s limbs are hidden on the higher floors. Doctor Gao is not far behind me, and if I rush up the stairs, I might be blocked off on both sides by the shadow and Doctor Gao.”

When he was hesitating, a voice suddenly came from the fourth floor. “Chen Ge! Save me! Please save me!”

There was not many who knew Chen Ge’s real name in Li Wan City. Chen Ge turned his head up to look and saw Jia Ming poking his head out from the stairs until his body was almost falling. His expression was one of extreme pain. His eyes were red like they were about to pop out from his skull. “Save me! They are all here!”

When Jia Ming spoke, another voice appeared. Chen Ge was very familiar with this voice—it belonged to Inspector Lee. “Don’t come up here! Chen Ge! Leave this place immediately! Tell everything that you saw here to Captain Yan! Remember! You have to tell Captain Yan!”

“Don’t drag me with you if you want to die! Chen Ge, we are all here! Bring us with you! Please save us!” Jia Ming seemed to be experiencing inexplicable pain. He kept trying to stretch his body forward. Chen Ge noticed that his wrist was handcuffed, and the other cuff was chained around Lee Zheng’s wrist.

Lee Zheng, Jia Ming, Scissors, and the rest had disappeared at Fan Chong’s place, but now, they had suddenly shown up here. This aroused Chen Ge’s suspicion. Normally, Chen Ge would continue to observe for a while before making his decision, but the situation now was too unique.

Doctor Gao was catching up, and he would arrive soon. He did not have much time to think, and his body moved instinctively up the stairs. He could not care less about Jia Ming’s life, but he had to save Inspector Lee. A long time ago, when Chen Ge first fought the ghost stories society at Fang Hwa Residence, this police officer had been a big help to him by helping him buy time at the most crucial moment. Chen Ge had never seen himself as a saint, but he would remember every kindness that been directed his way.

“Inspector Lee mentioned Captain Yan earlier, but why would I tell everything I saw here to Captain Yan? Is he really more than he appears?”

Running to the fourth floor, Chen Ge saw Lee Zheng and Jia Ming, who were detained. Their legs and arms were tied. A few children were shoving into the middle of the stairs. Once the children saw Chen Ge, they dispersed.

“What is going on the here?” Cutting off the ropes, Chen Ge helped Lee Zheng get up. He was about to ask more questions when more weird noises came from upstairs. Lifting his head to look, he saw that half of Scissors, the drunkard, and the doctor’s bodies had already been pushed into the staircase, and the children were holding their legs down.

The three of them were on the seventh floor, not too close and not too far.

“The shadow is forcing me to go upstairs, huh?” Chen Ge instantly understood the shadow’s intention.

“Leave us be! You need to leave! This is a trap!” the drunkard shouted, and he sounded quite valorous.

“There is only one shadow; he couldn’t have controlled so many people at the same time...” When Chen Ge was thinking, a loud boom came from outside the building. A chain that was filled with human faces smashed against the wall of the building.

“Doctor Gao has arrived.” Gripping his fist, Chen Ge summoned Xu Yin. He had the Specter hold the flyer and rush to another building to lead Doctor Gao away.

“You think I don’t have any other Red Specters other than Xu Yin?” Chen Ge pulled out the hammer and started running to the top of the stairs as fast as he could. “I refuse to believe that you have more trump cards than I do! After I deal with you, I’ll go reconnect with my old friend, Doctor Gao.”

Chapter 670 - Who Are You? [2 in 1]

Chapter 670: Who Are You? [2 in 1]

“The two of you should stay here. If anyone falls down from above, remember to catch them.” Chen Ge placed the travel bag with the white cat on the ground, and he ran up the stairs, wielding Doctor Skull-cracker’s hammer.

“Be careful!” No matter how hard the drunkard screamed, Chen Ge did not stop moving. Rescuing people was a matter of convenience. Ever since Chen Ge stepped into Li Wan City, his real target had been the shadow. An entity who was so mysterious yet had endless details that were connected to himself, only by apprehending the shadow would Chen Ge allow himself to rest easy.

“I will definitely be able to get a lot of information about my parents from the shadow.” Before entering Li Wan City, he had predicted this moment. However, his original plan was to have the smiling man and the red high heels help him scout the road ahead. Unfortunately, Doctor Gao’s appearance had thrown his plan into complete disarray.

“However, generally speaking, how things turned out is still advantageous to me.” Outside the building, Doctor Gao was lured away by Xu Yin, and this provided Chen Ge with a rare opportunity.

“The monster is waiting for you up here, do not come up here!” This time, it was Scissors who spoke. His condition was not that good. Faded blots of blood appeared on his body like the capillaries under his skin were all bursting at the same time.

“He’s waiting for me; I’m also looking for him!” Chen Ge ran even faster. Behind him, the white cat crawled out from the bag. It followed closely behind Chen Ge, its movement very agile. The children on the seventh floor were obviously using Scissors’ group as bait to lure Chen Ge further up. They had been given very strict orders. Once Chen Ge approached, they let go of their detainees and immediately escaped.

“Give me your hand!” Chen Ge dragged Scissors and the drunkard somewhere safe. There was no rope or anything similar wound around their bodies, but from the way they reacted, it looked like they were suffering from a severe reaction to something. Their bodies were ravaged by pain, and they had difficulty even standing up.

“Can you walk on your own?” Chen Ge then dragged the doctor to the side. The doctor’s venom had not been cured.

“Leave us be. The reason the shadow hasn’t killed us is because he is planning to use us to weigh you down. That thing will stop at nothing to accomplish his goal,” the doctor uttered weakly.

“Since you can form a complete sentence, it looks like you’re slowly recovering.” Chen Ge was about to ask what had happened to them at Fan Chong’s building, but he felt something cold touch the back of his neck. Turning back to look, the tattooed man’s head rolled out from the eighth floor. His face was bloodied, and his eyes were bulging. The human skull tattoos on his arms had brutally been yanked out from his bare skin. Several emotionless and expression children stood around the man. They held paintbrushes in their hands and were using the tattooed man’s blood to finish their painting.

“The man’s dead?” These children were duller and more emotionless than the ones on the ground floor. The way that they treated a living human as ‘toy’ sent a shiver down Chen Ge’s spine.

“The tattooed man is dead. If one’s ending is the worse the higher we go, then does this mean that something bad has already befallen Men Nan and Ol’ Zhou?” Chen Ge was worried. This was the first time that he realized how important the employees who usually accompanied him were. Without realizing it, he had already accepted them as family and close friends.

The tattooed man’s dead body was shoved down the stairs by the children. It fell before Chen Ge’s eyes. Such a precious life was ended just like that—this was the nature of the world behind the door. In this nightmarish world weaved from despair and pain, life and hope were the most fragile of things.

After the tattooed man’s body landed with a dull thud on the ground, the children dispersed like they had completed their mission. The only thing that remained in the stairwell was the painting that was painted with the tattooed man’s blood.

After the children left, children’s giggling came from the tenth floor.

The faces of the children up there had lost their dullness. Their faces were filled with the brightest of smiles, but what they were doing made Chen Ge grit his teeth.

Several children were detaining the phone spirit, Tong Tong. His body was yanked from so many directions that his body had become disfigured. His precious phone had been taken away, and the children deleted the messages that Tong Tong's mother had sent him one by one before the boy's eyes.

These children who were little more than animals being reared by the shadow could not be called children anymore. They had been taught to bear hatred for everything good in the world, so they viewed love as the most disgusting in the world. Chen Ge had a feeling that the shadow was training these children as his apprentices, turning them into monsters like he was.

Every employee at the Haunted House had their own story, and Tong Tong's story had touched Chen Ge the most. The reason that he had taken this boy under his wing was not only because of his power but also the promise that he had made Tong Tong's mother. Tong Tong did not resist or even cry. He had gotten used to all this. He had experienced something similar both when he was alive and when he was working for ghost stories society's Han Bao'er. However, the more he acted like this, the more it tore Chen Ge's heart.

The children knew that Tong Tong would get Chen Ge's attention. They carried Tong Tong higher up the stairs, obviously trying to lure Chen Ge to follow them.

"Chen Ge! Don't follow them!" Lee Zheng dragged Jia Ming up the stairs to stop Chen Ge. "We have people who are heavily injured with us. We need to bring them away from this place. When I entered Li Wan City, I contacted other officers at the station. Back-up will be here soon."

"There won't be any back-up. I need you and Jia Ming to help me carry these people downstairs. Try to move them as far away from this place as possible." Chen Ge frowned slightly. He flipped through the comic to one of the pages, but he did so without arousing Lee Zheng or Jia Ming's attention. He did this in less than one second.

"Aren't you going to leave with us? What are you going to do?" Lee Zheng tried his best to stop Chen Ge.

"I am not good at educating children, so I can only treat these children who are bullying others as adults, and if they're adults, things will be much simpler." Chen Ge raised the hammer while murmuring someone's name. In the cramped staircase, a thick scent of blood bloomed. A twisted hand appeared next to Chen Ge before slowly falling on his shoulder.

"Capture them all, bring them back with us so that we can give them some corrective education."

The head that dangled on the shoulders slowly raised itself. The body that was ruined from the car accidents was slowly recovering as the woman raised her head. The Red Specter from White Dragon Cave Tunnel had been summoned. She seemed to have a natural curiosity toward the world outside the tunnel. When the thin blood fog surrounded her body, it gave her a desire to kill everything before her.

After Xu Yin led Doctor Gao away, Bai Qiulin was too weak to deal with any dangerous accident. So, to ensure his own safety, Chen Ge used his other trump card—the woman from the tunnel.

With a Red Specter forging the way forward, he could charge forth with abandon. No matter where, no matter when, a Red Specter was the scariest presence. When the children in the building saw the Red Specter approach, they started to run and hide on instinct. The few children who grabbed Tong Tong also had to put their smiles away. They charged ahead like their lives depended on it. From how Chen Ge saw it, it felt like the children were completing a mission, which was to lure Chen Ge to the top floor.

"The top floor is very dangerous! Don't go there!" Lee Zheng called out urgently from the back. He seemed to have gained some information from Jia Ming. Compelled by the urgency of the moment, he abandoned Scissors and the drunkard and moved to chase after Chen Ge.

With the Red Specter leading the way, Chen Ge could stop worrying about the danger that might appear along the way. He calmed down to dissect a few important questions.

"The painting that was drawn by the cooperation of the Pen Spirit and Yan Danian showed Ol' Zhou and Men Nan hiding inside a small room. They were not captured but temporarily trapped. In other words, the shadow does not really have a full control of the situation. He has been caught up in the fight with Doctor Gao, and he only disappeared from my eyes several moments ago. How did he manage to set up so many scary traps in such a short amount of time?

“The shadow has fought Zhang Ya before, and he knows that I have a Greater Red Specter with me. Therefore, the only possibility he has is to come up with a trap that can threaten a Greater Red Specter before he can deal with me. But I doubt something as powerful as a trap like that can be constructed on short notice.”

Chen Ge knew all this perfectly. He narrowed his eyes, and suddenly, a small detail flashed across his mind.

“I know!” Without lowering his speed, Chen Ge rushed up the stairs without stopping. The higher he went, the deeper the resentment the children carried. They changed from lingering spirits to baleful Specters. Beyond level eleven, some of the children’s shirt were stained with blood, and Chen Ge even saw a young man who was a half Red Specter. Without the aid from the woman in the tunnel, with just him and Bai Qiulin, their journey would have stopped at the eleventh floor.

However, even with the woman’s aid, their journey was not easy. Complicated paintings started to show up on the wall. They were painted with some kind special, dark liquid. Chen Ge had encountered this kind of liquid at the hotel earlier. It could cause some kind of influence on Red Specters. Now Chen Ge regretted using such a valuable item to provoke the headless woman. Glancing at the wall, the paintings on the wall were all painted in this dark liquid, and walking past them gave Chen Ge plenty of discomfort.

“All the paintings look rough; they look more like doodling of a bored child. Could these paintings have been made by the ghost fetus?”

The woman who walked ahead suffered most of the pressure, and her condition was not looking so good.

“These paintings can weaken even a Red Specter. Is it because they have something to do with the presence above a Red Specter?” Looking at these paintings, Chen Ge noticed that they were merely recording mundane everyday activities, but for some reason, they made the hair on Chen Ge’s back stand on end. He could not explain why he would be afraid of these things. “Could the pictures on the wall refer to the things that I’ve once experienced? But how come I don’t have any memory of them at all? No, these should be the memory of the ghost fetus—they have nothing to do with me.”

“Chen Ge! What are you doing? Quickly follow me downstairs!” Lee

Zheng and Jia Ming followed closely behind him. The paintings did not seem to have much of an effect on normal human beings. They were unable to feel the deep resentment and hatred inherent in the paintings.

“They still have my employees, how can I, the boss, abandon them and run away on my own?”

Resisting the pressure, the woman in the tunnel and Chen Ge reached the top floor of the building, but Tong Tong had already disappeared. All Chen Ge could see was the door that led to the roof, which had been left half open.

“The shadow allocated so many resources just to luring me here?” The door that led to the roof was covered in black paintings, but the content of the paintings was different from the ones on the wall. They were no longer about life, but they described many death scenarios that were impossibly cruel.

The child in the painting experienced various kinds of death, and he had been alone throughout it all. He did not understand the meaning of his presence like the purpose of his life was to await and experience a harsher death.

The dark paintings when viewed from afar seemed to form the shape of a human and curiously enough, the shape of the human matched Chen Ge’s a bit too well. The color of the ink at the bottom part of the strange paintings were relatively light. As the paintings grew, the darker it became. It felt like the monster would return every time he grew older and used the paintings to fill up its body.

Initially, the shape of the paintings should be that of a child, but it had grown with time, similar to Chen Ge. However, Chen Ge’s growth was accompanied by light and hope while the growth of the thing on the wall was filled with various scary and improbably ways of death.

“Tong Tong is just behind this door.” Chen Ge looked at the door that led to the roof, and he felt his consciousness fading. It was as if the methods of death were slowly drilling themselves into his mind, trying to make them his own memory.

“I have not experienced these things! These are not my memory!” Chen Ge raised the hammer and planned to shatter the door before him, like he was under the impression that once the door was broken down, the painful memories that did not belong to him would disappear.

His expression was twisted, and just as the hammer was about to fall, he felt a piercing pain around his heart like someone had poked him with a needle. The shot of pain brought Chen Ge out of the haze. In just this short moment, his back was wet with sweat. Reaching into his chest, Chen Ge pulled out the two similar-looking keys from his chest pocket.

“Self-perceptive Key?” The rust on the keys had fallen away for the most part. Chen Ge still had not understood how to correctly use the keys, but it seemed like it was the keys that had helped him moments earlier.

“If his memory melded into mine, then the consequences would have been unimaginable.” Chen Ge put down the hammer and looked at the half-open door. Like a mad person, he spoke to the inanimate object. “Who are you? Why do you hate me that much?”

“We should not stay at this place any longer, let’s leave now!” Lee Zheng looked around him with alert. His hand went to the gun around his waist. He was about to take it out when Chen Ge slowly turned around to stare directly at him.

“Who are you?” Holding the hammer, Chen Ge’s eyes were bloodshot.

“Me? I’m Lee Zheng! Chen Ge, what’s up with you?” Lee Zheng’s hand was over the holster. He wanted to take out the gun, but he realized that Chen Ge was ready to hammer his hand if he reached for the gun.

“You are not Lee Zheng.” Chen Ge’s voice was hoarse. “You said earlier that when you entered Li Wan City, you contacted the rest of the station. At the time, you were pursuing Jia Ming alone. When we encountered each other at the hotel, I did not see you carrying a walkie-talkie, and the range of a walkie-talkie is limited, so I believe that you were using your phone to communicate with the rest of your team.”

“What’s wrong with using my phone?”

“Before entering Li Wan City, I received messages from you. Your voice and speech pattern were similar as Inspector Lee’s, but due to the unique circumstance that I was in, I couldn’t answer your call, so I had you write me messages.” Chen Ge’s eyes were filled with blood, but his voice slowly calmed down. “When Doctor Gao was battling the shadow, it was just around the time that you all disappeared. Now that the shadow has stopped fighting Doctor Gao, you have reappeared. This can only mean that the shadow is one of you who went missing.”

Lee Zheng still wanted to say something but was interrupted by Chen Ge.

“You were afraid of being exposed, so you used your trump card earlier than necessary and had the curses dispense of the people who were waiting outside the tunnel. That way, you’d be able to continue hiding your real identity.” Chen Ge took a step forward, and the woman from the tunnel shielded by his side. “In the beginning, I only had a suspicion, but now, I can finally confirm that you are the shadow.”

He opened the comic to release a weak and sickly black puppy. The puppy was overjoyed when he saw Chen Ge, but when it saw Lee Zheng, it moaned in confusion.

“You are the most unique presence to him. You might be able to trick the rest of us, but you will never be able to trick the ‘person’ who saw you as his whole world.” Chen Ge turned to look at the black dog that he had brought out from the doghouse.

Seeing the black phone, Lee Zheng’s hand that went to the gun slowly relaxed. The anxiety and anger on his face slowly dispersed, and in its place was a deep serenity.

“This is just ironic. This is the one good thing I’ve done in my life, and it became the clue for you to see through my disguise.” Lee Zheng looked at the puppy, and the coldness in his eyes caused the puppy to cower in fear. “I should have killed it. Back then, I figured it would fun to keep it tortured.”

Once he finished, Lee Zheng closed his eyes. His body crumbled to the ground, but his shadow stood upright, maintaining his earlier posture.

Chapter 671: The Most Romantic Thing I Can Think Of [2 in 1]

As Chen Ge raced up the stairs, many other things raced through his mind. The shadow and Doctor Gao were equally injured, and what kind of trap could the shadow set up in such a short amount of time?

The shadow had no idea how much Chen Ge had, and if Chen Ge was given the chance to summon his Red Specters, then the chance of the shadow winning would drop. Even if he led Chen Ge into a trap, with the protection of a Greater Red Specter, it might not be certain death for Chen Ge. Therefore, under such circumstances, the shadow might use another method to kill Chen Ge, like abandoning the aid of the ghosts and using something more direct like Lee Zheng's gun.

If Chen Ge was not cautious around Lee Zheng, he would not have summoned any Red Specters to guard himself when Lee Zheng wandered near. The shadow only needed to hide his evil intention to prevent detection from the Red Specter. Then, he only needed to unsheathe pistol and pulled on the trigger lightly, and Chen Ge would be dead. Compared to creating a trap that might not be useful, this was the simplest and most efficient method.

The shadow knew that the higher Chen Ge was, the more the power of the Red Specter would be suppressed. This black substance should come from an existence more powerful than a Red Specter, and it could greatly influence Red Specters. With such an advantage, the chance of the shadow's victory would drastically increase.

Actually, everything followed his expected development, but the final result had somehow surprised him. Before he could take out Lee Zheng's gun, Chen Ge had already seen through his real identity. Inside the darkened corridor, the blood fog drifted, echoing the cries of nearby children.

The shadow stood several meters away from Chen Ge. His shape was slowly changing, and his height pulled upward until he morphed into someone who looked like Chen Ge.

“You don’t seem like you’re not ready to meet me yet.” Chen Ge looked at the shadow, and a strange feeling overwhelmed him. It was like he was talking at a mirror in the middle of the night.

“You’re mistaken. Since the moment you abandoned me, I knew this day will come, but I admit, it is slightly different from how I planned it.” The shadow’s voice was slowly changing, and he sounded more and more like Chen Ge. “I thought that the next time we met, I would be the human, and you would be the shadow.”

“Do you so desperately want me to be your shadow?” Chen Ge stood where he was. The shadow could hold his own against Zhang Ya, so his power should be similar to that of a Greater Red Specter. Even though he was currently heavily injured by Doctor Gao, it did not mean that Chen Ge could put his guard down.

“One without a shadow is not long for this world. I hope that you can be my shadow so that I can make you experience all the deaths that I’ve experienced in the past.” The voice was changing until it mimicked Chen Ge’s voice perfectly.

“You hate me so much, but what have I ever done to you?” Chen Ge did not think that he suffered from amnesia, and in his memory, he had not done anything too over the top in his childhood.

“Looks like you have really forgotten everything, but it doesn’t matter, I’ll help you remember everything. Inside the door, outside the door, you and me, you inside the door, and finally me outside the door.” With each word, the shadow’s body grew taller. He was standing on the lower step, but he had become taller than Chen Ge. “You have not done anything to me. You live under the sunlight, surrounded by warmth, laughter, and hope; you have enjoyed everything that is good about life. However, the curses, mocking and deep resentment that others directed at you have all been transplanted onto me!”

“All of my negative emotions are on you?” Chen Ge’s brow raised.

“Negative emotions is not enough to explain the abyss-like despair that I’ve slowly sunk into. I saw myself slowly falling, but I could not make any noise. My neck was strangled, and my body was cut into pieces. I couldn’t open my lips; I couldn’t breathe; I couldn’t die even if I desperately wanted to!” The shadow’s voice was rising. “Initially, I did not want to harm anyone. Even if I was entangled in endless curses, even as I floated in the sea of despair, even if I experienced a pain that you could never imagine, I never thought of hurting another individual.”

The shadow’s body was expanding and contorting. The paintings on the wall seemed to come alive as well. The black figures inside the painting replayed their deaths again and again.

“Then, one day, my despairing self saw the door at your house!”

The shadow’s words alerted Chen Ge immediately. He knew that there was a door inside the Haunted House’s toilet, but he had no idea who the door-pusher was. “Were you the one who pushed it open?”

“When the curses dragged me into the depth of hell, the door was already there, but my despair was not strong enough to push open the door. It was only strong enough to let me hear the voice coming from behind the door.” The suffocating presence that radiated off the shadow grew. “There was someone calling your name from behind the door. You could not hear it, but I responded on your behalf.”

The shadow’s slippery and sinister voice caused the hair on Chen Ge’s neck to stand on end. “And it was from that moment onward that I realized, why couldn’t I be you? Why should I suffer in the darkness when you are bathing in the sun? I am your shadow, but that does not mean that I have to suffer the pain that should be yours!”

When he said the last word, an arm reached out from the spot where his heart should be and lunged toward Chen Ge. It was very sudden like everything that he had said so far was just a distraction to prepare for this ambush. The shadow had been injured in his battle with Doctor Gao. His shape was fading, but this arm that reached out from his chest was as real as they came. It appeared like the fingerprint underneath each finger had been carved out by blood vessels before.

The woman from the tunnel moved to block in front of Chen Ge when the shadow made his move, but she had greatly underestimated the shadow’s power. The arm poked through her body directly. It carried her blood and gripped at Chen Ge!

“It’s time!” The comic inside his backpack gave off a soft voice, and a page of comic withered upon itself instantly, but at that moment, the black arm stopped for a second!

The woman whose body was punctured wailed. She had died from a car accident, and her body had already been ruined at her time of death. She used both of her hands to grip the arm that poked through her body. The woman ignored the arm and allowed it to dangle inside her body. She hung onto the shadow's body and started to attack the shadow madly.

The woman from the tunnel was different from other Red Specters. Under her dress, it was a ruined body. The flesh was falling apart, and the bones were shattered. Furthermore, her special power seemed to be related to these broken bones. The blood red bone chips stuck into the shadow's body. The woman's body started to shift, and it felt like she was trying to use her body to consume the shadow.

"Just now, my attack slowed down for a moment. What kind of ghost gave you that power?" The shadow turned to glance at Chen Ge. "Just how many Specters are you carrying?"

"Why don't you have a guess?" Chen Ge wanted to get to the bottom of the door inside the Haunted House, so he did not retaliate against the shadow. Yan Danian and the woman in the tunnel had bought valuable time for Chen Ge. He moved backward, calling Zhang Ya's name in his heart.

"Even facing certain death, you are able to smile. Everything that you are able to do now is because of me." The shadow's voice turned icier. His body was slowly distorting under the relentless attack from the woman, but he did not seem to mind it even a bit. All he showed was a pointed hatred toward Chen Ge. "This place has already been ruined, so there is no need to keep it around anymore. The children that have been transported to the ghost fetus should be enough to help him perform a successful birth."

The black paintings on the wall started to change. All the little black figures that suffered from endless deaths in the paintings started to crawl out, and they melted into the shadow's body. All the children inside the building released this strange laughter. They could no longer be viewed as innocent children—they had become nothing more than the shadow's puppets.

"The children inside this building are all sacrifices for the ghost fetus? Just how many people you have buried in Eastern Jiujiang?" The door behind Chen Ge had the biggest change. The black human shape that looked just like him was slowly turning lighter as incapacitated black figures, possessed by hatred and resentment, crawled out of the door one after another. Each of them carried two faces, one was their own face and the other looked ninety percent like Chen Ge.

This was indeed a scary scene, but the shadow seemed to enjoy this process a lot. “The ghost fetus’ resentment is too deep, and there is no way that he can be born via a normal method. So, I have to use these children to share and dispense part of his resentment. Now, you know the truth, yes? So many children, and they were barely enough to exhaust a part of the ghost fetus’ resentment. You can imagine how much pain I have had to suffer because of you!”

Innocent smiles were missing from the children’s faces. Their facial expressions were dull and strange—there was a hatred toward life that could be seen in them. Even for Chen Ge, this felt totally scary. If no one did anything, any of these children could have led to the formation of a new ghost fetus, and that was probably the most desired outcome for the shadow.

As the small black figures entered his body, the shadow’s body started to solidify again. The dark curse coursed through the surface of his body, forcing out the bone chips that the woman from the tunnel had pushed into his body earlier. A normal Red Specter was unwilling to go near the curse. When the little black figures showed up, the woman from the tunnel had contorted her body and quickly escaped from the shadow’s side.

“The reason I’ve not reached out to you is because I’ve been biding my time until the day when I can make you into my shadow, but you voluntarily appeared to disturb my plan.”

Children’s faces appeared on the shadow’s body. All of the children had already lost the thing that made them human, and they all carried strange smiles. “A person without a shadow is not complete, and I will make you my shadow!”

When the shadow was ready to make his first actual attack, a loud crash came from outside the building. Looking out the window, a group of chains was crazily whipping the exterior of the building.

“It was you who led that damnable madman here, right?” The shadow seemed to be a bit powerless before Doctor Gao. “I’ve only come up with the solution to detain the Red Specter that you have, but I am surprised you managed to find the second Greater Red Specter. However, even with their help, you are unable to change the result, unless you can find a third Greater Red Specter.”

Chen Ge heard a discrepancy in the shadow’s words. He tried to call Zhang Ya, but to his despair, at this most crucial moment, Zhang Ya did not seem to give him any response.

“I know that Red Specter is living inside your shadow, but don’t you forget, I am your real shadow!” The blood fog parted, and the whole building echoed with the shadow’s maddened laugh.

Using the weak light from the blood moon, Chen Ge saw that the shadow’s feet had connected to his own. As the little black figures melted into the shadow, the connection between the shadow and Chen Ge grew.

“When you were small, your parents should have warned you away from Eastern Jiujiang, right?” The shadow’s voice was bubbling with venom and excitement. “They were worried that I would return to your body! My plan is flawless, so how could I lose? The ghost fetus will be born, and I, the lingering spirit, will revert to your shadow! I will slowly consume your mind and body! I will make you experience all the despair, all the deaths, all the pain that should be yours! I am the demon that you are unable to shake off! I am the past that you can never escape! I am you!”

The whole building could hear the shadow’s voice clearly. He had been waiting for this day for a very long time already. “I will give you my memory and turn you into me, and then you’ll be fed to the ghost fetus to be his shadow! Everything is perfect! Even though there were some accidents, the result has already been decided from the beginning!”

Chen Ge called Zhang Ya’s name madly, but there appeared to be something blocking their communication, and Zhang Ya was unable to hear his voice.

“It’s pointless! I am your shadow. The only way she can escape from your shadow is if she takes my place and turns into your new shadow.” The shadow was cackling madly. Then again, the goal that he had been planning for years was about to come into fruition, so how could he not be mad with joy?

The ink-black hands gripped Chen Ge’s neck, and the shadow looked down into his eyes. “I’ve taken on the shapes of so many people, but today, I am finally able to turn back into myself!”

His face red due to a lack of oxygen, Chen Ge was lifted off the ground, and he was unable to make any noise. At the last moment, a man whose heart was dyed red materialized next to Chen Ge. He hugged the shadow's arm and tried to pull back, but he was barely able to stop the shadow from lifting his arm. A white cat leaped into the air to gnaw at the shadow's face, but it phased through the shadow's body and landed heavily on the ground. Without summoning them and unable to make any noise, many shadows escaped from Chen Ge's backpack. The shadow's arms were weighed down by multiple limbs, but that did nothing to change the outcome.

BANG! BANG! BANG!

The sound of the chains whipping the building became clearer like something was luring the chains to head upstairs. Then, the window on the top floor was pushed open, and a red flash charged toward the shadow!

The tapered fingers pierced into the shadow's body. The Red Specter gripped the shadow's arm, and the usual melancholy on his face had disappeared. In its place was anxiety and deep anger.

"You have another Red Specter?" the shadow hissed resentfully. For some reason, his hatred for Chen Ge grew. He wished to destroy this man and everything that this man had ever cared about!

The black curse coursed into the Red Specter's body. Black veins started to appear on his bleeding shirt. The curse drilled into his body like worms, and they bit at his face and his heart madly.

"So painful!"

Gritting his teeth, the blood that leaked out was black, but he showed no trace of backing off.

"Disgusting! You people disgust me!" the shadow yelled loudly, and more curses, filling up the room, surged into the Red Specter's body. The blood capillaries exploded, and the body was failing as the endless curse ravaged the Red Specter's body.

"So painful! So painful! So f*cking painful!" Xu Yin's face was distorted from pain. His body was practically disintegrating, but the empty space near his heart was slowly turning red!

Without any visible reason, under the duress from the shadow's endless curse, Xu Yin still had not taken a step back.

BANG!

The chains reached in through the open window, and they lashed at Xu Yin like sharks sensing the blood!

Doctor Gao had arrived, and his target was the flyer that Xu Yin was holding. Covered in curses, the chains that were thick with the scent of blood lashed at Xu Yin, but similar to before, Xu Yin showed no sign of evading. If he was hit by the chains, the shadow next to him would be injured as well.

“Damn you!” To avoid the hit by Doctor Gao, the shadow had no choice but to temporarily let go. Chen Ge dropped to the ground, and Bai Qiulin immediately moved to carry his body and grab the backpack. He knocked open the door and ran out to the roof.

“You can’t escape! I have planned this for too long! There is no escape for you!”

The shadow quickly moved to give chase. The employees from the Haunted House were slammed back, and only Xu Yin was hanging by a thread, but he was unable to stop the shadow alone.

“Zhang Ya, can you hear my voice?” The shadow was under Chen Ge’s feet, and he blocked Chen Ge’s voice.

“It’s useless. At the fresh water plant, I noticed this! This is your fatal flaw!” The shadow gripped Xu Yin’s head and slammed it heavily on the ground. He dragged the man’s broken body as he stepped toward Chen Ge.

“Fatal flaw, you say?” Chen Ge paused for a moment like he was considering many things in his mind. He slowly reached his hand into his backpack. “Actually, I’ve been wondering how I should face her. I have no idea what kind of place she possesses in my heart, but I think I understand it now.”

Chen Ge picked out the treasured love letter from his backpack and then came the lighter. He set the letter on fire. “I don’t need this thing to use as an excuse anymore.”

The fire caught on easily, and Chen Ge’s shadow was boiling. It felt like a black tsunami was coming!

“What are you doing?” The shadow’s face dropped. His body had started to fade. “You really wish for that Specter to become your shadow?”

Standing up, Chen Ge tossed the ash that remained of the love letter into the wind. “Zhang Ya, stay with me forever. I do not believe that there is anything more romantic in this world than shadowing each other for life!”

BANG!

A pale arm pierced through Chen Ge’s shadow, and following it was the outpouring of a deep and black ocean!

The windows, starting from the top of the building, shattered layer after layer!

Under the shine of the blood moon, a girl leaned against Chen Ge’s back gently.

“Zhang Ya!”

Chapter 672: This Is the Ghost Stories Society

After one died, one's lingering spirit would only be preserved by attaching oneself to an object, and the object that Zhang Ya possessed was her cursed love letter. Chen Ge burnt the love letter on the roof because he intended to completely abolish Zhang Ya's painful past; he had found a new vessel for Zhang Ya.

Like shadow and light, one impossible without the other, from the moment he burned that love letter, he would be Zhang Ya's object of obsession!

The black hair rushed forward like a black ocean, ravaging and consuming, swallowing everything inside the building.

The shadow, who clutched Xu Yin's neck, was stunned. His legs that were joined to Chen Ge were roughly torn away. The pieces of curses wilted in the bloody night like dark snow.

"You'll have the Specter be your shadow?" A bottled-up anger in the shadow's heart exploded, and his body kept changing and shifting. "This should not have happened; this is different from what I planned!"

Throughout Ming Yang Residence, the four buildings were bombarded with the ear-splitting cries of children. Many short little figures crawled out from the windows, all moving toward a particular room inside the building that Chen Ge and the shadow were standing on.

Soon, inside the building situated on the western side, a slender shadow moved out from the room, dragging a snow-white arm with him. That arm belonged to Xiao Bu. It stood by the edge of the building and bit into the arm with its mouth, and something that caused Chen Ge's hair to rise happened. Endless black shadows started to tear down the arm. With each bite, a dark bite mark would appear on the arm, and with each bite mark, the shadow grew that much stronger. "You are my shadow; I will make you my shadow!"

Ming Yang Residence was placed outside of Li Wan City, but the blood fog from Li Wan City had been moved there. It rushed toward Ming Yang Residence like a palpable wave.

"Not enough, this is not enough!"

The shadow turned to look at other buildings, but what he saw once again brought him disappointment.

On top of the southern building, a strange man with a strange smile fixed on his face carried Xiao Bu's broken body to the roof. His body was cracked, and the open gashes were like mouths that were open up in smiles.

Inside the northern building, it seemed to be raining blood. A mad woman wearing a red raincoat, whose lips were sewn shut, was cutting down all the shadows while protecting Xiao Bu's body part.

"Boss!" Underneath them came Ol' Zhou's voice. The shadow and Chen Ge both turned to look at the same time. Xiao Bu's limbs and head were the key for the shadow to control Li Wan City. To control the door that had gone out of control, to make Xiao Bu into a puppet that he could easily control, he had poured a lot of effort onto Xiao Bu, but now, everything was being ruined by Chen Ge.

The shadow only had access to one of Xiao Bu's arms. His control of Li Wan City was far weaker than Xiao Bu's control over it.

"Why do you want to help this person? He lives under the sun, bathes in hope, surrounded by laughter, but I am the one who inherits all of his hatred and curses!"

Unable to move the blood fog from Li Wan City any further, the small shadows surged back into the shadow's body. He glared at Chen Ge, his eyes filled with venom. Chen Ge did not answer the shadow's interrogation. His fingers caressed the black hair that flowed through him. "I've never bathed in hope and lived under the sun, much less being surrounded by laughter. I am merely lucky to have found a group of kind-hearted people."

The black hair blocked Chen Ge's sight. The brightest red walked past Chen Ge. The slender fingers reached out to pick out the black snow that almost fell on his body. The fingers tightened, and the curse of the shadow turned into ash before it could even wail in mercy. Zhang Ya stood before Chen Ge and tilted her head to look at Xu Yin, whose neck was in the shadow's grasp.

"You wish to save him?" The shadow grabbed Xu Yin's head with one hand. Before he could say the second sentence, his head was grabbed by a pale arm. Without any hesitation, the black hair rushed forward like a wave. Zhang Ya gripped the shadow's head and slammed it into the ground.

BANG!

A hole opened up in the ground, and they fell through a whole floor, but that was just the beginning!

Unable to control the blood fog from Li Wan City, unable to use the power behind the door, and having just fought a heavy battle with Doctor Gao, the shadow was the weakest that he had ever been. He did not expect Zhang Ya to suddenly make her move, and he did not expect that in several days, this Red Specter had become even scarier!

When Zhang Ya fought the shadow, Chen Ge found Xu Yin whose body was almost torn apart at the edge of the roof.

"You..." As if knowing that he had placed his boss' life in good hands, the static that came from the recorder gradually weakened. His hand that placed over his chest slowly slid away, revealing the heart that had completely dyed red.

The grimace on the man's face slowly smoothed out. Xu Yin looked at Chen Ge, and the corner of his lips twitched like he wanted to make an expression that he had not made before. However, he failed even after multiple attempts and reverted to his usual expression.

"It's fine now." Chen Ge picked Xu Yin up from the floor. The static disappeared, and the blood red tape stopped moving. The heavily-injured Xu Yin had returned to the recorder.

"Was he trying to make a smile earlier?" Chen Ge stood up and accepted the backpack from Bai Qiulin. The comic, recorder, ballpoint pen, and doll were all inside. "Everyone is still with us; I suppose that is already lucky enough."

The building under his feet was shaking. Other than Zhang Ya's black hair and the snow that was formed from the shadow's curse, there were shackles carved with human faces that snaked through the building. Echoes of screams boomed in his ears. Chen Ge looked over the side of the roof. Doctor Gao, who was on all fours, climbed up the side of the building like a beast. His bloody red eyes stared directly at Chen Ge.

“I’ve found you, Chen Ge...”

As Doctor Gao approached, a pale hand appeared to stand before Chen Ge. Compared to the shadow, Doctor Gao posed a bigger threat to Zhang Ya. The red fluttered in the moon—Zhang Ya at her prime was like a blood red sun while Doctor Gao, who carried all the curses in Li Wan City, looked more like an ‘abyss’. Endless negative emotions and curses coursed through his body; he alone represented the endless abyss of despair.

“Mad doctor, why don’t you work with me? I know you wish to get something from that man. I can gift him to you and even tell you all the secrets about him.” The shadow’s life was much harder than they had expected. He was like an unkillable monster who would only weaken but never really disappear.

Doctor Gao did not answer the shadow. His status was very strange. He looked like he was merely operating based on the little memory that remained in his mind. Chen Ge did not know what he wanted to do, but he knew that if he did not do anything, Zhang Ya might be attacked by both Doctor Gao and the shadow.

A chaotic battle was about to ensue. Chen Ge summoned Xu Yin to have him return the ghost stories society’s flyer. On that familiar flyer, the door that represented ghost stories society had been pushed open, and a pale hand was reaching out from within.

Having met in person, Chen Ge recognized the arm as Doctor Gao’s. He had laid some kind of trap on all the flyers, but his plan was misdirected somehow. Apparently, a link in his plan had fallen through.

Holding the flyer, Chen Ge stood behind Zhang Ya and told Doctor Gao, “You have forgotten too many things. I will help you remember them! You were once the chairperson of the ghost stories society, and I am the member that you handpicked to join; this flyer is the best evidence of that!”

The mention of ghost stories society caused a flicker through Doctor Gao’s bloodshot eyes.

“Don’t listen to him! Follow your heart!” the shadow yelled in panic. He did not dare to imagine being attacked by both Zhang Ya and Doctor Gao.

“Yes, you have to follow your heart!” Chen Ge raised the flyer up high. “Before you passed away, you handed the ghost stories society to me. I am your most trusted friend, and that is why you remember my name! Yes, I am Chen Ge! I am the current chairperson of the ghost stories society, Chen Ge! And behind me, these Specters and Red Specters that stood at my side, they are now everything that the ghost stories society represents!”

Chapter 673 - Ghost Fetus

Chapter 673: Ghost Fetus

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Chen Ge did not lie. Everything that he had said was truthful, and even a micro-expression expert would not be able to find any problem with his statement.

“Currently, I am the only living member of the ghost stories society; I am the whole society’s only hope. I don’t know why you’re searching for me, but I know that you must have something important to tell me!” Taking a step forward, Chen Ge raised the flyer above his head. “Li Wan City has taken one-third of the society’s hidden treasure. Closing the door that has gone out of the control was your dying wish! Today, I am here despite of the dangers and threats to my life because I plan to reclaim what should belong to the ghost stories society!”

...

The shadow was a master at manipulation. When he heard what Chen Ge said, he felt increasingly unsettled. The man did not seem like he was lying, and he had arrived here to help lead the way for the doctor.

“You two...”

Chen Ge did not give the shadow that chance to speak. He spoke over him as he stared into Doctor Gao’s eyes. “Remember the words that you once told me! Think of the promise that we made! Think about your daughter, she is still waiting for you to come home!”

A human being was a very unique lifeform. Even if he was carrying all the negative emotions behind a door, even if he was consumed by the curses of the whole town, even if he had transformed into a walking abyss, there was still a human emotion lying within Doctor Gao that perhaps the man himself did not realize, and that was his memory of Gao Ru Xue.

The red eyes slowly moved, and Doctor Gao stared at the shadow who stood at the other side of the roof. The blood red coat fluttered in the wind, and black blood dripped down the side of the building.

Chen Ge had no idea what had happened to Doctor Gao behind the door, and he was confused because the wife who always accompanied him had disappeared. However, there was one thing that he was clear about. Doctor Gao seemed to have lost his rationality after consuming too many Specters and Red Specters.

Losing his memory, he could only act on instinct, and there were probably two reasons why he remembered Chen Ge. One, before the doctor perished, he had left many dying wishes with Chen Ge, including closing the door in Li Wan City and taking care of his daughter, Gao Ru Xue.

Two, it was probably because Doctor Gao had made his plan surrounding Chen Ge, and he had even come up with the plans after death. Everything was related to Chen Ge and his Haunted House. It was why he could remember Chen Ge so clearly.

The man could have gone insane due to multiple reasons, and it was incredibly difficult to fully cure a maddened man because the first adversary that he needed to face was himself.

Chen Ge realized that, and it was why he had stepped forward then. He knew that Doctor Gao would not recover with just a few of his words, and he did not expect Doctor Gao to stop attacking him. He merely wanted to shift the attention that Doctor Gao had on him onto the shadow. After taking down this element of uncertainty in the shadow, everything else could be settled later.

“Doctor Gao, even though you have lost your memory, even though you have transformed into a Red Specter, in my heart, you will always be the chairperson. It was you who showed me what a real ghost story was, and it was you who made me understand the true meaning of a ghost stories society!

“So, stop hesitating. The door in Li Wan City once belonged to the society, and it will return to the society in the future!”

The chains carved with human faces reached out from the building and slithered up the walls—their target was the shadow. The shadow did not expect Chen Ge to really convince a maddened Red Specter, but he soon discovered that something worse was awaiting him. When the chains slithered toward the shadow, the black hair blocked his way like an impenetrable wall. Zhang Ya had launched her attack at the same time.

“He is not a Red Specter, but he is much more resilient than a Red Specter. We’d better surround him and figure out a way to completely abolish him.” A madman and a man who was not much better than a madman, these were the former and current chairperson of the ghost stories society. It had to be said that Doctor Gao did have a good eye in choosing his successor.

“I am your shadow. If you want to kill me, it’s easy—die.” The shadow was very weak, but he did not show any trace of resignation, like showing any form of weakness in front of Chen Ge was something shameful.

“From the moment I burned the love letter, you were no longer my shadow. I don’t know whether I can kill you or not, but I hope you can be quiet and enjoy the ghost story that I’ve specially made for you. Consider it the last parting gift from me.”

Chen Ge retreated. The shadow under his feet connected to Zhang Ya while the shadow stood alone at the other side of the roof.

“A gift?” An ugly laugh rumbled out of the shadow. “The first gift that I’ve ever received in my life is a ghost story?”

That laughter was mixed with the cries of endless children. They cried during each death until they became dull to the sensation of death, until they could find joy in being killed.

“I will kill you; I cannot wait until the birth of the ghost fetus anymore!” After he said that, the shadow’s body solidified. The face slowly turned clearer as the facial features took on a realistic shape like someone surfacing out of the water. The shadow had turned into a second Chen Ge. “I am you, and you are me!”

He plunged his hands into his body, and the curse coursed through his fingers. Patches of scars appeared on his body, and they moved to form unique symbols. Soon, all the symbols gathered around the shadow’s heart to form the shape of a baby.

However, this baby was different from a normal child. Its heart was beating, and with each pulse, it radiated endless resentment. Looking at it was like looking at the devil picture painted on the door at the Haunted House’s toilet.

“The ghost fetus!” The baby extended its limbs, and the shadow’s body was torn apart. Four thin, spindly limbs reached out from the shadow’s body. Its expression mirrored that of the baby, a kind of hatred toward everything that existed in the world.

The chains carved with human faces lashed at the shadow. The latter grimaced as more limbs crawled out of his back. They pierced through his body, and the black liquid that represented the curse spurted out from his body. In an instant, the roof was covered in a black rain.

“I remember every single pang of despair that I’ve experienced, and each death only made me stronger. You said that you want to kill me, so I wish you luck because even I don’t know how to kill myself!”

The shadow’s face cracked like a shattered mask. Cracks appeared as blood veins crawled out from the baby inside his chest to suck into the shadow’s body. The baby was growing—it was literally consuming the shadow to accelerate its growth.

“I am the existence closest to death. I enjoy death, and I shall invite all of you to taste death with me.”

The shadow’s face fell off in pieces. The baby by his chest suddenly opened its eyes, and the venomous gaze was a complete replica of that of the shadow’s.

“Don’t give him the chance, pull the baby away from his body!” Chen Ge screamed in command. As he spoke, Doctor Gao was already charging forward. His expression was demented like an addict in the presence of a drug. He seemed to sense something more powerful than a Red Specter in the shadow.

Chapter 674 - Scary Doctor Gao

Chapter 674: Scary Doctor Gao

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Doctor Gao opened both of his arms. Under the blood moon, he appeared even more deranged. Chains crawled out from underneath his coat. They were his means of attack, but at the same time, they were his tool of binding.

No one knew what had happened to Doctor Gao. He seemed to have bound the chains around himself when he was still conscious. These chains represented despair and negative emotions, and they also represented the human beings and Specters that had died at his hand. The chains bound everyone that he killed, but they also bound the man himself.

...

As more chains oozed out of his body, Doctor Gao seemed to have unlocked layers of a seal. An extremely dangerous aura radiated out from the man. The black blood dripped to the ground, mixed with the curse, and transformed into trails of blood vessels.

One end was curled around Doctor Gao's feet, and the other end connected to this world behind the door. The blood-dyed coat fluttered in the wind, and a strange voice echoed from inside Doctor Gao's body.

"Such a delicious smile, I wish to shove him inside my body! Eat him! Eat him! Eat him!" It sounded like the voice of a woman. A different face grew on Doctor Gao's body. Her facial features were not where they supposed to be, but her eyes were filled with gluttony.

"Shut up!" Hearing the woman's voice, Doctor Gao poked his hands harshly into his body. Blood burst, and it flowed down the chains.

"Food that I've not tasted before, this is something I've not tasted before!"

"It's not you, it's me!"

“Eat him!”

Many distinct voices came out from Doctor Gao's body. Chen Ge now saw that many faces grew on Doctor Gao's body, and they seemed to have grown into his body.

“Shut up! I'll have all of you shut up!” Blood flowed. Starting from the inside, Doctor Gao's white coat was dyed red once more. His body also started to collapse due to his self-mutilating attacks.

Doctor Gao, who had calmed down slightly after meeting Chen Ge, ran into a berserk again. The chains on his body seemed to have the purpose of binding the faces. As the chains fell away, the faces used his body to voice their own desires.

Even with the wound, the woman ignored the scar and continued to laugh madly. Actually, Chen Ge had seen this face before. He had once seen her face in the room filled with the pictures of the ghost stories society's victims. She was one of the people killed by the society.

Under the influence of negative emotions, she had become a part of something that Doctor Gao had to bear. Different voices came out from underneath Doctor Gao's blood coat. Chen Ge could not imagine how Doctor Gao would have looked under his coat. He watched from afar as Doctor Gao mutilated his own body with his bare hands, but it did not seem to amount to anything.

Instigated, scolded, and cursed by the different voices, Doctor Gao slowly stopped. The expression on his face gradually shifted to match the faces on his body. His lips tore open widely. One of his eyes was leaking tears, the other was leaking blood, and he laughed madly as he charged toward the shadow!

He attacked indiscriminately. If Zhang Ya's black hair blocked his way, he would also tear it down.

“Confinement, transmutation, and suppression, a Specter with three special properties.” The shadow used his own body as nutrients to feed the ghost fetus. The baby would continue to grow until he reached the breaking point where the shadow's body would crumble. “Li Wan City and the ghost apartment are shielding the ghost fetus' secret. If I can't reclaim this place, I'll have to ruin this place.”

Without hiding or retreating, the shadow bent his legs and shot at Doctor Gao. The shadow's face was blurring while the baby's face was becoming clearer. Chen Ge, who stood afar, used his Yin Yang Vision and imprinted the child's face in his mind. Without any preamble, as Doctor Gao came into contact with the shadow, the battle reached its height.

The word horrifying was not enough to describe the battle. Neither of them seemed to know the meaning of defense. They attacked endlessly. The curse morphed into a spear to pierce into Doctor Gao's body. The human faces were poked through as wails and laughter echoed out from Doctor Gao's body.

The chains rattled, resisting the curse. Doctor Gao, who held nothing back, had blood burst out of his body like liquid fireworks. He attacked like he was going to die, and with a determination toward death, he grabbed hold of the shadow.

The blood around him materialized into a chain and bound the shadow's body.

The floor of the roof was a pool of blood. Chains crawled out from the pool, and they lunged at the shadow like hungry pythons. Hundreds of chains surged into the shadow's body. They punctured him through, immobilizing him on the roof.

"I wonder, what does a Specter more powerful than a Red Specter tastes like?"

With a creepy smile on his face, Doctor Gao took a bite out of the shadow!

His mouth was dripping with curses. Doctor Gao had lost his mind; this Red Specter wished to consume the curse bite by bite.

"The chains represent confinement, the body carries the power of suppression, and you have the ability to transmute; you are indeed very powerful." The baby's lips were moving. The chains burned with the curse. The shadow's body was dissolving, and he slipped away from Doctor Gao's trap.

Doctor Gao had not unleashed all of his chains. His true power caused the shadow caution, and he would forever remember the term 'ghost stories society'.

"His weakness is the baby inside his chest! All the curses are protecting that baby!" Those at the side saw things more clearly. Chen Ge was the one who retained his rationality the most, and he saw through the shadow's weakness instantly.

“You again?” When they were battling, the shadow had already moved closer to Chen Ge. His hatred toward Chen Ge was immeasurable. The chains wrapped around the shadow, but the same trick would not work twice.

He used the layers of curse to protect the baby in his chest, abandoning most of his defense as he moved toward Chen Ge. He wanted to get close to Chen Ge, to kill this human that he hated the most in the world. He did not want to have Chen Ge in his sight again. He hated everything about the man, and the desire to destroy clouded his mind.

“I’ve never harmed you, and I don’t know what happened to you. If there’s a chance, I hope we can sit down and talk calmly, but unfortunately, both of us know how dangerous the other is.” Chen Ge stood where he was. Bai Qiulin and the woman from the tunnel guarded beside him as Chen Ge carefully stood the shadow’s moving pattern.

This kind of quick advance while at the same time avoiding the lethal attacks was worth studying by Chen Ge. They had the same physiology, but the shadow’s mastery of his physique was much better than Chen Ge.

Chen Ge had been relying on the hammer and brute force, but after this learning experience, he realized the limitation to pure force. He needed to learn more techniques so that he could escape easier in the future to not create a burden for others.

With the shadow posing such a big threat, Chen Ge still had the ease to learn the shadow’s technique; it was not because Chen Ge had gained an enlightened view on life but because Zhang Ya was by his side.

“It is still Zhang Ya who is more reliable. They are all Red Specters, but compared to Doctor Gao and the shadow, Zhang Ya is likely the most normal of them all.”

Her fingers tightened, and black stripes slowly surfaced on Zhang Ya’s arm. The deathly white skin, the blood red dress, and the strange black stripes... Zhang Ya, who always wore an expressionless face, turned to the shadow and suddenly smiled.

This was a particularly meaningful day for her. As a witness to the glorious declaration that Chen Ge had made, Zhang Ya wished to turn the shadow into a doll as a keepsake.

She imagined doing the same during their wedding. She would turn all the guests into dolls, and that way, the happiness of that day would be forever preserved.

Chapter 675 - Zhang Ya's Special Power

Chapter 675: Zhang Ya's Special Power

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

When Zhang Ya had not showed up, the shadow had only felt hatred toward Chen Ge, but after Zhang Ya showed up, the shadow's hatred of Chen Ge deepened. Initially, he only wanted to turn Chen Ge into his own shadow, but now, he only wanted to murder this man.

A lingering spirit cannot leave its object of possession, a baleful Specter can move independently of it for a while, and a Red Specter can leave the possessed object for a long time and even find a new object to possess; that currently is the method I use to differentiate between the different types of Specters.

Chen Ge looked at the approaching shadow.

But this method is not that useful for Specters above the level of Red Specter. Doctor Gao said that he sensed something beyond a Red Specter in the shadow, so what is the difference between something like that and a Red Specter? The power difference between them should be bigger than the power difference between a Red Specter and normal Specter.

It was simple to differentiate a Red Specter and normal Specter; the red article of clothing was a clear sign. But what was the difference between a Red Specter and something beyond a Red Specter?

The shadow can only be considered a Greater Red Specter. After the ghost fetus is born, it will become a real existence above a Red Specter.

Chen Ge noticed some problems on the shadow.

The baby in the shadow's chest is ingesting his body, and he's using his self to nurture the baby in exchange for power beyond the level that he should have. While that baby looks normal, it gives me a very bad feeling. Looking at it gives me a similar feeling to when I look at the picture of the Specter on the door inside my Haunted House.

When Doctor Gao was about to be exposed, he had thrown caution into the wind and made a live sacrifice out of several individuals. He had gouged out their eyes and left a painting of a Specter on the door in Chen Ge's Haunted House.

That Specter might be something more powerful than a Red Specter.

Thinking back, there were many things worth investigating about the ghost stories society. For example, that box with the black blood stain. After all, the reason Zhang Ya could grow so quickly probably had a lot to do with the black blood that she had stolen from the society member. That black blood was different from the black blood that dripped out of Doctor Gao's body, which was colored by curses; it was a pure blackness. Even when it was kept inside the box, one could feel the immense resentment that it was harboring.

Doctor Gao wouldn't be planning to lure a monster like that to the door at the Haunted House, right?

Chen Ge could not guess the goal of the Specter. The only one who knew the truth, the one who set up the trap, had turned mad, and Chen Ge really had no idea whether this was a good thing or not.

If that is really his plan, there's nothing I can do but increase the number of employees that I have and train them to become stronger.

As long as Zhang Ya can break through, then most problems can be solved. However, the distance between a Red Specter and the presence above it is huge. Even the shadow took ten years to affect the transformation. It feels like something is still lacking for Zhang Ya to make this evolution.

Zhang Ya's power had grown to an impossible level. For once, her power level was similar to the woman in the well at Coffin Village, but now, she could probably easily take down the well woman.

Zhang Ya should be hiding some secrets as well. I've been treating her kindly, but I realize that I don't really know her that well.

A heavy battering sound drew Chen Ge back to the reality. Black blood that carried the curse splashed around, and a seam of black hair wrapped itself around Chen Ge.

"Binding, Gluttony, Heart-connectivity, Pain, Sharpness... How do you have so many special properties?"

Under the protection of Zhang Ya's black hair, Chen Ge heard the shadow's voice.

Did he mention the term ‘sharpness’?

Gluttony was the special property of the woman at the hotel. Zhang Ya had consumed her heart, so it was understandable for her to possess that power. Binding was probably Zhang Ya’s own special property, and that was quite a perfect match. After all, she had been using her black hair to bind her enemies.

Zhang Ya had consumed the twin children of the devil from the society, and that was probably where she had obtained the special property of heart-connectivity. That explained why Zhang Ya could hear the voices in Chen Ge’s heart—she had probably connected her heart to Chen Ge way back then.

But the remaining two special properties confused Chen Ge. Pain sounded like it should be related to Xu Yin, and Xu Yin had just broken through to become a real Red Specter. Xu Yin himself probably had not understood how to use this special property, so why would Zhang Ya possess it herself?

Sharpness belonged to the headless woman who was Xiao Bu’s neighbor. She had died under the cuts of many knives, and the intensity of that memory had caused her blood to possess the sharpness quality.

To ensure that Zhang Ya had not quietly consumed the headless woman, Chen Ge opened the comic to peer into it. The headless woman was still there; her body did not fade away, but she did look a lot more obedient.

The headless woman is a Red Specter I plan to have join the Haunted House, and Xu Yin is already an employee who listens to my command. Does this mean that Zhang Ya can absorb the special properties of other Red Specters through me?

Chen Ge’s mouth widened; he did not think that was even possible.

The special property that the shadow mentioned should be the special power detailed by the black phone. Since the shadow can see through the special property of all Red Specters, does this mean that his special property is something like observation?

This was the first time that Chen Ge heard the term special property, but he believed that the shadow had gotten it wrong this time. Zhang Ya would not possess so many special properties. It was simply that other than the binding power that she already had, she possessed a different power that was deep buried inside her.

Zhang Ya possessed her own special page in the black phone. Chen Ge thought that was something common to all Red Specter, but even after Xu Yin became a Red Specter, that did not happen for him.

Even if Xu Yin had become a Red Specter, he merely occupied a line on the list of employees, but his name had turned red.

Lingering spirits do not have any special powers. A small portion of baleful Specters have special powers, and those are like lucky draws. However, all Red Specters possess a special power. A Red Specter might possess different number of special powers, and the more special powers that they possess, the stronger they'll be. Based on this logic, what kind of power will an existence above Red Specter possess?

Chen Ge tried to predict this, and in reality, he was also trying to figure out how to evolve his employees to that stage. The time limitation for the four-star mission—School of Afterlife—was almost up. Li Wan City, a 3.5-star mission, already gave him such a hard time. If he really challenged a four-star scenario, he might die.

Even though a 3.5-star scenario does not contain an existence above a Red Specter, one can notice their traces. Based on this logic, a four-star scenario should contain the presence of something stronger than a Red Specter.

Chen Ge took a deep breath. The city that he resided in had plenty of ghost stories, but even in such a unique city, there were only three known four-star scenarios. In other words, the city might be home to three presences stronger than a Red Specter. They were the deepest secret hidden by the city; they represented the darker side of the city.

When Chen Ge spent time thinking, the situation of the battle had changed tremendously. The commotion grew louder and louder. The shadow started to show lethargy while being attacked by both Zhang Ya and Doctor Gao.

The body, which was made from curses, had no shape and no form. Being touched by normal Specters would not harm the shadow. In fact, the contact would cause great injury to the Specters themselves. With that alone, the shadow could have taken down any Red Specter, but unfortunately, he ran into Doctor Gao and Zhang Ya.

...

These two Greater Red Specters could take on a large number of curses. It was one thing for them to be immensely powerful—their special powers seemed to be a natural weakness for the shadow. Doctor Gao's confinement and Zhang Ya's binding proved advantageous when dealing with the shadow. They blocked off his escape, and that cornered him into fighting back against the two.

The battle between Red Specters was extremely horrifying. Tearing down the other party's resentment to feed themselves, this was a scene that a normal human being would have trouble imagining. However, it was something that could not have been more common for Specters.

The shadow was covered in curses, but the two Greater Red Specters did not care about that. The many things that Doctor Gao was bearing had pushed the man over the brink of insanity. While Zhang Ya looked normal, after the battle, the shadow realized that this woman's madness was no less than the two chairpersons of the ghost stories society.

The dark black body was shattered again and again. Black blood leaked out from the baby's face. Everyone present could hear a strange voice. It felt like the blood red sky above them was crying, or perhaps it was this land that was corrupted by nightmares weeping.

Tears and laughter, they saw a child holding a knife standing in an alley slowly being flooded by the heavy rain. The neck was embraced by a rope. The head was pressed into the bed. Tears mixed together with rain. The child screamed and cried for help. He cried and cried until the corners of his lips turned up into a smile.

Submerged into the inky way, burned in the fire, sharp knife cuts in fleshless body, and buried inside a ready hole. Unable to breathe, unable to feel the sun on his face, all that he could reach with his hand were the many different ugly scars.

“Why do you want to kill me? What have I done wrong?”

The shadow’s body was dissipating. The remaining curses transformed into blood capillaries and poked into the baby’s heart.

Shape and form gradually etched onto the baby’s previously featureless face. The soft bones were squeezed into strange shapes while the body filled up with curses and resentment. The baby opened its eyes, staring at Chen Ge, who was shielded by black hair.

The heart in its chest beat, and the sky started to rain blood. Chen Ge’s image was burned into the baby’s retina as the baby’s heartbeat heavily. Gasping greedily for air, the baby was looking less and less like a monster made from curses and more like a living human being.

It had possessed its own baby, but the internal organs were still beating to their own rhythm. Its body felt like it was about to collapse from within, but under such circumstances, its lips still moved into the smile. The eyes turned more and more unrecognizable, replacing the original cunning and defeat with evil and resentment.

“These are not the shadow’s eyes!” Narrowing his eyes, Chen Ge looked at his own reflection in the baby’s gaze through the gap in the hair. It was a self that he could barely recognize, but he was sure that it was a version of himself!

“I have died for you so many times—it is about time for you to die on my behalf.” The blood capillaries erupted, and the shadow’s body completely crumbled. The malformed ghost baby crawled out from the chest. As the blood rained down around it, it charged toward Chen Ge, moving ten times faster than before.

The layers of black hair were pulled apart, and even with the shackles binding it, the speed of the ghost baby did not slow down. Its body was gradually worn down, but the image of Chen Ge in its eyes grew clearer and clearer. The curses morphed into black lines and surged into its eyes, binding tightly around Chen Ge in his eyes. The distance between them was great, but Chen Ge found himself unable to move. He felt like something had immobilized him.

“How did it do this without any contact? What kind of power is this? A type of curse?” The ghost baby drained the shadow dry, and it seemed to be using its own power now. The black lines around the Chen Ge in the eyes started to burn. Black flames seared Chen Ge in its eyes, and the Chen Ge in reality felt the same pain. It was as if millions of ants were crawling all over Chen Ge, inside and outside his skin. They bit on his skin, inch by inch, leaving behind a burning sensation.

“All the good that you represent will become nutrients for despair. I will await you at the lowest part of the abyss...” The baby’s lips tore apart. It gazed deeply at Chen Ge. “My shadow.”

BANG!

Black hair blocked Chen Ge’s view as it wound protectively around him. Black hairs crawled into Chen Ge’s body. They consumed the curses little by little—this was the power of gluttony. The ghost baby was using the power of the ghost fetus. Even for a Red Specter, this kind of curse was hard to stomach, and the ghost baby used it on a living human.

“He just said that I am his shadow, right?” Chen Ge was still unable to control his body, but Zhang Ya was slowly consuming the curse. With a superhuman constitution, Chen Ge did not collapse. Through the gap, he opened the eyes to stare at the ghost baby.

Shackles and black hair wound around its body, and the ghost baby stopped three meters away from Chen Ge. Zhang Ya’s arm poked through the baby’s eyes while Doctor Gao grabbed hold of the baby’s heart.

“Just a little bit more, huh?” The spine-chilling voice slipped out from the cracked lips. The ghost baby laughed in the blood rain. The rising and falling of its chest became more violent as its body started to balloon. “Chen Ge, I will remember this day. As repayment, I will make you remember every single day in the future.”

The ghost baby moved its head away, it turned to look toward somewhere in Eastern Jiujiang. The bones were stretched open, and this one-time use body expanded once more! Strange, black symbols appeared on the ghost baby's skin, which seemed to be the most initial curse.

"Be careful!" Chen Ge's warning still came a bit too late. The black lines pushed out from inside the body. The black symbol wasted the body away, and the ghost baby's body exploded from the inside!

He felt like his eardrums were about to shatter. For a moment after that, everything was quiet, and his mind was blank. All Chen Ge could feel was his body falling backward before plummeting downward. Lastly, he was held in midair by something.

When Chen Ge opened his eyes again, he realized that he was hanging outside the ninth floor of the building in a cradle of black hair.

"Zhang Ya?" The black hair was still around, but the ones above the 10th floor started to show the symbol of the curse.

"Was she the one who flung me down?" The blood rain had stopped. With the ghost apartment at the center, the echoes of ghostly screams started around them. The commotion that they had created was so huge that it had attracted the attention of all the Specters around Li Wan City.

"These screams do not seem to fear the shadow. Just how scary is the world behind the door?"

Blood fog covered everything. Even with the Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge could not see these monsters—he could only hear them. The black hair pulled him upward. When Chen Ge returned to the roof, he was shocked by the scene that he saw.

When the ghost baby's body exploded, neither Zhang Ya nor Doctor Gao retreated. The two Greater Red Specters made the same choice then—they chose to attack the baby in unison!

Neither of them put up any defense. Half of the black hair and shackles were ruined, and the worse thing was, the ghost baby's symbol started to surface on Zhang Ya and Doctor Gao's bodies. These symbols swam all through their bodies like fish, and it would take a lot of effort to remove them.

They were in a horrible state. Doctor Gao was missing an arm. The curse and negative emotions could no longer be suppressed, and the faces of the innocent were weeping endlessly.

Zhang Ya's body, which was facing the shadow, was imprinted with the curse, and what made her angry the most was that it appeared like her face had been injured as well. Doctor Gao possessed the special power of suppression and transmutation while Zhang Ya had the power of gluttony. Even though they were both seriously injured, neither of them prepared to retreat. They were both holding on, ready for another battle.

"Why are they so nervous about another battle?" Chen Ge looked to the middle of the roof. Doctor Gao's arm, which had been holding the ghost baby's heart earlier, was deposited there. It was almost dissolved by the curse, and the greater part of the arm had disintegrated into black blood, but the ghost baby's heart was nowhere to be seen.

"Was it blown up in the explosion?"

After looking around, Chen Ge realized that Doctor Gao's other remaining arm was holding half of a blood red heart. This heart was only twenty percent the size of a normal heart, and it was covered in the black pattern.

"The heart of a Red Specter was blood red in color. Even though this heart is small, it has a constitutional difference to a Red Specter's heart. The feeling I get from those black patterns is very dangerous, like a few more glances at them will cause bad things to happen to me."

Doctor Gao was holding half the heart, and the other half was possessed by Zhang Ya—both of them wanted what the other was holding. Without any word, Chen Ge silently moved backward. He looked through his backpack and summoned the rest of his employees.

"Perhaps I can have a logical discussion with Doctor Gao. He is a clear-minded man, so I believe that he will be able to look at the big picture." When the ghost baby's body exploded, Bai Qiulin and the woman in the tunnel had both hidden inside the comic. The curse seemed to only work on living humans and Specters. It did not have much of an effect on inanimate objects.

Chen Ge actually wanted to ask if the woman from the tunnel felt comfortable living inside Ya Danian's comic or not, but considering that Zhang Ya was next to him, Chen Ge astutely clamped his mouth shut.

The two parties maintained the standstill on the roof. The power scale was kept at a sensitive balance, and a new battle was about to start.

After about ten seconds, a loud explosion came from the direction of Li Wan City. Everyone turned to see a wave of redness crashing toward Ming Yang Residence. In the thick red fog, Li Wan City's real owner, Xiao Bu, was rushing toward the ghost apartment with Men Nan and Ol' Zhou in tow.

Xiao Bu was not a normal Red Specter. The door in Li Wan City had gotten out of control, and its influence was no longer limited to a single building but had spread to the entire town. As the door-pusher, Xiao Bu's power was growing. Exactly how powerful she was, Chen Ge had no clue either, but she was certainly no weaker than the gluttony woman at the hotel.

If it was a normal Red Specter, it would have been fine, but with another Greater Red Specter allying with Chen Ge, the tip of the scale had been upset. As the two chairpersons of the ghost stories society turned to capture Xiao Bu in their sight, they turned to glance at each other, and then they made their move in the same instant.

"Get moving! I have many things I wish to ask him!" As Chen Ge screamed his order, Doctor Gao jumped down from the roof. The shackles pierced into the building, and he dangled downward before disappearing into the blood fog with half of the heart.

Doctor Gao had made his escape with such clarity that it surprised Chen Ge. He had no idea how a madman would come to such a clear decision so suddenly. Perhaps a trigger inside his heart had been activated, or at this moment, all the 'despair' in Doctor Gao came to this choice in unison.

"He left just like that. I still have many things about the door at the Haunted House to ask him." Chen Ge did not mind that Doctor Gao had gone insane. He would spend time and effort to help him, but it did appear like Doctor Gao wanted his help.

After Doctor Gao left, the black hair on the roof disappeared quickly, and Zhang Ya strode wordlessly to Chen Ge. Her hair blocked half of her face. Just as Chen Ge thought that she was about to say something, Zhang Ya's eyes swept the woman from the tunnel and then reached into the comic to grab the headless woman.

Ignoring Yan Danian, who was cowering in the corner of the comic, Zhang Ya slipped a single strand of her hair around the headless woman's wrist. Then she leaned against Chen Ge's back and disappeared into his shadow. Looking at the trail that Zhang Ya had just walked over, there was a long line of black blood; she seemed to be heavily injured.

“During the previous fight with the ghost stories society, before she went into her slumber, Zhang Ya handed me a doll that helped me block a fatal blow.

“This time, she curled her hair around the headless woman’s wrist. Forcing her into submission is probably something to the same effect.

“Does this mean that Zhang Ya is going into another hibernation? Is it because she is too heavily injured, or does she need time to slowly digest half of the ghost baby’s heart?”

Chen Ge was familiar with Zhang Ya’s personality. When her gaze fell on the woman from the tunnel earlier, she had probably been planning to turn her into a doll. However, in her current condition, Zhang Ya did not have one hundred percent faith that the transformation would be successful, so she chose the second-best option and weaved her warning into the similarly injured headless woman.

“Doctor Gao’s situation is worse than Zhang Ya’s, but I still need to be careful. They are both the strongest Red Specters, and now, they possess the heart of the existence stronger than a Red Specter. If Doctor Gao succeeds, one night, he might just appear from behind the door at the Haunted House.”

Currently, Doctor Gao was unable to control his negative emotions and curses, but it did not mean that he would not bring them under control after he broke through the limitation and became something stronger than a Red Specter. Once Doctor Gao regained his sanity, he would be a very formidable enemy.

“The greatest power combined with the highest intelligence, what should I do? Perhaps I should have Gao Ru Xue move to live with me at the Haunted House. Assign her a room next to the toilet?”

“Boss!” Ol’ Zhou arrived to interrupt Chen Ge’s murmuring.

“Sorry for all the trouble.” Chen Ge meant that from the bottom of his heart. He wanted to give Ol’ Zhou a hug, but he phased through the man’s body. Then he understood why. “I’m glad that all of you are okay.”

After a brief conversation with Ol’ Zhou and promising Men Nan that he would send him back to Third Sick Hall to fix his window, he placed them inside the comic.

“Xiao Bu, the shadow has been killed already. You are free now, but you mustn’t lower your guard. The shadow’s main body, the ghost fetus, is about to be born, and there is a chance that he will return.” Chen Ge’s hint could not have been clearer. Xiao Bu did not give Chen Ge a direct answer. The sound of water dripping came from the staircase. A woman in a red raincoat arrived holding Xiao Bu’s remaining limbs and carrying Tong Tong in her arms. She tried to peel a part of her sewn lips open, wanting to say something to Chen Ge.

“Have you found your child?” Chen Ge understood that the woman in the raincoat had entered the ghost apartment to find her child. He had also seen that the building was filled with children whose memory had been sucked out by the shadow.

The woman in the red raincoat shook her head. She placed the limbs not far away from Xiao Bu and turned to leave.

The water from her raincoat slid onto the ground to form this sentence. “I will stay here until the day I find him. Then, I will find you.”

“I know that you wish to thank me, but how come this promise sounds so creepy in words?” Chen Ge did not stop the woman. He had plenty of other things to do at the moment.

Chapter 677: New Employees – Do Not Read

Do Not Read – Major Spoilers – Bugged Chapter, Released Early

Due to a bug in the system, this chapter, Chapter 677, was released early. We thought that we had come up with a solution, but unfortunately, that did not work. So, until we catch up to where this chapter should have been released, read on at your own risk.

One of Xiao Bu's hands was ingested fully by the shadow, while the other remained with the smiling man. While the big battle was happening, the smiling man had already disappeared, probably escaping during the commotion.

"Xiao Bu, now that you have regained most of your body, can you take control of the door?" Chen Ge was worried that the door in Li Wan City would continue to expand. Xiao Bu shook her head, and the blood gathered to form her reply.

"The door has gone completely out of control; the only thing I can do is to slow down the expansion speed. To have full control over it, I will need to find my entire body."

"Then, can you open the door to send us out of here?" Xiao Bu was, at the very least, the door-pusher, and Chen Ge believed that she would be able to do something like that.

The blood flowed, and a new sentence appeared on the ground. "Yes, but I can only keep the door open for one minute per day. The door has been under the shadow's control for too long. I need some time to refamiliarize myself with it."

"One minute is more than enough." Chen Ge knew that Xiao Bu was unable to leave this place with him. Just like Men Nan, she needed to stay behind the door to guard it. Understanding that, Chen Ge did not force Xiao Bu to leave with him.

Probably because she had seen through Chen Ge's thoughts, the blood on the ground shifted again. "You've killed your own shadow, and based on the agreement, I should be your new shadow—I will never forget that. After I gain full control over the ‘door’, I will find you.”

Xiao Bu’s eyes wandered between Chen Ge and the shadow behind him; it was unclear what she was thinking.

“Okay.” Killing the shadow and then having Xiao Bu become Chen Ge’s shadow was Chen Ge’s parent’s plan, but the actual development was far beyond everyone’s expectations. Compared to the more easily controlled Xiao Bu, Zhang Ya was like another extreme. To make her into his shadow, no one could tell what would happen in the future.

“Right, there is one more thing that I wish to ask you.” Chen Ge was suddenly reminded of the question. “The ghost stories society hid one third of its treasures in Li Wan City. Do you know where they might be?”

Xiao Bu shook her head again, and Chen Ge did no press. Be it the shadow or Doctor Gao, they were both wily old foxes, so they certainly would have found a secret place to hide those things.

“Doctor Gao’s arrival might have something to do with that. That madman is extremely scary, and I fear he might return. You stay in Li Wan City, and the woman in the red raincoat stays at the ghost apartment. Both of you are my friends, and the friend of my friend is my friend, so if you run into any danger, I hope you two will look out for each other, or you can come to Western Jiujiang’s New Century Park to find me.”

After dealing with Xiao Bu, Chen Ge started to inspect his remaining employees.

When facing off against the shadow, the employees in the backpack had all volunteered their help. Now, everyone was injured, but thankfully, other than Xu Yin, no one else had been ‘infected’ by the curse.

“Ol’ Bai, thank you for your help earlier.” Bai Qiulin was a gambler who had finally seen the light. He had a heart that burned brighter than the icy exterior that he put on. Facing Chen Ge’s words of appreciation, he appeared rather flustered. Thinking back to his life of more than two decades, this was the first time that he had heard a word of thank from other, and actually, it felt nice to be needed by others.

“I just happened to be around.” Bai Qiulin pushed his hands into his pocket like speaking one more word would claim his life.

“No matter what, if not for you this time, every one of us would have been harmed.” Xu Yin had blocked the shadow, and Bai Qiulin had grabbed Chen Ge and the backpack to escape. They had split up their work nicely, and if there was a problem with any section, the one standing there would either have been the shadow or Doctor Gao.

This type of high-intensity battle was beneficial to Bai Qiulin. The redness around his heart had started to spread, and he could unleash around thirty percent of Xiong Qing’s power. The corner of his shirt and pants started to color with blood stains—Bai Qiulin was steadily heading toward becoming a Red Specter.

Compared to Xu Yin, his progress was a lot easier. He possessed Xiong Qing’s heart, so he did not need to find a breakthrough. By consuming more baleful Specters, eventually, he would turn into a Red Specter.

Actually, after doing some inventory, Chen Ge had gained a lot from this mission. Xu Yin had officially become a Red Specter, and Bai Qiulin had evolved into a Half Red Specter. Zhang Ya had consumed the heart of the glutton woman, and she also had in her possession half the heart of something that appeared to be greater than Red Specter. When she reawakened, she would be even scarier.

The power of his employees had improved, and Chen Ge had even gained a new batch of employees. A bunch of lingering spirits and baleful specters with special powers and a Red Specter who was ‘converted’ by Zhang Ya—the headless woman.

The key point was that Chen Ge had gained the friendship of Xiao Bu and the woman in the red raincoat. The Haunted House might welcome two new Red Specters in the future.

“If I see my Haunted House as a mission scenario, then its current level should be around three-star and four-star, perhaps closer to four-star than three-star.” After checking up on his ‘ghost’ employees, Chen Ge ran to find the living employees.

To expand the Haunted House, overreliance on ghosts would not work; he needed a few living employees as well. The mixing of living and dead employees would definitely bring the visitors a wonderful experience.

Chen Ge found Scissors, the drunkard, the doctor, and the unconscious Lee Zheng on the first floor.

“Where’s Jia Ming?” Chen Ge was cautious about that young man who had been possessed by the shadow for multiple years. He certainly knew a lot of the shadow’s secrets.

“When you were fighting, he dragged the police officer and started to run madly down the stairs. We saw how strangely he was acting, so we followed him downstairs.”

When the shadow summoned back his full strength to nurture the ghost baby, Scissors and the drunkard had regained their freedom, but there were black lines that represented the curse remaining on their bodies.

Chen Ge picked up the handcuff around Lee Zheng’s wrist. Thankfully, he had cuffed himself together with Jia Ming to prevent the latter’s escape. Otherwise, with Jia Ming’s personality, he would not have dragged Lee Zheng to escape unless it was necessary.

“That man got the key and ran. He sure moves fast.” Jia Ming and the student known Bei Ye had escaped. Chen Ge felt like there was a need to detain them because they knew too many things that they should not. He might have thought that way, but of course, Chen Ge would not voice that in front of others. He used his Yin Yang Vision to examine them and realized that their condition did not look that good.

There were black lines moving in their eyes—it appeared like they were cursed.

Scissors and the drunkard’s situation was better. They had consumed the blood vessels prepared for Red Specters at the hotel, and their bodies had undergone some unique changes. Chen Ge could sense that their body temperature had dropped to a lower temperature than normal.

The doctor’s condition though was less than optimistic. Due to the curse mixed together with the poison that he had drunk earlier, his muscles had started to atrophy. Even though he could still walk, it appeared like he had aged at least a decade overnight.

“In a way, we have survived a tragedy together. You know many things about me, and I know about the secret in your heart. Currently, you guys are cursed, and I can’t let you wander about just like that. How about this? You can stay with me for now, and I’ll send you back to your home after I help you cure your body of the curse and after you feel better.” The responsible Chen Ge suggested an option for everyone.

“There’s no need for you to take on the responsibility like that. It was our choice to enter Li Wan City. Furthermore, if not for you, we would have died already. You’ve saved us so many times, and we cannot repay you for what you’ve done—how could we trouble you anymore?” The drunkard had woken up from the alcohol a long time ago; his mind could not have been clearer.

“If you do not remove the curse, your lives will constantly be in danger. We’ve been through too many things together, and I cannot stand by, watching you being tormented by the pain and illness.” Chen Ge already collected all of his employees. He patted his backpack.

“We’ve been saved multiple times by you, and now you’re asking us to occupy your home; it really does not sound right,” Scissors said. “How about this? If you need any help from us, we will stop at nothing to help you! Do not say no, this is the only thing we can do.”

“Yes, you’re going to help us remove the shadow’s curse. You’re going to save our lives again!” The drunkard and the doctor both turned to Chen Ge.

“I operate a Haunted House, and as you must have noticed by now, I have the most ‘professional’ of ‘actors’ in my team. I don’t need any more help.” Chen Ge appeared rather troubled.

“But we cannot just occupy your kindness without doing anything in return! At least give us some job that is within our ability!”

Since they had already said that, it felt wrong for Chen Ge to deny their insistence. He could only ‘force’ himself to accept. “Okay, but first thing’s first, you are not going to help me for free. I will provide all of you with the standard payment. After all, you need to look after your family, and you’ll need money to survive. This is the only requirement I have; I hope that you won’t reject it.”

Hearing that from Chen Ge, the few felt a warmth suffusing through their hearts. Their appreciation toward Chen Ge was as sincere as it could be.

“Boss Chen is such a saint!”

One of Xiao Bu's hands was ingested fully by the shadow, while the other remained with the smiling man. While the big battle was happening, the smiling man had already disappeared, probably escaping during the commotion.

"Xiao Bu, now that you have regained most of your body, can you take control of the door?" Chen Ge was worried that the door in Li Wan City would continue to expand. Xiao Bu shook her head, and the blood gathered to form her reply.

"The door has gone completely out of control; the only thing I can do is to slow down the expansion speed. To have full control over it, I will need to find my entire body."

"Then, can you open the door to send us out of here?" Xiao Bu was, at the very least, the door-pusher, and Chen Ge believed that she would be able to do something like that.

The blood flowed, and a new sentence appeared on the ground. "Yes, but I can only keep the door open for one minute per day. The door has been under the shadow's control for too long. I need some time to refamiliarize myself with it."

"One minute is more than enough." Chen Ge knew that Xiao Bu was unable to leave this place with him. Just like Men Nan, she needed to stay behind the door to guard it. Understanding that, Chen Ge did not force Xiao Bu to leave with him.

Probably because she had seen through Chen Ge's thoughts, the blood on the ground shifted again. "You've killed your own shadow, and based on the agreement, I should be your new shadow—I will never forget that. After I gain full control over the 'door', I will find you."

Chapter 678 - Little Boy

Chapter 678: Little Boy

“My Haunted House in Jiujiang is quite reputable—search for it online if you don’t believe me. It is the best place to work if you’re in the theme park business. When we return, I’ll give you the necessary training, and I hope that you’ll eventually fall in love with this career.”

After the ghost employees, Chen Ge also gained three living employees. Unlike Xiao Gu and Xu Wan, these three knew about what had happened in Li Wan City, so their way of thinking was different from normal, and Chen Ge would not worry about letting them help him handle the underground scenario.

“This world is not as simple as it looks. The reason I did not want the rest of you to help me earlier is because my Haunted House is a resting place for some homeless spirits, so...”

“We understand!” The few understood Chen Ge’s concern. After witnessing the strange phenomenon at Li Wan City, they could understand Chen Ge’s issue fully.

“That would be perfect.” Chen Ge decided to arrange them to oversee the underground scenarios and deal with emergencies. As the Haunted House continued to expand, the underground scenario would only get bigger, and so would the number of visitors that they would receive. Chen Ge could not handle all that alone.

“After the sun rises, you should rest for a while and go report your safety to your family,” Chen Ge said that and turned to look at Scissors and the doctor. “One of you came to find your elder brother, and the other came to find your wife. Afterward, I’ll lead you on a search around Li Wan City. Hopefully, we can find them.”

Hearing that Chen Ge wanted to help them find their family, Scissors nodded heavily in appreciation, and even the doctor’s expression softened in that moment like a huge boulder had been eased from his heart. "Thank you."

"It's what I should do." Scissors and the doctor did not have any family left, but it was different for the drunkard. It was a pure accident that he had gotten the last bus on Route 104. From a certain perspective, he was no different from a normal individual.

"My house is in Xin Hai City. After the curse on me is somewhat under control, I wish to go home." The drunkard scratched his head. "I might not look like it, but I come from quite a wealthy family. However, after my mother passed away, the relationship between me and my father has turned a bit icy, so I've been living alone in Jiujiang all these years. After what happened tonight, I think I've understood something. Life is too strong for regret; I think I want to go home to have a chat with my father."

"Wait, you're a rich young master?" Scissors and Chen Ge really did not expect such a background from the drunkard.

"Don't you think it's quite rude to call people that right before their face?" The drunkard held his forehead—he could already see how interesting his future would be. "We should start this over. My name is Zhang Jingjiu. As you can see, I'm not that good with liquor, but for some reason, my clients like to call me Wine Bibber. I dabbled in real estate and white wine sales."

"I do have a name given to me by the orphanage, but I do not like it that much, so you should just call me Scissors." Both Scissors and drunkard made simple introductions. When it was the doctor's turn, he shook his head like he had something that he was not yet ready to share. Chen Ge did not dwell on this for too long. They followed Xiao Bu back to Li Wan City to meet up with Fan Chong.

"Boss Chen!" Fan Chong was overjoyed when he saw Chen Ge, but underneath that happiness was a worry, he had no idea what had happened to his brother, Fan Dade.

"Your brother will be fine, I'm sure of it." After consoling Fan Chong, Chen Ge led his employees around Li Wan City. With the ostensible reason of helping Scissors and the doctor find their families, Chen Ge searched the entire small town. He did not find anything left behind by the ghost stories society. The Specters that lived in the buildings had all escaped silently after the shadow left.

After a long search, neither Scissors nor the doctor's relatives were found, and they appeared rather low-spirited.

“Since the shadow has been dealt with, we’ll keep returning to this place. Eventually, we’ll run into them.” Chen Ge did not know whether it was right for him to say that or not, but he felt like, to be alive, one had to have hope, so he figured that it was alright.

“It’s time to leave. We’ve been being the door for far too long already. It’s time to go out.”

The mission in Li Wan City had provided Chen Ge with a lot of information. Other than unlocking the scenario and increasing his number of employees, he knew some information about the four-star mission, Ghost Fetus.

The ghost fetus that grew inside the shadow’s chest was probably how the ghost fetus would look at birth, and Chen Ge had memorized its face in his brain.

The few returned to Fan Chong’s residential area. Chen Ge had Xiao Bu be prepared to open the door. He then placed the fainted Lee Zheng in the adjacent room. He started comparing notes with Scissors and the rest before they dealt with the questioning from the police. In terms of that, Chen Ge was truly a master.

...

Inside an old building on the eastern side of Li Wan City, a family of three was forced into a corner. The panicked-looking man was about forty. He was squeezed next to a woman with no expression, and a boy stood next to them.

“The shadow is already dead. What are we still doing here? If you’re that interested in them, just kill them, or you wish to continue the game of hide-and-seek?” Bei Ye squatted on the ground while holding a knife. A thin young man stood next to him.

“I will repeat myself—I am different from you.” Jia Ming held the boy’s face and studied it closely. “Yes, it is him.”

“What are you talking about?” Bei Ye walked over and that scared the boy for quite a bit.

“When the shadow was possessing my body, he did many crazy things, and because of that, I knew quite a bit about the shadow’s secret. He once tried to place part of his body inside the mother core and used that to try and determine the maximum threshold of curses and resentment a living human could contain. In my memory, he succeeded twice. The one time led to the creation of the ghost fetus, and the other time created a little monster.” Jia Ming’s eyes that looked at the boy and the unfeeling woman were creepy.

“You’re saying that this boy is part of the ghost fetus?” Bei Ye had no idea what Jia Ming was up to. The only reason he had agreed with work with Jia Ming was because the latter knew many of the shadow’s secrets.

“After the successful trial, the shadow pulled back the curse and resentment, but even so, there must be some remnants inside the boy. He possesses the curse with the same origin as the ghost fetus. Thus, he should be able to sense the fetus’ location. Just because of that, we have reason to bring him with us.”

“Are you sure? This boy looks a bit too normal.”

“This is the best disguise. If not for his mother, I really wouldn’t have recognized him.” Jia Ming picked up the man and told his parents, “It is because of this boy that we’re not going to kill you, but I hope you’ll listen to our orders and help us to train this boy, to make him understand how to control the resentment and curse inside him.”

“No problem,” the man promised quickly. He lowered his head, and venom coursed through his eyes.

“Let’s go then. I know the location of the other door in Eastern Jiujiang—we can leave from there.” After saying that, Jia Ming led them into the blood fog.

Chapter 679 - Mayor's Will

Chapter 679: Mayor's Will

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

After comparing their testimonies and making sure there were no issues, Chen Ge gathered all the living humans together.

“Xiao Bu, you can open the door now.” Other than her two arms, Xiao Bu had found most of her body. She stood before the door, and various bad memories rose in her mind. The blood fog around Li Wan City pulsed, and it surged into the basement. Entrail-like objects crawled out from the blood red ground and poked themselves into the half-open door. About ten seconds later, the old and broken door seemed to recover on its own, and only two empty corners remained.

“Be ready, we only have one minute. If we fail to escape, then we’ll have to wait another day.” The thick fog disappeared once it touched the door, but the two missing corners were sealing up at an observable speed. The blood fog changed into blood vessels, and like needle and thread, they sealed up the opening.

When the two missing corners were blocked, the whole door turned red, and it was slowly pushed open. It was clear that opening a door that had gone out of control had taken a great deal out of Xiao Bu, so Chen Ge and the rest focused their attention.

The blood red door was connected to the ground, and the blood vessels on the door seemed to come alive. Strange noises came from the buildings around them, and in that condition, the ‘door’ was completely open.

“Quick!” The drunkard was the first out, carrying Lee Zheng on his back. Then came the doctor, Fan Chong, and Scissors. Carrying two bags, Chen Ge was at the back. When he left, he turned to look at Xiao Bu. “If you run into anything you can’t handle, remember to come and find me. I’m at Western Jiujiang’s New Century Park.”

Taking a step out the door was like plunging into the deep ocean; there was a temporary distorted sense of gravity, and the eyes needed a few minutes to adjust to the new sight. When Chen Ge reopened his eyes, the 'door' behind him was already shut, and the group of people was squeezed inside an abandoned basement.

"Hey! Wake up!" Escaping from the nightmare world, the group felt as if they had been given a new lease on life. For normal people, it was indeed an 'exciting' night.

"You are not to tell anyone about what you saw on the other side of the door, and all of you remember how to answer the police's questions, right?"

"Yes, don't worry about that."

They crawled out from Jiang Long's basement and came to the bathroom. The glass that Chen Ge had shattered the last time that he was there had not been fixed. The residential management had merely hung a wooden plaque on the wall.

"I'll go to the police station in a bit. You guys should return home. If everything is successful, we will meet up tomorrow afternoon at the entrance to the Haunted House at New Century Park." Chen Ge took Lee Zheng from the drunkard. This police officer had saved his life, and now, he was in trouble—Chen Ge was not going to leave him behind.

"Please wait a moment," Fan Chong said with some embarrassment. "Boss Chen, can I go with you? One, I'm worried about my brother, and two, I really don't dare go home now. What if there's a murderer waiting for me at home or something crawls out from underneath the bed again?"

The incident that night had left a deep scar on Fan Chong; he would probably think twice about approaching a video game now.

"Okay, then you can tag along for now. If you cannot find a job, feel free to come help me at the Haunted House." He had worked together with Fan Chong before. There was nothing too special about this fat geek, but he had a kind heart. After a long night, the heavy rain had stopped, but the dark clouds still hung in the sky, and a light drizzle was trickling down.

"We can use our phones now. It is currently 5:30 am, and we will gather at twelve noon. Best find the time to rest now," Chen Ge said and walked deeper into Li Wan City with Lee Zheng on his back.

“Boss Chen, why are you going back to the city? Is there anything we can help with?” Scissors was passionate. He seemed to see traces of his elder brother in Chen Ge, and that was a sincerity that was rare nowadays.

“I’m going to check to see if the bus is still there or not. It’s too hard to find a taxi in Li Wan City. I feel like it’s best for us to just drive the bus away,” Chen Ge suggested casually like this was something that happened every day.

“You want to drive the haunted bus away with you?” It made some sense on a certain level, but something just did not feel right about it.

“Not using it will be a waste. The shadow used it to entrap us, but now that the shadow is dead, we should inherit its things,” Chen Ge said in a sincere tone. “There’s not absolute morality to object; it mainly depends on who is using it. As long as one possesses a kind heart, everything will be fine.”

“But... won’t we be stopped by the police if we take the bus on the road?” The doctor asked a logical question.

“That’s why we need to move before the sun comes up.” When they spoke, Chen Ge already reached the location where the hearse had last been located, but to his surprise, the hearse was missing.

Is it because I drove the vehicle into the world behind the door? Is the hearse abandoned behind the door? Chen Ge did not get it. In his mind, the blood door’s influence only acted on humans and ghosts; it should never affect inanimate objects.

Is this something to do with the hearse itself? Or is my understanding of the world behind the door still lacking? Chen Ge made the decision to try to get the hearse back the next time that the door was open.

Seeing that the hearse had disappeared, both the drunkard and the doctor sighed in relief. At least they would not need to ride on a haunted vehicle back home.

They walked down the street for a very long time before they spotted a taxi. After the driver stopped, he finally noticed that they were carrying a fainted police officer, and his soul almost escaped from his body from the scare.

“Sir, there’s quite a few of us, do you mind if we squeeze in the back?”

“Of course not, of course not. Where are you going?”

“Drive them home first, and drop me off at the city police station.”

“Of course, of course.”

Perhaps it was fear or something else, but the driver drove so fast. After dropping the other passengers home, it was already daylight. Fan Chong, who was seated in the front was asleep, Lee Zheng was still unconscious, and other than the driver, Chen Ge was the only one awake. He looked out the scenery flying past the window and took out the black phone. He clicked open the message.

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored, for completing the 3.5-star Trial Mission—Li Wan City!

“Mission Completion Rate ninety-four percent! Obtained the hidden reward—The Mayor’s Will.

“Li Wan City is a town held in the palm of a devil. Only one who is crueler than cold-blooded murderers and scarier than despairing Specters—the most cunning, despicable individual—will obtain this reward!

“The Mayor’s Will: Congratulations for becoming the new owner of the town. After the Haunted House breaks through the stage of Maze of Terror and reaches a new height, you will receive a chance to open a branch with Li Wan City as the background! The actual details will be given after the official unlock is available!”

Chen Ge was stunned when he saw the message. I’ve already dug up three feet under Li Wan City, but the completion rate is still not one hundred percent? Anyhow, this reward is quite interesting.

After another two expansions, the Haunted House would reach a new level, and it was then that Chen Ge could use the Mayor’s Will and open a branch in another city.

“This is somewhat of a safety net, but for now I should focus on the Haunted House at New Century Park. After I’ve found my parents and everything settles down, the other plan can come.”

Chen Ge slid down the screen and clicked open the other messages.

Chapter 680 - Opening a 3.5-Star Scenario

Chapter 680: Opening a 3.5-Star Scenario

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored, for completing the 3.5-star Trial Mission! An all new scenario, Li Wan City, has been unlocked!

“Li Wan City (3.5-star Scenario): This scenario comprises of Li Wan Residential Area, Li Wan Private Hospital, the junction, Smiling Dog, The Elevator Going to the Second Floor Basement, Midnight Hotel, and so on. Since this scenario is immensely large, please choose carefully whether to unlock it to the public.

“Congratulations, Specter’s Favored! You’ve successfully rescued four innocent individuals and thus obtained the additional reward—Jack the Ripper Apparel.

“He is the world’s most famous serial killers. Nothing is known about him; he never leaves any evidence of his crime other than the dead bodies. Not even his race or gender have ever been determined.

“Jack the Ripper Apparel—Coat of Fog: This coat can shield your face, your body shape, and all the crimes that you have committed.

“Jack the Ripper Apparel—Black Envelope: Jack once stored his victims’ organs in an envelope and mailed it to the local paper’s office.

“Jack the Ripper Apparel—Lucky Scissors: These bloodied scissors have nothing to do with good fortune, but that is simply how they are named.

“Jack the Ripper Apparel Special Effect—Surgical Transplant: On the night of heavy fog, the apparel’s set effect will be activated. Perfect transplant requires deep experience in surgery, but if you’re successful, you’ll inherit the transplanted talent.”

Seeing that the black phone showed that he had saved four innocent victims, Chen Ge sighed in relief because that perfectly matched the four that he had saved. After ensuring that they were all innocent, Chen Ge could let them work at the Haunted House without worry.

Counting the apparel for Doctor Skull-Cracker and the Headless Nurse, this Jack of Ripper outfit is my third apparel set.

Studying the hammer in his backpack, Chen Ge knew very sure that these sets were not as simple as they seemed. The biggest difference between them and the costumes at the Haunted House was that they were probably the real deal.

Lucky Scissors... After I'm done inspecting them, I can lend them to Scissors first. He should appreciate this character.

Putting the black phone away, Chen Ge had a satisfied smile on his face. Other than the reward provided by the black phone, he had earned quite a lot from Li Wan City. Yan Danian's comic was full, and the old employees were now going into overtime to train the newcomers.

With so many lingering spirits and baleful Specters, it should be enough to fill up an entire scenario.

Chen Ge started to mesh the crazed games that the hotel boss showed him with his own Haunted House. He was so lost in thought that he did not realize that they had arrived at the station.

Once Chen Ge got out of the taxi, he attracted the guard's attention. When he saw Chen Ge carrying the fainted Lee Zheng out from the taxi, he ran over immediately.

"Inspector Lee?"

"He's fine, he's only fainted."

"He's fainted, and you're calling that fine? Why didn't you send him directly to the hospital?" the guard demanded loudly, and that spooked the citizens who were in the station making their report. Hearing that, the officers on the duty inside the station rushed out as well.

The question from the guard stumped Chen Ge. He knew what had happened, so he understood that the treatment at the hospital would not be of much help. Therefore, he had brought the officer straight to the station. After all, he had been here a lot and out of habit told the driver to drop him at the police station.

“This was an order given to me by Inspector Lee before he fainted. Other than Captain Yan, he doesn’t trust anyone, and he requested me to personally deliver him to Captain Yan.” Chen Ge carried Lee Zheng and refused to let anyone else touch him.

“Okay, but you have to take him to the hospital first! In fact, I’ll go with you, and we’ll contact Captain Yan on the way.” With the arrangement from the station, Lee Zheng and Chen Ge were rushed to the People’s Hospital. This was another location that Chen Ge was familiar with.

Lee Zheng was sent into the emergency room for a body check while Chen Ge stayed in the corridor to wait. About half an hour later, Captain Yan arrived. This kind and approachable officer looked quite worse for wear.

“Captain Yan, Inspector Lee is in there. He’s still unconscious.” Chen Ge and Fan Chong stood up together.

“What happened last night? Where did you find Lee Zheng?” Captain Yan seemed to have been up for the whole night, and he did not look so good.

“We found Inspector Lee in Li Wan City. He was pursuing the escaped convict Jia Ming alone.” Chen Ge knew the theory of accidents coming from the mouth, so he only gave Captain Yan a brief summary of the events.

“This is strange, why would Lee Zheng operate on his own? In fact, we even lost contact with him at some point. I cannot believe that an inspector with decades of experience would do something as rash as that.” From Captain Yan’s expression, it was clear that compared to capturing Jia Ming, he was more worried about Lee Zheng.

“It’s probably because of the suspect—he doesn’t appear like a normal person.” Chen Ge stared at the stainless steel glass next to him. The expression on Captain Yan’s face shifted slightly; he knew more than he was telling, and Chen Ge saw that clearly through the reflection on the glass.

“In any case, leave this me. You two should go and give your statements.”

“Okay.”

In Li Wan City, Chen Ge had heard from Lee Zheng that Captain Yan came from some background, and the brief exchange that they had earlier confirmed that even further. However, Captain Yan had always been on Chen Ge's side and seemed to admire the young man quite a bit. He had helped Chen Ge multiple times, so the latter did not think too much of it.

During the written interview, Fan Chong heard about his elder brother from the police officer. The previous night, when it was still raining, Fan Dade had gotten into a car accident on his way home. He had suffered light wounds, but the one who ran into him died on the spot. The whole thing felt like it had been orchestrated by a third party.

Knowing that his brother was safe, Fan Chong sighed in relief. After the interview, he went to visit his brother. The police officer confirmed that everything was okay with Chen Ge, so he also departed for New Century Park. Thankfully, he managed to reach theme park before it opened for business.

"Boss, where were you last night?" Xiao Gu and Xu Wan had been waiting at the door. "How come you always show up last when you're the one who lives here?"

"I woke up early in the morning and went for a stroll at the human resource department and interviewed a few new employees. They should be arriving in the afternoon." Chen Ge pushed open the gate. "Now is not the time to dawdle. Get into the dressing room and prepare for work!"

This period before the futuristic theme park opened was the last rush for Chen Ge's Haunted House. It was the calm before the storm.

Theme park opened at 9 am, and the visitors rushed in. Instantly, a long queue materialized in front of the Haunted House, and a large crowd bustled at the resting hall. They obviously treated Chen Ge's place of business as their 'base'.

Most of the employees in his backpack were injured, and they were recovering, so Chen Ge had to do many things alone. However, he was a single man—he could not split himself apart. With that issue, the difficulty for part of the scenarios had lowered.

As the number of people clearing the scenario increased, the visitors were whipped into a hype, and they gloated that they were close to 'owning' the Haunted House, to use the online gaming vernacular.

Witnessing the liveliness from the visitors, Chen Ge felt joy on their behalf.

The more visitors that clear the three-star scenario, the greater the number of people who can challenge the 3.5-star scenario. Looks like I'll have to finish building Li Wan City as soon as possible.

Chapter 681 - Your Character Is a Crazy Murderer [2 in 1]

Chapter 681: Your Character Is a Crazy Murderer [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Chen Ge was busy dealing with the issues inside and outside of the Haunted House. His previous adventure had lasted the whole night, and he did not have the chance to catch a well-deserved rest in the morning. So, when noon arrived, the man was almost at his breaking point already.

Opening his backpack, Chen Ge released Ol' Zhou and the rest. He selected a few of the employees who looked presentable and had them enter the underground scenes to get them to help with the basic running of the place. Other than Xu Yin, most of the employees were not affected by the curse. If anything, most of them had gained nutrients from the blood fog and obtained some benefits. When their injuries recovered, their power would have an obvious improvement.

"For today, scaring the visitor should come second to everything. You should focus on resting, and do not overwork yourselves," Chen Ge told his employees, basically telling them to go easy on the visitors. Even though the employees did not understand why Chen Ge was actively working against his own Haunted House, most of them followed his order.

At 12:30 pm, Xiao Gu and Xu Wan went for a half-hour break each. Most of the visitors also went to have their lunch, and the queue in front of the Haunted House had a sizeable decrease. As the number of visitors decreased, two men walked through the crowd.

One of them had his face covered in bandages while the other stood rigidly upright. The latter wore a suit, and his expression looked quite nervous.

"I'm sorry, but is Boss Chen here?" the man in the suit asked Uncle Xu, who was manning the ticket booth.

“Are you the visitors or families of the visitors?” When Uncle Xu saw the man’s bandaged face, his heart skipped a beat, and his first thought was that Chen Ge had created more trouble.

“We’re here to work. Boss Chen should have informed you about us, right?”

“Oh, are you the new employees? Okay, please wait here a moment, I’ll go give him a call.”

Several minutes later, Chen Ge walked out from the Haunted House. He was given quite a shock when he saw his two guests. These two were completely different from how he remembered them.

Half of Scissors’ face was covered in bandages. He was lanky and tall, his skin eerily white. He seemed to have lived a life away from the sun for a long time already. The impression that he gave off was not that of a murderer but a man suffering from a serious illness. Whereas the drunkard, Zhang Jingjiu, was the complete opposite of Scissors. After taking a bath and putting on his suit, he looked sunny and approachable, pretty much like those successful figures that were featured on magazine covers.

“Your timing is perfect. Since there aren’t that many visitors around now, I’ll take you on a tour around the place.” Chen Ge welcomed the two into the Haunted House. “By the way, where is the doctor? Did he not come with you?”

“After you left, we exchanged numbers, but for some reason, we’ve been unable to reach the doctor on his phone.” The mention of the doctor caused the expression on Zhang Jingjiu’s face to shift slightly. “I wonder if something happened to him, or could it be something else completely? I purposely went to the address that he gave me, but after asking the nearby neighbor, I found out that was not even where he lives.”

“Meaning the doctor is currently missing?” Chen Ge thought about it before nodding. “It does not matter; I have trust in him. We’ve been through far too much for him to harm us. There has to be a reason for his disappearance.”

Actually, to be fair, Chen Ge did not have faith in the doctor; he had more faith in the judgement of the black phone. The doctor was not a simple character, but at least he did not intend to harm others.

Leading the two employees into the Haunted House, Chen Ge gave them a brief introduction to each scenario. Unlike Xiao Gu and Xu Wan, Chen Ge planned to cultivate them to become full-fledged workers at the Haunted House, instead of having them just looking over a single scenario.

“When we resume working after lunch, I suggest the two of you follow the visitors and experience all of the scenarios in my Haunted House starting from the 1-star scenarios.” Chen Ge used the kindest and friendliest tone to deliver the sentence to Scissors and the drunkard, who still had no idea how cruel it was. “Since you are going to work here in the future, there is no way you can be scared of the things here.”

“Don’t worry, we will try to do our best,” Scissors and the drunkard promised easily. Perhaps from their perspective, since they had survived some place like Li Wan City, what else could possibly scare them in this world?

“Perfect, in that case, you should enjoy yourselves as the visitors this afternoon.” Chen Ge did not arrange a mission for Scissors and the drunkard. He merely told them to follow the other visitors—that was the best way for them to grow.

The lunch break was soon over, and Scissors and the drunkard began the most memorable day of their lives.

Hearing the screams and yells that came from the scenarios, Chen Ge scratched his chin. “They’re still too easily scared, still too unqualified to be Haunted House workers. I’m afraid that before they can scare the visitors, they will be scared witless by their colleagues. However, I need to start using Li Wan City’s scenario soon, so I have to train them as fast as I can.”

While Chen Ge was thinking, Uncle Xu’s voice came in from outside, and Chen Ge immediately jogged out to answer the summons. Uncle Xu stood next to Director Luo at the entrance, and they seemed to have something to tell Chen Ge.

“Director Luo, why have you decided to personally come visit me today?” Chen Ge was surprised. “Is it because the futuristic theme park has launched some kind of new tactic?”

“The futuristic theme park’s people is gearing up for their promotion and launch, but I’m here today to talk to you about something else.” Director Luo waved at Chen Ge, and the two wandered to a more secluded area. “Chen Ge, I’ve been looking through the little app that we designed earlier. I noticed that quite a number of visitors have cleared the three-star scenario. In fact, some of the visitors are close to clearing all the scenarios at the Haunted House. If this continues, your Haunted House will be completely cleared before the futuristic theme park even opens its door. When that happens, the attraction that the Haunted House has on the visitors will drastically decrease, and with the under-the-table work done by the people from the futuristic theme park, the situation does not look that optimistic for us.”

Director Luo had been in the business for many years. Even though he did not have the appearance, he was actually quite a wily old fox. “The biggest attraction at our theme park thus far is that no one has ever achieved a full clear of your Haunted House, so I hope you can increase the difficulty of all the scenarios. I know this will be a big challenge for you, but currently, we are left with no other choice, and if we are not to surrender, this is the only thing that we can do.”

“Director Luo, you’re here for that?” Chen Ge was surprised that Director Luo’s way of thinking was similar to his. “Don’t worry, I was purposely going easy on the people today.”

“You did that on purpose? But with the number of visitors clearing the scenario increasing, how will that be good for us?” Director Luo had great faith in Chen Ge, but he really could not imagine why he would do something like this.

“Yes, the more people who cleared the three-star scenario, the greater the number of people who could enjoy the scarier, newer scenario. If no one challenges the newly-open scenario, without even hype, it won’t be good for our promotion,” Chen Ge explained in a calm voice.

“A new scenario?” Director Luo grasped the main point of what Chen Ge said immediately. “You have finished building a new scenario?”

“Most of the ideas and material were prepared by my parents, so I merely needed to assemble them. Don’t worry, I guarantee that this new scenario will be scarier than all of our existing scenarios.” Chen Ge looked at Director Luo. Without the need to say anything else, the two shared a mysterious smile.

“Okay, then continue doing what you’re doing. If you need anything, come and tell me. I will try my best to cooperate with you.” Director Luo felt much better, and he left holding the document in his hands.

“With such a boss that will pour everything into theme park, how can the visitors fear for a lack of joy to be found?” Chen Ge returned to the Haunted House. He hustled both above and below ground. While he followed up on Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu's status, he made sure that nothing happened to the visitors in the scenarios.

At 6:30 pm, the Haunted House sent away the last batch of his visitors. Chen Ge had Xu Wan and Xiao Gu leave first before coming to the steps. Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu were lying weakly on the ground, and their consciousness was flagging.

In reality, they had a clear memory of themselves fainting inside the Haunted House. When they said a silent prayer that they would be given a release from experiencing the Haunted House anymore, they opened their eyes and realized that they were still inside the Haunted House. They glanced at the time on their phone, and it told them only ten minutes had passed since they fainted.

After a few more rounds of torture, they had gotten somewhat desensitized to the scares. Even though their faces were still paper white from the spooks, at least they stopped fainting.

"So, how do you feel?" Chen Ge passed the two bottles of mineral water. He planned to cultivate Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu as employees, so to prevent accidents from happening to them, Chen Ge had purposely asked Doctor Wei's group to follow them, to provide medical attention whenever necessary.

"I really can't say. It feels like no matter what kind of trial life throws at me in the future, I can smile in its face and conquer it." Zhang Jingjiu recovered quite nicely. He tried to twist the cap of the bottle open with his shaking hands, and he failed after multiple tries.

"What about you, Scissors?"

"How come it feels like I was more comfortable in Li Wan City? Perhaps there really is a maniac hiding inside me." Scissors held his face in his hands. Before going there, he really did not expect Chen Ge's Haunted House to be so scary. The wounds that were slowly recovering on his face almost bled from the scares.

"Very good, now that you've experienced things from the perspective of the visitors, I'm going to bring you to experience everything again from the perspective of the employees." Chen Ge stood up and pulled over a trolley from the resting hall.

"What? Again?" Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu squeezed together, comrades of fear.

“If you are unable to move, I can push you around with this. Don’t worry, it’s very safe. I’ve been running this place for almost a decade already, and nothing huge has happened yet.”

With the urging from Chen Ge, Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu reentered the Haunted House. However, their visit this time was different from their previous visits. Chen Ge started to teach them how to scare the visitors.

“Haunted House actors have next to no script, so one’s acting skills become even more important. You have to really see yourself as the character you’re playing so that the presence can naturally flow out from you.”

From learning how to pick the best cover to applying mouth-to-mouth resuscitation skills; from leaning how to use the small mechanisms that littered the haunted House to understanding the psychology of a maniac, Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu only then realized how much one needed to know to be a qualified Haunted House worker.

“It is getting late. You should go back home to take a rest. Come earlier tomorrow, and I will arrange some tasks for you to do, to have you really understand the joy and allure of working at a Haunted House.”

Once Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu left, Chen Ge sent them a bonus each. It was counted as the overtime fee.

After a day and night without rest, Chen Ge’s body reached its limit. He set the alarm and collapsed into bed.

At 4 am the next morning, Chen Ge was woken up by his alarm. He picked up the white cat that had crawled to curl beside his pillow from the bed and quickly switched open the black phone.

“3.5-star scenario—Li Wan City completed!

“Warning! The interior space of the Haunted House is full. Please expand as soon as possible!”

“There is a need for another expansion so soon? Just how big is Li Wan City’s scenario?” Chen Ge’s Haunted House had just been upgraded to a Maze of Terror. After another two expansions, it would upgrade to the next stage. “I will leave the expansion until later when it’s more convenient. For now, I should go check out the new scenario.”

The earlier the scenario was open to the public, the better it would be for Chen Ge. He put on his clothes, carried his backpack, and rushed underground. The path that led to Li Wan City was next to Coffin Village. The two scenarios was adjacent to each other, but this new scenario was bigger than Coffin Village and the Third Sick Hall combined.

“There’s a lake for the water ghost and the tunnel that leads to who knows where. Next to it is Coffin Village, and there’s even a hospital and a school down here. This place is coming up to be a perfectly well-functioning underground city.”

Walking down the street, the buildings around Chen Ge grew downward, instead of upward. There were basements, and most of the underground layout was interconnected, forming a maze of its own.

Out of concern for the visitors’ safety, Chen Ge checked all the buildings one by one. Just doing that took more than one hour; the size of this place was truly something to behold.

“But a big place has its advantages. I am free to make this place into anything I wish.” Chen Ge summoned all of his workers and started to modify the scenario. This included taking away objects that were sharp and dangerous. Then, he placed his new ‘trained’ employees into their set location.

“There are three main points of interest—the hotel, hospital, and residential area. Currently, I still have too few ghosts. After the sun rises, I can have Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu fill up the number in here, but other than that, I will need to make another batch of mannequins.”

The scariest thing about the hotel was the hidden room behind the fridge. Unfortunately, the gluttonous woman had been killed already, and a big element of fear had been lost. Chen Ge was trying to figure out a way to salvage that. He planned to recover Li Wan City to an authentic state as much as he could, to create the sense of despair where around every corner lurked a Specter and every turn led to a murderer.

“The other scenarios have less than ten scary points, and I’ve already placed more than that in Li Wan City. With such a high frequency of scares going around, I wonder if the visitors will be able to survive this.” Chen Ge was satisfied with his work at Li Wan City. He worked in there until 8 am. When he entered the scenario, his comic had been bulging with content, but when he left, it was practically blank.

“Yesterday, there were so many people who cleared the three-star scenarios. While their guard is down, there will definitely be many willing volunteers if I release the news that a new 3.5-star scenario is open to the public today. If I’m lucky, I might get some trolls among them; it would be best if there are people sent by the futuristic theme park.”

Leaving the underground scenario, Chen Ge took a cold shower and prepared to start his business. Today was the first day that Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu started their work, and they arrived very early.

“Boss, there’s something that I need to inform you about.” Zhang Jingjiu was still wearing his suit, looking very formal. “I still cannot contact the doctor; it feels as if he has disappeared.”

“I know. For now, let’s not worry about him.” Chen Ge led the two into the dressing room. “There’s no need to stand on ceremony, just treat this as your own home.”

Using the talent that he had gotten from the black phone, Chen Ge demonstrated his great skill in make-up to his two new employees. This surprised Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu—their new boss was truly an all-rounded genius.

“One has to know make-up to operate a Haunted House.” Chen Ge dressed Zhang Jingjiu in the image of the hotel boss from Li Wan City. Then he found the Jack the Ripper apparel in his Props Room and handed it over to Scissors. “Your character will be that of a crazed murderer. I’ve encountered more than ten different maniacs; I’ll jot down their qualities for you later. Hopefully, that will give you some inspiration and help.”

After Scissors put on the costume, Chen Ge looked at him and did not feel anything, but Zhang Jingjiu subconsciously moved backward.

“This outfit suits you quite well.” The coat blocked his face, and the bloodied scissors flitted in and out of sight with the movement of the sleeves. From afar, it gave people a strange feeling. He was standing a distance away, but it felt like he was constantly moving closer and would jump at the others at any moment.

...

“I’ll find you a pair of shoes to change into later. What you’re wearing doesn’t quite match the rest of your outfit.”

Overall, Chen Ge was satisfied with Scissor’s get-up. Unlike Xiao Gu, Scissors had been training at home, watching videos and dramas on how to play the role of a madman. He also had firsthand experience at Li Wan City. Now, in terms of both presence and mannerisms, it was very similar to a real madman.

It was hard to describe in detail, but there was a fear that would form when one was in his presence. After a while, Xu Wan and Xiao Gu arrived.

Inside the dressing room, Chen Ge made the official introduction. “We’re going to be colleagues in the future, so we should help each other. Xu Wan is my most experienced worker, so if you have any questions, you can ask her.”

After putting the make-up on Xiao Gu and Xu Wan, Chen Ge had them enter their scenarios to prepare before going to the main control room to find the walkie-talkie and ear-mics and handing them over to Zhang Jingjiu and Scissors.

“There’s surveillance in the control room, so if there’s an accident, I will give you orders through these devices. Now, you should follow me to enter the scenario.” Chen Ge led them into Li Wan City. Walking down the street, Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu had a surreal feeling, but based on their trust in Chen Ge, they did not ask too many questions.

“Jingjiu, I need you to stay inside the hotel to play the boss for now. You still need more training in scaring customers, so do not actively engage them unless necessary.” Chen Ge had confidence in his Haunted House, so he knew that those who had managed to clear three-star scenarios would not be easy scares. They were more experienced than his new employees.

“Then what should I be doing?” Zhang Jingjiu rubbed his hands together. It was his first day of work, and he felt like doing something. He was quite excited.

“Just listen to my orders, I will arrange tasks for you to do,” Chen Ge said that and turned to look at Scissors. “Temporarily, you should stay around the residential area. Just be free, but be mindful of these three things. One, do not make any physical contact with the visitors; two, the safety of the visitors is the most important; three, remember to protect yourself.”

“Protect myself?” Scissors had a bad feeling forming in his heart.

After assigning them their roles, Chen Ge exited the underground scenario. He purposely changed into new clothes. He looked clean and sharp, like the sunny big brother from next door.

“Uncle Xu, you sure are early today!” Chen Ge exited the Haunted House and ran into Uncle Xu outside. He greeted the senior worker cheerfully.

“Director Luo said that you might have some new ideas, so he had me come here to assist you as much as I can.” Uncle Xu saw the new get-up on Chen Ge, and for some reason, he felt weirdly unsettled. “Now is the crucial period for the contest between us and the futuristic theme park, so you’d better not do anything that’s too over the line!”

“Don’t worry.” That was all the assurance Chen Ge gave Uncle Xu. Then, he pulled out the wooden board that he had placed at the resting hall. He had used the same board to announce the opening of Coffin Village, and this time, he was going to use it again. “Naming the scenario Li Wan City might cause some dissent with the locals. Perhaps I should leave it nameless, that is quite a catch as well.”

Chen Ge called the new scenario Small Town and leaned the board against the ticket booth. It was simple and to the point, exactly what Chen Ge was known for.

“You’re planning to open a new scenario?” Uncle Xu saw the two words on the board, and he frowned. Chen Ge had been releasing new scenarios too fast for the support team to catch up.

“Yes, it won’t be too scary. You can see it as a kind of buffer—the difficulty is only 3.5-star. The main purpose is to lay the foundation for the later four-star scenarios.” Chen Ge took out his phone and logged into Director Luo’s app with the admin account and released a new announcement.

“New Scenario open to public! When fear soaks into your marrow and nightmare becomes reality, you’ll realize that you are unable to find the way to leave this small town.”

In the few minutes after Chen Ge released the announcement, there were already more than three thousand clicks. Some loyal people even shared the announcement on various sites, and the comments kept coming. With each refresh, the page was covered in new comments.

“Wait! Wasn’t a new scenario released a few days ago? How come I feel like I just came back from your place? Don’t you lie to me!”

“You’re pumping these out like crazy! There’s no time to waste. Secretary Liu, get me a ticket back to the country immediately!”

“This introduction is rather general! I wonder what kind of theme this new scenario will be based on.”

“I will enjoy the demise of you people from the safety of my home.”

“This is an advertisement: Young boys and girls who like to visit the Haunted House, perhaps Jiujiang Medical University is where your future will shine!”

The theme park opened like usual at 9 am. Once the gates opened, many young people rushed toward the Haunted House.

“Whenever I feel the passion on these visitor’s faces, I feel so lucky that I am in such a business.” Chen Ge helped Uncle Xu sell the tickets at the entrance. Most of the visitors that had rushed forward were first time visitors, and they asked to visit the low-level scenarios. They were excited because this was their first time.

Chen Ge's target was the 'senior' visitors who had cleared the three-star scenario. These people were well-trained already. Even if they came earlier, they would not line up so soon. They would instead go to the resting hall to observe the situation.

Even though Chen Ge had been missing from his livestream lately and it had been some time since he last uploaded a video, those who had read through the Haunted House's info knew who he was.

After all, in the poll set up online for the character that the visitors did not wish to run into inside the Haunted House, the first place winner was not some kind of Specter but Boss Chen. Of course, that was probably a joke.

When they saw Chen Ge selling the tickets outside the Haunted House, they huddled closer to look. They realized that the Chen Ge in their imagination was totally different from the Chen Ge in reality. How could this young man who had a comfortable smile be the character that people were most unwilling to meet inside the Haunted House?

"Please do not push. There are many scenarios, please line up nicely." Ever since the Haunted House became popular, Director Luo had done many things for Chen Ge. He even set up a series of QR codes for Chen Ge. By scanning them, he could tell what level scenario they could visit. It was very convenient.

By 10 am, the first batch of visitors had finished their tour. The 'senior' visitors who were still observing showed signs that they were going to move soon. They finally could not hold it in anymore. They walked out from the resting hall and joined the queue.

"There are quite a few familiar faces today. Is it because the opening of the new scenario?" Nothing escaped Chen Ge's sight. He maintained the smile on his face, hoping that his new project would be well-received by the visitors.

Chapter 683: Not a Normal Adversary

There were more and more visitors coming to ask Chen Ge about the new scenario, and Chen Ge was willing to share some unimportant information with them. He knew what the visitors were hungry for, and the information that he tossed out was like delicious bait, luring them into taking the challenge.

“Boss Chen, we meet again. How come I feel like you’ve gotten much younger?” The woman who stood before Chen Ge had her hair cropped short, and her tomboyish apparel made her look even more stylish than the guys. However, her voluptuous figure did not diminish her feminine charm either.

“That might work on middle-aged uncles—do I look that old to you?” The woman could be counted as Chen Ge’s friend. Her name was Ye Xiaoxin, a blogger that specialized in reviewing Haunted Houses. She had more than a million followers. When the people from Tian Teng Medical Hospital came to visit, she had joined their group, and after she exited, she had practically closed in on herself on the spot.

“I would never waste time on ingratiating words; I really do think you look much younger.” Ye Xiaoxin took out her phone. “Give me a ticket to the underground morgue. I plan to review that scenario today.”

“The underground morgue?” Chen Ge did not hide the disappointment on his face. “Aren’t you going to consider challenging my new scenario? It’s fun.”

“No thanks, I’ll wait for the guide to show up online first.” Ye Xiaoxin tossed her hair back handsome. Then, as if reminded of something, she added, “By the way, there is a group online purposely gathering and sharing the pictures of the scenarios inside your Haunted House. Are you sure that you don’t want to do something about that? I have a feeling this a concerted attack against you.”

“It’ll be fine. I see it as free advertisement.” Chen Ge had Tong Tong’s help, but since there were too many scenarios, Tong Tong could not handle too many things, and of course, this also had something to do with Chen Ge purposely going easy on the visitors.

The Haunted House was rapidly expanding, and there would be a horrible match with the futuristic theme park in the future. Before the results were out, popularity was crucial to Chen Ge. After all, if he wanted to stop these activities, it would not be too difficult on the account of his employees being different from others.

“Just be careful. If people can’t take you down from the front, they might do something from the back.” Ye Xiaoxin lowered her voice. “When I was queuing up earlier, I saw this man at the resting hall, be careful of him.”

Ye Xiaoxin searched through her phone and showed Chen Ge a picture. The picture showed a man wearing a large coat. Even though the sun was blazing, he did not seem to feel the heat. He was talking on the phone with a smile on his face.

“He looks so educated and polite, nothing like a bad guy.”

“Don’t be tricked by his appearance. If you visit the Haunted House-related forums, you’ll realize that the man is on many Haunted House’s blacklists.” Ye Xiaoxin stood to the side so that she would not block the line. “He’s not a normal visitor—there’s something wrong with his mind. He’s a creeper, and the strangest thing is that he prefers to expose himself to others inside a Haunted House. He has made a few female actors inside the Haunted House weep from his actions already.”

“He’s that horrible of a man?”

“Yes, he was even detained several times for his actions, but he doesn’t seem to change.” Ye Xiaoxin sighed. “He understood the rules placed on the Haunted House actors. He knew they could not hit him. He also would not interact physically with them; he would only flash his parts at them to satisfy his perverted desire. The man is clever in a way; he only did his deed in corners hidden away from surveillance. The time that he was detained was because he went so much over the time that the other visitors on the same tour couldn’t resist beating him up.”

“Such people need education, a deep and serious education.” Employees could not do anything, but other visitors could. In any case, Chen Ge saw many solutions to this problem.

“That’s all, I suppose. Be careful, I’ll be going in now.” Ye Xiaoxin followed the rest into the Haunted House. Chen Ge used his Yin Yang Vision to glance toward the resting hall. The man was still on the phone, but Chen Ge noticed that when he was talking, the man’s eyes kept darting about like he was searching for something.

With him as the center, Chen Ge looked around, and he noticed that in the blind spot of the man’s gaze, there was another man on the phone. This man had on a large hat, and his skin was white. He appeared rather soft and feminine.

“He has a partner?” Just as Chen Ge turned to look at that man, the man in the coat hung up and walked out from the hall. Coincidentally enough, so did the other man, accompanied by another three individuals.

The five started to queue. One stood at the front of the line, one at the back and the others at the middle; for all appearances, they did not seem like they knew each other.

“Are they from the futuristic theme park?” However, Chen Ge felt like he had left a deep enough emotional scar on the people from the other theme park that they would not return so soon. Chen Ge paid them special attention. After the three barged into the queue, there was sudden chaos. Three people started to move and gather together. “They came prepared!”

Chaos erupted, and this caused annoyance among the other visitors. One of them yelled directly and angrily, “Why are you cutting the line? Get back!”

He was being very loud and attracted everyone’s attention immediately. The one who spoke was a middle-aged man around 1.5 meters tall. His appearance did not match his temper at all.

“Mr. Shinozaki, please calm down. We’re here to seek inspiration—there’s no need to get into an argument with others.” A woman in her twenties stood next to the middle-aged man; she appeared to be his assistant. The woman seemed used to the man’s explosion, and she apologized to the neighboring visitors.

“Shinozaki? A foreigner?” Before Chen Ge could say anything, the man called Shinozaki started to get into a fight while speaking fluent Chinese. Handing the ticket-selling job over to Uncle Xu, Chen Ge quickly ran over to break up the fight. "Please stop fighting. Who cut in the line earlier?"

Seeing the operator walk over, both parties stopped arguing.

"It was him! He was the line-cutter. I'm telling you, if we're not in a lawful society, I would have punched him in the face already, such lawlessness." The middle-aged man was quite a firecracker.

"Understood." Chen Ge turned to the line-cutter. He stood next to the man with the large cap. Obviously, they were partners. "If you wish to visit my Haunted House, I will need all of you to get to the back of the line and follow the rules accordingly."

Chen Ge left no room for negotiation. The man was obviously not satisfied with this arrangement, but with the persuasion from his friends, he obediently moved to the back of the line.

"Okay, everything's fine now." Chen Ge stayed at the back of the line. For some reason, the middle-aged man felt like he had been ignored and felt a certain way about it. He yelled at Chen Ge, "There's such a long line on such a hot day. Don't you have a VIP lane or something? I'll pay extra!"

"I'm sorry, but I treat all my visitors the same."

"Great! A principled man! Then I shall leave! Everyone's working against me!" For a reason that eluded Chen Ge, the man was angered and turned to leave.

"Wait a minute, Mr. Shinozaki! This haunted House is really unique! We're already here, so we should at least go in for a visit!" The young female assistant tried to stop the man, and then she ran to beg Chen Ge. "Boss, can you make an exception for us?"

The woman looked at Chen Ge with her pleading eyes. "Mr. Shinozaki is a comic artist. He has been lacking inspiration for the past few months, and his temper has worsened because of that. He isn't normally like this."

"A comic artist? Is he famous? How come I haven't heard of his name before?" Chen Ge was instantly reminded of Yan Danian. Perhaps he could use this chance to fulfil Yan Danian's wishes.

The assistant's face flushed. "Mr. Shinozaki bases himself overseas, and he is famed in the industry, but over the past few years, he has started to change his style! In any case, he's a very powerful man!"

Chen Ge nodded and purposely said in a raised voice, "If you don't want to line up, there's only one choice. I just opened a new scenario, and those who wish to visit it can skip the line and join me now."

"A new scenario?" The woman did not dare to make the decision, so she turned to look at the man.

"I just praised you for your principles earlier, but you changed your mind once you heard my name. Fine, I'll give you a chance to impress me today." The middle-aged walked over leisurely. "The new scenario it is!"

Seeing the middle-aged man jumping the queue, a man stood out from the back of the line. "I wish to visit this new scenario as well."

The man was wearing a coat. The temperature was high, and there was no air-conditioning. His head was pouring with sweat like he was burning. Hearing his voice, the other people in his group wanted to stop him, but it was already too late.

"Okay, come in with me then. Is there anyone else?" Chen Ge accepted his volunteer quickly and took his money, so they had no chance to regret his decision.

The others in the group slowly shuffled out. Chen Ge had Uncle Xu give them the tickets while he used his phone to search for Shinozaki's info online.

The man was not a foreigner—he merely had a foreign-sounding name. However, it was true that he was based overseas. His fans called him the Walking Mosaic 1 and the Father of Saint Light 1.

This is referring to how mosaic is often used to censor sensitive parts in erotic comics.

Ch 683 Footnote 2

Holy Light or Saint Light is more common in erotic animations. When an animated character undresses or is naked, instead of mosaic, light or smoke is used to block key parts. Therefore, animation fans call it the Saint Light.

The artist's pen name was Shinozaki Daisen, and he was very famous overseas. However, few people knew anything about his real name. Chen Ge looked through the search results for a long time before landing on something relevant. Someone who called him Shinozaki's landlord was airing the goods.

He claimed that he had seen Shinozaki's identification card before. This comic artist who was very famous overseas actually had a very local name. He was apparently born as Lee Baofu.

"Shinozaki Daisen and Lee Baofu, it is very hard to imagine that they might be the same person." Chen Ge turned to glance at the Haunted House's entrance. Shinozaki was in a staring contest with the man in the trench coat—they both sensed something unusual about the other person.

There were currently seven people inside the Haunted House's gates. Shinozaki and his female assistant stood on the left side while the man in the trench coat stood alone on the right. The remaining four came together, but they stood in groups of two, pretending like they did not know each other.

"Li Wan City is very big. Even if seven people enter it, I doubt it will raise the smallest of ripple." If these were visitors that had been through the experience of three-star scenario, Chen Ge might have sent them in just like that, but these few were all newcomers. It was one thing for the group to have a negative purpose for being there, but Shinozaki and his female assistant were completely innocent. Chen Ge was a kind-hearted person. He was not going to give them hell simply because they looked down on his Haunted House and claimed that his scenarios were not going to be scary.

After giving it some thought, Chen Ge walked to the gathered group of seven. “The new scenario takes up a large amount of space—it is meant to be challenged by a group of ten. After we get another three people, then we will start the tour.”

“The fewer people we have, the more fun it will be. Seven people is more than enough.” The man in the trench coat had been beaten up by visitors before. He was not worried about the actors. Instead, he was worried that other visitors might ruin his plan.

“Yes, if there’s ten of us, it’ll only be too noisy and cramped. What’s the point of that?” Shinozaki offered his opinion as well. Due to his temper, there was a lack of filter to his words. The things that came to his mind were the words that escaped his lips.

“I advise you all to practice some patience—the boss is only looking out for you.” There was a young man who spoke from the crowd. The man’s voice was very familiar to Chen Ge. He turned to the direction of the voice and saw Yang Chen frowning as he read the wooden board next to the ticket booth.

“Are you not going to class but coming to my place every day now?” Probably due to the presence of the underground morgue, whenever Chen Ge saw the students from Jiujiang Medical University, he felt so close to them.

Yang Chen was slightly afraid of Chen Ge. When he heard Chen Ge’s voice, he shuffled backward subconsciously. “I still haven’t cleared the underground morgue, so there is no way I am going to attempt a new scenario, so don’t you go making any ideas!”

“Xiao Yang, why would you say something like that? Did you forget the promotional coupons that I gave you?” Chen Ge raised his phone, and the introduction for the new scenario was on the screen. “Are you sure you don’t want to challenge this? Based on my challenge, the people from your school are only missing the underground morgue to have a full clear. After clearing the underground morgue and, of course, this new scenario, the cash prize of 200,000 will be yours. You know that I am a man of my word. I will never go back on my promise. If you clear this scenario, I will hand you the cash prize on the spot.”

The scenarios that were challenged by Jiujiang Medical School would become popular on the internet. In Chen Ge’s eyes, these students were no different from his mascot or lucky charm.

“Just count me out, but I did bring a few people for you today.” Yang

Chen turned back and waved. Two guys and a girl walked out from the crowd. The one who walked in front was Wang Dan. Chen Ge had met him before. He was the young man who had accompanied Yang Chen when they challenged Mu Yang High School and the underground morgue.

The boy and girl at the back were happily chatting. The girl wore a loose-fitting t-shirt that showed off her shoulders and a pair of white shorts. It showed off her sexiness and sweetness, accenting the assets that she possessed for a young woman of her age.

The young man was much taller than Wang Dan and had much more defined muscles on his body. He was not overly dressed, but every single article of clothing was branded. He appeared much more impressive than Wang Dan, who seemed to have faded into the background.

“I’m sure you remember my buddy, Wang Dan. The girl behind him is his girlfriend. The male is a student studying Sports and Health at Jiujiang’s Teacher-training Institute. He is also Wang Dan’s girlfriend’s high school friend.” Yang Chen leaned in closer to whisper to Chen Ge, “Apparently, he was voted their high school’s most handsome student.”

“That is Wang Dan’s girlfriend? If you didn’t tell me, I really would not have known.” Chen Ge suddenly realized something. “But wait a minute, why are you telling me all this?”

Yang Chen kept winking and making signs at Chen Ge, and it tickled the latter quite a bit. Before he could react, Wang Dan and the other two had already walked over. “Give me three tickets for the new scenario.”

It was clear that Wang Dan was not in a good mood. His voice sounded quite lethargic and defeated.

“Are you sure? The new scenario is very scary. I advise you to not act too recklessly.”

“It’s fine. I have already challenged so many three-star scenarios already. This new scenario will be a piece of cake for me.”

“Okay then. If anything, I feel much better to I have an experienced visitor like yourself accompanying the rest of the visitors.” Chen Ge gave the three a ticket each. Then he led them into the Haunted House. “The pens are on the table. Please sign this disclaimer form.”

The ten visitors squeezed into the corridor, and it was quite cramped. There were a limited number of pens on the table, so there was some waiting. The man in the trench coat was understandably annoyed. “Is there a need for this? I’ve visited many Haunted Houses before, and I have never encountered one that went to such an extent.”

“That’s right. You’re making a visit to a Haunted House out to be something like a bungee jump. I’m sure this is nothing more than a trick to create psychological pressure,” the student who was covered in branded clothes and shining like a sun said casually. He stood next to Wang Dan’s girlfriend and continued to tell the stories about the time he went snorkeling and bungee-jumping. Compared to Haunted Houses, obviously snorkeling and bungee-jumping worked better at attracting girl’s attention. Wang Dan’s girlfriend hung on his every word and would nod and concur at regular intervals.

“You shouldn’t say things like that. This is your first visit to a Haunted House; I advise you to be more cautious with your words.” Wang Dan passed the pen that he was holding to the man.

“Thank you.” The male student shrugged and signed his name before placing the form on the table.

“Zhang Feng?” Chen Ge read the name on the form and put it carefully away. “You voluntarily signed your name, and I did not force you to do it. I need to make sure that you understand that you are voluntarily entering this Haunted House and are not compelled to do it.”

When he heard that this was Zhang Feng’s first time visiting a Haunted House, his first challenge being Chen Ge’s 3.5-star scenario, that was something that could not be described as seeking death anymore.

“Are you kidding?”

“There is still time for you to bow out now.” Chen Ge tried to convince the young man.

“Do you really need to do all this just for a Haunted House visit? You’re doing a bit too much. A written form might be just enough, but now you’re just being annoying.” Zhang Feng regarded Chen Ge’s advice with condescension and turned back to chat with Wang Dan’s girlfriend.

Since the young man refused to take his advice, Chen Ge could do nothing about it. He put the other people's disclaimer forms away. After making sure that there were no problems, he briefed the visitors about the unique way to enjoy Li Wan City.

"This new scenario is called the Nameless Small Town; it is made up from multiple ghost stories. It spans a very large area, and you are free to do anything you want. After you enter, I will close the path to the small town, and the way to leave will be hidden inside the scenario.

"You need to find the hidden clues while being pursued by murderers and Specters. There are thirty-two clues hidden in this scenario, and they correspond to thirty-two different endings."

At this point, Chen Ge raised four fingers.

"Since you are the first batch of visitor to experience this scenario, I can provide you with the locations for four of the clues.

"The first clue is hidden inside a water vat in one of the rooms. There is a phone that you can use to communicate with a ghost.

"The second clue is hidden inside a residential home. You will not believe what kind of strange creatures are hidden there at such an unassuming location.

"The third clue is hidden inside an apartment, a music box that will cry on its own.

"The fourth clue is hidden with the boss of the hotel. You can go find him, and he will give you some information.

"Of course, these four clues that I have given you are merely a very small part of the scenario. Feel free to go look for the other clues and find the way to escape this place."

Chen Ge only gave these four clues because these were the four that were already ready. The thirty-two clues were something that he imagined the scenario could be like, and he was still setting up the rest.

"Thirty-two clues?" Of the four line-cutters, one did not quite believe what Chen Ge said, but he kept his suspicion mostly to himself and did not say any more.

"A completely open Haunted House with unrivalled freedom, here you can enjoy the ultimate experience that you will not get anywhere else.” Chen Ge held onto all the forms and led the group to the door that led underground. “One last piece of advice, after you head in, walk toward the light, and do not wander off on your own.”

“Your acting skills do deserve praise, but in any case, we know all of this already.” Perhaps it was a lack of confidence or some other reason, but the man in the trench coat grumbled softly.

“Each of your choices will lead to a different result; you will see what I mean after you enter the scenario.” Chen Ge opened the Screaming Door, and an extremely cold draft rushed out from the yawning maw. The temperature dropped instantly, and some of the visitors shivered involuntarily.

“Come on, I’ll bring you to the entrance.” Chen Ge walked at the front of the group. He strolled down the creepy path and arrived at the path that led into Li Wan City. A large iron door that was painted black appeared before them. On this side of the door, they could still hear the other visitors screaming and running, but on the other side, it was completely quiet like no living humans had ever stepped on the other side.

“The time for the tour is forty minutes. If you wish to give up, just stand where you are and scream for help. Our workers will come fetch you as soon as possible.” After sending all the visitors into Li Wan City, Chen Ge locked the iron door.

The sound of chains grinding against the door was cutting and sharp. Chen Ge glanced at the ten visitors before him, and the corners of his lips curved upward. “I hope you enjoy this experience.”

He turned to walk out from the underground scenarios and enter the main control room. He changed the background music for Li Wan City to a normal track. There were too many newcomers, so Chen Ge believed that just the scenario alone would be enough to give them a scare.

After he was done, Chen Ge returned to the entrance to sell tickets. After some time, Ye Xiaoxin finished her tour, and she walked out from the Haunted House. The girl’s back was covered in sweat, and her forehead was drenched in cold sweat.

“So, how was your visit?” Chen Ge walked over to greet her.

“No matter how many times I visit this place, there is a sense of authenticity that cannot be shaken. The fear strikes right at your heart; it feels as if the thing that I've experienced here is a reflection of real life." Ye Xiaoxin gave her honest opinion. "I really have no idea how you manage to come up with all these designs—they are seriously horrifying."

"If they're not horrifying, how can I call this a Haunted House?" Chen Ge replied with a smile.

"By the way, there is something else that I wish to inform you." Ye Xiaoxin took out her phone. "Earlier, one of my fans private messaged me, telling me that the largest Haunted House at Xin Hai will be coming to learn from your Haunted House."

"The Haunted House at Xin Hai?"

"Yes, I hear they're going out of business, so they wish to come to learn your secret."

Ye Xiaoxin showed the Haunted House's information to Chen Ge. Chen Ge did not mind it that much at the beginning, but after a swift glance, he felt something looked curiously familiar. "Wait, can you show me their group picture again?"

Chen Ge zoomed in on the picture, and he realized with a shock that the picture that Ye Xiaoxin showed him contained someone that he was quite familiar with. The soft features and small eyes, this man was currently inside his Haunted House!

"I've met this man before. He just entered the Haunted House with that creep."

"What? That's impossible!" Ye Xiaoxin was shocked.

"The creep is on many Haunted Houses' blacklists, but that should be a fact limited to those who frequent Haunted House forums. I can't shake the feeling that there is something wrong about this." Chen Ge returned the phone back to Ye Xiaoxin. "Excuse me for a moment."

Bidding farewell to the reviewer, Chen Ge returned to the main control room to check the surveillance at the Haunted House's entrance. After some comparison, Chen Ge's suspicion was confirmed.

The four obviously knew each other. They have tricked a creep to come to my Haunted House, what are they up to? Could they be here on the futuristic theme park's behalf?

With the change to the situation, Chen Ge thought about it and decided to change the music back to Wedding Dress and Black Friday.

Since you're here to learn, then I will definitely not keep my secrets from you. I wouldn't want to be called stingy now, would I?

He walked out from the main control room, and Chen Ge entered the dressing room to put make-up on himself. Then he took out a costume from the Ghost's Changing Room. He contacted Xiao Gu through the worker's path and put on the Doctor Skull-cracker's costume that Xiao Gu had removed.

They will never expect two different murderers, will they?

The shackles dragged on the ground, and Chen Ge put on the human skin mask, held the hammer in one hand, and returned to Li Wan City.

Since I have friends coming from so far, I can't let them leave without first having some fun, can I?

...

Once the door to Li Wan City closed, the temperature dropped even lower. Silence, fear, and an indescribable terror washed over them like a wave. No one spoke, and the visitors could even hear each other's heartbeat.

"There is not even a sign board or something? He just dropped us here like that?" Shinozaki himself did not even realize that his voice had dropped lower.

"It has always been like this for Boss Chen's Haunted House. He has his own way that is different from the other Haunted Houses on the market." Wang Dan's tone was unfriendly. He walked to the front of the group and said, "I've cleared three-star scenarios before, but is there anyone here who can claim the same? Only by working together do we have a chance of clearing the mission."

"Have you been brainwashed by the Haunted House? You sound as dumb as that boss earlier," one of the men who followed the feminine guy said. "Who gave him the right to decide the terror level of a scenario inside a Haunted House? If anything, his Haunted House is merely slightly more popular in Jiujiang."

"The reason he splits the scenarios into different levels is actually to keep on earning money from repeat customers like you. We attempted something like this years ago.” The other person stretched lazily, and he took out his phone like he was preparing to send message to someone else.

“It is my advice that you do not use your phone inside the Haunted House.” Wang Dan looked at the man seriously. “Everyone who uses their phone inside this Haunted House ends up in the worst state and will only burden the rest of the teammates.”

“You’re an actor hired by the Haunted House, aren’t you? Or is there something wrong with your brain?” The man did not care and turned away from Wang Dan.

Wang Dan wanted to say something else, but he was stopped by his girlfriend. His girlfriend seemed to think that the way he was acting was quite embarrassing.

Chapter 685 - Splitting Up

Chapter 685: Splitting Up

Seeing how no one was taking him seriously, Wang Dan's brows were creased deeply. He knew very well that any visitors who had entered Boss Chen's Haunted House before would not say anything so 'naïve'.

"Is this the first visit to this Haunted House for all of you?" Wang Dan had a bad feeling in his heart.

"Mr. Shinozaki and I have just returned to the country. He is attempting to change his style, to challenge a new type of serial comic, so we're here at the Haunted House to seek inspiration," the female assistant said softly. She was not that courageous. Even though they had not yet officially entered the scenario, her voice had already started to shake. "We saw how high the rating is for this Haunted House online, so we came over here once we got off the plane. Are there any other things that we should have done before attempting the Haunted Houses in the country?"

"Don't listen to his rambling. The only reason this Haunted House is so high on the internet is due to the hype of a bunch of plebs. The only thing the boss is good at is advertisement and promotion," the man who walked in with the feminine man said. "Compared to people like us who poured all of our energy into creating a Haunted House, coming up with our scripts seriously and designing the many mechanisms for the Haunted House, the man by the name of Chen is at most a very good businessman."

"A businessman?" Wang Dan almost had his head blown off from how angry he was. He wanted to clamp his hand over the man's mouth. If Chen Ge happened to hear what he had just said, the difficulty of the scenario would be raised to an impossible level.

"He is only capable of tricking innocent students like yourself. For us who have been in the business for years, this is nothing new. Hell, his tricks are all outdated if I am being serious."

The man wanted to say something else, but he was stopped by the feminine man. “Stop saying things like that. It won’t leave a good impression if we’re overheard by the actors at this Haunted House. People might get the idea that we’re purposely here to create trouble.”

Even with his temper, Shinozaki had the experience of age on his side, so he picked up the issue immediately. “Are you all Haunted House operators?”

He soon understood that this was a competition between people from the same field. He did not have a good impression of these few line-cutters.

“The three of us are the employees from the biggest Haunted House in Xin Hai—Nightmare Academy. We’ve been in the business for seven years already. We were the earliest people on the market to commit ourselves into a physical Haunted House business.”

The three made a simple introduction. The man with the brashest attitude was called Wei Jinyuan. He was the youngest script designer at Nightmare Academy. His main job scope was to come up with scary stories as well as mechanisms and plots to go along with them. The smallest of them, the one who had an altercation with Shinozaki earlier, was Li Jiu. He looked fragile and weak. His main responsibility was making the props for Nightmare Academy. He was gifted with a pair of skillful hands and could work various tools.

The final one, the man with the feminine features, was called Lee Changyin, with the nickname Cold Guy. He was a reticent fella but was the most-praised actor at Nightmare academy. He was one of the core members of the Xin Hai Haunted House. He did not appear that old, but he was the most senior of the three of them.

“Wait, didn’t the four of you come together?” Wang Dan saw the other man squeezed together with the three employees from Nightmare Academy, and he assumed that he too was one of the employees.

“He is one of Xin Hai’s biggest live-streamers. He is very famous online, at least much more famous than this Haunted House’s boss. Rather, I should say, they are not even on the same level.”

Wei Jinyuan wanted to continue the introduction, but the host frowned. “If you wish to continue wasting time chatting, then go ahead, but I’ll be heading in first.”

The man finished talking, and he grabbed his bag and walked alone into the scenario. The man seemed to be very courageous.

“Hey!” Seeing how the male host had wandered ahead, Wang Dan quickly ran over. “Do not wander off on your own. Also, I am not kidding, do not think about starting a livestream here—you will harm all of us.”

The host did not even attempt to acknowledge Wang Dan’s presence. His eyes scanned the surroundings, already wondering how many viewers he would get from starting a livestream there. The host was familiar with Chen Ge’s Haunted House’s popularity online. If he livestreamed inside the Haunted House in a new scenario, the livestream would explode. Whether it would expose the interior of the Haunted House or affect Chen Ge’s business, that was definitely not part of his concern.

After coming to understand the host’s attitude, Wang Dan felt his scalp go numb. Just kind of teammate had he found himself tied to this time?

It was one thing that everyone was a newbie, but more importantly, none of them wished to listen to his advice for self-preservation. It was fine if they wanted to die on their own, but the way that they were acting was going to harm him as well.

“If you want to do thing like this, then go ahead. I’m not going to do this anymore,” Wang Dan said and grabbed his girlfriend to leave.

“Wang Da, what are you doing?” His girlfriend thought that he was being unreasonable. “Let me go!”

“It’s fine if we want to visit a new scenario, but going in with them is definitely not a good idea. I plan to quit.” The reason Wang Dan had come to the Haunted House was to vent his displeasure and to embarrass his girlfriend’s high school friend, but now, the situation had changed. He was going to walk into an endless abyss. Once he fell, there was no getting back up.

“Are all the medical students so cowardly?” the male student mocked. “And I thought that you guys would be braver considering that you come into contact with dead bodies so often. It looks like I was mistaken.”

Hearing that, Wang Dan was so angry that his face turned green. However, he did not know where to unload his grievance. Gritting his teeth, his huffed and allowed his anger to take over. He walked back and said, "Fine, then we'll continue this tour."

"Don't force yourself now. I hear that some might wet their pants during Haunted House visit," the sports student joked, thinking he was being funny.

"That won't happen." Wang Dan sighed softly. He knew how things work here. He would be unconscious before his bladder had the chance to work.

"It's be fine. Don't mind him," Wang Dan's girlfriend said soothingly, and he finally quieted down. He tried to gather his emotions, but as he scanned his teammates, a cold hole opened up inside his heart. There was none that he could trust.

"There is only forty minutes to the tour; we should enjoy this." Wei Jinyuan walked next to the male host. "If you're scared, you can come with us, but it might be boring. I am used to analyzing things from a professional angle. In our eyes, as real Haunted House creators, all the secrets and traps are revealed without a trace. For example, this window here..."

Wei Jinyuan pointed at the glass window a few meters ahead. "The window is left unlocked, and the glass is purposely left shattered. When we walk past it, something scary will pop out from inside. If you don't believe me, you just wait and see."

Wei Jinyuan slid quietly to stand next to the window. He pointed at the window beside him and then jumped up and poked his head into the window. If an actor was hiding inside the window, they would be scared by him.

"Jinyuan, stop joking! If you accidentally scare their workers, they will just blame it on us." Lee Jiu tried to stop him, but Wei Jinyuan did not reply. He was leaning on the window, with his upper body reaching into the room. He was not moving like his body was captured by something or someone.

"Wei Jinyuan?" Lee Jiu jogged over with a frown. He patted Wei Jinyuan on his back. "What are you looking at?"

"Shush, be quiet. I saw an actor running away to hide earlier. I seemed to have spooked her." Wei Jinyuan yelled into the room with a cheery voice, "You can come out now; I've already seen you."

When Shinozaki and the female assistant heard that, they also ran over. However, the room was empty, and there was no one there.

“But it’s an empty room, right?” Goosebumps crawled on the assistant’s arm. “Are you sure you’re not mistaken?”

“It only looks like an empty room. There’s hidden pathway in there—they are the routes used by the actors. The person that I saw earlier probably is now cowering in the pathway, too afraid to come out.” Wei Jinyuan scratched his neck and continued to move forward. “There are only so many methods to scare someone. It’s simple if you want to clear this scenario, just stick to us closely!”

Wei Jinyuan and Lee Jiu walked down the narrow street, and they kept scratching their necks.

“Mr. Shinozaki, should we follow them?” the female assistant suggested. “With more people around, it feels safer.”

Shinozaki nodded absently, and he kept staring at Wei Jinyuan’s neck. “Xiao Xia, look at his neck. Do you see a birthmark there? It looks like a person’s palm print...”

“Birthmark?” The assistant did not have that sharp an eye, and she rarely paid attention to these things. “I’m not sure, but this is someone’s privacy, so you shouldn’t go and ask the man about it!”

“Of course, do you think I’m some kind of unruly kid?”

“Which adult would use a pen name like yours though?” the woman grumbled softly before running to catch up to Wei Jinyuan. The team was stretched apart. The three from Nightmare Academy and the host walked at the front, Shinozaki and the female assistant were at the middle, while Wang Dan’s group was at the back. The man in the trench coat stood alone by the earlier window, like he was looking for something.

“It’s time to go,” Wang Dan reminded the man out of kindness. The man shrugged him off like he thought that Wang Dan was in his way.

“I really do not understand what these people are thinking.” Wang Dan took in a deep breath. As he watched the other visitors wander away, he suppressed the anxiety in his heart and moved to chase after them.

After Wang Dan’s group joined the rest, Wei Jinyuan stopped. “The boss gave us four clues to follow before we entered the scenario. Each clue corresponds to a method to escape. There are ten of us. Moving in a group is a waste of time, and it is very inefficient, so I suggest we split into two groups to explore. What do the rest of you think?”

“The road splits before us, and the four clues must be arranged along the different routes. After splitting into two groups, one team will go to the left and the other to the right. We will maintain contact through our phones and keep each other updated constantly.” Wei Jinyuan quickly assumed the role of the leader—he had real experience designing a Haunted House to back his confidence up. “The interior of the Haunted House wouldn’t be wasted on pointless buildings. Every single building here might be hiding the actors or hidden traps. Just stay close behind me, and do not touch anything inside the building.”

“How about you and Cold Guy lead one team while the host and I go down the other path?” Lee Jiu glanced at Wei Jinyuan. For some reason, he felt that something was off about the man.

“No problem, it’s decided then.” Wei Jinyuan did not even ask for the other visitors’ opinion; it was like his words were the law once they were inside the Haunted House. “You guys are lucky to have run into us.”

“Okay.” The female assistant led Shinozaki and walked over to Wei Jinyuan’s side. “We are visiting a Haunted House back in this country for the first time, so there’re plenty of things we do not understand. Sorry for the trouble.”

Shinozaki did not say anything. However, it did look like there was something on his mind. The female assistant knew how strange his personality was, and since he did get into an argument with Wei Jinyuan earlier, she believed that this was because he felt awkward from being placed into the man’s hands. Either way, she did not ask Shinozaki about it.

“Okay then, the four of us will go ahead.” Wei Jinyuan raised his phone. “Meet you at the exit.”

“Okay.” Lee Jian watched as the other group walked down the left street. He turned to the right. "We have our own business to have come to this Haunted House. If you're willing, then just follow us. However, if you think we're not trustworthy, feel free to leave."

Lee Jiu had a bad attitude toward Wang Dan; he did not like the young man.

"In that case, I'd rather they follow me, and we'll go our own way." Wang Dan planned to leave with his girlfriend, but his girlfriend thought that it was safer to stick with Lee Jiu. The two had an altercation, and it was Wang Dan who was isolated. There was no other option. Even though Wang Dan was not a cowardly man, he still would not dare to wander around a 3.5-star scenario alone.

"See, isn't this better? People have to say some strange things to show off. Doesn't he realize how childish that looks?" The other male student did not mention any names, and he made it sound like he was talking to himself, but everyone knew who he was referring to.

"Childish?" Wang Dan lifted his head to look at the man, and his first reaction was to argue. The words were already on his lips, but suddenly, he realized that everyone, including his girlfriend, sided against him, and they also thought that he was being childish.

If that was the case, arguing would only make him look worse. Wang Dan cleverly shut his mouth. He might have been childish before this, but with the training from Chen Ge's Haunted House, he was no longer the reckless young man that he had once been. As if coming to a decision, Wang Dan followed obediently behind Lee Jiu, acting like he had finally surrendered.

"We should have done this a long time ago. Why make it appear like a visit to the Haunted House is so difficult?" The male student stayed at the back of the group with Wang Dan's girlfriend, and the five of them walked down the street on the right.

After the two groups separated and left, a faded mist rolled out onto the street, and a shadow walked through it.

When it was a group of ten, the street had felt crowded, but once half were missing, the area suddenly felt so open.

"There's no background introduction, no plot, not even a signboard—it is truly a miracle for this Haunted House to have survived until now.” Wei Jinyuan really could not understand how a horrible Haunted House like Chen Ge’s could get so popular.

“Perhaps the visitors are drawn in by the freshness. After all, there are not many Haunted Houses on the market that provide such a large amount of freedom.” Lee Changyin touched the wall of the buildings by the street. “However, there are strange things about this place too. I’ve taken a rough look, and all the buildings here are a perfect replica of the ones outside. The materials are bricks and cement, and they lend the place an air of authenticity.”

“Isn’t it going to be complicated when he needs to remove these decorations if he doesn’t use plastic and wood? Or does he plan to keep this scenario for life? Haunted House visitors always prefer the new over the old, and they will be bored of a scenario after playing it once. It is such a waste of money to build with cement.”

Wei Jinyuan shook his head. “There’s no comparison. He has the whole New Century Park giving him support and providing him with the budget. We, on the other hand, have to depend on ourselves.”

He seemed to have a different meaning behind his words. He seemed to be testing Lee Changyin as he added, “Didn’t the people from the futuristic park come to meet our boss recently? How did their negotiation go? Do you think we have a chance of opening a branch at the futuristic theme park in the future?”

“They have a different ideology from us; they do not plan to open a physical Haunted House. Contacting our boss was merely to get us to provide them with our experience and scripts. After all, they do not have anyone with them that specializes in producing a Haunted House.” After Lee Changyin said that, Wei Jinyuan’s mind started to work.

The number of visitors going to Nightmare Academy was dropping day by day, and there were so many negative reviews on the internet. The pay for the employees came from the share of the tickets, so without any visitors, they had no pay. From how Wei Jinyuan saw it, instead of staying at Nightmare Academy, why not jump over to the futuristic theme park? They needed someone who had the expertise in designing a Haunted House, and he could provide that.

“Looks like I’ll have to work hard today.” Only by proving his value would he be able to gain a better hand when negotiating with them.

Seeing the rise in his colleague’s passion, Lee Changyin merely twitched his lips. Perhaps because he had been an actor inside a Haunted House for too long, his every single motion was strange and inscrutable. In any case, he was different from a normal person, but it was hard to pinpoint what the difference was.

The female assistant had been walking next to Lee Changyin. She accidentally glanced at the man's expression earlier, and she subconsciously slowed down like she was scared.

Wei Jinyuan noticed this, and he said in an attempt to console her, "Gorgeous, Cold Guy is our Haunted House's most professional actor. If you have a chance, you should come to visit us. He will show you the true meaning of terror."

"Thank you." The female assistant smiled awkwardly. She slowed down even more and joined Shinozaki at the back.

"It's not that I'm bluffing. This one time, Cold Guy visited another Haunted House, and even without any make-up on, he managed to scare the actors from the other Haunted House. Be it a ghost or a cold-blooded killer, he would be able to assume the role, and every expression felt truly authentic."

Wei Jinyuan appeared so relaxed. However, when he turned around, Shinozaki's eyes twitched, and he asked, "Have you put on make-up before visiting this place? I don't care about the history between you all and the boss, and I don't care about the real reason you're here. I simply wish to know."

"Do you think we're here to create trouble? To put on make-up to scare the actors here?" Wei Jinyuan scoffed with derision. "You are giving this place too much credit..."

"That means you don't have any make-up on." Shinozaki wiped the sweat from his forehead. "Okay, thank you for answering my question."

After Wei Jinyuan walked ahead, the female assistant took out the wet napkin from her bag and handed it over to Shinozaki. "Sir, there is air-conditioning inside here, and the temperature is so low—why are you sweating so much? Are you not feeling well?"

"Remember this route that we're taking. If there's a chance, we need to go meet up with the other team." After wiping away the sweat, Shinozaki gripped the napkin tightly, and he appeared quite shell-shocked. "We need to stay away from these two."

“But why? They’re professionals, right?” The female assistant was confused by Shinozaki’s order.

“The man who poked his head into the window earlier, there are two purplish-black stains on the back of his neck. It looks as if someone has gripped him there. You heard his answer earlier—he isn’t wearing any make-up.”

“Perhaps those are birthmarks?” The woman felt like Shinozaki was making a mountain out of a molehill. “Plus, haven’t we been through this before? We shouldn’t intrude on people’s privacy.”

“Those are definitely not birthmarks.” Shinozaki glanced at Wei Jinyuan. “I remember very clearly that the stain on the back of his neck was only one single palm print earlier, but as we walked down the street, it grew, and another print appeared!”

Shinozaki raised both of his hands and gestured around his neck. “The two hand prints appeared on both sides of the neck. It feels like there is something riding on his neck and hugging him with their arms...”

Chapter 687: Hard to Understand [2 in 1]

A light fog started to roll over the abandoned small town, and the buildings by the sides had shadows flitting through them. The temperature dropped some more, and the whispering of women and children could be heard. However, whenever the female assistant tried to focus on the sound, she discovered that there was nothing but silence, and all she could hear was the frantic beating of her own heart.

“Sir, you’re kidding me, right?” It was dim inside the scenario and the combination of the light fog meant that the female assistant had a hard time identifying the hand prints on the back of Wei Jinyuan’s neck. “Perhaps it was the doing of the workers inside the Haunted House? When Wei Jinyuan poked his head into the window earlier, could the actor have slathered some kind of unique paint on his neck? We have seen similar paint overseas before. The original color is very light, but once it mixes with human sweat or water, the color will instantly deepen.”

“Honestly, I don’t quite understand what is happening just yet, but I have a feeling this Haunted House is different from the ones we have visited overseas. Whenever I visited Haunted Houses in the past, there hasn’t been this feeling of nervousness.” Shinozaki held his hand over his heart. “There isn’t anything overly gory like blood or fake limbs at this place, but walking down the path, there is a strange sense of suffocation. It feels as if right at this moment, there are endless pairs of eyes studying and observing our every move.”

“In any case, I would not believe something as preposterous as an invisible person riding on the man’s neck, but it is undeniable that this is very good material for inspiration. You can draw it into your own work.” The female assistant believed that Shinozaki had been under too much pressure lately, and he had been in the artistic business for too long, so it was easier for him to make this kind of horrifying connection.

The mention of his own comic caused Shinozaki's eyes to brighten. "On that front, you are absolutely right. Whether it is real or not, this is perfect for my next project. For now, let's follow the two of them. With them scouting ahead, it will be much safer for us."

That was Shinozaki's personality, a mind that was only able to focus on one thing. He could reach an obsession-like focus on the thing on his mind, and this was how he managed to transform himself from a homeless guy, Lee Baofu, to become one of the brightest stars in the comic business, Shinozaki Daisen.

It was very dark underground with very dim lighting coming out from the nearby buildings, but once people got near, the lights would go off on their own. Only after the visitors had wandered away would the lights come back on.

"This is quite interesting. Looks like this Haunted House has made use of a lot of new technology, sensory lights, mist-creators..." Wei Jinyuan tried to use his knowledge to break down the Haunted House, and his analysis sounded quite sound and logical.

When he planned to move forward, his phone suddenly rang. He lowered his head and saw that it was Lee Jiu who was calling him. He picked up the phone because he was interested in finding out how things were going with the other team. "How are things over there? Did you find any useable clues?"

Lee Jiu's voice came from the other end of the line. "This Haunted House is much more boring than we expected. We've looked through a few rooms, but they are all empty. There were no hidden pathways or actors."

"I asked around before coming over. This Haunted House has unlocked many new scenarios within a short period of time, so it's a given that not all of the scenarios will be perfect. Furthermore, I'm not sure if you have noticed this or not, but this scenario is supposed to have a 3.5-star difficulty. That itself sounds like this scenario is incomplete. That Chen fella was probably forced to open this incomplete scenario to the public due to the pressure from the futuristic theme park." Wei Jinyuan walked down the street, and the number of rooms on both sides grew.

"Alright, I'm going to hang up now. I'll call you in ten minutes; we're going to focus on searching for the clues now." Lee Jiu said that and hung up immediately.

“What’s wrong with him? The call lasted barely a minute. In that case, why waste time calling in the first place?” Wei Jinyuan put the phone away and scratched his neck. He kept feeling that there was something itchy on the back of his neck like he had been bitten by a mosquito there.

The road ahead narrowed even further, and they walked another ten meters before Lee Changyin saw a wooden plaque hanging on the wall beside them. A sentence was written in blood. “I am one of you.”

“Now he’s starting to play psychological games, huh? Such tedious trick.” Wei Jinyuan aimed his phone’s camera at the wooden plaque and snapped a picture. He saved the photo. “This is the first thing that is relatively scary I’ve encountered since entering this Haunted House. It is so unbelievable that a Haunted House with such unreasonable pacing would get so popular.”

“Don’t treat this too lightly. The warning on the plaque might be real.” Lee Changyin was still expressionless. “Based on the analysis I’ve read online, people suspect that the Haunted House boss once had his actors mix into the visitors to disturb their judgement. Of course, this is mere speculation; no one has any concrete proof.”

“It does not matter either way.” Wei Jinyuan moved the plaque around, and the term ‘Dong Zi Residence’ was written on the back of the board. “This place should be the residential area. The boss said that the second clue is hidden inside the residential area, so things should finally get more exciting once we enter this place.”

Lee Changyin nodded, and the two headed into the small yard immediately.

“Sir, now is not the time to space out. We need to hurry to catch up to them,” the female assistant urged, but Shinozaki stood outside the yard and studied the wooden plaque on the wall like he was putting the warning on the board into serious consideration.

“By the way... do you think that there really might be something that has slipped into our ranks?” Shinozaki croaked as he looked around. “This Haunted House has such a perfect handling of its created atmosphere that I cannot shake the feeling that something sinister is going on.”

Shinozaki and the female assistant later shuffled into the residential area. Almost as soon as they all entered the area, a few black shadows flashed behind them. There were three squat buildings that sat next to each other inside the residential area. They were numbered one to three, and strange noises kept coming out from the buildings. It sounded like children using some small objects to hit against glass.

“Other than the decrepit appearance, this place does not look that different from our town’s old city.” Wei Jinyuan looked at the peeling paint on the wall, and he stopped before the first building. “Should we move together or separately? I suspect that there are different things hiding inside each of these hovels.”

“I’ll go alone, and you can lead the two of them.” Lee Changyin walked into the third building alone, and he soon disappeared out of sight. Only the sound of his footsteps remained.

“Such an impetuous person. I hope he won’t scare the actors working at this Haunted House.” Wei Jinyuan turned his head back and realized that Shinozaki and the female assistant were still standing in the middle of the yard. “What are you two doing there? Stop wasting time!”

“I’m so sorry, we’ll be there in a minute.” The female assistant pulled on the corner of Shinozaki’s shirt. “Sir, it’s time to go.”

“Okay.” Shinozaki stared at the bush that reached his waist lining the edges of the yard. There was no wind at all, but the bush kept moving like there was someone or something hiding inside it.

Without getting closer to the bush, Shinozaki, the female assistant, and Wei Jinyuan entered the first building. There were water stains left on the ground, and the walls had cracks running down them. In the darkness, they looked like smiling lips. The stairs led downstairs, and the place was dim. The only things that they could see were the half-open doors.

“How far does this go down?” Wei Jinyuan took out his phone and activated the flashlight function. The light pierced through the darkness, but it failed to bring them any sense of security. If anything, the more they saw, the more unsettling it felt.

White powder kept falling on their heads, palm prints were left on the rusted banister, and that feeling of asphyxiation grew; it felt like there was a heavy boulder pressing on their hearts. Scratching his neck, Wei Jinyuan pushed open the door to the first room. There was some assorted old furniture littered inside the room, and it could not have looked more normal.

Even though he had claimed that he was not afraid multiple times, as he entered the room, he was observably more cautious. He examined every corner that might be used to hide a trap, but he looked for a long time and found nothing. This was a normal room.

“The Haunted House boss wishes to use this method to disrupt us?” Wei Jinyuan checked a few other rooms on the same floor. There was nothing remotely scary and definitely not a Haunted House actor hiding behind the corner waiting to scare them.

“Is there something wrong with the boss? He built these empty rooms to use as mere decoration?” If it was not built inside a Haunted House, Wei Jinyuan believed that these rooms would actually have been rentable as cheap housing.

He walked down the stairs and came to the second-floor basement. The layout was almost the same with only one difference. There was a dark corridor, one that connected all three adjacent buildings underground. Wei Jinyuan walked to the end of the corridor and shouted, “Cold Guy, can you hear me?”

The response was a series of footsteps, but no human could be seen.

“Has Cold Guy gone down to the third floor basement? That’s impossible! We’re so close to each other, so if he heard me, he would have responded.” Wei Jinyuan’s forehead was slick with sweat. All the buildings aboveground might be a red herring—the real terror was all hidden underground. “All the buildings are connected underground; this place is like an underground maze.”

He looked down the corridor, and the chilly air overwhelmed him. This was a completely different sensation from when they were outside. He opened the door that was closest to him, and Wei Jinyuan looked into the room with the light of the phone while standing outside. “The layout of all the rooms on the second-floor basement is the same as the ones above it. What is the purpose behind such a design? I cannot understand what his aim is!”

Wei Jinyuan had been trying to perceive the secret behind Chen Ge’s Haunted House’s popularity, how he managed to attract so many visitors. However, until now, he had come up with nothing. He opened door after door, and just as Wei Jinyuan was about to give up, he realized that one of the doors was different from the others. The edges of the room were pasted with tape, and even the peephole was covered with tape.

“Something’s not right.” Wei Jinyuan pulled off the tapes on the door and slowly pushed the door open. The room behind this door was indeed different from the others; all of the furniture was covered with tape.

“Looks like the clue should be hidden inside this room.” Wei Jinyuan pulled off the tape around the shoe rack. He looked into it, and five pairs of shoes sat inside. There was a pair of female open-toes slippers, a pair of old lady cloth shoes, and three male sneakers, each a different size.

“Are these pairs of shoes part of the puzzle?” Wei Jinyuan picked up the shoes and studied them one by one. But after a while, he gave up. “Is something wrong with the boss’ brain? How come he keeps wasting resources to design these things that are completely useless! Does he even know how to design a Haunted House?”

The more he looked at them, the more agitated he became. Wei Jinyuan noticed that most of the furniture was covered in tape, and he was not going to go through them alone. “Hey! Come over here and help!”

“Did you discover anything?” The female assistant and Shinozaki ran over to him. When they saw the tape-filled room, they were given quite a shock.

“Help me tear off all of this tape. The clue should be hidden here somewhere.” With the orders from Wei Jinyuan, the group started to undo the tape pasted on the drawers, cupboard, under the bed, and on the door. They ransacked the place but still failed to find anything of value.

“Is the boss toying with me?” Wei Jinyuan became more and more annoyed. The frequency of him reaching behind his neck to scratch also increased. The itchiness grew more and more pronounced. “You two stay here and continue tearing down the tape. Do not leave any stone unturned. I will carry on to the lower floor.”

Wei Jinyuan left Shinozaki and the female assistant behind, and he departed alone. The lowest floor was even dimmer than the floors above. One could not even see clearly without a flashlight. This floor was different from the ones above; there were two corridors, leading left and right.

One of the corridors connected the other two buildings, but no one knew what the other corridor led to. Wei Jinyuan took a deep breath.

He gripped his hands tightly, and without even realizing it, his palms were filled with sweat. He looked down the corridor on his left, and he saw a vague shadow of a man standing against the wall.

“Lee Changyin?” Without using the man’s nickname, Wei Jinyuan called Lee Changyin’s full name instead. He raised his flashlight to aim at the spot where the shadow was standing. There was no response—it was clear that the shadow did not belong to Lee Changyin.

“How come it feels like Cold Guy disappeared completely once he entered the building? But how is that possible? There were only several meters between us!” If it was not Cold Guy, then it had to be one of the workers. Wei Jinyuan raised his phone and ran ahead. “Normally speaking, the actors at a Haunted House will hide near the corner or something hidden so that they can jump out to scare the visitor when they passed. But what is up with this guy? He just stands there on the corridor, isn’t he afraid of being exposed by the visitors?”

No matter how loud the commotion Wei Jinyuan made, the shadow refused to budge. After he got closer, he slowly realized the strangeness about the shadow. The shadow’s body was slowly shifting until it matched his own body shape. This was a strange experience; it was like he was looking at his own body from the back. Wei Jinyuan’s Adam’s apple shook, and he was finally within three meters of the ‘man’.

After adjusting his breathing, Wei Jinyuan was about to speak when the phone that he held before his chest suddenly vibrated!

“F*ck!” After cursing out loud, Wei Jinyuan lowered his head to press the accept button. Before he had a chance to glance at the name on the caller ID, when he lifted his head again, the shadow before his eyes had already disappeared. “Where did he run off to?”

“Hey, Jinyuan, I’ve found a map for this town. There is an area that is crossed off with red paint on your side...”

“I’ll talk to you later!” Wei Jinyuan ended the call immediately, and he used the flashlight to quickly scan around him. “Didn’t he just call me earlier and now he’s calling me? What’s wrong with him?”

“Where did the man disappear to?” It took less than one second for him to lower and raise his head, and the shadow had already disappeared. Furthermore, Wei Jinyuan did not hear any sound—it was as if the man had evaporated into thin air.

“I didn’t hear any footsteps, and the doors on both sides are still open. So, he should have sneaked into one of the rooms.” Wei Jinyuan walked to the spot where the shadow was standing earlier. “The closest room to him is one meter away. Just how many times he must have practiced this to be able to slip away in the blink of an eye.”

Wei Jinyuan looked into the room. The structure inside was no different from the other rooms, but there were many blood trails left on the ground.

For the sake of visual effects, most of the fake blood used by a Haunted House was intensely bright, but the blood in this room had a brownish color. It felt as if a real murder had happened and the blood was left from years ago. It had seeped into the building itself and could not be cleaned no matter what.

“Did he run into this room?” Certain rooms were filled with a liveliness and warmth that would blanket one upon entry, but there were some rooms that would cause one intense discomfort once one stepped into it. Goosebumps rose, and there was no logical explanation for this phenomenon. That was exactly what Wei Jinyuan was feeling. There was no sense of liveliness inside this room; it was no different from a morgue used to store dead bodies.

“Come out now! I’ve already seen you!” Wei Jinyuan screamed into the room, but he could only hear his own echo in reply. He nudged further into the room, and he saw more blood stains. “All the blood has dried into the ground; it is not just slathered on the surface. How did he manage to do this?”

Walking through the living room, Wei Jinyuan stopped at the door to the bedroom door.

“The blood trail leads here, so the secret should be hidden inside the bedroom.” Pushing the door open, Wei Jinyuan grabbed his phone tightly. Cold sweat was pouring then.

Eye-grabbing blood stains were splattered all over the room, and standing in the middle of this sanguine piece of art was a woman in a red dress. She was standing, facing away from Wei Jinyuan, and knocked her head lightly against the wall repeatedly, creating this strange persistent echo.

Chapter 688: Lose the Head! [2 in 1]

Running alone to the third-floor basement, standing inside an enclosed room that looked like a crime scene, being in the company of a strange woman covered in blood—anyone would feel fear being placed in that situation. Wei Jinyuan scratched the back of his neck like it was his habit to do so. His back was soaking wet, and his Adam's apple quivered as cold sweat slithered down his face.

He had been searching for the actors employed at Chen Ge's Haunted House to find out what the secret behind its popularity was, but now that he had run into the real actor, he felt weirdly unsettled and uneasy. For a reason that he could not explain, the woman was standing several meters away from him, but his heart was shaking like a leaf.

"Is this the influence of the environment, or is it the make-up?" His heart skipped endlessly like a frantic rabbit. He needed a full minute before Wei Jinyuan felt more like himself again. Throughout this process, the woman in the red dress just stood at the corner of the wall, showing no intention of getting closer to him.

"This is similar to the black shadow I met in the corridor—they do not actively go and scare the visitors, and they do not plan to hide. Is it because of the actor's overconfidence, or are they worried about something else? Is it because they are afraid that they might be too scary for the normal visitors, so they use this kind of method to 'stun and frighten' the visitors?" Wei Jinyuan's brain was thrown for a loop as he slowly nudged his feet forward. The hairs on his body were standing on end, and every cell in his body screamed for him to leave. Every single step that he took required a large amount of courage.

"Hey, are you one of the actors at this Haunted House?" His voice was shaking involuntarily. Wei Jinyuan kept cheering for himself internally, reminding himself that there was no reason for him to be afraid. This was merely a female actor hired by Chen Ge. Perhaps after she took off the make-up, she would be a cute little girl.

The woman in the red dress did not answer. She had her hands crossed before her chest and showed her back to Wei Jinyuan. Her head was leaning weakly against the wall, and she maintained this strange posture.

“You’re not going to answer, huh? Fine, I’ll come and see what you’re really up to!” Walking into the blood-stained room, the carpet underneath his feet rustled with each step. It was a distance of several meters, but Wei Jinyuan took more than ten seconds to traverse the distance. He stopped next to the woman, and he poked his head forward to look at her.

Her dress was dripping with blood, and the resentment was heavy. With just one glance, the female ghost sent tremors down his spine. He noticed that her hands were placed before her chest, and they looked like they were holding something...

“The clue couldn’t be in your grasp, could it?” Wei Jinyuan’s eyes widened. “The boss really is such an immoral character to have placed the clue somewhere like this.”

If the clue was in the woman’s grasp, then the visitor would have to get close to her to obtain the clue. If the visitor was too afraid to get any closer, then he would be forever trapped inside the scenario, or he would have to surrender and go and find other clues.

“Thankfully, it was me who ran into you. I am the bravest of the bunch, and this is not going to scare me.” Wei Jinyuan summoned his courage and reached out to grab the few pages of paper that the woman was holding in her arms. When he was about to reach back, the woman’s head that leaned against the wall slowly turned. Her body maintained the same posture. In fact, her neck did not even move. It was merely her head that was turning and turning...

A pale white face that was drained of blood. The features could be called beautiful but the two dark hollows where the eyes should be were quite scary. The female ghost did not seem to understand what Wei Jinyuan was doing. The resentment in her eyes was boiling, but as her gaze landed on the strand of black hair around her wrist, she calmed down once more.

“You’re even wearing pure black contact lenses? If I was not working at the Haunted House and thus privy to these make-up skills, I probably would have been scared by you.” Wei Jinyuan pulled the pages away from the woman. He shone the flashlight on the paper. “The basic rules for Haunted House workers? Do not have any physical contact with visitors? Do not harm the visitors? If you come after any fainted visitors, send them to the underground morgue immediately?”

Wei Jinyuan looked over the pieces of paper again and again. The question mark in his mind grew. “What is this? Where is the clue?”

He raised his head to look at the woman in the red dress. She still kept her strange posture. Her body was half a meter away from the wall, and only her head leaned against it. Her eyes were focused on the papers that he was holding as if she was waiting for Wei Jinyuan to return them to her.

“Is this everything?” Wei Jinyuan held the pieces of paper. “You are one of the actors here, right? Is there a secret that I should understand from these words?”

The woman had no idea what Wei Jinyuan was talking about, but there was one thing that was certain—her patience was slowly being worn down by this man. The red dress started to flow with blood, and the thin scent of blood suffused through the bedroom.

“Oh, ho! There’s a second transformation as well?” Wei Jinyuan studied the blood that dripped down the woman’s dress, and he observed in forced calmness, “There are blood bags hidden inside the dress, aren’t there? But you are being too unprofessional. The requirement for a Haunted House actor is fast, quick, and accurate. With how slow you’re moving, the visitors will have time to prepare for this not so sudden transformation.”

Wei Jinyuan actually had no concrete idea how the woman managed to do something like this. His endless rambling was merely to cover up the uncertainty that crawled through his heart.

“Looks like finding the clue alone is not enough—we’ll have to solve the puzzle in it.” The back of Wei Jinyuan’s neck was becoming increasingly itchy, like there was something on his neck that was shivering. He could even feel a small force from behind him trying to pull him away, like some mysterious force was urging him to leave this place immediately.

“Is this some kind of mind trick? But what is theory behind it? Before we came, I saw on the internet that many visitors claim the boss is a master at psychology. Looks like I have fallen into his trap without even realizing it myself.” Wei Jinyuan held the phone in one hand, the light from the phone shining on him and the woman next to him, while his other hand held the few pieces of paper. “Where did I go wrong? This place is not even that scary, but how come my heart is racing so fast?”

Being cast in the light, her own sheet of worker rules had been taken away, and trails of blood vessels started to form on the woman’s face—she felt like she was being humiliated. The scent of blood in the air thickened, and the sticky blood slid down her dress, causing a dripping sound as it landed on the ground.

Wei Jinyuan was still caught in his thoughts. He felt like he had walked himself into a trap. “Since entering the Haunted House, there’s been nothing but empty rooms. There was no set-up and definitely nothing scary. There was not even blood. How did a Haunted House like this manage to make me feel fear? What kind of thing is behind this kind of indescribable feeling of suffocation? I seem to smell the blood in the air, but is this some kind of illusion, or has he managed to play some mind trick on me when I was not paying attention?”

There was no answer to any of the questions; everything was wreathed in mystery. Wei Jinyuan scratched his neck, and his brows creased. “The environment is too complicated, and it speaks of an unspeakable horror. The clues given are impossible to understand.”

When he was still thinking, a pale hand reached out to grab the papers from him.

“What are you doing?” Wei Jinyuan turned his head to look. His lips were left hanging open, and the expression froze on his face. The woman who was standing next to the wall had moved further into the room, but her head had disappeared!

There was a rough cut around the neck, and the gaping wound was dripping with blood. This scene smashed Wei Jinyuan’s brain like a heavy blow from a hammer. He felt as if he had been struck by lightning, and electricity surged through his capillaries!

“Where is the head?” He could confirm that the actor standing in the room with him was a living woman. That exquisite face, the fresh expressions, even the condescension-filled gaze that felt like she was looking at garbage was not something that could be replicated by a mannequin. However, the head of the living human disappeared in the blink of an eye!

“Give me back my stuff.” A woman’s voice came from behind his shoulder. Wei Jinyuan’s neck turned stiffly around, and soon, he was greeted with an impossible scene. The woman’s head was linked by blood vessels, and it was floating just above his shoulder. When the four eyes met, Wei Jinyuan felt like his heart had stopped beating, and all the blood inside his body rushed to his brain at the same time.

“Help!” he screamed at the top of his lung. With one hand on the phone and the other on the worker’s rule sheets, he charged out of the bedroom at the fastest speed he had ever accomplished in his life!

“Give me, give me!” Resentment circulated around her body, and the Specter was out for blood. The blood dripped onto the ground, and the woman in the red dress followed Wei Jinyuan out of the room. The blood mixed with the black hair. The woman hugged her head and chased after Wei Jinyuan.

Running down the dim corridor, Wei Jinyuan did not have the luxury to analyze anymore. There was only a simple thought in his mind.

Run!

He did not check where he was running; he simply rushed down the corridor that was before him!

After who knew how long, he stopped to gasp for air. The vibrating phone in his hand snapped him out of it slightly. With his heart almost jumping out of his chest, Wei Jinyuan turned to look at the phone. The caller ID said that it was another call from Lee Jiu. Like a drowning person being given a lifeboat, he grabbed onto it and hit the accept button madly!

“Jinyuan, I need to talk about the same thing as before. We found another map piece, and after we joined them together, we realized that you and Cold Guy are heading toward an extremely dangerous location...”

Before Lee Jiu finished, he was cut off by Wei Jinyuan. “Jiu! Please come save me! Save me!”

“Slow down, what is going on?” Wei Jinyuan also wished to slow down, but once he turned around, he saw the woman in the red dress running toward him. The head was cradled in her arms, and the head guided the body as she charged down the corridor to capture her prey!

“Come over here now! There’s a mad woman here! She has no head! Do you understand that!” Wei Jinyuan screamed into the phone, and his face was distorted from pure fear.

“She has no head? Is she some kind of special effect? Clarify yourself, you are not making sense. Do not lose your head, calm down.”

“It’s not me who has lost my head! It’s her! Yes, she has lost her head!”

Wei Jinyuan’s voice travelled down the dark corridor.

And then the call was ended.

...

“That’s strange.” On the other end of the line, Lee Jiu stood where he was, holding the phone. Wei Jinyuan’s ear-splitting scream from before had been heard by Lee Jiu and everyone else through the phone.

“What’s wrong with Xiao Jin?” Through the terms he used, it sounded like the streamer was close to the employees from Nightmare Academy. However, there was not much concern in his question, more of an open curiosity. “Xiao Jin is not really that easily scared. To be able to scare him until he screamed like this, it shows that there is more than meets the eye at this Haunted House.”

“We should be more careful. I don’t think I heard Jinyuan correctly earlier, but I believe he mentioned a headless female ghost.” Lee Jiu felt quite embarrassed that his colleague was being scared to such a state. “Regardless, we should not pay him too much attention. Wei Jinyuan is on the design team, and he does not enter the Haunted House often, so he is actually the most easily-scared among all of us.”

“This condescension is going to be your downfall.” Wang Dan also heard Wei Jinyuan’s cry for help earlier. His words were actually more cutting than he meant. “I advise you listen to me and stop using your phone inside the Haunted House. Then we shall take the same route back. There is no way we are clearing this scenario with a bunch of rule-breakers.”

“If you talk so much big talk, why don’t you go off on your own and stop following us so shamelessly?” Wang Dan’s advice fell on deaf ears. In fact, the streamer challenged him rudely. After the incident with Wei Jinyuan, he felt weirdly uneasy.

Wang Dan did not take up the argument. He shrugged and uttered in a voice reserved only for himself, "If I leave, who is going to help collect your bodies?"

"Stop arguing, I have to admit that there is something praiseworthy about this Haunted House if it is able to scare Jinyuan to such a state. Now that we have found two pieces of the map, I believe we will be able to escape soon enough." Lee Jiu was responsible for the prop and item design at Nightmare Academy. He had been in the business for five years already, and with his experience, he could discern the mechanism set up inside the Haunted House with a glance. It was because of his experience that he had been able to find the clues hidden by Chen Ge in Li Wan City easily.

The scenario could be very difficult, but there had to be a chance for the visitors to win. That was the only way that the visitors would think that the experience was fun. And the clues were the chances provided by Chen Ge to the visitors. With the map, they could avoid the extremely dangerous locations like the woman in the red dress in the third-floor basement.

The man who had been so confident earlier only needed a few minutes to be transformed into a sniffling baby. That had placed an invisible pressure on the other visitors.

"Come on, let's keep moving and see if we can come up with anything else." Lee Jiu put his phone away and studied the two pieces of the map.

"It feels like this place is a trial of patience. The actors will wait until we put our guard down and start to get agitated, then they jump out to scare us. That is probably how they got Xiao Jin." The streamer looked at his watch and then exchanged a look with Lee Jiu. Lee Jiu got the message and nodded. Then he said, "After entering the next building, we should temporarily split up. We are moving too slowly at the moment. After we've searched the entire building, we should meet up at the entrance."

Without waiting for the other people's response, Lee Jiu and the streamer strode into the building in front of them.

"Wait, I think we should stick together." The student Zhang Feng suggested, but Lee Jiu and the streamer walked away from him like they could not even hear him.

"We should join them," Wang Dan said lightly. He had a feeling that there was an ulterior motive behind Lee Jiu and the host's visit to the Haunted House.

"Are you sure?" Zhang Feng had not been that afraid in the beginning, but after hearing Wei Jinyuan's voice from the phone call earlier, he was feeling quite panicky. "This building before us looks like a small hospital. They always place the scariest stuff inside the hospital at the Haunted Houses, don't they?"

"Are you scared?" Wang Dan barely glanced at Zhang Feng as he headed into Li Wan Hospital.

"Who's scared? Are you looking down on me? Let me tell you, a Haunted House can never be scarier and more exciting than bungee jumping."

Zhang Feng glanced at the wooden board that announced the building to be Li Wan Private Hospital. He suppressed the anxiety in his heart and followed Wang Dan and his girlfriend into the building.

Li Wan Private Hospital's main color palette was white. It was the most eye-catching and the most unique building in the small town. As they pulled open the rusted iron door, they saw a darkened corridor, littered with yellowed patient's list. If they picked up any single one, they would see that the patients had mostly died from untreatable diseases and infections from the epidemic.

The glass windows creaked in the wind even though there should not have been a draft blowing underground. The doors of the rooms were all left open like the dead patients had all returned to this place and would come out at any moment.

There were striations that looked like nail marks left on the doors, and an unknown plant climbed all over the walls. The ceiling was peeling at places, which exposed patterns on the cement that looked suspiciously like human faces.

This hospital was one of the scariest locales at the small town, and it was using its own unique charm to welcome the new batch of visitors. The floor was cracked, and walking on it would create this screeching sound. In the complete silence, any sound could make people jump.

"Where is that guy, Lee Jiu? He came in here at most ten seconds earlier than we did. How did he manage to disappear in the blink of an eye?" Wang Dan looked around with a severe look in his eyes. He stood in the lobby and stared down the two corridors that led down his left and right sides. He wished to discern the direction that they had gone in based on the pattern of the broken tiles on the ground. However, much to his consternation, both corridors had signs of travel, and he could already pick out around eight footprints in the dark.

"There are some other people in this building other than us." Wang

Dan studied the foot prints on the ground, and he hesitated. He knew full well how good at scaring people the actors at this Haunted House were. Running into anyone of them could push an unsuspecting visitor over the brink, and this building might be hiding more than a handful of those scary actors.

“Which path should we take?” Wang Dan’s girlfriend asked. She was wearing quite thin clothing as was the fashion. Her body was shaking involuntarily, but it was unclear whether it was due to fear or merely the cold.

“I remember that both Lee Jue and the male streamer are wearing sneakers. From the footprints on the ground, they should have headed down the left corridor, but...” Wang Dan lowered his head to think.

“But what? Can’t you just finish the sentence instead of letting it hang like that?” Zhang Feng complained with annoyance. When a person was placed in a completely new environment, they would often feel agitated and unsettled.

“Why don’t you come and see for yourself?” Wang Dan aimed his phone on the ground. The corridor on the left had two pairs of footprints that were arranged parallel to each other.

“The footprints in front looks like they were left behind by sneakers, but the footprints at the back doesn’t have any pattern to them. Therefore, we can assume that it was one of the visitors who walked ahead, and it was not a second visitor but something else that was following behind him.” Wang Dan was not trying to scare anyone—he was merely telling the truth. “There is about thirty centimeters between these two footprints. Do you really not see the problem here?”

Seeing the confusion on Zhang Feng’s face, Wang Dan decided to make the demonstration himself. He walked to stand behind his girlfriend and moved to about thirty centimeters behind her. “The visitor is walking ahead, and there is something unknown trailing behind him like this. The two walked down the whole corridor in this manner. Look at the footprints left on the ground; the patterns are very uniform. In other words, this means that, even at the end, the one who was walking in front did not realize that there was something following behind him at a constant thirty-centimeter distance.”

“The actors here sure are something else.” This was Zhang Feng’s first time visiting a Haunted House. Just hearing Wang Dan’s description, he was feeling quite unsettled.

“Lee Jiu and the streamer should have gone down the left corridor, and the actors at the Haunted House made to follow them, so the path should be safe now.” Wang Dan walked down the left corridor alone.

After Wang Dan left, the hospital lobby became scarier. The paper on the ground lifted up, and it rustled noisily as it scratched the floor. This was nothing short of torture for the visitors who visited the Haunted House for the first time.

“Wait for me.” Wang Dan’s girlfriend and Zhang Feng hurried to catch up to Wang Dan. There was no one touching them, but the doors on the sides of the wall creaked on their own. It gave the impression that there were some monsters hiding inside the dark rooms. With absolute caution, the group of three moved slowly down the corridor. They were almost squeezed together.

“This looks like a normal sickroom, albeit a little old and abandoned. It looks like no one has stayed here for a long time.” The decoration inside the sickrooms was very real, so real that one could easily forget that they were inside a Haunted House.

“Be careful. The actors here have undergone the best training—they are able to follow behind you without making any noise, and they have many different methods to scare you. You are never going to see it coming.”

The danger could come from any direction. Wang Dan’s group not only had to be cautious of the doors that were left half-ajar, they were also watching the cracked walls and floor cautiously. They did not forget about the ceiling either.

With how tense they were, if anyone screamed, their souls probably would have escaped from their bodies. They took a whole minute to walk down the corridor that was only ten meters long. When they reached the corner of the staircase, the group realized that their backs were already wet with sweat.

“What? That’s all? I thought that there would at least be actors playing the ghosts coming out of the rooms to scare us.” Zhang Feng sighed in relief. “Actually, it is not that scary. If anything, I think that your analysis at the start was scarier. I suspect that you did it on purpose to make this whole experience feel more horrifying than it should be so that you can scare us.”

The male student was more courageous than a normal person, but the crucial reason he was putting on such a brave front was because he did not want to appear weaker than Wang Dan.

Actually, he looked down on Wang Dan even though he did not let it show that openly. Wang Dan was a medical student who only knew how to deal with dead bodies; he was boring, had normal looks, was not even that tall, and did not come from a good family. Zhang Feng failed to find any hint of a positive point when it came to the young man.

Just the thought of that dispersed the fear slightly in Zhang Feng's heart. He stole a glance at Wang Dan's girlfriend. As mentioned earlier, Wang Dan's girlfriend was his high-school classmate. However, back then, he would not have predicted that how beautiful his friend would become once she learned how to take care of her appearance. After he came across her profile on the internet, Zhang Feng had a hard time believing it was her that he was looking at.

Wang Dan was slighted by Zhang Feng's words. He was being kind to provide the analysis, but all he got in return was suspicion. This kind of person really did not deserve his help. He worked hard to suppress the annoyance in his heart. Even though Wang Dan had possessed a temper in the past, visiting Chen Ge's Haunted House had smoothed down his edges a lot.

He could not tell for sure what had initiated this change. Perhaps because he had seen real demons, in comparison, everyone else appeared more kind-hearted and approachable. Or perhaps when he had fainted and been revived repeatedly in the underground morgue, the teachings of the old professors at Jiujiang Medical University had really made an impact on this young man. In any case, Wang Dan was no longer the man he had been in the past; he had witnessed plenty of growth.

Facing the multiple challenges from Zhang Feng, Wang Dan did not rise to the bait and get into an argument. He understood how meaningless an argument was—the main reason he had come to the Haunted House this time was to share the 'joy' with Zhang Feng, and to achieve that goal, he could stomach any number of complaints and grievances.

"Why aren't you defending yourself? It's because I'm right, aren't I?" Zhang Feng assumed that he had seen through Wang Dan's ploy. "Coming to a place like a Haunted House to prove who has a bigger heart, don't you think that is a very childish thing to do?"

After nodding, Wang Dan walked silently away.

The atmosphere in the hospital turned stranger. Lee Jiu and the male host had walked in before him, but they did not hear anything to signify their presence. There was not even the sound of footsteps. It felt like the two had disappeared into thin air.

All the buildings in the small town led underground, and Li Wan Private Hospital was no exception. Wang Dan looked at the stairs that led underground, and a strange thought appeared in Wang Dan's mind. The only reason that they had not come across any actors so far was most likely because they wanted to wait for the visitors to head underground before showing themselves. This way, the visitors would not escape from the building so easily when they were scared.

The light dimmed, and the three became more cautious.

On the stairs between the first and second floor basement, Wang Dan's girlfriend suddenly yelped in shock, "There's someone down there!"

"Where?" Both Wang Dan and Zhang Feng turned to the stairs in unison.

"It was just around the banister going down to the second floor! I saw it! It was a pair of gray legs!" Wang Dan and Zhang Feng looked in the direction that Wang Dan's girlfriend was pointing, but they did not see anything.

"I swear they were there earlier, but they disappeared soon after!" Wang Dan's girlfriend claimed nervously as she nudged backward, moving from the middle to the back of the ground.

"Probably the actors heard our footsteps and were hiding there, but you saw them on accident," Zhang Feng said to console the girl.

"Okay... But wait!" Wang Dan's girlfriend suddenly pointed at Wang Dan's back. "There is something stuck on your shoulders!"

"Me?" Wang Dan reached out to touch his back, and he noticed that there was a patient's record stuck on his back. The front of the record was printed with the black and white picture of the supposed patient, and on the back of the paper was written in unkempt handwriting "Come and find me."

“Who stuck this on me?” Wang Dan felt like he had been targeted all of a sudden. He knew that it would not have been Zhang Feng or his girlfriend. Neither of them carried a pen on them, and it was quite clear that the words on the paper had been written a long time ago.

“Do you think I’d do something this boring, like you?” Zhang Feng was the first to shrug. Wang Dan’s girlfriend thought that it was quite weird. They had been walking together in a group, and they did not see anyone pass.

“Is there anything on your back?” Wang Dan looked at Zhang Feng and his girlfriend in a panic, and he realized that only he had the paper pasted on his back. “Was it because I was the one who walked at the front of the group?”

Looking at the paper that he was holding, the man in the black and white picture seemed to be smiling at him. Cold sweat poured out of Wang Dan’s forehead; he knew that the real horror of this scenario was going to begin soon.

“What are you doing, grumbling to yourself?” Zhang Feng could not hide the grin on his face, seeing how scared Wang Dan was. “The same trick is not going to work on me twice.”

Like he had uncovered a great secret, he leaned close to Wang Dan’s girlfriend and said, “Old friend, your boyfriend sure is an interesting fellow. We have been moving together, and along the way, we did not run into anyone else. Since neither of us stuck the paper on his back, who do you think the culprit could have been?”

Wang Dan’s girlfriend was slowly led to his conclusion. “He did this himself? That’s impossible, Wang Dan, he...”

“If it was not him, are you telling me that it was a ghost who did this? He wanted to use this to scare us and then act like he is not afraid. I would be angry if I didn’t see how sad this is.”

“No way, he wouldn’t do something like that... right?” With the persuasion from Zhang Feng, Wang Dan’s girlfriend started to doubt herself.

Holding the patient’s record in his hand, Wang Dan’s pupils darted about as he observed his surroundings cautiously. He understood that danger was imminent—this patient’s record was, in actuality, a death notice!

“Since we’re already targeted, tossing this away will not change anything.” Wang Dan heard the two’s conversation clearly. He took a deep breath, bit on his lips, and turned around. Seeing the trace of suspicion and disappointment in his girlfriend’s eyes, Wang Dan’s tensed expression slowly relaxed. With some unwillingness, he relaxed his tightened hands and then turned to Zhang Feng and stated rather openly, “Fine, I admit it was me who pasted this on my back.”

“But why would you do something like that? You aren’t someone like this when I first met you.” Wang Dan’s girlfriend’s voice was rising.

“I just want to prove that I still have some positive qualities about me.” Wang Dan’s pupils were quivering, and goosebumps were crawling on the back of his neck, but he forced himself to maintain his composure. “There is a legend at this Haunted House. Once you put down something like ‘come and find me’ on a piece of paper, there is a chance that you might run into a real ghost. I just want to prove that I might have more courage than you.”

“That’s so childish. If you want to hear urban legends, I can share about one hundred of them with you.” The condescension that Zhang Feng had toward Wang Dan surfaced, and it grew.

“I admit that I am envious of you. I am not as handsome as you, I do not dress as well as you, my family is not as rich as yours, and I cannot even beat you at basketball. Compared to you, I could not appear more mediocre, so I desperately wanted to prove that there is something that I am better than you at.” Wang Dan’s voice started to shake. In the corridor that they came from, he saw a pair of gray legs walking out from one of the rooms.

“So, you use this kind of method?” Zhang Feng’s sense of conceit was satisfied, and it was made much better since it was in the presence of Wang Dan’s girlfriend. “I cannot believe that a medical student like yourself believes urban legend like that. Don’t you know that it’s merely bullsh*t created by people who have nothing else to do?”

“Then, would you dare to give it a try?” Wang Dan had been waiting for Zhang Feng to say that. He interrupted quickly, so fast that Zhang Feng could barely react.

“What?” Zhang Feng was still submerged in his joy, so he did not expect Wang Dan to suggest something like this.

“Since you believe these urban legends are all bullsh*t, then I’m sure you wouldn’t object to giving it a try,” Wang Dan said as he moved to place the patient's record on Zhang Feng's back. "Actually, I realize now that there are people who are better than me in the word. I just have to keep running, and even then, I might not be able to catch up to someone as perfect as you."

Wang Dan's words confused Zhang Feng. His pride was satisfied, but at the same time, he felt like something was out of place.

"Now that I have voiced the words in my heart, I feel much better. Thank you for everything, I swear to live my life more honestly in the future." Wang Dan patted Zhang Feng's back to make sure that the paper was stuck securely and would not shake loose. "Come on, we should continue exploring, and I will stop with the boring ghost stories."

Wang Dan pushed Zhang Feng to the front of the group, and he said in an apologetic tone, "Actually, this Haunted House is not as scary as they say. We told other people that because we merely wanted to hide how easily-scared we are."

Zhang Feng was still quite confused, but once Wang Dan said that, he actually did not feel that afraid anymore. "It's really not that scary?"

"Indeed, this Haunted House is not that scary at all. When I visited this place last time, it was so boring that I almost fell asleep."

It appeared like this lad had been taking acting lessons from a certain Haunted House's boss because there was no flaw to the sincerity on his face as he pushed Zhang Feng to head down the stairs.

Chapter 690 - Danger Scale Off the Charts [2 in 1]

Chapter 690: Danger Scale Off the Charts [2 in 1]

“You fell asleep during your previous visit? How is that possible?” Zhang Feng was still considering Wang Dan’s words when he was pushed ahead by the latter. However, after hearing that Wang Dan had made up all those strange rumors, it was true that Zhang Feng did not feel as afraid as before. He had a liking for extreme sports and could suffer a great deal more than normal people. On top of that, he never did believe in the existence of the supernatural in the first place, so how could he be afraid of something that was not real?

The things inside the Haunted House were not real. Compared to scuba-diving or survival in the wild, a Haunted House had the lowest inherent danger. He knew fairly well that a visit to the Haunted House would not put anyone in mortal danger.

Since there was no possibility of danger, what was so scary about it?

After clarifying that in his mind, Zhang Feng became more confident, and even his gait was different from before. He was no longer that cautious. “There is nothing to be afraid of. We should move faster and finish this tour as soon as possible. This Haunted House, in fact this entire theme park, is so damn boring. If there is a chance, I will invite you guys to come with me to the newly open fifth generation high-tech theme park in Eastern Jiujiang.”

When Zhang Feng said that, he did not forget to turn back to smile at Wang Dan’s girlfriend, like he was trying to toss her some signal. With the patient’s record pasted on his back, Zhang Feng was the first to arrive at the second-floor basement. The light became even dimmer. Without the aid of a flashlight, they could barely see the environment around them.

“Have Lee Jiu and that male host left already? How come we did not hear anything from them at all?” Zhang Feng pushed open the door that was closest to him. It opened to another sickroom. A dirty bedsheet was crumpled on the bed, and there were traces of blood and broken chips of plaster left on the ground.

“This sickroom looks rather different from the others; it feels like someone has recently been here.” Zhang Feng wished to start analyzing, following Wang Dan’s lead, but he could not really see the reason, so he could only rely on his instinct.

“Shall we go in to take a look?” Wang Dan’s girlfriend was acting rather jumpy. She was still thinking about the pair of gray legs that she saw earlier.

“Since you believe that someone has been here, it was probably Lee Jiu and the male streamer. They probably discovered something in there. We should go in to check then,” Wang Dan said as he urged Zhang Feng into the room.

A faded scent of disinfectant filled the air, and it was pungent. Zhang Feng placed his hand over his lips, and his brows were creased in a deep frown. Suppressing the disgust, he pulled the bedsheet back. Under the sheet was a human-shaped blood stain and a selfie stick.

“Why is this thing here?” Zhang Feng picked up the selfie stick. “This does not look like a prop inside the Haunted House. Could it have belonged to the male streamer?”

When he spoke, a light thud came from the dresser next to him. It felt like someone had accidentally knocked into the furniture when they were in a rush.

“What was that?” Even though he kept telling himself that there was no reason for him to be afraid, when there was a real dangerous situation, Zhang Feng could not stop his heart from racing. He walked toward the dresser slowly and pulled open the dresser door with the slowest speed possible. Inside sat an old, tattered patient’s garb and a worn diary.

“This is too easy! I have found the clue!” Zhang Feng was extremely excited. Finally, he had an inkling as to where the fun in touring a Haunted House was. It was the rush of exploration in the depths of fear and despair. When one struck gold when one’s nerves were highly strung, it would bring forth an indescribable and unassailable sense of pleasure.

He flipped through the diary, but Zhang Feng knew that his analytical power was not as good as Wang Dan's, so he called the latter over to study it together. The diary detailed the patient's slow discovery of the strange phenomenon happening at the hospital. Every night, there would be a little boy who came to play hide-and-seek with him. The sentences were easy to understand, and they were the writing of an everyday man, not a writer. However, these simple words managed to elicit the fear in the few readers' hearts.

"A game of hide-and-seek?" Zhang Feng was not really a brainiac, but it did not mean that he was a fool. When he saw the game mentioned in the diary, he was immediately reminded of the patient's record that was originally stuck on Wang Dan's back. If the patient's record was as Wang Dan said, a harmless prank, then how did he know beforehand that a dangerous game of hide-and-seek was underway in this strange hospital?

The nameless town had opened to the public for the first time, and they were the first batch of visitors. Wang Dan would not have been able to prepare this beforehand. Unless... Wang Dan was in cahoots with the Haunted house's boss!

The anxiety that Zhang Feng had suppressed earlier returned in full force because he realized that the patient's notice was now stuck on his back. Understanding the negative implication that this might bring, Zhang Feng snapped the diary shut. "The details of this Haunted House are quite well-done. We have been in here for quite some time already, so we should prepare to leave. After all, I am feeling quite tired already."

"But we have barely done anything? And how can a sports and health education student feel tired so soon? Is it because you're not feeling very well? Do you wish to sit down and rest?" Wang Dan asked in extreme concern, and that only made Zhang Feng want to punch the man in his face.

"It's not that, yes, right!" Zhang Feng picked up the selfie stick left on the bed. "The male host will be worried that he is missing this. We should take this with us and wait for him outside."

He held the selfie stick with one hand, and his other hand reached behind his back. Zhang Feng wished to remove the paper from his back, but something surprising happened. His hand searched about, but the patient's record that was supposed to be on his back had disappeared!

“What the f*ck?” Looking back over his shoulder, he saw a pair of bruised arms reach out from inside the dresser. A man wearing a tattered patient’s garb with no legs was in the middle of sticking a number of yellowing patient’s records on Zhang Feng’s waist and legs!

Every single patient’s record had the same message written on it. “It is my time to be the ghost to come catch you!”

It was unclear when the many sheets of patient’s records were stuck on his body. Zhang Feng’s mind was drawing a blank, and his brain that was lacking in training was squeezed to the brim by endless questions!

Where did this man come from? Why is he wearing the patient’s garb that I saw earlier? What does it mean by ‘it’s my turn to be the ghost’? When did I promise to play the game with you?

The expression on his face distorted, and Zhang Feng’s heart leaped to his throat. His brain shut down for three seconds before his body reacted. He screamed in fear and leaped into the air. At the time, his brain was still as blank as it could be. After he landed, he tried to knock Wang Dan out of the way and run out the door. However, Wang Dan and his girlfriend had already left the room.

When Zhang Feng was reading through the diary, Wang Dan had already noticed something was wrong. From the corner of his eyes, he had seen that the patient’s garb inside the dresser had started to move on its own. Different from Zhang Feng, Wang Dan went into high alert immediately. He understood how dangerous a 3.5-star scenario could be.

By then, he had already made the preparation to run. When Zhang Feng turned around and said something, Wang Dan saw two arms reach out from inside the dresser, but out of respect to Zhang Feng, he did not interrupt the young man when he went through his ‘analysis’. He knew that it was very disrespectful to disturb the man, so he listened to Zhang Feng’s analysis patiently.

When Zhang Feng made the discovery, Wang Dan already had his hand around his girlfriend’s wrist. They were out the door and ran for several meters. He felt like he had learned many life lessons in Chen Ge’s Haunted House.

I am not as perfect as you, so the only choice to ever beat you is to run faster than you.

This was not some Chicken Soup for the Soul crap; Wang Dan understood that the slowest running might really end up at the hospital.

Bang!

The sickroom door slammed heavily against the wall. When Wang Dan and his girlfriend exited the room, they realized that there was a pair of gray legs standing at the corner to the staircase. To intensify the fear in his heart, in almost an instant, another pair of legs appeared, and in less than 0.1 seconds, the third pair of legs appeared.

With the way to the stairs blocked, Wang Dan and his girlfriend could only run deeper into the hospital. By then, Zhang Feng had rushed out of the sickroom as well. He was running so fast and so blindly ahead that he almost ran into the wall. Before he even recovered from the near miss, he saw many patients with grayish skin appear near the stairs.

Due to his good looks and rich family background, Zhang Feng had never had any real trouble in his life, and he would be the center of attention wherever he went. At this moment, in the Haunted House, he was the star of the day as well. The many patients with twisted limbs all looked at him with great interest.

His back was pasted fully with the patient's records. Tears were swirling in Zhang Feng's eyes. He was finally reminded of Wang Dan's kindness, and he ran toward the man. Hearing the footsteps coming from behind him, Wang Dan ran even faster. They rushed down the corridor and came to the stairwell on the right side of the hospital.

At the end of the day, Zhang Feng was a sports student, and it did not take long for him to catch up to Wang Dan. The horde of patients were still following them, and they were not going to be so easily deterred.

"We cannot run together like this! We'll all be captured!" Wang Dan claimed in an urgent voice. At this crucial moment, he stepped onto the plate and assumed responsibility. "Quick! At the next corner, when we are no longer in their sight, the two of you go and hide inside the sickrooms on both sides of the wall, and I will try my best to lead them away!"

"Wang Dan..." His girlfriend looked at him with worry, and there was something on her lips.

“There’s no time to waste, quick!” Willing to sacrifice, selfless to the end, Wang Dan appeared like a hero with no parallel. Zhang Feng was also surprised at how macho Wang Dan was because he would never volunteer to do something like that.

After turning the corner, Zhang Feng crawled into one of the sickrooms without wasting a moment. Just as he was about to close the door, he saw through the gap that Wang Dan held his girlfriend and kept running. They rushed toward the exit and did not show any sign of stopping.

To make matters worse, the patients with contorted bodies and a strange pall over their faces did not even feign interest toward Wang Dan and his girlfriend. Instead, they all crowded in front of his room!

The many eyes focused on the patient’s records stuck all over his body, and the reality of the situation finally dawned on Zhang Feng. When the pale faces swarmed into the room, a blood-curdling scream echoed through Li Wan Private Hospital.

“Wang Dan! You f*cker, you set me up!”

...

At the third-floor basement of Li Wan Private Hospital, the male streamer held his backpack, whose zipper was already open, with one hand, and his other hand grasped his phone. “This is strange, where is my selfie stick? Without it, the camera angle will be all over the place, and it will disturb the viewing experience if there is any running.”

“Did you forget to bring it with you?” Lee Jiu walked next to the man. They seemed to have another motive for entering the Haunted House.

“Stop searching, we need to start soon. I heard another scream earlier; I believe those students have been captured by the Haunted House actors already.” Lee Jiu kept turning his head to look at the sickrooms lining the walls. “We are going to do a livestream inside his Haunted House to conduct an exposé. If we’re seen by the workers, they are definitely going to stop us.”

“Let them do it then. What can they do? Can they afford to be physical before the camera?” The male host’s expression was dark, and it was completely different from how he was on camera.

“Furthermore, I hope that they will turn physical. That way, we will have evidence to use against the boss.”

“The futuristic theme park wants to know the secret behind this place’s popularity, but I feel like there is a hidden purpose behind that one boss,” Lee Jiu whispered conspiratorially.

“I’m going to start streaming soon. You need to stop with that baseless speculation.” The male host took out several jade pendants with horrible quality out from his backpack. The pendants all looked the same, but some of them had cracks running down the surface. The host thought about it and decided to pick out a pendant with nine cracks like it was about to fall apart, and wore it around his neck.

After the preparation was ready, he logged into his streaming account. “We will carry this out according to our plan. We will conduct the Haunted House exposé, and you will cooperate with me from behind the scenes to come up with some scary effect. With the popularity that this Haunted House enjoys on the internet, I’m sure the stream will attract many viewers.”

“Don’t worry, I have the script memorized in my brain—there won’t be any problems.” Lee Jiu gave the host an okay sign and walked into the shadows. He had to maintain a five-meter distance from the host. Opening the app, the host turned the camera to face himself. When the stream was connected, the man basically transformed into a different person.

The clouds over his face disappeared, and he acted like he was panicked and worried. After the stream stabilized, he uttered in hurried tone, “Hello everyone, this is Yellow Wolf, your Big Brother Wolf. Those that know me realize that I come from a proud line of powerful diviners. I’ve spent a few years learning the tricks of the trade from my grandfather, so I know quite a bit about Feng Shui, Ba Gua, and so on.

“We have been to many Haunted Houses in the past, and we have run into some things that cannot be explained with scientific reasoning, but nothing is comparable to what has happened today.”

The male host who called himself Yellow Wolf had everything prepared. After he was done with the introduction, he pulled the camera further and continued. “I am currently at Western Jiujiang New Century Park’s Haunted House. Yes, the Haunted House that is known as the scariest experience on the internet, the place that no one has been able to conquer!”

There was thinly-veiled pride in the man’s voice. “The current scenario that I am in might be unfamiliar to most of you because this is a 3.5-star scenario, the scenario with the highest difficulty at this Haunted House! Many of you might ask, why would I be given the privilege to challenge a 3.5-star scenario directly? That is for me to know and for you to find out.”

With a mysterious smile on his lips, Yellow Wolf adjusted his tone, and his face turned serious again. “If we’re being serious, this Haunted House is indeed different from the rest. When I first stepped into the place, something happened to my jade pendant, a family heirloom. Friends, come and take a look at this.”

Yellow Wolf fished the planted pendant out from his collar. “When we visited the Nan Ling Cemetery in Xin Hai last time, the pendant had seven cracks, but look at this! When I entered the Haunted House, I counted nine cracks running down the pendant! This is a warning given to me by my ancestors! This Haunted House is very dangerous!”

Then, he put the jade pendant away and continued with the show. “But even if the danger scale is off the charts, I will take this risk and provide all of my dear friends with the most authentic Haunted House exposé!”

The third-floor basement was wet, dark, and dim. The host, Yellow Wolf, held his phone and started his so-called ‘exposé’.

“I am not going to introduce this Haunted House any further. Just by searching the name online, you can find countless legends, but it is hard to tell which are real and which are fake.

...

“There are many ghost stories that extend from every single scenario here, like dolls that follow you everywhere, student mannequins that show up at any time and any moment, a ballpoint pen that will curse you once you ask it about love, and so on.

“There are more ghost stories than that, and I believe everyone must be curious, how many of them are real, and how many of them are fake? Today, I have personally arrived at this Haunted House to find the answer for you.”

He took out a piece of white paper and a ballpoint pen from his backpack and slithered into an empty sickroom. “The story about the Pen Spirit is the most famous on the internet. According to the rumors, it was a man by the name of Fei Youliang who first used his sincerity to persuade the Pen Spirit to appear. He was the first one to have met the real Pen Spirit inside this Haunted House, and he was the first visitor to have been sent to the hospital after a Haunted House visit. At the time, many visitors were there to bear witness, so it must be real.”

Glancing at the chat, Yellow Wolf placed the pen and paper on the bed. He put on a serious expression. “Now, I will personally attempt this game. Yes, you heard me correctly. I will attempt to livestream a Pen Spirit game for you right inside this Haunted House that is filled with ghost stories!”

The atmosphere was hyped to the maximum. Yellow Wolf placed the phone by the pillow while he stooped down on the other side of the bed. He picked up the ballpoint pen that he had brought with him.

“My dear friends, I am going to start now. I hope none of you will blink in the next second because I too have no idea what will happen,” he uttered in a convincing tone as he carefully placed the ballpoint pen perpendicular on the white paper. “Pen Spirit, Pen Spirit, you are my spirit from my previous life, and I am your spirit in this life. Can you tell me who my future wife will be?”

Inside the dark sickroom of the Haunted House, there was nothing but silence. In his environment, Yellow Wolf trained his focus fully on the tip of the pen. One second, two seconds, when it was the third second, Yellow Wolf’s pinkie that was hidden from view by his palm hit the body of the pen, which caused the pen that stood above the paper to move imperceptibly.

“Look, it’s here!” Yellow Wolf’s expression was filled with terror. He glanced toward the camera and placed his index finger on his lips to make a shush gesture. Without moving a muscle, he stayed next to the bed for another minute before slowly standing up.

He picked up the piece of paper and showed it to the camera, pointing at the minute dash on it. “You can see it for yourself. After I started the game, the pen did move on its own! The Pen Spirit has appeared! With regards as to why it didn’t stay, I believe that’s because it is afraid of my jade pendant.”

Training the camera back on himself, Yellow Wolf whispered in a façade of fear. “I know you still might not have believed me, and this smudge isn’t going to explain many things, but I shall use my diviner’s power to determine and see if there is Yin energy gathered at this place.”

Yellow Wolf walked out of the sickroom. “The corridors here are very dark. Probably because it has been built underground, walking through it gives you chills.”

Turning the camera, Yellow Wolf aimed it behind him. “The dolls and mannequins did not show up, but I discovered something even scarier.”

He pointed at the doors down the corridor. “When I entered the room earlier, many doors of these sickrooms were left half-open, but now, take a look again. Most of the doors have been completely opened! It feels like something has escaped from these rooms!”

Messages flooded the chat. Some of the viewers noticed this discrepancy as well and had started their own prediction. Of course, some still harbored suspicion, believing that this was all an act by Yellow Wolf.

“I know that many of you still do not believe me, so I will use this method taught to me by my grandfather to seek proof for you. Actually, my grandfather warned me against using this except for in emergencies, but for my dear friends, I shall attempt it today.” Actually, Yellow Wolf was not afraid at all. He had prepared the script with Lee Jiu already, and he believed that it was Lee Jiu who had opened those doors.

“This method is called walking through the Yin Door, also known as ‘feeding the Yin rice’.” Yellow Wolf took out a small black pouch from his pocket. It was strangely wet, and opening it revealed a clump of white rice. “You place the Yin rice at the junction and then walk down the corridor, passing through the other doors. When you reach the fourth room, place the rice at the door, walk into the room, and stomp your feet four times.

“After that, spread a few grains of rice in the room and walk out. If the pattern of the rice outside the door has become different from how you laid it down earlier, then enter the room again and repeat the process four times. If the place is haunted, when you enter the room for the fourth time, you will see a ‘stranger’ because you won’t be entering your own home—you will have travelled with ‘them’ across the Yin door.

“This is the method that has been used by my ancestors to examine haunted houses. Of course, please do not try this at home. I do not wish harm on any of you.”

After saying all that, Yellow Wolf walked to the stairs and placed a small mountain of rice at the mouth of the staircase. Strangely enough, after he left, the mountain of rice did reduce conspicuously in size.

“And we shall start now.” Yellow Wolf took a deep breath, and a severe countenance came over him like he was doing something extremely dangerous. He placed a few kernels of rice outside the fourth sickroom and then opened the door and stepped into it.

He aimed the camera around the room so that he could take down everything in view. “I need everyone to remember the placement of the objects in the room because they might change their locations later.”

Messages crowded the chat box. Yellow Wolf fixed the phone on the bed, and it was the perfect angle to look at the door.

“Be careful, a stranger might enter the room later.” He warned and walked out from the room. After placing the rice, he closed the door.

When the door was closed, thus shutting him away from the camera’s view, Yellow Wolf took out another phone and made a call. After it rang twice, he ended it. This was a code that he had devised with Lee Jiu. He glanced toward Lee Jiu’s hiding place, but the latter did not give him any response.

“Where is the man? Still putting on make-up?” Yellow Wolf did not dare disappear too long from the livestream. A few seconds later, he pushed the door open and rushed to the camera with this urgent look on his face. “I think I heard footsteps! They came from the stairs! Something is coming, and it is coming to me!”

Then, Yellow Wolf put down more rice and walked out of the sickroom again. He looked down the corridor, and it was completely quiet like a black ocean. He called Lee Jiu on his phone again. It rang four times, and there was no answer. “Is he really doing this to me at a time like this?

Agitated, Yellow Wolf felt the back of his neck starting to itch. “He’s not answering the call, so what is he up to?”

He scratched his neck heavily. “How come it feels like someone is sitting on my shoulders?”

Chapter 692: Cooperative Actors [2 in 1]

Whipping his head around, Yellow Wolf realized that there was no one behind him. “That was strange.”

He tried to turn his neck as far back as he could. Finally, he saw that a part of his skin on the back of his neck had turned purplish like a strange bug had bitten him.

...

“What is that?” When he raised his phone to aim the flashlight at the back of his neck to take a better look, the phone in his palm suddenly vibrated. “F*ck! Who is calling at a time like this?”

Yellow Wolf glanced at the caller ID; it was Lee Jiu.

He walked to the side, away from the door, and after making sure that he was definitely not in the view of the camera anymore, he answered the call. He had just pressed the accept button when Lee Jiu’s strange voice came through Yellow Wolf’s phone. “Yellow Wolf, there is something seriously wrong with this Haunted House. Things aren’t right with the actors either. This place is seriously wicked!”

“Get over here immediately! I have more than 100,000 viewers on my stream. If you dare drop this on me, I will never forgive you!” Yellow Wolf lowered his voice dangerously in warning. This man was completely different from the persona that he put on when he faced his audience.

“Stop the stream. Get out of the Haunted House first, listen to me!” Lee Jiu’s voice was not much different from his usual voice, but his tone was strange.

“Do you know how much the company has invested in this livestream? I have been hyping this livestream since last week, and all of my fans are anticipating this livestream. I am waiting for this chance to get to the top of the platform, and you’re asking me to leave?” Yellow Wolf squeezed the words through the gaps in his teeth.

“If you are doing this because of the pay, then fine, you win. As long as you cooperate with the rest of the script, I will pay you double once we leave this place.”

“This not the issue of money; there is something different about this place compared to other Haunted Houses!” Then came a burst of static through the line, and Lee Jiu’s voice was distorted. “This place is really haunted!”

The call was still connected, and the phone did show that Lee Jiu had not hung up, but the man’s voice could not be heard anymore. The only sound coming through the phone was a sharp static sound.

“A phone signal disruptor?” Yellow Wolf ended the call immediately. He ran back to the sickroom and checked the phone that was conducting the livestreaming. Compared to Lee Jiu, he was more worried about the disturbance to his livestream.

“Where is the man? Where has he gone to? Has the host been captured by the ghosts?”

“If you challenge them often enough, they will naturally answer to you eventually. According to my prediction, he has bitten off more than he can chew this time. I have been to this Haunted House before. The kind of terror is not something that you can possibly imagine. At the time, there were seven of us who challenged the Haunted House, and only two of us came out on our feet.”

“You have to be joking, right?”

“The understanding of terror will be refreshed once you visit this place. Have you ever seen a Haunted House that prepares a trolley to transport fainted customers? Have you encountered a Haunted House that has a VIP room for unconscious visitors at the local hospital? Have you visited a Haunted House where every single employee there knows emergency resuscitation? I had not seen it before, and I have personally experienced it myself. Just wait and see, this is going to get much more interesting.”

The messages rushed forward on the screen. Seeing that the livestream had not stopped, Yellow Wolf sighed in relief. He forced a smile and returned to the scene. “I just went out to take a look, and the rice left on the ground has indeed been disturbed. When we walked into this room, someone else walked past the door.”

Lee Jiu had left alone, abandoning him inside this place, so Yellow

Wolf could not follow the script anymore. Yellow Wolf looked at the screen, and occasionally, he scratched his neck. He suppressed the annoyance in his heart and uttered in a strangely nervous voice, “Perhaps you might think that I am lying, or perhaps you believe I have been lying to you, but that is really not the case. Ever since I stepped into this Haunted House, I have felt weirdly unsettled, and there is a sensation that someone has been following me...”

He was rambling to buy time as he figured out a way to pull this all around, but to his surprise, the chatroom of his stream suddenly exploded with activity!

In that instant, the website lagged from the endless stream of messages. This was the first time that he had encountered something like this as well.

“What is happening?” Standing where he was, Yellow Wolf refreshed the page several times before the chatroom became normal again. However, due to the overwhelming number of messages, the video was still stuttering at places.

“Look behind you!”

“What the f*ck! That is one hell of a scare!”

“There is a face on the window! Turn back! Host!”

“Outside the door, he is just outside the door!”

“Motherf*cker! They are real! They are coming!”

The messages exploded, and the video had become so filled with messages that the host could not be seen anymore. This was the first time in his life that Yellow Wolf had experienced this kind of popularity and viewership. He did not listen to the advice and look behind him, but instead, he went to check his livestream numbers. In just a few minutes, his viewership had shot over 350,000 viewers, and it was still increasing at a startling speed.

With 700,000 viewers, I will be able to get the top spot on the website. Based on this development, that should not be too difficult.

Yellow Wolf still did not turn his head around. After he promised the double payment, Lee Jiu finally returned to help him. Everything was still within his control, and of course, he did not forget about the necessary facial expressions.

Looking at the messages, Yellow Wolf appeared, for all intents and purpose, to be frozen in fear. Only the corners of his lips were twitching wildly. "Ghosts have really appeared? Don't try to trick me! My grandfather forbade our people from opening the Yin gate. This could lead to very serious repercussions!"

The viewership was climbing like a rocket. Because most Haunted Houses kept their interior a secret, it was rare for there for a livestream inside a Haunted House. Furthermore, Yellow Wolf had chosen the most popular Haunted House online to carry out his livestream, and there was a reason behind his stream's rising popularity.

His already large fanbase and the heavy manipulation of his company, combined with the popularity that Chen Ge's Haunted House enjoyed on the internet, all contributed to an effect that was beyond everyone's expectations. The users on the platform all swarmed into his livestream room, and the messages started to roll over the chatroom.

"Ghosts are real! Big Brother Wolf has encountered actual ghosts!"

That topic rose to the top of the website immediately, and that only worked to attract more viewers to join his room.

Yellow Wolf was overjoyed internally, but he had to put on a mask of fear. "Do not panic. Especially at a time like this, we shan't panic. Do not worry. My ancestors are all diviners, and because of that, I have experience when dealing with problems like this!"

The more he said things like that, the more the viewers reacted. Many asked for him to turn around, and many others told him to run. After all, there really was a ghost behind him!

Yellow Wolf was in deep appreciation of Lee Jiu's make-up skill. For such an effect, paying double price was absolutely worth it. His body swayed unevenly from left to right, adding to the impression that he was shuddering in fear. The more the messages told him to leave, the more he stayed put.

He placed his arms before his chest to assume a strange pose. Without turning around, Yellow Wolf yelled at the camera, "Since this has already happened, running away is too late. Calm down! We must calm down!"

He slapped both of his palms together, and Yellow Wolf exclaimed loudly, “No matter who is standing behind us, there is no reason to fear! Find the serenity in your heart; know that heaven is always watching over you!”

Once he uttered that statement, Yellow Wolf’s gaze turned instantly. The expression of fear that he had assumed earlier was slowly disappearing.

“Do not be afraid. The more fearful you are, the more they are likely to bully you!” Yellow Wolf picked up the phone and claimed in a courageous voice, “Do not worry, I am never alone. With all of you with me, we will survive this together. Do not forget to tip your host for his bravery, and in a minute, we will charge out to vanquish this evil!”

Seeing the money that viewers were sending his way, joy spread through Yellow Wolf’s heart, and even his cheeks looked redder. He turned around to face the door and bellowed, “As my grandfather once said, you have to firm calm your heart! Clear your mind and practice the Ba Gua in your heart. The soldiers will rise behind you!”

He pointed both of his fingers at the window. Even at a time like that, Yellow Wolf did not forget to adjust the camera so that both himself and the window and door of the sickroom appeared on screen. The sickroom door that was closing caused a creaking sound, and a pale face was peering in from the window.

This was a paleness that was not achievable by make-up; it was a lifeless type of white. The person appeared like he was there, but it felt like he could drift away at any moment.

The unknown face, eyes that were missing two black pupils, the cracked, dry lips, and the black hair that swayed downward covering both of the ears...

When Yellow Wolf saw that face, his body staggered involuntarily backward, and then a compliment for Lee Jiu arose in his heart. He’s a true professional. This is too good!

With his arms shaking, the livestream was a mess. Of course, there were still sceptics claiming that this was just a ploy by the Haunted House workers. Some of the viewers even suggested calling the police to send the law enforcement to the Haunted House to rescue Yellow Wolf.

The presence of sceptics was predictable, but Yellow Wolf could not ignore the people who wished to call the police. He was in the middle of acting with Lee Jiu. How was he going to continue if the police got involved? In less than half an hour, the viewership shot up dozens of thousands, which was unprecedented for Yellow Wolf and even the other hosts on his platform.

“There is no need to trouble the police. At the very least, I am a descendent of a long line of powerful diviners. Today, I will show you the true power that I have inherited from my ancestors. If it is effective, I hope that the users will rescinded the negative reviews that they have left on my paper talisman Taobao shop.” He reached into his backpack and crushed some cinnabar. Then he leaped upward and placed his finger on the forehead of the face that was beyond the thin pane of glass. “Hear my cry, the Emperor of the Sky! Be gone, demon! You are no match for my power!”

His voice echoed in the sickroom. Yellow Wolf used the cinnabar to draw a symbol that no one could have understood on the glass. Then he staggered backward while gasping for air like he had done something incredibly taxing. “Everything should be fine now.”

Yellow Wolf lifted his head to glance at the window, and the human face outside the window was still there. The perfectly white eyes were filled with confusion like they were looking at an idiot.

What the hell is going on? Yellow Wolf gritted his teeth in anger. Based on their agreed script, Lee Jiu should have retreated by now, but ‘Lee Jiu’ was not cooperating at all. Is he going to demand more money? Give him an inch, and he’s going to take a yard!

His heart was boiling with fury, but after all, Yellow Wolf was an experienced live-streamer from Xin Hai. He could adapt to the situation with ease, so he said, “Hear my cry, Goddess of Mercy! Be cleansed of your sin, evil spirit. Return from whence you came!”

After mumbling his mantra, Yellow Wolf leaped around the room, and while his hand was hidden from the camera, he extended three fingers to the face on the window. He waved his three fingers about, stressing that he was willing to give Lee Jiu three times the pay!

That’s triple the pay; you should be satisfied now!

The face on the window did not look like he knew how to deal with this situation either. Seeing the three fingers that Yellow Wolf kept waving at him, he seemed to have understood something and slowly disappeared.

After Lee Jiu disappeared from view, Yellow Wolf derided him for his greed, shamelessness, and unprofessionalism internally, but none of that resentment showed on his face. He stopped all the gesturing and panned the camera to aim at the door again.

“You see! That thing has disappeared already!”

The chatroom rejoiced, and Yellow Wolf enjoyed a moment of peace. “Earlier, it was a minor ghost who followed me out of the Yin door. As you can see, that was not an effect achievable by make-up. If I am not mistaken, the thing was floating in midair.”

There was some questioning from the viewers because they did not actually see the ‘ghost’ disappear, but Yellow Wolf chose to ignore all that. “It is fine now. Based on my grandfather’s teaching, the first few spirits that escape from the Yin door are never too courageous. After they leave, they shan’t return again.”

Wiping away the cold sweat that was not on his forehead, Yellow Wolf continued. “It was definitely dangerous earlier, but thankfully, I know what I am doing. Okay, we shall leave this place now and continue our exposé...”

The more he said, the more unsettled Yellow Wolf felt. The screen started to shudder again, and the chatroom was rife with activity. A bad feeling rose in his heart. Yellow Wolf lifted his head to look and discovered that the ghost face had returned!

*You mother*cker! Are you done with this or not?* Yellow Wolf gritted his teeth. ‘Lee Jiu’ could stray from the script, but he could not.

He retreated several steps, and Yellow Wolf acted like he was mortified. He turned to the camera and said, “This is bad! Looks like it was not only minor ghosts that escaped from the Yin door this time! The Yin energy at this Haunted House is too powerful!”

He glared angrily on the face on the window. “This time, it will not be easy for me to escape, but worry not because my grandfather has given me many powerful relics!”

He reached into his back to pull out a talisman with a red background and black character. Yellow Wolf’s presence was different from before. He channeled all the hatred that he had toward Lee Jiu and said, “This talisman is the most expensive item at my Taobao shop, and there is only a limited number of them in the world! They are all relics left behind by my grandfather! There is no time to waste; it is my fault to have invited this ghost into our world, so I will banish it banish to the hell realm no matter what!”

Holding the talisman, Yellow Wolf spun around. “Hear my cry, Ruler of Hell! Claim this wandering soul for it is yours. Linger in the mortal realm no more!”

As he ended the mantra, Yellow Wolf extended four fingers at the face on the window. Due to the previous experience, this time, the face understood Yellow Wolf’s meaning instantly after he saw the four fingers. He nodded silently and disappeared. The two parties cooperated seamlessly. After the face disappeared, Yellow Wolf completed his theatrics and pasted the talisman on the window with a flourish!

“There is no need to worry this time! With the talisman given to me by my grandfather, it will definitely not return again!” Yellow Wolf sighed deeply. This livestream was much more difficult than he had expected, filled with endless tests and trials. He glanced at the window with some measure of fear. He was afraid that ‘Lee Jiu’ would continue to return, so he hurried to prepare to leave.

“Alright, we shall move on now.” Yellow Wolf picked up the phone, opened the door, and walked out.

In the underground corridor, the cold wind blew, and children’s laughter tingled down the corridor.

Once Yellow Wolf exited the sickroom, he felt a chill run down his spine. He turned to the phone, and he noticed that the chatroom was going haywire all over again. This time, not only his livestream, the whole platform was lagging from the overload.

The viewership at that instant broke the platform’s all-time record.

“What is it this time?” Yellow Wolf turned around, and when his eyes landed, a chilling air crawled up his feet to his scalp.

Standing several steps behind him were four ghosts dressed in patient’s garbs standing in a row!

Their bodies were twisted in such a way that they did not appear human at all, and the expressions on their faces only worked to accentuate that point!

All of them looked at Yellow Wolf quietly. Then the patient in the middle pointed at himself and then pointed at the three ghosts beside him before raising his arm at Yellow Wolf and extending four fingers toward him.

Four?

When the strange man in the patient's garb showed him four fingers, Yellow Wolf felt like the blood in his body rushed to his heart, attempting to overload it. Pain radiated from his chest, and his head was going light. If he was not in the middle of a livestream, he would have tossed the phone away, turned the other way, and run for his life.

...

Calm down! You are inside a haunted house! These are all human actors! Everything will be fine; everything will be fine! Yellow Wolf tried his best to convince himself, but his body had started to spiral out of control. His legs could not stop shaking.

The man who was normally so good with words was rendered speechless. The cold air caressed his petrified body, and he sensed that the four characters gathered before him were incredibly unique.

Even for people who were born with deformities, they would not have grown up to these strange states. Their limbs were contorted into weird binds. Their bones were not structured like a normal human's. Some of them had their eyes gouged out, and only two dark holes remained in their skull. Another had pupil-less eyes that would occasionally roll around in their sockets. The four patients were arranged in a straight line. The dim lights showered down on them, and Yellow Wolf only then realized that all four of them did not possess a shadow!

"Don't come any closer!" A scream escaped from his lips. At that moment, Yellow Wolf had lost the cool that he had shown inside the room. He finally understood that he had not been interacting with Lee Jiu but the actors inside the Haunted House. After that point registered in his mind, another question surfaced the next second.

Where has Lee Jiu disappeared to then?

He remembered that when he was on the phone with Lee Jiu earlier, the man had sounded different from usual, like he was in serious trouble.

Lee Jiu has worked at a Haunted House for so many years. He is an experienced prop designer within the industry. To be able to make him say things like that, it can only mean that this place is really haunted!

Cold sweat kept sliding down his face. Before Yellow Wolf had gone there, he had done a lot of research regarding the ghost stories that surrounded Chen Ge's Haunted House, and at that moment, all the ghost stories surged into his mind, enveloping him in endless fear.

I should have left when I had the chance!

Alas, regret was already too late. The four characters started to move. Their distorted bodies teetered unevenly as their expressions slowly changed until they hissed dangerously and charged at Yellow Wolf with a roar!

These are not human beings! This Haunted House is really haunted!

Yellow Wolf's lips fell open, but words failed to escape from them. Fear flowed out of his eyes, and he felt like he was about to faint from a lack of oxygen.

"Big Wolf, why have you run out on your own? From the beginning, you have been talking to yourself. This is different from the script that we have rehearsed!"

The sickroom door that about several meters away from Yellow Wolf was pushed open at that moment, and following Yellow Wolf's requirement, Lee Jiu walked out after painting his face scarily.

Hearing Lee Jiu's voice, Yellow Wolf's frozen heart seemed to have welcomed a warm ray of light, and his brain recharged and reassumed control of his body. He turned back around and saw Lee Jiu. He sucked in a deep breath and was about to scream for help when the phone in his hand vibrated noisily.

He lowered his head out of habit to look, and Yellow Wolf saw the name that showed on the caller ID—Lee Jiu.

Lee Jiu is calling me? Then who is this Lee Jiu standing before me?

He touched the accept button with shaking hands. Yellow Wolf used the dregs of strength that he had left and raised the phone to his ear.

“Big Wolf? I can’t contact Jinyuan and Cold Guy anymore! I am currently hiding near the entrance. You have to come to me immediately! There is something seriously wrong with this Haunted House!” Lee Jiu’s voice came out from the phone—it was filled with nervousness and anxiety. “I am not kidding with you! You have to leave! Now!”

“I know you are not kidding with me...” Yellow Wolf looked at his phone dumbly and then lifted his eyes to inspect the Lee Jiu who was walking toward him. “But the problem is... now there are two of you!”

An indescribable fear crawled into his body through his pores, and this was way beyond Yellow Wolf’s threshold. He screamed and launched himself at Lee Jiu, who was in front of him, like his life depended on it. There were four monsters behind him, and there was only one in front of him. At that moment, Yellow Wolf’s biological instinct compelled him to make this choice.

“Have you lost your mind? I am Lee...” Before he finished, the mentally-collapsed Yellow Wolf had already reached his side. He gripped his backpack and swung it heavily at Lee Jiu. Lee Jiu had been busy putting on his make-up earlier, so he had no idea what had happened. In that state of innocence and ignorance, he was smacked in the face by Yellow Wolf’s backpack.

“I am Lee Jiu! F*ck! You’re going to ruin my make-up!” Lee Jiu reached out to grab Yellow Wolf, but the latter resisted like crazy. After all, in his mind, he was being attacked by a ghost, so of course, Yellow Wolf was going to struggle like crazy to escape. In the struggle, Yellow Wolf abandoned his backpack and the phone, which was still livestreaming. He barreled down the corridor, screaming all the way.

“Yellow Wolf!” Lee Jiu held his injured nose. His voice became more nasally from the attack. He was quite worried about Yellow Wolf, so he quickly chased after the man. The two visitors, one running in front, the other chasing at the back, disappeared from the third-floor basement.

The four employees in the patient’s garbs gradually slowed down. They shared a look with each other, and they felt like they were being excluded from some kind of fun.

The white eyes turned slightly around, and the ‘patient’ in the middle had his black hair lifted up from his scalp. The anger in his heart could not be suppressed anymore. When he first appeared, the visitor had shown him three fingers. After he finally gathered three employees, the visitors had shown him four fingers instead.

Now that he had gathered four employees, after fulfilling the man’s unreasonable request, the man had left without even a word of thanks for him. This was such a waste of the employee’s time!

This was too much! Such disrespect! He should not be forgiven!

Dangerous and scary wounds surfaced on the pale faces. The four angry employees shed their disguise out of fury, and they showed their true faces. The corners of their lips cracked out, and they groaned darkly. Then, the whole building seemed to come alive, and behind the half-open sickrooms, a few more dark-gray arms reached out into the dark.

....

The chains scraped against the floor, creating a bone-chilling noise. A shadow that was pulled long by the light stood alone in front of the Li Wan Private Hospital’s entrance.

“They have split up?” Wearing Doctor Skull-cracker’s apparel, Chen Ge held the hammer in one hand and stopped before the hospital door. He lowered his head to look at the message sent to him by Tong Tong.

“Someone is conducting a livestream at the third-floor basement of the hospital!”

“I have allowed taking pictures, I have allowed recording videos, and now you people have started livestreaming inside my Haunted House, have you? Have I been too kind with the degree of freedom that I’ve given them? Have they forgotten who the boss of this place is?” Chen Ge was a good-natured person, and it was rare for him to get angered unless they stepped over his bottom line.

The spikes on the hammer dragged against the ground, and Chen Ge in the skin mask moved to the third-floor basement of the hospital.

“Where have they gone?” The corridor was dark, and there was no one around. However, the temperature was curiously low. Taking out his phone, Chen Ge was about to contact Tong Tong when he noticed a black-colored backpack and a phone abandoned outside Sickroom No. 4.

“A black backpack? I remember a visitor carrying this with him. He should have entered with that creep.” Chen Ge did not go to pick the items up immediately. “If the backpack and the phone have been left here but the people has gone missing, it can only mean that they abandoned them out of fear. I wrote in the worker’s rulebook that they do not need to hold back once they encounter people who are using their phones to take picture and record videos inside the Haunted House. Could the owner of this backpack be the hidden host? Is it possible that the phone left there is still in the middle of livestreaming?”

After clearing so many Trial Missions, Chen Ge’s power of observation was much better than most. Standing away from the phone camera’s view, he removed Doctor Skull-Cracker’s apparel and then walked to stand beside the black backpack.

“Who is so careless to have left their stuff unattended here? Thankfully, we have surveillance cameras to ensure one hundred percent safety of our visitors.” After saying that, Chen Ge turned to the phone lying at the side. “Whose phone is this?”

He picked up the phone, and the chatroom was lagging. Following Yellow Wolf’s disappearance, the popularity of his stream did not decrease. If anything, it only continued to rise, and he was only a few steps away from reaching the top.

“A livestream?” Chen Ge had done livestreaming before. When he conducted his mission at the Third Sick Hall, he had even been taught a few tricks on livestreaming. “Good afternoon, everyone. I am Chen Ge, the boss of the Haunted House at Western Jiujiang’s New Century Park. Can anyone tell me what happened here earlier?”

Whenever he introduced his Haunted House in public, Chen Ge desperately wished to include the whole address of his Haunted House so that there would be no mistake. The website was lagging, and after a few refreshes, Chen Ge got a brief idea of the whole process.

The host who was responsible for this livestream was Yellow Wolf, nicknamed Big Brother Wolf. He had claimed that he was a descendant of a long line of powerful diviners, and he seemed to have encountered an actual ghost during the livestream. Then, he was so scared that he abandoned his phone and absconded on his own.

When Chen Ge saw that many messages claiming that his Haunted House was really haunted, he felt weirdly exposed, but when he noticed the viewership of the livestream, a glint appeared in his eyes like he had come upon a valuable treasure.

“Actually, all of you have been tricked by Yellow Wolf. How can there be real ghosts in this world? I believe that he was behind everything that you saw earlier.” Once Chen Ge said that, he garnered the dissatisfaction from Yellow Wolf’s loyal fans.

Chen Ge was not angered. He picked up Yellow Wolf’s backpack and soon discovered some problems. “Earlier, someone said that there was a family heirloom, a jade pendant worn by Yellow Wolf, and it would crack on its own when he ran into evil spirits. The pendant had nine cracks once he arrived at my Haunted House, but take a look at these...”

Chen Ge pulled out a bunch of similar-looking jade pendants from the backpack, and there were plenty that were already cracked. “These are jades with horrible quality. This whole bunch here is not even worth much.”

Chen Ge conducted the indictment in front of so many viewers, but that was just how open and clear Chen Ge was.

He placed the jade pendants back inside the backpack and opened another pocket. It was filled to the brim with paper talismans with a red background and black characters. Some of them even had the price tag still attached to them. “These are the talismans that his ancestors have left for him, are they? And supposedly, there are only a few of them in the world. Look here, the purchase price is five cents each. How much is he selling one for on his Taobao shop?”

With the truth placed before everyone’s eyes, there was no need for argument. Chen Ge replaced Yellow Wolf’s stuff and turned to address the camera. “Running into a real ghost inside a Haunted House? That is all a show directed by Yellow Wolf himself. If you would like to see a real ghost and supernatural livestream, I would recommend that you follow me instead.”

Chen Ge did not feel that shameless for using this opportunity for advertisement. “My account name is Western Jiujiang Haunted House, and the profile picture is the gates of my Haunted House. I livestreamed for some time in the past, but it kinda fell to the wayside after things got a bit too busy. If there’s a chance in the future, I will bring everyone a real supernatural livestream to search for the real ghost stories that are hidden in the shadows of this city!”

Chen Ge took out his phone and logged into the streaming account that he had not been using for a long time already, and he advertised himself shamelessly in Yellow Wolf’s stream. After he did all that, the follower number for his account experienced a drastic increase, and in fact, some of the viewers in Yellow Wolf’s room managed to recognize him.

“After this round, the viewership should shoot over 250,000.” The other company had invested a lot in Yellow Wolf to help him gain traffic, and the platform itself had been promoting Yellow Wolf since the start of the week, so of course, Chen Ge was not going to let that go to waste.

After he was done promoting his own personal account, it was time to advertise his own Haunted House. Perhaps because the platform that Chen Ge used was different from Yellow Wolf’s, this kind of open advertisement attracted the platform’s ire, and it did not take long for the official party to temporarily ban Yellow Wolf’s livestream room.

Looking at the darkened screen, Chen Ge felt quite saddened and empty. “As I should have known, opportunities are given to those who are readied and prepared. I should have spoken faster in case this happened.”

Deactivating Yellow Wolf’s phone, Chen Ge looked at his account’s follower number, which was still rising, and he revealed a smile. “This brother has gifted me a very big present. I should personally thank him myself.”

Putting his backpack and phone away, Chen Ge put on Doctor Skull-cracker’s apparel, the human skin mask, and lifted the hefty hammer.

To thank Yellow Wolf, Chen Ge decided to track the man down himself, to show his appreciation in person.

In the end, Chen Ge discovered Lee Jiu and Yellow Wolf in Li Wan Private Hospital's morgue. When he arrived, the two were already unconscious, but thankfully, their vital signs were still stable, and they did not need immediate medical attention. The child's handprint behind Yellow Wolf's neck had already disappeared. Tong Tong was the one behind it—he had been influencing the phone call between them.

“Go and get me the trolley from the underground morgue.” Chen Ge dragged the hammer and turned to order the patient who guarded beside Lee Jiu. “Don't worry, I am not going to blame you. Feel free to scare such visitors who insist on using their phones inside the Haunted House even after multiple warnings. Furthermore, I believe that they are here to create problems, so if anything, you have done a very good job.”

“We are staffed with the best doctors, and I plan to invest in a whole set of modern medical equipment when there's enough money so that the visitors can really enjoy themselves without any worry when they are at the Haunted House.”

Seeing how open-minded Chen Ge was, the patient who shifted his weight nervously quickly nodded and prepared to leave.

“Wait a minute.” Chen Ge turned back to look. “Why are you leaving in such a hurry? Was it you alone who scared these two until they fainted?”

The patient glanced at the autopsy tables that were covered with white cloth, and after some hesitation, he nodded.

“Li Wan Private Hospital needs a leader, and you're not bad. I will focus on cultivating you in the future.” Chen Ge was not just joking—he never joked with his words. “It will be a harsh journey to evolve into a Red Specter, but becoming a Half Red Specter is still easy enough.”

The patient was dumbfounded. He was honestly enjoying himself when he scared the visitors earlier. The group of ghosts had chased the two for almost ten minutes. It was not until the two men fainted that they realized that perhaps they had crossed the line...

The image of that scary man flashed through their minds, and many patients dispersed in a hurry. Only this most honest man had stayed behind. Actually, he felt rather guilty about the whole thing. He had tried his best to satisfy the visitor's request, but in the end, he had realized that he was being toyed with. That had caused the ghosts of the entire hospital to go on a rampage. Now that the visitors had fainted, he felt like he was the main culprit, so he had stayed behind to accept the punishment.

He was ready to be punished, but to his surprise, Chen Ge not only did not blame him, he even promised to help him evolve into a Half Red Specter. This kind of change in emotion aroused a strange and indescribable feeling in his heart that was consumed by resentment.

“Alright, stop standing there dumbly. Please go and get the trolley from the underground morgue and transfer them out of the scenario.”

The patient drifted away in a haze of joy. Meanwhile, Chen Ge squatted down next to Lee Jiu and Yellow Wolf and started his inspection. “Lee Jiu has make-up on his face. Why would a visitor like him come to my Haunted House and pretend to be a ghost? Is he trying to scare my workers?”

“Yellow Wolf came to my Haunted House and started a livestream. He planned to expose the design of my Haunted House before tens of thousands of people. Lee Jiu came to my Haunted House to masquerade himself as an employee to wreak havoc. These two have a clear separation of responsibility—this was definitely planned.” Chen Ge found a small make-up bag in Lee Jiu's pocket, and inside it was an access card for the futuristic theme park. Currently, futuristic theme park was still not open to the public, and the internal attractions were kept under wraps. To gain access, one needed an access card.

“As I suspected, they are related to the futuristic theme park.” Chen Ge replaced everything that he had found. He did not confiscate anything. “The futuristic theme park is opening soon, so there is no more time to waste. I need to release the four-star mission to the public before they open for business!”

Standing up, Chen Ge dragged the hammer and left Li Wan Private Hospital.

At the second-floor basement of Li Wan Residence, Shinozaki and his female assistant were focused on undoing the tape in the room. This was the mission given to them by Wei Jinyuan. However, to their consternation, several minutes ago, Wei Jinyuan's bone-chilling yell for mercy had come from a deeper part of the building.

Neither of them had been that courageous to begin with, and Wei Jinyuan's scream only caused their already unsteady hearts to race even faster.

"Do you think we should go downstairs to take a look?" Xiao Xia asked out of politeness even though her desire not to do so was plainly written on her face.

"Let him be, we should leave this to the professional. After all, Wei Jinyuan did say that he works at a Haunted House, so I believe that he has the capability to handle everything on his own." Shinozaki coughed awkwardly. When he saw the handprints on the back of Wei Jinyuan's neck earlier, he had known that something like this was bound to happen.

"Then, what should we do now?" Xiao Xia asked a very key question. Even though Wei Jinyuan did not appear like he had a fully functioning brain, at least they had felt a sense of security when they were with him. Now that Wei Jinyuan had been 'attacked', the two were left to deal with the monsters and ghosts on their own.

"We can't panic." Shinozaki thought about it and came up with a good idea. "We should wait here. Wei Jinyuan has a partner inside the adjacent building. He will come over here after hearing the man's scream. We will just follow him."

"Okay." Xiao Xia glanced at the door that was left ajar. Beyond that was the darkened corridor. "Should I go close the door?"

"Hmm. We will pretend like there is no one in this room, and we'll observe the situation outside through the peephole.

"But we have already taken down the tape on the door, haven't we?"

"Now is not the time to mind such details."

The two closed the door, stayed guard beside it. Shinozaki leaned against the door and looked out through the peephole. All he saw was darkness—there was nothing that he could glean. Xia Xia leaned against the wall. Cold sweat kept flowing down her face. For some reason, she was feeling incredibly panicky like there was a third individual in the room with them.

“Sir, why do you think all the furniture was covered with tape?”

“I have no clue,” Shinozaki answered absent-mindedly. He adjusted his posture, trying to figure out the best position to get the best view through the peephole.

“Is the tape to prevent the objects from cracking open? Is it possible that the furniture knew how to move on its own? All the gaps were taped shut. Do you think it’s because the drawers can suddenly open on their own? The house owner taped up all the gaps to prevent that from happening?” Xiao Xia still had not realized how scary the situation that she was describing was.

“Open on their own? Why would the drawers open on their own?” Shinozaki turned around to look at Xiao Xia.

“Perhaps there were things hidden inside the furniture, or maybe there are entities that human can’t see that will go through the furniture.”

“Entities that are invisible?” Shinozaki’s face paled slightly, but he tried his best to maintain his calmness. “In any case, that is a wonderful idea to put in my comic. Not bad, we’ve been here for only several minutes, but we have come across two wonderful ideas already.”

“Sir, I think we should leave. This place gives me the creeps.” Xiao Xia looked around nervously, and she realized that the DVD player in the living room, which had previously been off, had been switched on.

“Isn’t that a good thing? The creepier, the better! I want those people who say I only know how to draw one kind of comic to see that a real artist is able to master any genre!” Shinozaki had a bad temper, and there was some truth behind that criticism because he only had those few comics in the same genre to show. The more that he thought about it, the more angered he became.

“When we entered this place, was the DVD player on?” Xiao Xia did not pay attention to what Shinozaki said. She studied the player curiously, and while she was watching the machine, the signal light of the television in the living room came on as well.

“Quick, look!” Xiao Xia gasped in shock. “Sir! We seem to have triggered something!”

“Don’t panic.” Shinozaki signaled for Xiao Xia to calm down. The two of them walked slowly to the television.

“Someone was probably remote-controlling it. I encountered this at a Japanese Haunted House. This is not good. That scary Haunted House boss is coming to get us soon!” Shinozaki inspected the television. Perhaps he had touched some button because the television screen suddenly lit up.

The cold light fell on the two’s faces, and they turned to the television screen in unison. The video quality of the old television was not that good, but the two managed to immediately identify that the video on the television was showing the living room that they were in.

Everything was the same; it felt like someone had placed a camera on top of the television to record everything that happened in the living room.

“A surveillance video? But why would someone install a video inside their own home?” Shinozaki and Xiao Xia stared at the screen, too afraid to even move a muscle. Ten seconds had passed, and the two realized that the television screen was still showing the same image. The video appeared still because nothing had changed.

“Since the surveillance is taken of their own home, it seems that something strange must have happened here, and the homeowner wanted to find out the truth.” Shinozaki pulled open the drawer at the bottom of the television cabinet. There was a collection of discs without labels inside. They seemed to have been recorded by the home owner himself. “The clue to escape might be hidden among these discs.”

Shinozaki focused on searching for clues inside the drawer while Xiao Xia kept her eyes on the television screen. She had this feeling that something was moving in the supposedly still image.

“Is that a bug?” Xiao Xia walked a few steps forward and leaned her face as close to the screen as possible. She studied the door of the bathroom in the video. The door had been left half open, and right next to the doorframe, a few strands of black hair could be seen.

“That looks like hair.” When the television was first switched on, there had been nothing near the bathroom, so the few strands of hair were a new addition. Xiao Xia’s mind was filled with confusion. She was about to get Shinozaki to take a look when the strands of hair in the video started to wiggle on their own.

“The hairs are moving?” The quality of the video was so bad that she had to lean close to take an affirmative look. However, just as she leaned toward the screen, a woman’s face poked out from inside the bathroom!

“Ah!” Xiao Xia screamed, and she was scared until she bounced back and collapsed on the sofa. “Ghost! Sir! In the television! She’s inside the television!”

The room was not that big, and it was so quiet. Once Xiao Xia’s scream shattered the quietness, even Shinozaki was given quite a scare. He put the discs that he was holding down and lifted his head to look at the screen. Inside the television, a woman’s face could be seen reaching out from inside the bathroom.

It was quite a pretty face, and the thing that caused Shinozaki fear was that no matter how far he had moved away from the screen, it felt like the face was still staring right at him!

“It’s fine, don’t be so easily scared. This is merely a common trick in Haunted Houses.” However, Shinozaki’s rambling belied the fear he was feeling. He wanted to switch the television off, but he failed to find the power button.

“Sir, I think we should go now, and we will return once we have more people with us.” Xiao Xia’s face was pale from the scare. Just that once, and it was enough to take the fight out of her. She felt like the energy had left her body, and she could barely get her legs to move. “This is too scary. Sir, you can stay to finish the tour on your own if you prefer, but I will surrender now.”

As she tried to stand up, Xiao Xia held the armrest for support, but as she turned around, she saw it. Just about three meters away from her, a woman’s face was reaching out from inside the bathroom, a perfect replica of the image that she had seen in the video!

“I think I’m suffering from hallucinations from all these scares.” Xiao Xia turned to look at the television. The video was still frozen at the image where the female human was poking out from the toilet. “Yes, this is what it showed on the television.”

She turned her head around, and a woman materialized before her. She had a pretty face and a body that was covered in cuts. A copious amount of blood bled from the open wounds.

Her face was contorted in fear. As Xiao Xia lost her consciousness and tipped backward, she used her last vestige of strength to scream, “Ghost! There’s a ghost!”

Shinozaki was still researching why the woman’s eyes in the videos were able to follow his every movement. He believed that the boss had replicated the technique used by Da Vinci when he painted Mona Lisa. But before he settled on a reason, he heard the scream from Xiao Xia. When he turned around, he was also petrified by fear.

They had checked the room several times already—it was definitely empty. However, now, a woman covered with blood and open wounds had appeared before them!

This was not a mere scare but a direct shock to the heart!

The warning from Xiao Xia meant that Shinozaki was somewhat prepared. Even though he was shaking like a leaf, he did not lose control over his body just yet. The woman blocked the door out of the living room, and Shinozaki grabbed Xiao Xia and raced into the bedroom.

BANG!

The door slammed shut. Shinozaki’s heart was racing madly, and he started to consider the possibility of calling the police.

“What do I do? What do I do now?” Shinozaki was so scared that he had forgotten that he was inside a Haunted House. Thankfully, the realization came to him moments later. “Right, I am inside a Haunted House!”

He leaned against the door and started to yell out the door loudly. “We surrender! We don’t want to continue this tour anymore! Please leave! Please go and leave us alone!”

There was no response from outside the door; there was no sound of footsteps either. Shinozaki supported Xiao Xia, and neither one of them dared to open the door.

“How about... we just stay in here until the boss comes to get us?”

After experiencing that, Shinozaki was not going to put up a front anymore. This Haunted House had a comprehensive understanding of the human psyche. Other Haunted Houses would relax their visitors first and arrange the scares at places where the visitors least expected it. But this Haunted House was different. They would scare the visitors head-on until their souls left their bodies. After their guard was completely destroyed, the next scare would come at them from a different angle, continuously scaring them with endless horror.

“In the future, I will definitely invite those other comic artists who look down on me to come here.” There was no noise coming from outside the door, and Shinozaki did not know what to do next. “The woman has blocked the door to prevent us from leaving. There has to be a reason it is designed like this. Could it be that there is a clue to leave this place hidden inside this bedroom?”

Leaving the guard post at the door to Xiao Xia, Shinozaki started to explore the room. He noticed something strange immediately. The table inside the bedroom had a few unique pens placed on it.

“Graphite pen, ballpoint pen, and marker pen?” Shinozaki recognized them easily. “The graphite pen is used for the outline of a character, the ballpoint pen is for the details like patterns on the shirt and eyelashes, while the marker pen is for the bigger shading. These are all necessary pens for drawing comics! Could it be that the owner of this house is a comic artist?”

A visit at the Haunted House might have led him to get to know a new colleague, that was something that Shinozaki did not expect. He walked to the table and flipped through the manuscript on the table.

Initially, he was just flipping through it out of curiosity, but he was soon drawn into it.

“I’ve never seen this kind of art style before. One glance at it, and it’ll send chill down your spine. It has to be a genius who drew this comic! Is he going to spearhead a new movement in the comic industry?”

Chapter 695 - Congratulations, My Friend

Chapter 695: Congratulations, My Friend

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Both of Shinozaki's eyes were glowing like he had stumbled upon a treasure. "This work has broken beyond the limitations of the current industry, and it possesses its own unique style. Isn't this what I've been striving for?"

He studied the manuscripts on the table, but just flipping through them caused his body to shake. These were simple characters, but they seemed to come alive with the artist's hand. He seemed to be able to draw out the complications of the human heart with his pen. There was no gory scene and no disgusting monsters; he merely drew the image of human beings in his eyes, and it caused Shinozaki's spin to tingle with apprehension.

...

"This is a complete inversion of the current style; it feels like the artist has taken the perspective of a ghost to analyze the situation of man." Shinozaki had been in the business for more than a decade, and he was a recognized voice of seniority. In recent years, he had been trying to change his style. He had visited many other famed artists, but none of them had made as big an impact on him as the art before him.

"I need to find the artist! I have to meet the comic artist that is staying inside this Haunted House!"

Shinozaki was true professional. He realized the value of the manuscript with just a glance. He wished to learn, and it would be wrong to say that the thought of claiming this manuscript as his own did not cross his mind. However, he quickly banished the evil thought. A comic artist who purposely resided inside a Haunted House to do his work should be respected; this was a true artist.

Fear and excitement filled his heart, and even Shinozaki did not know what kind of situation he was in. He looked through the whole manuscript and provided his professional opinion, and he certainly had a very high opinion of it.

“Unfortunately, there are only a few manuscripts here. I wish to know what happens next.” Shinozaki was already a fan. He mumbled to himself. When he finished, the lowest drawer of the table slid open a tad. The color of this drawer was different from the table that it was attached to. In fact, upon closer examination, Shinozaki realized that it had a different shape from the other drawers. It felt like it was forcibly stuffed there.

“What a strange drawer.” It felt like something was guiding his hand as Shinozaki reached out to pull the drawer open. Inside was a whole stack of manuscripts and a homemade comic.

“There’re so much! How long has he worked inside this place?” Shinozaki sat down on the floor, and the more he read, the more baffled he became. “Each of the panel is of the highest quality. Just how self-critical does one have to be to achieve a standard like this? But how come I’ve not heard of such a master in the industry before? When did the artist join the industry?”

He sped through the manuscripts. He desperately wished to take all the manuscripts with him so that he could study them slowly at home.

“Sir, it’s quiet outside now. Shall we go out to take a look?” Xiao Xia, who was recovering, noticed how out of it Shinozaki was when she woke up.

“Let’s wait, there’s no need to rush. When the time’s up, the boss will come get us. What’s that idiom again? Yes, lie in wait!”

Shinozaki scanned through the pages quickly. He wanted to find out how many stories were written in the manuscripts. “When we leave this place, I need to contact the boss! If I cannot meet the artist in person, I will pay as much as he demands to obtain all of these manuscripts!”

Without knowing it, Shinozaki had reached the end of the drawer, and he picked up the last page. The paper was yellowed, a sign that it was something old. However, the drawing on it was fresh, like the page had just been drawn!

“How did he manage to do this?” Shinozaki looked at the page dumbly. He was the character being painted on that page!

A realistic character coupled with a strange style and the perspective chosen by the artist was curious. It felt like he was hiding inside the drawer while drawing the page. Shinozaki glanced subconsciously at the drawer that he had pulled open, and there was a pale face inside looking at him with eyes shining with anticipation.

“So, this is how...” His eyes rolled upward, and Shinozaki collapsed to the ground.

Not knowing what had really happened, Xiao Xia left the post by the door and rushed to Shinozaki. “Sir, wake up! What happened to you?”

When there were two, at least they had each other’s support. Now that she had been left alone, that stubborn horror grew exponentially in her heart. On the verge of collapse, Xiao Xia did not know what to do. She took out her phone to call the emergency number. However, when she unlocked the screen, her phone was grabbed by another hand.

She turned and saw that the room door was half open, and there were three people standing behind her!

The man on the left had a blanched face, the man on the right had his chest dyed red, and one of his hands had the wrist chopped off. Xiao Xia had seen the woman in the middle before—she was the ghost that had escaped from the bathroom earlier!

“Don’t be afraid, we are...” The middle-aged man with the pale face started to speak, and Xiao Xia collapsed to the ground next to Shinozaki. For visitors who were visiting Chen Ge’s Haunted House for the first time, a 3.5-star scenario was too difficult.

“I didn’t plan to scare her.” Ol’ Zhou looked at Duan Yue and Bai Qiulin awkwardly. The other two were feeling quite helpless as well.

“Actually, this is not our fault. This is Danian’s fault for showing himself, and that caused the man to faint.” Bai Qiulin helped placed Xiao Xia and Shinozaki in a comfortable position, and the ease that he showed proved that he was used to doing this.

“I agree with you. The main responsibility falls on Danian.” Duan Yue nodded.

Hearing the three’s conversation, Yan Danian crawled out from the drawer. He wanted to defend himself, but he did not know what to say. In the end, he crawled down in the corner and mumbled, “It was so hard to find an artist that approves of my work, and I just had to scare him until he fainted.”

Seeing how self-deprecating Yan Danian was acting, Bai Qiulin, Ol’

Zhou, and Duan Yue shared a laugh. The three of them walked to Yan Danian's side and helped the saddened comic artist up off the ground.

"Danian, congratulations. You have finally found the professional approval that you seek." Ol' Zhou pulled Ya Danian into a light hug, and he sighed with sincerity.

"I knew that my years of helping you check your manuscript wouldn't go to waste. I know you will reach success eventually." Duan Yue nudged Yan Danian's shoulders.

"But the most important thing is, do not forget about us when you're rich and famous!" Bai Qiulin, who normally was so reticent and aloof, had a face full of smiles at that moment.

The four of them had shared the same room, and they had walked the last leg of their life essentially together. They did not curse the world or become corrupted by hatred after death; instead, they chose to help and support each other.

Yan Danian was not much of a speaker. He did not know how to express his feelings, and he could only nod in constant succession.

"There's no need for words, we understand."

"Danian, you'd better get back to your drawing. Leave these two to us."

"We need to get them to the underground morgue soon. If we're late, we might cause them trouble."

After Ya Danian returned to the comic, and the three shared a look.

"Danian doesn't need the protection of us three anymore."

"That's right, I wonder if the three of us will disappear once Danian's wish is fulfilled. After all, we'd have no reason to stay anymore." Ol' Zhou discussed the issue with Bai Qiulin.

"Why worry about that now? Come and help me!" Duan Yue dragged Shinozaki out of the room. "I overheard the girl say that this man is a famous hentai artist. He seems to be a well-respected figure in that genre. Do either of you know what hentai is?"

“No idea, it’s my first time hearing that term as well.” Bai Qiulin turned to Ol’ Zhou. “Ol’ Zhou, you are the most knowledgeable among us, do you know what hentai is?”

Ol’ Zhou shook his head and held his chin while he contemplated. “Perhaps it’s a new comic genre. When there’s a chance, we can ask the boss about it.”

...

“That’s not a bad idea. When Boss Chen finds out that Danian’s work has been approved by a master, he will be overjoyed.” Duan Yue dragged Shinozaki out of the room. Ol’ Zhou and Bai Qiulin carried Xiao Xia, and the group soon departed from the residential area. A few minutes after they left, the sound of footsteps echoed down the corridor.

“Jinyuan? Wei Jinyuan?” A sharp voice came from the door. The door was pushed open, and Lee Changyin peered into the living room. “The tape on the door has been torn off, so they must have been here.”

Lee Changyin had been exploring the adjacent building. After he reached the third-floor basement, he had realized that all the buildings were connected, forming a giant underground maze.

What they had seen earlier was merely the tip of the iceberg; the real horror was buried underground. A normal Haunted House tour would grant entry to five people at most, and the exploration would be limited to twenty minutes. A tour like Chen Ge’s, which allowed ten people and had a time limit of forty minutes, was extremely rare.

Lee Changyin did not understand it until he saw the underground scenario. This place was so big that it would have been fine if twenty visitors entered at the same time.

When Wei Jinyuan screamed for mercy, Lee Changyin had ventured deep underground. When he heard the scream, he had hurried toward the sound, but unfortunately, he had been one step too late. Walking down the corridors that looked like perfect replicas of one another, he feared that he might get lost. In the end, he had decided to retrace his steps, to investigate the reason behind Wei Jinyuan's 'accident'.

"This room is empty as well. I've been here for twenty minutes already, and I have not encountered anything. Is this place even completed yet?"

The scenario was big, so naturally, it required a large number of actors to fill up the space. Lee Changyin had thought that he was unlucky because he had not run into any actors.

"I can't even find someone to ask." Lee Changyin walked down the corridor with a drawn face. "I can't keep wandering like this. Looks like I'll have to go search for the actors myself."

Since he was born, the man had rarely felt fear. When he was young, his parents had taken him to visit a doctor, and after an examination, the doctor had discovered that his brain was different from normal.

The side of the frontal lobe was very active, but the limbic cortex and prefrontal lobe were underdeveloped. Even though he had the appearance of a normal person, his way of thinking and worldview were different from most.

He tried his best to mimic a normal person, but whenever his attention slipped, his true self would emerge. He had attempted many different jobs in the past, but he was always fired due to a myriad of reasons. That was until he joined Xin Hai Nightmare Academy.

Hiding inside the dark and eerie Haunted House, he could finally shed the disguise and assume his real identity.

Scratching his neck, Lee Changyin walked out from the residential area. He scanned his surroundings expressionlessly. "The boss gave us four clues, but I have lost contact with the other visitors, so how can I find the clues? What exactly happened to them when I was off exploring on my own?"

"Wei Jinyuan isn't a coward, and he's spent his days working at a Haunted House. It is extremely abnormal to have him scared like that. Could the rumors about this Haunted House be real?"

Lee Changyin frowned, and in his focus, he did not notice the bush by the residential area swaying.

Nor did he notice the man wearing a trench coat holding a pair of scissors trailing him.

...

The signboard hanging above the hotel entrance lit up and showed the name of the hotel. Cold drafts picked up constantly on the quiet street. The lights flickered, stretching Zhang Jingjiu's shadow longer than it should be.

"How does one act like a hotel owner?"

He wore the costume that Chen Ge had pulled out from the Specter's changing room. He sat by the wooden table, held his chin, and tried to think.

"Since I've decided to work here, I should try my best to impress. Scissors is naturally talented, or I should say, he has been training for a long time for this job. To achieve his level of professionalism, I have a lot more to learn."

Zhang Jingjiu glanced left and right. After ensuring that there were no visitors around, he sneakily took out his phone and went online to search for guides to become a qualified actor. He was absorbed in his study when footsteps came from the street. A man and a woman were running down the junction with panicked expressions.

"There's a light! Follow the boss' orders! We need to go to the light!" The man was somewhat calm. He dragged his female partner as they rushed to the hotel entrance. They were running like they were participants in a one-hundred-meter sprint. They collapsed to the ground once they reached the entrance.

"Stop, I can't run anymore." The girl waved her hands about. The man had reached his limit as well. He coughed and sucked in the air hungrily as his heart skipped.

"I have some visitors!" Zhang Jingjiu arranged his outfit. This was his first time greeting visitors inside the Haunted House, so he was a bit nervous. Putting away his phone, he walked to the door and greeted them. "Do you... need help?"

Zhang Jingjiu was not supposed to say that, but he felt so sorry for the two visitors, and he could not help himself from wanting to extend a hand.

Hearing the strange voice coming from behind them, the man jumped up from the ground and staggered back several steps before he stopped. Seeing the man's reaction like a mouse running into a cat, Zhang Jingjiu shook his head with a smile. Just how much despair had the man been through to make him react in such a manner due to a simple greeting.

"Don't get any closer! He's an employee here!" The young man acted like he was in a war. The woman next to him quickly stood up as well and sidled next to the man.

"I am an employee here, but I am different from others." Zhang Jingjiu did not know how to explain himself. "Why don't you come in to rest first? There are water bottles inside the hotel."

"Do you think I will believe an obvious trap like that?" The man retreated some more until his back was almost pressed against the wall of the 'dog house' across the street.

"Can you not understand simple English? I am a new employee. The boss didn't assign me any tasks to scare the visitors. The sub-scenario that I'm responsible for is a pitstop for the visitors to rest in." Zhang Jingjiu waved his hand at them. "Boss is worried that you visitors might not stand the pressure in such a tense setting, so he purposely came up with a place for you to rest."

Zhang Jingjiu was not lying; he just did not know the true purpose of the hotel that he had been tasked with supervising.

In reality, Li Wan Hotel was a very special place. In the real Li Wan City, the hotel was both the most dangerous place and the safest place.

It was the same inside Chen Ge's Haunted House. When the owner was Zhang Jingjiu, it would be the safest place in the small town, but when the role was taken over by Chen Ge, the hotel would take on a different atmosphere.

Zhang Jingjiu was the most kind-hearted and innocent actor at the Haunted House. Actually, it did cross his mind to scare the visitors like his colleagues. He thought back to his memory of the real hotel boss and the crazy little games that he had come up with.

However, this was his first day at work, and he was still not mentally prepared. When he saw the sorry state that the visitors were in, he could not bring himself to harm them anymore.

...

“Come in, this will be your shelter.” Zhang Jingjiu thought that since he was unable to scare the visitors, he had to at least let them feel his sincerity. That was the most basic requirement for someone in the service business.

The woman hesitated, but the man was already preparing to leave.

“Don’t go over there!” With each of Zhang Jingjiu’s words, the male student took one step backward.

“I really don’t have an ulterior motive. I just thought that you might need a place to rest.” Zhang Jingjiu sincerely wanted to do them a favor. Why was it so difficult?

“Wang Dan, shall we trust him?” the girl whispered into the man’s ear.

“Haven’t learned from the lesson before? All the employees are either wolves in sheep’s clothing or demons wearing human skin! How can you be naïve enough to think to trust any of them?” The male student dragged his tired body to run into the ‘dog house’ opposite from the hotel.

When the girl noticed her partner retreating, she made to follow.

Seeing the two visitors voluntarily enter the ‘dog house’, the smile on Zhang Jingjiu's face was hard to describe. He did not know whether to laugh or cry. "I'm a wolf in sheep skin or demon wearing human skin, huh? Looks like I have seriously lowered the overall professionalism of the workers here."

...

"Wang Dan, I really cannot run anymore, let's rest for a moment." Wang Dan's girlfriend leaned against the wall to rest. As breaths came more evenly, she realized for the first time how tiring a Haunted House visit could be.

"Now is still not the time to rest; this house gives me the creeps." Wang Dan's instincts were now incredibly sharp after many visits to Chen Ge's Haunted House. He scanned the yard before his eyes landed on the wooden doghouse.

"We didn't come across any pet-related objects at the other places, so there must be some scares hidden here." Wang Dan felt like there was a ball of fire burning in his chest, but he did not dare slow down. There was nowhere in the scenario that was safe. Stopping would only mean being captured.

He slowed his breathing, leaned against the wall, and looked outside.

The hotel opposite was still bright with lights, but the worker did not wander away from his earlier spot; he was probably still waiting for them to return. The streets were dark, and he swore that he could see shadows flitting through it. For a moment, he believed that he saw someone waving at them from across the street.

The hotel was not safe, the streets were not safe, and now they had reached the limit of their physique; they could not run anymore.

"How about we just surrender?" Wang Dan's girlfriend suggested. Tears were rolling in her eyes, and her make-up was already ruined.

"I've visited this place many times, but not once have I managed to walk out on my own two feet. The time for the tour is almost up, so it'll be too much of a waste if we give up now." Considering how tired his girlfriend was, Wang Dan decided to temporarily hide inside that building. "We hid inside many empty buildings earlier, and nothing happened. Hopefully, it is merely my imagination that this place is different from others."

Closing the gate of the yard, Wang Dan and his girlfriend entered the ‘dog house’. The door creaked open, and the wind chime that hung above the door tingled, as if informing the owner that he had a guest.

“It’s quite artistic to hang a wind chime above the entrance.” Wang Dan looked inside the room. The place had Japanese-style décor. A corridor in the middle split the space in two. Half-opened doors led to rooms on either side. The floor was laid with tiles, and several slippers were placed at the entrance.

“Wang Dan, do you smell that? It smells like air-freshener.” Wang Dan’s girlfriend pulled on his shirt as she shuffled carefully forward. “Other Haunted Houses purposely create horrible smells to accentuate the horror, but this place invested in so many air fresheners, as if afraid that the stench might disgust the visitors.”

“Wait a minute!” Wang Dan suddenly stopped. He whipped his head around to look at his girlfriend. “What did you just say?”

“This house smells heavily of air fresheners...”

“I told you there is a problem with this place! We need to retreat; we’re going somewhere else to hide.” Wang Dan had just stepped into the room. They had not even moved onto the corridor, and he was already prepared to leave.

“What’s the problem with air fresheners?” Wang Dan’s girlfriend still had not grasped the connection.

“This smell is absent at other houses, it’s only limited to this place, and the smell is very intense. It can only mean that the person intended to use the scent to cover up the original smell in this place!” Cold sweat was sliding down Wang Dan’s forehead. “Last month, during an open lecture by forensic officer Liu, for one of the cases, after the suspect dismembered the body, he hid the body parts in different rooms of his house, and he would smuggle a small part out every day. Afraid that the smell might betray his secret, he purchased a large number of air fresheners to cover up the decay. When the law enforcement discovered the body parts, Doctor Liu discovered the traces of air freshener left on the body parts, and that was how they traced the case back to the killer.”

Wang Dan did not imagine the knowledge that he had learned in class would ever be applied during a Haunted House visit. If he was studying for another course, it would have been fine, but he was studying forensic science.

“You mean the smell of the air fresheners is to cover up the smell of a dead body?” Wang Dan’s girlfriend started to panic as well. Then again, who would be calm when they came across a murder case while in the middle of a Haunted House visit?

“It is not necessarily to cover up the smell of decay; it could easily be another smell.” Wang Dan was no longer the reckless and explosive teen. The experience inside Chen Ge’s Haunted House had made him a stand-up young man.

Pulling the door open, the wind chime jingled sharply once more. Initially, Wang Dan did not think much of it, but just as the silvery tingle faded away, a very weak male voice said, “Save me, bring me with you.”

Standing at the door, Wang Dan turned back to look. There was no one in the dark corridor.

“Did you hear the voice of a man calling for help?” Wang Dan turned to ask his girlfriend, and she shook her head.

“Is it because I’m too nervous that I’ve started to hear things?” He pulled the door closed.

When the door touched the wind chime, the man’s voice reappeared. “Please do not leave me here! Save me!”

This time, Wang Dan was certain of the voice that he heard. He lifted his head and tried to see where the sound came from.

“The wind chime?” The man’s voice seemed to come from inside the wind chime. Wang Dan opened the door again, and he reached out to grab the wind chime. He shook it lightly, and on the inside wall of the wind chime, a man’s face started to surface.

Weak, frightened, cowardly, and the pitiable, the man who hid inside the wind chime was like a small animal who had been tortured by his owner. Wang Dan could not explain the emotions that surged through him. When he saw the face in the wind chime, his first reaction was not fear but pity for the man.

“Things shouldn’t be that simple.” Wang Dan held the wind chime in his hands, and after a moment’s contemplation, his eyes slowly widened. “Is it trying to take advantage of our sense of pity? Damn, I almost fell for it!”

He reached his finger into the wind chime and poked the man’s face. His fingertip phased through the face. “I knew it, this is just a projection.”

“Save me! Do not abandon me! Please bring me with you! I beg you! I beg you!” The man’s pleas entered Wang Dan’s ears. Wang Dan shook the wind chime and studied it closely. “I cannot tell at all where the voice came from. This wind chime is surprisingly high tech.”

“Stop shaking! Stop shaking! You’re going to alert the big dog!”

“Big dog?” The sound of footsteps came from the stairs that led to the basement. A different stench permeated the air. Even the profuse number of air fresheners was unable to cover up this smell.

“Run! Bring me with you! The dog is coming!” The man’s face paled drastically, and he was so scared that his face was unrecognizable. Wang Dan had not been that scared in the beginning, but influenced by the man in the wind chime, his heart started to shake.

“Of all the buildings here, this is the only building with a doghouse, so this place should be related to a dog. Could there really be an angry dog kept here?” Animals were different from human actors. They could not be easily controlled when they went on a rampage. Wang

Dan believed that even Chen Ge would not have reared a large dog inside the Haunted House. “The dog probably means something else.”

Before Wang Dan understood the meaning, the stench hit his nose. The shadow of a man appeared at the end of the corridor. He was medium-sized, and his face was shrouded in shadows. The smell seemed to originate from him.

“Run! Run for your life!” the man screamed.

“That’s the dog?” Lights streamed into the room from the open window. Wang Dan got a close look of the man’s face. He looked similar to the man in the wind chime. “Even the appearance is similar; this has to be a trap. One to build up the atmosphere and the other waiting for the opportunity to strike. They cooperate from both ends, pushing the visitors into a desperate situation!”

Wang Dan tried to analyze the scenario. He felt like he had understood the common ploy used by Chen Ge’s Haunted House.

“What are you talking about? I just want to leave! I need to leave this place!”

“This man before us is probably not alive; it’s more like to be some kind of mannequin. In other words, the real horror is not that ‘dog’; its presence is merely to create some kind of pressure. If I really follow the order of the man inside the wind chime, I’m afraid we will only slowly walk into the boss’ trap!”

Wang Dan’s explanation baffled the man inside the wind chime. He had placed his hope in the visitor, but the man seemed to have completely altered the meaning of his words.

“I...”

“I am not the person that I once was. I shan’t be so easily tricked. This time, I shall walk out on my own two feet!” Without wasting time to hesitate, Wang Dan yanked the wind chime down from the wall and turned to run.

When he moved, the mannequin in the corridor fell to the ground with his limbs. Like a hungry dog, it charged at Wang Dan!

If he did not leave the room earlier but chose to explore deeper into it, it would have been over already. Wang Dan and his girlfriend rushed ahead while the half-dog half-man mannequin chased after them. It weaved through the darkness and lurched out from the house. The monster did not seem to be limited by the scenario; it could move through the entire small town freely!

“It’s coming after us!” The fearful male voice entered Wang Dan’s ear.

“It can move out from its sub-scenario?” Wang Dan was surprised. He and his girlfriend were exhausted; they could barely run any longer. Seeing as the distance behind them had closed, Wang Dan and his girlfriend found a random building and crawled into it.

BANG!

The door was slammed into heavily. The half-dog half-man monster seemed hellbent on capturing them.

“Wang Dan, what should we do now?” Wang Dan looked at the monster going berserk outside the door, and he was afraid, but he did not let it show on his face. He forced himself to appear calm as he said, “It is as I thought—the wind chime and the mannequin are working together! The only reason it is chasing after us is because of the wind chime’s command!”

“I’m commanding it?”

Wang Dan did not give the wind chime the chance to explain itself. He raised the wind chime and tossed it in the direction opposite from the way he was running!

“Wait! Wait a minute!” In the air, the wind chime screamed for mercy, but no one cared about him anymore. The monster’s eyes were trailing the wind chime, and it did not show any interest in Wang Dan at all.

It ran in the direction opposite from Wang Dan. It bit the wind chime in its jaw. To prevent the wind chime from escaping again, the monster did not replace the wind chime but hung it around his neck.

Seeing that the monster had stopped chasing them, Wang Dan was quite excited. For the first time, he had managed to use his intelligence and bravery to obtain a victory in Chen Ge’s Haunted House.

“Boss Chen’s Haunted House is beatable. With courage and attention to detail, there is a chance to clear it.” Wang Dan suddenly gained a lot of self-confidence. He glanced at the time, thinking that perhaps this visit might be his personal breakthrough.

“The monster finally left.” Wang Dan’s girlfriend had her hand on her chest. “How about we surrender now? If we stay any longer, who knows what else will happen?”

“No way, there’s only ten or so minutes left. We need to survive until the end!” Wang Dan and his girlfriend conversed in the living room, but the door to the bedroom creaked open on its own. The sound of a music box drifted out, and a girl’s mumbling could be heard lacing through the music.

“Mother and Father have entered the basement. After Father came out, he locked the door. He carried a black bag with him. He touched my head and said, ‘Disobedient children will be taken away by the ghosts.’

“I lay in bed, thinking back to what mother said.

“Before going to bed, I need to pull up the cover; before going to bed, I have to close the window; before going to bed, I need to check the armoire; before going to bed, remember to check the space under the bed... if I’m sleeping alone.

“Father left home carrying the bag, leaving me behind.

“I looked under the cover, out the window, inside the armoire, under the bed, but I cannot find mother.”

The strange melody coupled with the girl’s innocent voice created an eerie feeling. This new sound appeared so suddenly that both Wang Dan and his girlfriend closed their mouths instantly as they turned to look at the bedroom in unison.

The music box was still playing, and a new female voice appeared.

“Red eyes are watching you. You can’t see me, but I can see you.

“I move with your gaze. I hide under the bed, inside the armoire, behind the window, before crawling under your covers.

“I lay down behind you and above you, but you still cannot see my red eyes.”

Chapter 699: Me and My Last Determination

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Both the girl and the woman's voice sounded quite normal, but after combining them with the strange environment and curious lyrics, everything took on a different meaning.

"The first part was sung by the girl. She was looking for her mother, and the latter part was probably sung by the mother. They were in the same room, but the daughter cannot see her mother, and the mother cannot reach out to touch her daughter; this can only mean that one of them must have died and transformed into a ghost." Wang Dan's analysis was sharp and to the point. His girlfriend was already shaking.

...

"This room is not safe either; we should leave."

"No." Wang Dan did not choose to leave like before but shook his head determinedly. "Before the voice of the woman and the girl came, did you hear the sound of a music box?"

"Music box?" Wang Dan's girlfriend was confused. "I think I did, but what does that have to do with us leaving?"

"Of the clues provided by Boss Chen, one of them is about a music box that can play on its own. There is a clue hidden in this room!" Wang Dan's eyes were shining with determination like a saintly duty had fallen on his shoulders. "Boss Chen gave us four clues, and even though ten of us came in to visit, none of the clues have been found. In fact, all of us have lost contact with one another.

"Of course, a large part of it is because they asked for it themselves, but think about it, we are a group entity. If we choose to give up due to the weakness of our teammates, then in the end, it will be us who are looked down upon!"

Wang Dan released his girlfriend's grasp on his arm, and he took one step toward the bedroom.

“Don’t go over there! So what if we’re looked down? It’s not like that hasn’t happened before. We should stop while we still can.” Wang Dan’s girlfriend tried to persuade him.

“The clue is just beyond this door. Will you choose to be a coward for life or be a hero for a few minutes?” Wang Dan glanced at his phone. “We have less than ten minutes left. I need to do something that I haven’t done before.”

Gritting his teeth, he pushed open the bedroom door and quickly scanned his surroundings. The windows were closed, and there seemed to be a group of shadows hidden behind the thick curtain. The drawer of the make-up table was left half-open, and the chair was toppled on the ground. The mattress on the single bed was dangling off the edge, blocking one’s view of the space under the bed. The bedsheets were rumpled on the mattress, but the shape looked like someone was hiding underneath them.

All the furniture mentioned in the song was present in the bedroom. It lent an air of authenticity to the lyrics.

“The sound seems to come from the armoire.” The environment inside the bedroom was strange. Wang Dan’s pupils darted about as he slowly moved to the armoire. Holding the edge of the furniture, he was about to yank the door open when a light knock came from behind him.

“Who is it?” His heart almost jumped out of his throat. He turned around and saw that it was only his girlfriend who had moved to the bedroom door. She had accidentally knocked into the door.

“Wang Dan, let’s go. Something’s not right about this place,” Wang Dan’s girlfriend urged nervously. She actually was not that attached to Wang Dan; she simply did not have the guts to leave on her own.

“Don’t worry, we’ll be done soon.” Wang Dan took a deep breath to steady his heart, and he pulled the armoire open. A light scent of mildew wafted out. Wang Dan soon discovered the music box sitting on the second layer of the armoire. It looked like an antique, hand-crafted, and should cost quite a bit.

“This looks quite pretty.” Wang Dan picked up the music box. “This is one of the clues provided by Boss Chen, but where is the hint to escape?”

The singing of the woman and the girl continued. Wang Dan slowly got used to them, to the extent that he did not realize that the singing was gradually getting closer to him.

“Am I supposed to break it open?” When the song finished playing, the figurines on the box stopped dancing. The box closed on its own to reveal a piece of paper stuck to the back of the lid.

“Found it!” Wang Dan picked up the note excitedly.

“Of the dungeon behind the armoire, the fridge in the corner of the kitchen, and the morgue at the end of the hospital, one of them leads to the exit. One leads to a new life; the other two lead to death. Why not leave everything to fate? (Please replace this note when you’ve done reading it, or else no one can tell what kind of punishment will befall you).”

Wang Dan was thrilled to have found the clue, but after he read the note, he frowned again. “This is all about luck. If the choice is correct, then everything’s fine, but if the choice is wrong, then it’s really over.”

Wang Dan was familiar with Boss Chen; the correct choice might not really lead to the exit, but the wrong choice would definitely land them in despair.

“Giving up now means wasting all our effort so far. I’ll go for it no matter what!” Wang Dan cheered for himself. He replaced the paper note in the music box. However, when his finger touched the lid, the music box that had stopped playing started to turn again.

The lid was forced open, and two figurines twirled on their stage. But strangely enough, there was a new paper note stuck between the two figurines.

“There’s a second clue?” Wang Dan reached out to take the paper, but as his arm reached into the armoire, a chill surged through his fingertips.

“What is...” His hand was grabbed by another pale hand. He glanced into the armoire and saw a little girl curled up in the depths of the armoire.

“Disobedient children will be taken away by the ghosts!” The girl’s singing suddenly sped up, and she crawled out from the armoire.

“Where did she come from?” Wang Dan flung his hand back and tried to retreat when his body bumped into something. He turned back and made contact with a pair of searing red eyes.

“I move with your gaze. I hide under the bed, inside the armoire, behind the window, before crawling under your covers. I lay down behind you and above you, and now you have finally seen my red eyes!”

The woman’s face that was almost completely decayed leaned close to Wang Dan. Wang Dan was so startled that he almost fainted. He bit on his tongue and forced himself to stay awake.

“Get away!” Wang Dan did not dare keep his eyes open. He waved his arms around behind and charged toward where he believed the exit would be. When the woman first showed up, Wang Dan’s girlfriend had already started retreating. The couple ran out of the haunted room one after the other.

Perhaps Wang Dan’s swinging punches provoked the ghosts because the pair of mother and daughter flew out of the room to chase after them. Without stopping to take a breath, Wang Dan and his girlfriend sprinted down the street for the third time!

“Where are we going now?” Wang Dan’s girlfriend screamed into the street.

Wang Dan’s tongue was pulsing with pain, and he rambled through his words. “I saw the clue! There are three possible spots for the exit! Follow me!”

Both mentally and physically, he was at his limits, but he was so close to the exit that Wang Dan could taste it. His brain worked on overtime. “An armoire is too common and too hard to find! We haven’t even seen a fridge or a kitchen before! So, we can only go to the last option—the morgue at the end of the hospital!”

Retracing their steps, Wang Dan led his girlfriend back to Li Wan Private Hospital.

“A one in three chance! I don’t believe I’ll be that unlucky! I will clear the scenario this time!”

Returning to where it all started, Wang Dan decided to use his last determination to prove everything. “This time, I will succeed!”

He dragged his girlfriend back the way that they had come. Using every ounce of energy that they had left, they ran like their lives depended on it. Zhang Jingjiu sat at the entrance of the hotel, reading an article on his phone on how to be a good actor when he heard the rushing of footsteps. Slowly lifting his head up, he saw Wang Dan and his girlfriend run past him, looking much more haggard than before.

“Looks like they are really enjoying themselves. Screaming and sprinting are the best ways to vent your internal pressure, and perhaps that is the purpose behind a Haunted House’s existence.” Zhang Jingjiu came to his own conclusion. He understood that his job was not as simple as it appeared—it had a second layer of meaning.

Wang Dan and his girlfriend raced back to Li Wan Private Hospital. They charged into the building like this was the last chance that they had. The sickrooms were left half-open, and the patients holding the records discovered these two familiar individuals. They were surprised by Wang Dan’s courage, but with that surprise, more and more patients walked out from the sickrooms.

As they scared the visitors, the ghosts were able to harvest the negative emotions that they needed, but more importantly, it was just fun to scare people.

“Do not turn back! Hesitate, and you will perish!” Racing down the stairs, Wang Dan and his girlfriend dashed to the third-floor basement.

“This should be where the clue meant when it said the end of the hospital.” Wang Dan held his girlfriend as they lurched through the corridors. When they passed a room whose door was painted red, they sensed the footsteps trailing behind them disappear all of a sudden. A hoard of patients had been originally on their tail, but why would they suddenly give up?

“What happened?” Wang Dan was too familiar with the actors. Once a visitor had earned their ire, they would not stop until that visitor had fainted. This was his second time entering the hospital. They would not allow him to leave so easily this time.

“The workers wouldn’t be so charitable. The only reason they stopped chasing after us can only mean that there is something even scarier ahead of us!” Wang Dan knew that perfectly well, but there was only one way forward. The few rooms in the depths of the hospital seemed to be a taboo. It was so quiet that even the background music inside the Haunted House had disappeared.

“Wang Dan...”

“Hush.” Wang Dan was unable to find the door to the morgue; he could feel that something was wrong. When he turned around, he realized that the door to the red room that he had passed earlier had opened on its own.

“Is someone in there?” Wang Dan’s brain was running low on oxygen because he had been running non-stop. He was so lightheaded that he was seeing double.

All the doors so far were white, and only this door was painted red, as if warning the actors and visitors from getting too close. The air around them thinned. Wang Dan desperately wished to find the morgue; he knew that he did not have much time left.

He pushed the many doors open, but he could not find the morgue. A light scent of blood trailed through the air. Wang Dan heard a second sound appearing behind him, the sound of a pair of heels!

The heels stepped on the ground, but every step felt like a stomp on his heart. His body was shivering, and his clothes were wet with sweat. Wang Dan’s girlfriend fared even worse. Her legs were completely useless, and she leaned on Wang Dan, depending on him to drag her forward.

“Just what is hiding inside that room? Even when we were chased by the group of patients earlier, I wasn’t this afraid! My body is shivering involuntarily, and every cell in my body is urging me to run.” The sound of heels came closer. The suffocating pressure closed in, causing Wang Dan and his girlfriend to break under pressure. The two of them finally chose a room to hide inside temporarily.

“This way!” Wang Dan dragged his girlfriend into the sickroom. They held their hands over their mouths, afraid that they might make an accidental peep to attract the thing’s attention. The heels clicked on the ground before stopping right outside their door.

She was just outside!

Wang Dan and his girlfriend’s eyes were filled with terror. They were trapped!

Their hearts pounded. Wang Dan gripped the doorknob tightly and pressed his whole weight against the door. No matter what, he was not going to open the door!

The doorknob was turned by the person outside, but since Wang Dan held the doorknob so tightly and blocked the door with his body, the person was unable to push the door open. After a while, the person outside seemed to have lost their patience. The clicks of high heels echoed down the corridor. The person seemed to have wandered away.

“We’re saved.” Wang Dan was so covered in sweat that it appeared like he had just taken a bath. “We can leave...”

Before he finished, the sound of heels clicking began again. It went through each sickroom before stopping outside Wang Dan’s sickroom for the second time. Wang Dan and his girlfriend’s hearts were held in suspension. No one knew what would happen next; all they could was wait.

Ten seconds, thirty seconds, one minute...

Two minutes passed, and there was no still sound from outside. After the heels stopped outside their door, there was not a peep again.

“Has the person already left, or is she waiting outside still?” Wang Dan leaned on the ground and peaked through the gap.

A heavy scent of blood hit his nostrils. He saw a pair of bloody red high heels standing outside the door!

The front of the heels were facing the door, and droplets of blood were sliding down the side of the heels. Wang Dan saw a drop of blood trickle down the shoe before landing on the ground.

“That is not a dye! It’s real blood!” Wang Dan had studied forensic science. His eyes widened with disbelief. “These high heels are dyed red using real blood!”

His pupils focused on the high heels, and another drop of blood was sliding. Just as the droplet was about to touch the ground, Wang Dan felt a chill on the back of his neck like the drop of blood did not land on the ground but on the back of his neck.

“It’s leaking?” He turned his head up subconsciously and saw the upper half of a woman’s body reaching into the room through the window in the door. She had been watching them!

The bandage unfurled to reveal a mess of flesh and blood. Curses and resentment held up the body, and the woman in red reached out to grab Wang Dan. The latter’s mind was blank, and his eyes were filled with the woman’s face. Wang Dan’s hand that held the door slowly weakened as his body careened backward.

All the good memories of his life flashed through his mind, and in that instant, Wang Dan swore that he saw a kingdom of paradise.

Zhang Jingjiu saw Wang Dan and his girlfriend running away. After sighing, he went back to studying acting. He said some awkward lines at the table that was empty. He was so focused that he did not notice a slender figure hiding at the left side of the entrance.

“There’s a rumor saying that the reason this place is so popular is because all the actors are real ghosts. Today, I think I shall test out that rumor.” Lee Changyin lowered his head, and a dangerous glow escaped from his eyes.

Chapter 701 - Ghosts Look Like That?

Chapter 701: Ghosts Look Like That?

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Lee Changyin was the ‘most popular actor’ at Nightmare Academy. There was an air of madness around him that did not need to be faked. He only needed to be himself to get the madness required of the character to come to life. Standing in the shadow of the hotel entrance, he put on the pregnant woman’s outfit that he had found in one of the buildings and took out the make-up tools from the waist bag that he wore on him at all times. With just a few strokes, he looked completely different from before.

With his naturally soft features and the help of make-up, even though he still had short hair, Lee Changyin looked quite like a woman already.

There’s no wig, I’ll have to make do with a cap.

He ran into the nearby building, found a bedsheet, rolled it up into a ball, and shoved it under his shirt, not caring about how dirty the bedsheet was.

When all his preparations were complete, Lee Changyin returned to the hotel entrance. He studied Zhang Jingjiu inside the hotel from the corner of his eyes. After he prepared his emotions, he uttered in a voice hoarse with tears, “Can you help me? I’ve lost something.”

His voice was completely different from before, sounding very much like a girl. Zhang Jingjiu was still studying acting, but when he heard the cry for help, he quickly put the phone down.

Is it a visitor? He thought that it was finally time for him to shine. He stood up and walked toward the entrance.

Seeing that Zhang Jingjiu was hooked, Lee Changyin immediately retreated to an alley between the hotel and another building. He stood deep inside the alley so that the people outside could only see his shadow.

“Is there anything that I can help you with?” Zhang Jingjiu saw the person hiding in the alley, and he thought it was because the person was like Wang Dan who treated everything that they saw in the Haunted House as a ghost.

“I have lost something very important. Can you please help me look for it?” It was still a very pitiable female voice that said that, but Lee Changyin’s expression was quite venomous at that moment. After he shed his disguise, that was how he looked for real.

“Of course.” Even though Zhang Jingjiu was suspicious, he gave it some thought and realized that there was nothing to worry because this was their own territory. He entered the alley and noticed the bump on Lee Changyin’s stomach when he got closer.

A pregnant woman?

A page of the worker’s manual flashed across Zhang Jingjiu’s mind. Due to safety considerations, pregnant women were not allowed entry into the Haunted House.

If it’s not a visitor, then it has to be an old worker here...

Zhang Jingjiu slowed down. He knew very clearly what kind of ‘things’ took up the roles of actors in Chen Ge’s Haunted House.

Noticing the man slow down, Lee Changyin’s eyes narrowed, and he became more cautious. They both suspected that the other was a ghost, and both started to act strangely because of it.

“My stomach is very pained. Can you please help me? I lost the thing around here.” Lee Changyin continued to speak in his fake voice.

“What have you lost?” Zhang Jingjiu was almost certain that he was dealing with an old employee, so it did not cross his mind that a visitor might have put on a disguise to scare him. Even though he was afraid, considering that he would need to work at the Haunted House for a long time, he naturally had to form good relationship with his seniors, so he suppressed his fear and did not run and leave.

Hearing Zhang Jingjiu’s answer, Lee Changyin’s expression darkened further. When a normal person encountered a pregnant woman that said her stomach was painful and she was searching for something inside a Haunted House, should their first reaction not have been to call the ambulance or contact the owner?

But the man took him seriously like he was sincerely going to help him find the thing that he had lost.

“I’ve lost something very important. He has accompanied me for nine months. I was about to see him soon, but I accidentally lost him,” Lee Changyin ‘cried’ even harder.

Just hearing the description was enough to make the hair on Zhang Jingjiu’s arms stand. He grumbled internally, So, the important thing that she has lost is none other than her child!

Zhang Jingjiu reached his hand into his pocket and silently pressed the walkie-talkie’s button, but no one gave him a response telling him what to do, so he could only rely on himself.

If she’s not a madwoman who has sneaked into the Haunted House, then she will be an old employee who ran into some trouble. Even though I’m new here, at least I’ve been through a lot with Boss Chen, so I will not be looked down on by the old employees.

Thinking back to his experience in Li Wan City, Zhang Jingjiu’s jaw set with determination.

No matter how scary it might be, can it be scarier than Li Wan City?

With that in mind, Zhang Jingjiu walked to the ‘pregnant woman’ and volunteered his help. “Don’t worry, I’ll help you look for it.”

The way that he walked over to help without hesitation caused Lee Changyin some panic; things were not going as expected. Is this man really a ghost?

As Zhang Jingjiu got closer to him, Lee Changyin immediately adjusted his emotions. He tried to regain the upper hand so that he could siphon useful information out from Zhang Jingjiu.

“Did you lose it around here?” Zhang Jingjiu asked. The light was dim. Since he believed that the other person was a ghost, he did not switch on the light, but he did place his hand inside his pocket, holding the walkie-talkie, so that he could call Boss Chen for help should the need arise.

“Yes, I dream of him every night. He said that he’s very cold. He wishes to climb onto the bed, to share the warmth of the cover...”

“Fine, fine, you can stop now.” Zhang Jingjiu shrugged helplessly. “I’ll help you look for him. After all, I have nothing better to do at the moment.”

Zhang Jingjiu’s answer stunned Lee Changyin’s once again. The man did not get scared by his scary story but promised to help him solve his problem. This man is truly abnormal!

Lee Changyin felt like he had stumbled across the final secret of Chen Ge’s Haunted House. The place could get so popular probably because none of his actors were actual people!

As Zhang Jingjiu got closer, Lee Changyin’s whole body tensed; he wished to get further confirmation. He lifted his made-up face. Their eyes met, and Zhang Jingjiu shivered, but he also confirmed his previous thought; the thing before him was definitely the Haunted House’s old worker.

“Big Sister, don’t worry, no matter what you’ve lost, I will help you find it. If we cannot find him today, we’ll continue the search tomorrow. After all, we have plenty of time.” Zhang Jingjiu forced himself to calm down.

Hearing that, Lee Changyin’s pupils shuddered. What does he mean by that? We have plenty of time? After you hear a pregnant woman tell such a scary story, the response is that we have plenty of time? Is it because I’ve been discovered, or does he wish to harm me? That shouldn’t be—this is just a Haunted House visit.

The distance between the two closed. The light was dim. They seemed to be purposely getting close to each other, both parties wanting to prove something.

“Don’t worry, I’ve come to help you.” Zhang Jingjiu walked to Lee Changyin’s side. He studied Lee Changyin’s face like he was trying to memorize the man’s features so that he could complain about ‘her’ to Boss Chen after work.

Lee Changyin also studied Zhang Jingjiu closely. This was his first supernatural encounter in his life, and he wanted to remember what a ghost looked like.

Standing in the dark alley, Zhang Jingjiu and Lee Changyin studied each other. Neither of them spoke; they had not interacted directly with a ghost before, and the atmosphere turned strange and awkward.

Zhang Jingjiu coughed once. He had worked in sales before, so his personality was more outward than Lee Changyin. He knew they could not just stand there all day, so he decided to move the conversation forward.

...

“Don’t panic, can you tell me what the thing looks like? Like the size or length, or does he possess any special characteristics?”

“Describe him to you? Size, length, and special characteristics?” Lee Changyin was stumped by Zhang Jingjiu’s question. Is that even a question that a living human would ask?

He had merely come up with a story earlier; he did not expect the man to treat it so seriously. But since the tale had already been spun, after a moment’s hesitation, Lee Changyin stated, “His face is blurred, and he’s covered in blood. He keeps crying, complaining about how cold it is.”

“Well, it’s going to be a bit troublesome if he has a blurred face.” Zhang Jingjiu held his chin and started to contemplate it seriously. “If he said he’s very cold, then he might be placed inside the freezer, but if that’s the case, then his blood should be frozen, so that possibility is not that high. Let me think where else could cause him this chilling sensation. Oh yes! The hospital’s morgue! Your child probably sneaked into the hospital. I think you can go there and check. Pay attention the sound of crying—the room with the loudest cries should be where your child is hiding in.”

“Are you serious?” Lee Changyin had immense confidence in his make-up technique and acting. He was the best actor at Nightmare Academy, but he started to doubt himself before Zhang Jingjiu. The man cooperated with his story to the best of his ability, but that roused the suspicion in Lee Changyin's heart that he had seen through everything and was trying to lead him to the morgue.

Zhang Jingjiu had no idea what Lee Changyin was thinking. He nodded. "If he's not at the hospital, there's no need to worry. After all, this place is only so big. Eventually, I'm sure you will be reunited with him."

Lee Changyin failed to understand that he had been consoled by a ghost—how would one describe the feeling? It was a little bit scary and quite exciting.

"Thank you, I think I will go there now." Lee Changyin's voice was shaking. He hid himself in the shadows with his head lowered to hide his Adam's apple.

"No problem. After all, we're already family." Zhang Jingjiu thought that the ghost was quite polite and knew how to show her appreciation. It seemed that the other employees at the Haunted House were not as unapproachable as he had first thought.

"We're family? What do you mean?" Lee Changyin's heart raced. Was the ghost going to kill him and seal his soul inside the Haunted House to indenture him there forever as well?

"Currently, we're still unfamiliar with each other since this is our first meeting, but after we work together for a long time, we'll naturally get to know each other better." Zhang Jingjiu squeezed an awkward smile on his face.

"Work together for a long time?" Lee Changyin's heart creaked, and his fists tightened! The true purpose had been revealed! So, all along, the ghost had been targeting him! This man with the strange smile had seen through his disguise, and he wanted him to stay at the Haunted House forever!

Sweat wetted the make-up on his forehead. Lee Changyin knew that a normal Haunted House worker would not have run to him and spoken about a future of them working together should they encounter a pregnant stranger in the Haunted House.

The more Lee Changyin thought about it, the more unsettled he felt. He finally understood why he had been feeling so unsettled since he stepped into this place. This place was really haunted!

“We’ll chat in the future then.” Lee Changyin hurried to leave.

“The hospital on the left side!” Zhang Jingjiu saw Lee Changyin leave in such a hurry, and he scratched his nose. “Did I say something wrong to offend her? It feels like I’ve been wronged for some reason.”

Before Lee Changyin wandered too far away, the walkie-talkie in Zhang Jingjiu’s pocket rang. He quickly took it out.

“Jingjiu, why did you summon me earlier?” Chen Ge’s voice came out from the machine.

“An old worker came to find me and asked me some questions, but don’t worry, we had quite a pleasurable interaction.”

“An old employee came to find you?” Chen Ge was confused. “A normal worker wouldn’t leave their building. Without an anchor, they will continue to weaken. Both of the Red Specters are seriously injured, and they have promised me that they will not actively go and seek out the visitors. Jingjiu, what did the person that you encountered look like?”

“It was a pregnant woman...”

“Okay, I understand it now. That was not one of us; some other party has infiltrated our place.”

“What should we do now?” Zhang Jingjiu was panicked. He really did not think that the pregnant woman was not a Haunted House worker.

“You’ve seen the ghosts and monsters at Eastern Jiujiang. When there’s light in the world, there will be darkness. If there are people like me who uphold justice, there will be people who have wickedness in their hearts. But don’t worry, no matter who it is, if they dare to cause trouble inside my Haunted House, they should be prepared to enjoy an experience of their lifetime.”

“Understood.” Zhang Jingjiu described the pregnant woman’s appearance in more detail to Chen Ge before hanging up.

Putting the walkie-talkie away, Chen Ge stood at the junction. When he first heard Zhang Jingjiu’s report, he had thought that the shadow had sent some of his underlings. But the more he heard the report, the more he felt that something was wrong. The pregnant woman was probably being played by a living human.

There were professional Haunted House actors mixed in the visiting group. They followed the live-streamer Yellow Wolf, and for the sake of effect, some of them might pretend to be ghosts.

“Hopefully, I’m worried for nothing.” Haunted House was Chen Ge’s base, so he could not afford to be too careless. For the sake of insurance, Chen Ge contacted Tong Tong and had him awaken all the ghosts within the scenario so that they could locate the suspicious visitor as soon as possible.

Laughter and cries echoed through the small town. Shadows climbed out from the walls and corners; the hidden spirits were awakened, and they started to wander the streets. In just a few seconds, Chen Ge received the message from Tong Tong and Scissors.

Tong Tong had found the man, but Scissors did one better. He told Chen Ge that he had been following the man. The man acted very suspiciously, unlike a normal visitor.

“Hold on, we’ll move together when I arrive.” Chen Ge glanced at the time on his phone. It was about time for the tour to end.

...

Tossing the pregnancy outfit and bedsheet into a random room, Lee Changyin hustled toward the exit in his mind without even taking off the make-up. He did not dare make too much noise lest he attracted more supernatural beings. He called his colleagues, but no one answered as if he had been isolated in a different world.

As the visiting hour came to an end, the small town turned scarier and darker. The streets that should have been empty filled with shadows. The fog around the town thickened, and one could smell the scent of blood in it.

“It feels like there’s a pair of eyes on me.” Lee Changyin scratched his neck. He was flustered and uncomfortable. He would turn back to look whenever there was a draft. “There’s someone behind me!”

After running around a corner, Lee Changyin suddenly picked up his speed. He switched on the flashlight on his phone and shone it behind him. In the fog, there was a strange man in a trench coat holding a large pair of scissors chasing after him.

“I knew it!” Lee Changyin was still relatively calm then. He knew that the light from the phone would expose his location, so he immediately switched it off. “I’ve been to this building before. After you go in the front door, you can jump out from the back window. I’ll use this chance to lose the monster.”

That was a good idea, but when he started to run forward, he stopped moving.

At the corner of the street, a man wreathed in chains, wearing a doctor’s outfit and dragging a scary-looking hammer, was slowly walking toward him.

Chapter 703 - Scared Until My Illness Has Recovered

Chapter 703: Scared Until My Illness Has Recovered

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Taking pictures, livestreaming inside the Haunted House, Chen Ge had forgiven all that; those were within an acceptable range. After all, they were in a way promoting his Haunted House.

However, to put on a disguise to scare his own people, that was pushing it a bit too far.

...

To Chen Ge, this was a malicious activity and should be punished accordingly. The Haunted House was everything that Chen Ge had, and as the number of visitors increased so did the people who came to cause trouble. If he showed weakness once, it would only invite more trouble in the future.

Li Wan City was a 3.5-star scenario, situated between three-star and four-star scenarios. Chen Ge had just unlocked the scenario, and he had not explored it seriously yet, so the difficulty did not appear not that high. Actually, Li Wan City's scenario still had many hidden treasures waiting for Chen Ge to explore, like the fog that seemed to appear out of thin air and the hidden missions attached to the scenario.

He needed plenty of time to fully understand this scenario, and that was exactly what Chen Ge was currently lacking.

When there's enough free time, I'll work on completing the scenario, but for now, I should deal with the imminent problem first.

Chen Ge wore Doctor Skull-cracker's apparel and stood at the junction—that was a path that one had to take to leave the scenario.

The bloodied doctor's outfit materialized out of the fog. Accompanying the scratching sound of the chains dragging on the floor, Chen Ge walked out from the fog. Under the mask made from human skin, a pair of cold eyes were staring at Lee Changyin quietly.

It was not a gaze that should belong to living human—it was filled with an indescribable chilliness.

For the many years that he had worked at Nightmare Academy, Lee Changyin had met many professional actors, and he could confirm that the gaze that he was seeing could not be perfected from acting. That pair of eyes must have seen plenty of supernatural phenomena and nightmares.

The make-up on his face was ruined. Stuck between a rock and a hard place, Lee Changyin knew that he was cornered. Running was pointless, and it would only provoke the man, so the best solution was to give up the struggle. That way, he might survive with his last shred of pride intact.

“You are the Haunted House’s workers, right?” Lee Changyin forced a smile on his face. “I’ve given up, can you please lead me outside?”

“You’re one of the visitors?” Chen Ge’s voice came out from the mask. He sounded hoarse like he was chewing something hard in his mouth.

“Yes, I signed the disclaimer before I entered. My name is...”

Before Lee Changyin finished, Chen Ge cut him off. “There is no pregnant woman among the visitors today. Our surveillance captured everything clearly. We wouldn’t allow a pregnant woman to enter the Haunted House, so you definitely aren’t one of the visitors,” Chen Ge said firmly like he had dictated the last word on this fact.

“Pregnant woman? Who’s pregnant? I am a visitor. I have surrendered, so please lead me out now.” Lee Changyin started to panic. The man did not seem like he was going to let him go so easily; he kept insisting that he was a pregnant woman, and that was the pretext that he needed to force him to stay.

“Aren’t you a pregnant woman? I can see that clearly with my own two eyes. You are wearing a pregnancy outfit and have a high voice and a pretty face. None of the visitors that we welcomed into the scenario looked like you.” Chen Ge walked slowly toward Lee Changyin, dragging the hammer. “Speak, what is your real identity?”

“I am Lee Changyin! I signed the disclaimer, and yes, I did pretend to be a pregnant woman earlier!” Lee Changyin sensed that things had gotten out of hand. He quickly voiced the truth, afraid that the man might assault him if he explained himself too late.

Chen Ge paused and then continued with a sigh. “Looks like you’re unwilling to tell the truth. In that case, some persuasion is in order.”

Hearing Chen Ge’s words, Lee Changyin’s mind was fraying. “But I am telling you the truth! I am a visitor! Let me out!”

“I am not an unreasonable person, if you tell me the truth, I won’t trouble you too much, but if you insist on lying to me, then I will have to deal with you like how I deal with other petty thieves.” Chen Ge suddenly picked up speed. He raised the hammer and charged at Lee Changyin. “Speak! Who are you!”

The hammer that was covered in spikes enlarged in Lee Changyin’s eyes. He was not going to stand there and answer Chen Ge’s question. However, a question did surface in his mind—why was the iron hammer covered with so much spikes and blood grooves?

The hammer landed on the window just next to Lee Changyin. The cement shattered. Lee Changyin slithered away. Compared to the ‘doctor’ that blocked his way, he now realized how cute the strange man in the trench coat behind him was.

Lee Changyin’s brain was wired differently from a normal person’s. Even at that moment, he could maintain a clear mind. He turned back, and before Scissors could catch him, he crashed through the door next to him. He intended to escape through the back window.

Chen Ge naturally would not let him escape. He had already ordered the shadows to block the window and had Scissors guard the backdoor. He summoned all the free workers and stepped into the building together.

...

“Where are they? Why isn’t the phone working?” A creep who liked to expose himself walked out from the corner of the room. He held his phone and grumbled angrily. “What kind of horrible Haunted House is this? There isn’t even one worker. I can’t believe I held such anticipation before I arrived here.”

Pushing open the door, he stepped out into the street. The town was shrouded in fog.

“When did it fog up?” The man glanced at the time. “The tour is going to end in about one or two minutes; I am not going to waste the entrance fee of fifty RMB.”

With his head lowered, the man started to search for his target. He sneaked up to the flickering shadows in the fog, but he only paid attention to those who had a feminine shape.

“Lights are installed inside this building, so there should be someone inside.” The man soon locked onto his target. When he passed one of the rooms, he caught a person in a pregnancy outfit sitting on the sofa.

“A pregnant ghost? That’s certainly a novelty.” The man chuckled salaciously. He leaped in through the window and started to undo the buttons on his coat. Peeling the coat back, he waited for the actor to scream, but several seconds passed, and the room was still so quiet.

“What’s going on?” He lowered his head to look and saw Lee Changyin in a pregnancy outfit slowly sliding down the sofa. He was foaming at the mouth, and his body kept spasming; he looked like he was about to say goodbye to the world.

“Lee Changyin?” The man’s face paled, but before he realized what happened, twisted shadows with missing limbs started to appear from the corner of the room. “What are these? What the f*ck! Stop! Don’t come any closer!”

When everything became quiet again, Chen Ge stopped the recording on his phone and walked out from the bedroom.

“The Haunted House workers charged forward to help when the creep was about to attack a visitor.” After saving the ‘evidence’, Chen Ge walked out from the room. He exited the scenario to find a few trolleys.

“With the new scenario, it feels like these few trolleys aren’t going to be enough.” Chen Ge had Tong Tong inform the other workers to send all the visiting customers to the scenario entrance.

The noisy commotion flooded into his ears, and his skin felt the warmth of the sun, which he seemed to have not experienced for a long time. Someone held his hand tightly, and that feeling was constantly falling until it finally disappeared. The overly heavy eyelids slowly fluttered to reveal a gap.

“Doc! Is he still okay? It’s normal for us to faint when we visit the Haunted House, but none of us have been unconscious for so long before! Is it possible that he will never wake up again?” The familiar voice entered his brain; it sounded like someone calling him at the edge of heaven. His consciousness slowly settled back in, and his memory reached back from the fringe of his mind.

I’m on a Haunted House visit. Yes, I can remember it now.

Wang Dan tried to open both of his eyes. Even though he tried his best, the only thing that he could do was pull his eyes open slightly.

Yang Chen? The student council president? The seniors from the fourth year? Why are there so many people... Wang Dan wanted to speak, but his pale lips were unable to move.

“Erm... There shouldn’t be any trouble. Don’t worry, based on our experience, he should wake up soon.” The doctor coughed drily. “Don’t crowd around him, step back! Make sure there is a constant air flow.”

The doctors and theme park workers politely asked the people to stand back. Wang Dan looked in the direction of their voices. He was currently lying on the steps of the Haunted House, and around him were the visitors who had gathered there for a show. They were talking among themselves; some took pictures on their phones, some were recording, and there were a selected few that went online to share this via live feed.

I think it's better for me to stay unconscious. Wang Dan tried his best to turn his head to the side; he did not want to gain online fame from fainting at a Haunted House. His eyes moved slightly, and out the corner of his eyes, Wang Dan realized that he was actually not alone.

The ten visitors were arranged neatly on the Haunted House's steps, and their faces looked so familiar. They had entered the place together, and now, they were laid down side by side. Perhaps that was the gathering power of a group. Seeing his teammates, Wang Dan did not feel that bad for himself anymore, and he slowly closed his eyes. At least, I was a hero for a few minutes...

The heat wave was strong, but the sun was not enough to block the visitors' passion. The 3.5-star scenario had opened to the public for the first time, and all ten visitors had fainted; this could only be described as magnificent.

"The f*ck! Thankfully, I did not act on my urge and rush into it. That has to be the most correct decision in my life!"

"This new scenario is too scary! I heard Boss Chen say this is only the preliminary stage for the four-star scenario, and its difficulty is only between three-star and four-star scenarios!"

"If the devil has a name, its surname must be Chen!"

"Boss Chen, hello there! With you at the helm, New Century Park can be said to enjoy a second renaissance. Do you mind sharing how you managed to do that?"

Pushing the trolleys, Chen Ge was surrounded by a group of visitors. He did not expect taking down all ten visitors to cause a scene as big as this.

"First of all, I am glad that the Haunted House has been able to gain everyone's approval. This Haunted House is everything my parents have left me, and it is the project of my life. That is all I can say."

Chen Ge searched for Uncle Xu among the crowd. He had decided to use this chance to spread the name of the 3.5-star scenario and, at the same time, help promote the incoming four-star scenario. However, to his surprise, the effect was far better than he anticipated. The visitors were so excited that he was trapped by them.

"Boss Chen! We know that building a Haunted House is not easy. Finding the inspiration, writing the story, designing the props... you must have faced plenty of trouble, right? What kind of belief enables you to carry on through all of that?”

Seeing the glow in the visitors’ eyes, Chen Ge found it too hard to brush them off. “I’ve poured too much effort into this Haunted House, from building the scenarios to welcoming the visitors. That kind of anticipation and joy is not something that other people can appreciate. Therefore, the difficulties that you’ve mentioned do not really amount to anything. There is a sense of responsibility bestowed upon me, and I tell myself, I need to make the best Haunted House I can, so no matter where I go, I keep it in my heart. Because of that, it has become a natural part of my life.”

Hearing Chen Ge’s answer, some of the visitors could not help nodding. Only someone who poured his everything into this project could have come up with so many wonderful scenarios.

“Here please! Boss Chen! I’m a visitor from Xin Hai! Just half an hour ago, Xin Hai’s most famous Nightmare Academy said that they came here to conduct a learning and communication visit with you. What is your opinion about that?”

“Nightmare Academy?” Boss Chen signaled for the people to part, and he pointed at the few people lying on the steps. “They did come, but they were definitely not here for friendly communication. With regards to that, I feel it’s a great pity as well. In the future, I will make sure to personally visit Nightmare Academy to hash this out with them.”

“Boss Chen! I saw from a certain platform that Yellow Wolf was livestreaming inside the Haunted House, and I saw you in his stream! Can you tell us in detail what really happened? Our whole family of nine and our cat is deathly curious about that!”

“You can follow my streaming account for the details. I will talk about it in the future.”

“Boss Chen, there is an online rumor that your Haunted House is really haunted. Is that real or not?”

“Of course, that’s false. There are no ghosts in the world. Everything is just a rumor. If you don’t believe me, you can point the person who told you the rumor to me, and I will face them in person.” Chen Ge’s smile was always so warm; he treated everyone with the same kindness. “Alright then, I need to go back to work. Even though I own this Haunted House, I am one of its workers, and it is still working hours.”

With that excuse, Chen Ge finally slipped away from the visitors. He sighed in relief after he entered the Haunted House. “Scaring ten visitors until they faint, that should be enough to grab people’s attention and gain some popularity. Hopefully, Director Luo will be able to suppress the negative influence from this event so that it won’t be misused by others.”

Chen Ge provided a very sharp blade to promote the Haunted House and theme park. If used well, it could greatly cut down the futuristic theme park’s opening hype. However, if it was not used correctly, one might cut oneself.

Whenever a new scenario opened, there would be a commotion, and that was the effect that Chen Ge was looking for. Because of that, he had brought two Red Specters back from Li Wan City. Jogging back to the scenario, Chen Ge first found the headless woman to console her before going to Li Wan Private Hospital to find the red high heels.

Actually, the red high heels’ luck was not so good. First, she lost all of her power during the fight with the gluttonous woman, then she was injured during the shadow, Zhang Ya, and Doctor Gao’s battle. Adding injury on top of injury, now she only had a shell left.

“Looks like you’re in a good mood.” Chen Ge sat at the door to the morgue and studied the red high heels in his palm. “You did wonderfully this time. If you wish to, you can come back anytime you like in the future. My Haunted House is always open to you.”

The red high heels’ special power was curse, and that was similar to the shadow. After bringing her back to the Haunted House, he, alongside the accompaniment of all his other employees, formed a contract with her. After she helped all the workers cleanse their curses, Chen Ge would allow her to leave.

The red high heels did not really have a choice but to trust Chen Ge. And every day, she had been trying out ways to convert the shadow’s curse. Most of the curses inside Zhang Jingjiu and Scissors had been cleansed already, but the true difficulty lay with the curse in Xu Yin’s body. He was suffering terribly. If not for his opportune evolution into a Red Specter, he would have disappeared already, tortured by the curse.

Pushing open the morgue’s door, Chen Ge walked to the sickbed that was at the deepest part of the room. On top of the bed lay a cassette tape that was covered in dark gray spots that looked like bruises.

“Rest well, everything will be fine. I am here.” Chen Ge placed the high heels next to the tape and sat down on the bed for ten minutes before leaving.

Perhaps the fainting of ten visitors caused too big a scare. Throughout the whole morning, there was no one else who dared challenge the nameless town again. Everyone stuck obediently to low-level scenarios.

The visitors around the Haunted House gradually calmed down. Chen Ge felt that perhaps one day, the visitors would get used to seeing a few fainted people around the Haunted House entrance.

...

At 2 pm, a few people who proclaimed that they were from Nightmare Academy sought out Chen Ge. They hauled their colleagues back in their cars. One of them was a pair of twins who personally came to apologize to Chen Ge. Chen Ge very graciously accepted their apology and promised that he would visit them if there was a chance in the future.

After the people from Nightmare Academy left, the students from Jiujiang Medical University came. Most of them were Wang Dan's friends. Once they heard that their friend had fainted again, they all went to look after class was over.

"It's not a big problem—he'll soon wake up." Chen Ge came to this conclusion after inspecting Wang Dan's body. Actually, Wang Dan had already woken up a long time ago. As a senior visitor, his ability to suffer these mental scares was far better than the other visitors. Knowing that Chen Ge was kindly giving him the chance to save his face, Wang Dan soon 'woke' up.

"Wang Dan, you've finally woken up!"

"Did you really dare to challenge a 3.5 scenario? You have my admiration!"

The students from the university surrounded Wang Dan, and they did not think that fainting at Chen Ge's Haunted House was something shameful. In fact, they felt as if they were missing out if they did not faint at Chen Ge's place, like something was missing from their university life.

"Not all is lost." Wang Dan forced a smile on his pale face. He lay in the middle of the crowd and looked surprisingly like a valiant soldier. "I've found the key to this 3.5 scenario!"

Wang Dan struggled to turn to Chen Ge. He raised his hand. "Boss Chen, next time, I will succeed!"

"The scenario is built for you all to experience and clear, so naturally, I will always welcome your return." Chen Ge liked spending time with the students—it made him feel younger. Wang Dan and his girlfriend were taken away by the other students. After they disappeared from Chen Ge's view, they surrounded Wang Dan again.

"Wang Dan, what does a 3.5 scenario look like from the inside? How scary is it?"

"I don't think I need to explain how scary it is if all ten visitors fainted from their tour." Wang Dan was still quite weak, and his legs felt like noodles. "The new scenario is a small town, but the scale is huge. I believe it can fit twenty people for one visitation. The place is filled with traps, and the scariest thing is, as time moves forward, the small town itself changes."

"The town changes on its own?" Yang Chen took out his notebook and started to write. "The difficulty will continue to increase?"

"Yes! Fog rolls out on the streets, the telephone signal will be jammed, and more actors will appear to fill up the streets."

"In other words, to clear this new scenario, we need to move fast and find as many clues as we can before the difficulty rises." Yang Chen jotted down everything that Wang Dan said in the notebook; this was precious information that Wang Dan had risked his 'life' for.

"Yes, other than that, I gained some very important information during this visit." Wang Dan thought about it. "Regarding the exit, I found three clues. They are respectively the fridge at the corner of the kitchen, the morgue at the end of the hospital, and the armoire in the room. So, if we try this again, we only need to focus on the fridge, armoire, and morgue."

“Okay, is there anything else that we need to pay attention to?”

“There’s one more. I’m not so sure about it, but I believe it’s true.” Wang Dan hesitated. “Considering the size of the scenario and the possibility of accidents, Boss Chen set up a safe zone inside the scenario. It is at the center of the town, a hotel.”

“A safe zone?”

“Yes, the hotel owner is a middle-aged man. Now that I think about it, he didn’t have the presence of the other workers, so he shouldn’t have been lying to me.” Wang Dan provided another crucial tip.

“This info is too important; it can be a life saver.” Yang Chen noted this down and circled it in red like all the other important information.

Chen Ge watched the students walk away before turning to the remaining visitors. “This man in the trench coat has broken the law. I should wait for the police to come get him.”

There were too many visitors around for him to call the police. Chen Ge waited until 5 pm when the theme park was about to close and called Lee Sanbao and told him everything. During that period, a few other visitors gradually woke up. Zhang Feng’s situation was rather bad, but he recovered quite a bit after Chen Ge sent him to the underground morgue. Feeling ashamed of himself, he slithered away without saying a word.

Shinozaki and his assistant acted strangely though. After they woke up, they sat next to the Haunted House like they were waiting for Chen Ge. At 6:40 pm, after sending the last batch of visitors away, when Chen Ge prepared to close the door, Shinozaki and his assistant ran over.

“Boss Chen!” Shinozaki limped over. His hair was ruffled, and his expression was anxious, looking not even a bit like a master.

“How can I help you?” Chen Ge had quite a good impression of Shinozaki.

“I found this comic page inside your Haunted House.” Shinozaki took out a manuscript page from his pocket. When he fainted, he held the page tightly in his hand. “Can I please meet the author? I admire him greatly, and I have something important to discuss with him.”

“You wish to meet him?” Chen Ge knew full well that it was Yan Danian who drew that manuscript.

“Yes! I wish to collaborate with him to share his work with the world. Such a genius shouldn’t be hiding inside a Haunted House!” Shinozaki was excited. It had been so many years since he had come across a piece of work that could affect him so deeply. Every page was artful, and they contained a unique kind of emotion. They painted a real world through the lens of the weird and supernatural.

“Follow me, the artist has a strange temperament, and I can’t guarantee whether he will meet you or not.” Chen Ge asked Tong Tong to contact Yan Danian and led Shinozaki and his assistant back underground.

After getting Yan Danian’s permission, he decided to arrange this meeting. “The author is inside this bedroom. He doesn’t like strangers, so why don’t you converse through the curtains?”

Shinozaki was a known comic artist and knew everything within the industry. Even his assistant was a famed professional. They had their own studio and a mature operating system.

Chen Ge stayed to observe initially, but after he confirmed Shinozaki’s sincerity in working with Yan Danian and his genuine wish to help Yan Danian share his work with the world, he stood up and left.

This was the moment that Yan Danian was able to grasp his lifelong dream, so Chen Ge naturally would not stay to disturb it. Guarding outside the room, about half an hour later, Chen Ge’s black phone suddenly vibrated. He opened it with some curiosity and saw that there was an update to the employee tab.

For Yan Danian, the special power that was a question now turned into a gray term. It was still not useable, but Chen Ge could read its details.

“Wishes Do Come True: The Lesser Red Specter’s Strongest Power! The wish in your heart will come into fruition. Usable once every week. Each usage will cause the pages in the comic to decrease by one permanently!

“My life is a comic; every page is my memory. Promises that I cannot hold will be torn down, tossed into the sky, morphing into wind...”

“The wish in your heart will come into fruition? Wait, but there’s no time limit, and it didn’t even explain how long it will take for the wish to come true. Each use will exhaust one page of the comic, will it? This strongest power of the Lesser Red Specter is not as powerful as I anticipated.” Chen Ge read through the introduction on Yan Danian’s special power seriously. “If I have a wish in my heart, I will use my hands to fulfil it. By exhausting another’s life to complete my own dream, even if it does come true, the dream will turn rather meaningless.”

Reading the words on the black phone, Chen Ge could sense the trace of melancholy behind it. Danian painted a strange and curious world with his pens, but at that same time, that world could be seen as the purest and cleanest. It was called supernatural by others simply because it would not have been a part of reality.

Chen Ge put the phone away, and not long after that, Shinozaki and his assistant came out from the room with a large bag. They looked so excited.

“How did the discussion go?” Chen Ge asked.

“Someone like Master Yan is a true artist. It is truly my honor and good fortune to have been given a chance to cooperate with him.” Shinozaki was a prideful man, and it was not easy for him to admit something like that.

“Yan Danian has spent his whole drawing and working. He is a straight-minded person and doesn’t even know how to be cunning. I hope you are sincere in cooperating with him and will not resort to underhanded tricks.” Chen Ge stood in the middle of the dark corridor. He had the bloodied doctor’s outfit on. The chains dragged on the ground, trailing into the darkness.

“Understood, you don’t need to worry about that.” Cold sweat poured out of Shinozaki's forehead involuntarily. His experience at the Haunted House earlier returned; that memory would probably haunt him for life.

"I'm glad to hear that. I hope for the two of you to have a good collaboration then. Other than that, if it's possible, I hope that you can mention Western Jiujiang Haunted House on the published comic. After all, Yan Danian is still my employee," Chen Ge suggested casually.

"That's no problem, we should help each other." Shinozaki was familiar with the world of business, but he could not explain his innate fear of this young man. After sending Shinozaki and his assistant away, Chen Ge went to have a chat with Yan Danian.

Yan Danian had handed his work over to the Shinozaki's studio, and they would publish two comics soon—Ghost Tenants and Underworld Academy.

Ghost Tenants was inspired by Yan Danian's own life while Underworld Academy was a brand-new work using Mu Yang High School as the background. Both of them would appear on comic websites over the world in serial format. The author would have Yan Danian's name, and the royalties would be shared 50-50 between Yan Danian and Shinozaki's studio. Based on Shinozaki's prediction, Yan Danian could hope to enjoy a comfortable life in the future.

"Money is the source of many sins; Danian is too innocent to handle so much money. To maintain his passion for art, I mustn't allow him to be corrupted by money. I think I should look after his royalties for now."

As Yan Danian's name grew, this Lesser Red Specter might become one of the central pillars of the Haunted House. After dealing with Yan Danian, Chen Ge's mood turned better. He walked out from the Haunted House. Xu Wan and Xiao Gu left after cleaning the place, but Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu stayed.

"Both of you have done quite well today, but there is room for improvement." Chen Ge took out his phone and glanced at the memo. "Scissors, you have a natural talent for this, but you still haven't explored it to its full potential. When we cornered that visitor earlier, why did he choose to run toward you? It's because he saw weakness in you that he could take advantage of.

"Jingjiu, you don't need to rush. There are many things that a Haunted House worker needs to learn. You've gotten used to the darkness, and that is already a big improvement. Take it slow and give it time. I'll go to the hotel and act as the owner once. Perhaps my interaction with the visitors will give you some inspiration."

After communicating with the new workers, Chen Ge recommended some material for them to read before allowing them to go off work.

"Li Wan City's mission is already over, but there are still loose ends." Chen Ge waited until sundown before he grabbed his backpack and hailed a taxi to get to White Dragon Cave Tunnel. When he reached the tunnel, the sky was completely dark.

"The shadow's heart was shared by Zhang Ya and Doctor Gao, and it has completely disappeared, but the ghost fetus is still alive. This four-star mission will definitely be much more difficult than Li Wan City. After it is birthed, it will come to find me trouble, so the best solution is to locate it before its birth."

The ghost fetus was probably a Greater Red Specter and a Specter more terrifying than Zhang Ya.

"If I can't stop it before its birth, then my hope is on Zhang Ya making a breakthrough."

Both sides were racing against time, and the current calm was exactly the state before the storm. Closing his eyes, Chen Ge touched the wall and headed deeper into the jungle. He recited a name in his heart. When he got to the forty-fourth recitation, the air around him thickened, and a chilling presence surged around his heart.

"You managed to return alive?"

Hearing that familiar voice, Chen Ge's eyes slowly opened. "You should be more familiar with the changes in Eastern Jiujiang than I am. The shadow has already been consumed."

The large spider shadow loomed over Chen Ge. At the top of the tunnel, large appendages crawled out from the darkness, and a hissing spider dangled above Chen Ge's head.

"The shadow has been consumed? By whom?" The spider's upper body was that of a boy. This was the woman in the tunnel's son, and he was the real owner of the three-star mission, The Tunnel.

"It doesn't really matter. The important thing is that we seem to have created a bigger problem.” Chen Ge told him about the ghost fetus; he wanted to drag this Red Specter before him into the mess. Chen Ge’s words confirmed some of the boy’s suspicions. The more he heard, the darker his face became. Killing Chen Ge now would amount to nothing.

“I’ve brought her back safely, and I hope we can cooperate again in the future.” After saying all he needed to, Chen Ge released the boy’s mother from the comic and retraced his step.

Walking out the tunnel, Chen Ge went down the street for half an hour before he caught a cab. He carried his bag and rode the taxi to a certain abandoned mental asylum in Western Jiujiang. Chen Ge leaped over the wall with ease to enter the Third Sick Hall. He pried open the door and entered the corridor filled with pillows and mattresses.

“Men Nan?” Opening the comic, Chen Ge summoned Men Nan. The red shadow appeared beside Chen Ge. When Men Nan saw the familiar halls, he felt hot tears prickling his eyes.

“Welcome home.” Chen Ge stretched lazily. He felt weirdly comfortable at this strange place, probably because he had been there way too many times.

“This is my home, not yours!” Men Nan complained weakly. As a Red Specter, he felt like he should act with the dignity of one, but whenever he saw Chen Ge, he felt the urge to go on a rampage.

“Of course, of course, you’re the Red Specter after all.” Chen Ge shrugged as he walked into the hall.

“Hey! What are you planning to do? I’m going to return already!” Men Nan was nervous. He had a feeling that Chen Ge had an ulterior motive for taking him home. In his mind, that was exactly the kind of person Chen Ge was.

...

Chen Ge stood in surprise and said matter-of-factly, “Since I’m here, aren’t you going to invite me to go behind the door to take a look?”

“You...” Men Nan also did not know what to tell Chen Ge, since he was the first living human who asked to go behind the door. “At twelve midnight, the door can only be opened for a minute, so you can only stay inside my door for a minute. If you stay longer, you’ll have to wait until tomorrow to leave.”

“Only one minute?” Chen Ge did not want to trouble Men Nan too much. “Fine, after all, there’ll be plenty of chances in the future. You’d better go and fix your windows then. I won’t disturb you anymore.”

“Then I can go now?” Men Nan regarded him with caution like he was unwilling to believe that Chen Ge would be so kind.

“Go ahead, you’ve helped me many times. If you come across any problems that you cannot solve in the future, you can come and find me any time.”

“That won’t happen. As long as I don’t get entangled with you, I won’t run into any problem,” Men Nan grumbled softly.

“That might not be true. The shadow that we killed earlier is the puppet of a Greater Red Specter. If we don’t kill its true form, that Greater Red Specter will eventually come to visit.”

“Greater Red Specter?” Men Nan’s face turned paler and he widened his eyes. He thought the shadow was already the scariest monster, but he still possessed a main body.

“That monster’s true form is called ghost fetus, created from curses and resentment. It is highly vengeful, so you need to be careful.” With that, Chen Ge turned to leave. Walking out from the Third Sick Hall, Chen Ge flipped through the comic, thinking about the things that he still had not done.

“I am a man of my word. I still haven’t started on the promise that I’ve given the suicide hotline operator, Zhang Wenyu. Whenever I help him complete the death wish of the suicide victim, he will help me in return.” Chen Ge had limited manpower. Finding the ghost fetus, which could be anywhere in Jiujiang, was very difficult, but Zhang Wenyu was different. He carried the lingering spirits of all the suicide victims that he had interacted with him. He needed to help all of them before he could receive salvation. But correspondingly, those lingering spirits attached to him would provide him with their power.

Zhang Wenyu was a unique Red Specter, and even Chen Ge had no idea how powerful he was. Chen Ge merely thought that the man’s power could not have been better for a manhunt.

“I have already helped the man with the Nobita-Giant Syndrome complete his wish. Based on our agreement, I can ask for his help once.” Chen Ge took out his phone and called the number that he had memorized. After three rings, the call was picked up, but there was no voice to greet him.

“I will help you complete the victims’ wishes as fast as I can, but I have recently run into a very troublesome problem, and I hope that you can lend me a hand.” Chen Ge cut to the chase and voiced his purpose.

“What do you want me to do?” Zhang Wenyu’s throaty voice came through the phone.

“I need to find an unborn child. I’ve seen its face, and I’ll send you a sketch in a minute.” Chen Ge had Yan Danian draw the face of the baby in the shadow’s chest, which should be the ghost fetus’ appearance.

“Even if I know what it looks like, it is still not yet born. How am I supposed to know where it is?”

“You are a Red Specter; you should have your own method.”

Both parties were silent before finally Zhang Wenyu said, “Okay, I will try my best.”

“The baby’s main form is the ghost fetus. It appears to be a Greater Red Specter, and it is very dangerous, so you have to be careful during your search.” After dealing with that, Chen Ge moved to another topic. “Previously, you gave me three lingering spirits’ wishes. I’ve already completed two—the patient with Giant-Nobita Syndrome and the cancer patient who died on the rail—but the third one is a bit difficult.”

“The third wish?”

“Yes, the patient who wanted to see his work made into a movie.” Chen Ge owned a Haunted House, so he did not know heads or tails about movie-making. It was going to be hard to complete this wish. “Can you show me other lingering spirits? I will help them first.”

“That is not an issue, but the writer’s spirit is very powerful, and I have a hard time controlling him. If we cannot resolve his wish as soon as possible, I might even be consumed by him.” Zhang Wenyu sounded helpless. “You’ll have to help him fulfil his wish. That is one of the reasons I reached out to you.”

“Okay then, I’ll try to come up with a way.” After hanging up, Chen Ge wandered down the road aimlessly.

“It should be fine, leaving the search for the ghost fetus to the Zhang Wenyu, but the shooting of the movie is indeed a bit troublesome.” Chen Ge took out his own phone, and he was struck by a sudden inspiration. “A horror movie is still a movie. Even though I don’t have related talent, it doesn’t mean that the whole of Jiujiang won’t.”

He keyed in the following in the search bar—haunted film set, supernatural phenomenon during filming—and he really did come up with something.

“Known scriptwriter died from accident in the middle of the night. Is it a clever marketing scheme or something more sinister? This is the seventh accident during the shoot of Left Oculus. Is there really a supernatural element behind it?”

Clicking on it, Chen Ge realized that the article had already been removed. He changed a few key words before finding the information that he needed.

Left Oculus was the name of a horror film, but many accidents happened during its shoot. First was the accidental death of the scriptwriter who wanted to edit the script, then came the sudden madness of the female lead and the disappearance of the male lead. After changing the line-up, the filming finally finished, but on the night before the premier, the film set caught on fire, burning up all the clothes and props.

Many people said that this was just a marketing ploy until the director disappeared, and then the news went silent. In the end, the movie did not get its premier. Until now, no one had ever seen it. There were snippets online, but most of them were faked by online users.

“Even the script was burnt in the fire. This sure is interesting.” Chen Ge’s interest was piqued. He got a cab to return to the Haunted House and immediately ran into the staff breakroom. He made his notes as he searched everything that he could on Left Oculus. He busied himself until 2 am, and he finally found several pieces of useful information.

“The maddened female lead is still alive, currently residing in Jiujiang Mental Asylum.

“The crew once used Western Jiujiang’s Yong Ling Mountain as their set background.

“The original script used by the crew was not penned by the scriptwriter but was discovered by the director in an abandoned school in Western Jiujiang.

“According to legend, the director did not disappear, but he is trapped inside the movie.”

Chapter 708 - Face-to-Face Interrogation

“Director is trapped inside the movie, huh? This has to be a ghost story.” Chen Ge felt like this fell within his job scope, so he could not just let it be. He raised his head to glance at the clock on the wall; it was already 2:30 am. “Even with a cab, going to Yong Ling Mountain will take half an hour. It’s too late now, so I shall wait until tomorrow to pay it a visit.

“There is never enough time. The time limit for School of the Afterlife is almost up, but I don’t have an available Red Specter with me at the moment. That can’t be allowed to continue. I should visit the crew and, if possible, help the writer finish his wish as soon as possible. Hopefully, that’ll persuade the hotline operator to join my Haunted House.”

After everything was prepared, Chen Ge switched his phone off and, for the first time in a long time, slept early that day. At 8:30 am the next morning, Chen Ge was woken up by someone knocking on the window. He peeled open his eyes blurrily and heard Xiao Gu’s voice coming from outside the window.

“Boss probably went out last night again. Let’s wait at the door.”

“Does boss go out late at night often?” It was Zhang Jingjiu who asked. He was quite curious about Chen Ge.

“I’ll put it this way, the social app that we often use has a real-life pedometer, and whenever I arrive in the morning, boss will have logged around ten thousand steps already.” Xiao Gu’s tone was calm. “But today it’s rather weird. Since last night until now, boss only logged in three thousand plus steps. I wonder if anything happened to him.”

“If boss heard you say that, he would skin you alive.” Xu Wan’s voice followed. All the workers seemed to have arrived already.

"I would never physically injure my employees. I'm hurt that you even consider that possibility." Chen Ge crawled up in bed, pulled the thick curtains back, and opened the window. "At most I would only dock their pay."

"Boss!" The four stood next to the window—they seemed to have been waiting for a long time already.

"Wait a minute, I'll open the door for you." Chen Ge glanced at his phone; it was already 8:40 am. He had fallen to sleep so quickly that he forgot to set his alarm. Opening the Haunted House's gate, Chen Ge herded the four employees into the dressing room and helped them with their make-up one by one.

"Since you're all here, I wish to have a simple morning meeting while we do our make-up." Chen Ge expertly placed the make-up on his employees faces. One would suspect that he was not straight given the ease with which he wielded the many make-up brushes. "Xu Wan and Xiao Gu, you are both senior workers and are looking after the two scenarios aboveground. Our Haunted House is split into different star difficulties, and many visitors won't attempt the more difficult scenarios, so in a way, you have the most important responsibility because you represent the face of the Haunted House and will influence the visitors' first impression of us."

"Boss, don't worry, leave everything to me and Sister Xu Wan." Xiao Gu patted his chest and promised. His sunny disposition meant that he could befriend everyone easily.

"Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu, you two are responsibility for the underground scenario. I need you to focus on your given task. If there are any accidents with the visitors, inform me immediately." Chen Ge exchanged a look with Zhang Jingjiu and Scissors. "The underground scenarios are very big, so you two need to improve on your acting."

"Understood." Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu had entered Li Wan City with Chen Ge, so they knew what he left unsaid.

"One final thing, I will officially hand over the spare key for the Haunted House to Xu Wan. If there's a situation where I'm not around, just keep the place running with the responsibility that I've given you." Chen Ge handed the spare key to Xu Wan and looked at the girl in the mirror. "If there's any issue with the scenario aboveground, come and ask Xu Wan. If Xu Wan cannot handle it, find theme park director, Director Luo. Do not go to anyone else, and do not trust anyone.”

Before Xu Wan answered, Chen Ge stood up. “I’ll handle the underground scenarios. Now, Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu, come with me, I still have many things to teach you.”

After Chen Ge and the two walked away, Xiao Gu noticed that Xu Wan was still spacing out looking at the mirror. “Sis, it’s time to go. The visitors will be arriving soon.”

“Hmm, okay.” Xu Wan held the key in her hand tightly like she was afraid that she might accidentally lose this very important object.

Chen Ge led Zhang Jingjiu and Scissors underground and stopped before one of the rooms at the underground morgue. He knocked on the door, and an old man wearing a white coat came out. He had a head full of white hair, but he had a straight back, like a pine growing on the cliff face.

“This old gentleman is Wei Jiuqin, he is our Haunted House’s best doctor. If I’m not around in the Haunted House and you come across a problem that you can’t resolve, come and find him, he will help you.” Doctor Wei was the oldest and had the most experience. There was no way to criticize his personality, and he was one of the few people in the Haunted House who could handle a crisis perfectly.

“Why are you suddenly bringing this up?” Doctor Wei felt like something was off.

“You have to tell me if you have anything worrying you! I am living quite comfortably here, especially given the chance to see my old friends and lecture them as I used to.” Doctor Wei was not one for jokes, but he lightened the mood for Chen Ge’s sake.

“Don’t worry.” Chen Ge returned to the surface. After the visitors filed into the scenarios, he led Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu for a spin underground and introduced them to most of the ghosts.

Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu’s lips were hanging open throughout their ‘tour’. There were students, teachers, doctors, patients, and other types of ‘people’ at this place; it was truly an underground town.

“What you see is merely a part of the underground scenario. This whole place is very huge. My parents used a decade to build this place.” Chen Ge shared more secrets with Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu before sending them back to Li Wan City.

“Only those who I’ve experienced life and death with am I going to allow to be my employees. They are going to be hard to recruit.” Chen Ge tried his best to cultivate Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu. When they were able to run the place on their own, he would have more time to go and do more things.

Exiting the scenario, Chen Ge was summoned by Uncle Xu when he walked to the Haunted House entrance. “Chen Ge, Director Luo is looking for you.”

“Looking for me?”

“Yes, be careful, there are outsiders in his company,” Uncle Xu reminded him in a whisper before turning to his duty. Chen Ge ran to the office building, and as he pushed the door open, the laughter hit him immediately. Director Luo was in the middle of a joyous conversation with a middle-aged man. One would think that they were old friends from the way they seemed to enjoy each other’s company.

“Xiao Chen, come and take a seat.” Director Luo was friendly toward Chen Ge. He stood up and walked toward him. When he was facing away from the middle-aged man, he gestured with his hands, but he kept his voice upbeat. “This is CEO Bai. I’ve introduced you to him before. He has something that he wishes to ask you.”

“CEO Bai?” Chen Ge understood immediately that this was not a friendly visit.

“There’s no need to stand on ceremony—we’ve met each other a few times already after all. This time, I’m here on someone else’s behalf, so I shall not talk in circles,” CEO Bai said with a smile. “Earlier, people from a Haunted House from Xin Hai came to visit, and all of their employees were scared until they needed medical attention. Their boss is my friend, so he had me come over to ask a question.

“How did you manage to do that, Boss Chen?”

“Those are all professional Haunted House actors who have been in the business for at least five years. They are essentially the best that the market has to offer.”

“CEO Bai, are you here because of that?” Chen Ge thought about it before turning to CEO Bai. “Perhaps they are not as good as they say. I personally don’t think my Haunted House is that scary. The threshold for horror differs between people. How about you enter my Haunted House and see for yourself, CEO Bai?”

As permissible as CEO Bai tried to make himself out to be, when he heard the invitation extended by Chen Ge, even his face turned green. Chen Ge was never one for subtly and verbal confusion; he preferred to cut straight to the point.

If you think there is a problem with my Haunted House, at the very least, you will have to experience it once yourself first before you gain the right to give any criticism.

Naturally, CEO Bai would not agree to Chen Ge's proposition. Are you kidding? Even professional Haunted House actors fainted after they went in for a visit. If I accept the invitation, won't that be an act of inviting death?

"I have something else important to attend to later in the afternoon, but if there is a chance in the future, I will definitely take you up on that offer." CEO Bai chuckled awkwardly. After rejecting Chen Ge, his presence was no longer as aggressive as before.

"That is really too bad. If you are coming in the future, you will need to inform me first. I will assign you a VIP service." Chen Ge's Haunted House VIP service was truly a unique experience. A single visitor entering the 3.5-star scenario, the exploration of Li Wan City with the company of nine other visitors who were played by the Haunted House workers.

"Let's not talk about that for now." CEO Bai felt like if he stayed on this topic any longer, the situation would only turn against him. He fished his phone out from his pocket and dialed a number. "Xiao Shuang, why don't you bring Changyin up here? It's going to be fine. Both Director Luo and Chen Ge are reasonable people; they will not do anything to you."

A few minutes later, the sound of footsteps came from outside the door. A pair of twins supported Lee Changyin as they entered Director Luo's office. Chen Ge had seen this group of people before; they were all employees from Nightmare Academy.

“This man looks rather familiar. If I am not mistaken, he has visited my Haunted House before.” Chen Ge recognized Lee Changyin with just one glance. Lee Changyin did not dare to look straight at Chen Ge. With the accompaniment of the twins, he sat in the corner of the room.

“Changyin, tell Chen Ge what you saw inside the Haunted House.” CEO Bai seemed to have regained control of the situation. Everyone in the room turned to look at Lee Changyin. His face was colored with panic. Once he was reminded of what happened that day, his body shook uncontrollably. Lifting his head, Lee Changyin sneaked a look at Chen Ge, and the fear at the bottom of his eyes was clear as day.

“It was him!” After exclaiming these three words that came out of nowhere, Lee Changyin’s lips turned purple as he gasped hungrily for air. “Ghosts! There are ghosts inside the Haunted House! The place is haunted!”

“What is the meaning of this? Isn’t it perfectly normal for a Haunted House to be haunted?” Chen Ge leaned against the sofa, and he sighed rather helplessly.

“But the place has actual ghosts! His Haunted House is actually haunted! The ghosts are all real! A living human would not have been able to create that kind of feeling!” Lee Changyin’s mind slowly cleared, and his words gained a new kind of sharpness.

“Nightmare Academy might not be able to create that sensation, but it doesn’t mean that other people cannot.” Chen Ge was getting impatient. His tone did not get dyed with any disrespect, but his eyes that regarded Lee Changyin were how one would regard a piece of trash. “You should spend more time improving yourself instead of trying to bring other people down. Even if my Haunted House closes, the visitors will not go to your Haunted House.”

“No! I can confirm that those things are not human beings! That is not an effect that is achievable by a living human!” Lee Changyin’s eyes were red.

“I can understand what you’re feeling. As a professional Haunted House actor, you wished to go to another Haunted House to create trouble, but in the end, you were the one who fainted. You’ve basically lost all of your pride, so that is why you have come up with this preposterous idea to try to salvage the little dignity that you have

“I’ve been a Haunted House employee for five years, so I know more about Haunted Houses than you do. I understand very well where the ceiling of this industry lies...”

Lee Changyin wanted to say something else, but Chen Ge jumped in and cut him off. “Is five years really that long? My parents have started in the mobile Haunted House business a decade ago. I grew up holding the props of monsters and ghosts. When you are still naked, learning how to spell, I already knew how to set up a mannequin.”

Chen Ge stood up. “I see no reason for the purpose of this meeting. The ceiling that you speak of is merely the ceiling in your worldview. In other words, that is your ceiling, not mine.”

“There’s no need to leave like that. Chen Ge, why don’t you give me some face?” CEO Bai stood up directly. He felt like he had given Chen Ge plenty of face already. “Changyin is still young, and he doesn’t know how to correctly phrase his words. How about this? Why don’t you summon all the actors who were responsible for scaring him, and that should answer all the questions at once.”

Chen Ge turned back to look at Director Luo. After exchanging a look, he stopped moving. “Changyin, you claim that my Haunted House has actual ghosts, then can you tell me in detail where you ran into this ghost and what kind of ghost it was?”

He walked toward Lee Changyin, narrowing his eyes. With every one of his steps, Lee Changyin would nudge one step backward until he was cornered behind the sofa.

“Are you that afraid of me? Is it because you think I am a ghost as well?” After completing so many Trial Missions given by the black phone, Chen Ge had cultivated a unique kind of presence around him.

“I cannot remember the other actors because my memory is a bit hazy, but there is a middle-aged man at the hotel that I remember very clearly! He is not a living person!” Lee Changyin hissed through his teeth. “Do you dare bring him here to face me in person?”

“At the hotel? A middle-aged man?” Chen Ge frowned. From the man’s description, he seemed to be talking about Zhang Jingjiu. But the problem was... why would the man be so certain that Zhang Jingjiu was a ghost? As a newcomer, Zhang Jingjiu was sometimes scared by Chen Ge, so how did he manage to create the impression that he was a ghost?

What kind of conspiracy is this? Chen Ge could not understand it.

“You don’t have the guts, right? Because there is no such person at your Haunted House! Am I right?” Lee Changyin yelled with fiery eyes. The man’s brain had developed in a way that was different from normal people, and his way of thinking often leaned toward the extreme. “Don’t think you can grab a random person to replace him; I have his picture here with me!”

With shaking hands, Lee Changyin took out his phone from his pocket. He clicked to the photo album where he pulled out a picture of Zhang Jingjiu. This picture had been taken by Lee Changyin when he was in the pregnant woman costume before he interacted with Zhang Jingjiu.

“Cat got your tongue? Why are you hesitating? This picture is very clear. I need you to bring this person here immediately!” Lee Changyin believed that he had come fully prepared. He was thankful that he had taken that picture beforehand. Unfortunately, he only had the picture of Zhang Jingjiu. After that, he ran in such a hurry that it did not even cross his mind to take pictures for evidence.

“You said yourself, you’ve worked at a Haunted House for five years already. You should know that it is against the rules to take pictures inside a Haunted House. I will keep this picture, and in a few days, I shall pay Nightmare Academy a person visit to ask for an explanation.” Seeing the picture, Chen Ge felt relief instead.

“Don’t try to change the subject!” Lee Changyin raised his voice, insisting on his view. He had to be correct.

“Wait here then.” Chen Ge turned and left Director Luo’s office. He went back to the Haunted House to get Zhang Jingjiu, who was still brushing up on his acting knowledge.

“Bring the bottle of make-up remover, we are going to meet an old friend.” Chen Ge gave Zhang Jingjiu a summary on the way there, and the latter grasped everything almost instantly. Knocking on the door, Chen Ge brought Zhang Jingjiu into Director Luo’s office, and when they stepped into it, the temperature in the room seemed to have dropped.

“This is the actor in the picture, Zhang Jingjiu.” Everyone turned to Zhang Jingjiu, who had Chen Ge’s make-up on. Even if they were standing inside a bright office, meeting his eyes was still a very scary experience.

"I'm so sorry for having scared you that day. I did not expect you to be so cowardly. I apologize deeply for it." Zhang Jingjiu walked toward Lee Changyin, but once the latter saw him approach, he screamed like a girl and jumped away.

"No! Stay away! This is it! He is a ghost! He really is a ghost!"

"Ignore him." Chen Ge passed the bottle of make-up remover to Zhang Jingjiu. "Remove your make-up now. Later, I will reapply it for you."

"Okay." And so, Zhang Jingjiu did what he was told. After removing the jacket, he immediately turned into a different person. There was nothing scary about him; he looked just like the office worker one would meet on a daily commute.

"Don't the actors at Nightmare Academy use make-up?" Zhang Jingjiu placed the bottle of make-up remover before the three workers from Nightmare Academy.

With the truth placed before their eyes, the pair of twins quickly stood up to apologize. "We are so sorry. Your Haunted House's make-up is truly amazing. We have acted too recklessly, we're so sorry."

"There's no need to apologize. I am sure there are plenty of things that we can learn from each other. I promise to pay Nightmare Academy a visit sooner or later."

The workers from Nightmare Academy could sense the anger radiating from Chen Ge. After they gave their profuse apology, they slipped away as fast as they could. CEO Bai appeared rather awkward and embarrassed sitting there, but he tried to maintain his composure.

"Xiao Chen, that's everything for now, so you can go back." Director Luo's face was filled with a satisfied smile. He seemed to have many things that he wished to 'discuss' with CEO Bai.

"Okay." Chen Ge knew that Director Luo was about to slaughter CEO Bai, but neither of them talked about it. On the way back, Chen Ge noticed that Zhang Jingjiu had his head lowered like there was something on his mind.

"Jingjiu, if you have anything on your mind, just say it. We've been through life and death together, so you can tell me anything." Chen Ge's voice was warm. He was able to give other people energy even if he did not intend to do so.

“Have I created a problem for you again? I feel so useless somehow. I am not good at scaring visitors and have lowered the overall standard of our Haunted House. This time, I’ve even created this huge issue for you.” Zhang Jingjiu sounded bitter. “Ever since I was young, I’ve always been a problem for my family. Due to the issue with my mother, I directed all my dissatisfaction to my father, believing it to be his fault. But now, I see that it was merely a convenient way for me to shy away from the blame. In retrospect, I was being a very horrible person and son.”

“For these past few days, I’ve been watching you inside the Haunted House. You have been studying very hard, but I feel like there is something holding you back. You give me the impression that you’ve trapped yourself inside a small cage.”

Standing at the office building, Chen Ge looked out the window. His eyes scanned the entire theme park.

“Everyone has their moment of weakness and loss, but everyone has their own unique charm as well. Now, what you need to do is unlock the shackle in your heart and release your real self. When the time comes, you should return to Xin Hai to meet your father. Certain things are better not left unsaid. You’ll feel much better later.”

Chen Ge patted Zhang Jingjiu’s shoulder. “Try to look up. The only employees that I can rely on are the few of you. In the future, I plan to have you open a branch for me in a different city, and then you’ll be required to take control of many things.”

“Thank you.”

“There is no need to thank me; I have a small number of employees, and I treat everyone as my family.” Chen Ge led Zhang Jingjiu back to the Haunted House. He had Zhang Jingjiu return to his role as the hotel owner while he went back to the staff breakroom to find more information about Left Oculus. He planned to make his move that night.

“The time limit for School of Afterlife will end after tomorrow. Whether Zhang Ya awakens then or not, I will have to go take a look at this mission, or else all the previous missions will have been wasted.” Chen Ge stared at his own shadow and dozed off. Then he picked up the calendar on the table. “Today is the 1st of June. The holiday season is coming, and the futuristic theme park is opening soon. I really don't have much time left."

Zhang Ya was hibernating, and Xu Yin was seriously injured; it would be very dangerous for him to challenge the four-star mission School of the Afterlife. Chen Ge understood all that, but he did not have a choice. If he gave up on the School of Afterlife, he had much to lose.

"I shall go take a look. Hopefully, I will return alive." His eyes went to the picture on the corner of his table, and Chen Ge shook his head lightly. It was a family photo. His parents stood in the middle—his mother appeared to be hugging something, his father pointed at the Haunted House behind him with a bright smile on his face, and Chen Ge stood alone to the side.

Narrowing his eyes, Chen Ge could see that his mother was hugging Director Luo's daughter, the spirit who was no different from a guardian angel.

"For some reason, it feels like I'm not their biological son." Chen Ge replaced the picture on the table, and he accidentally caught the sentence written on the back of the picture. '1st June, happy birthday, you little bugger.'

"The pair of parents who managed to make themselves disappear, now who is the real bugger?" Chen Ge sighed and rearranged his emotions to throw himself back into work.

During lunch, Chen Ge gave the four workers a break while he stayed behind to take up their responsibility. Half an hour later, four of them returned. They whispered among themselves like they were discussing something.

"All of you are late by a whole four minutes. There will be no next time, or I will dock your pay," Chen Ge warned them with a severe tone. Hearing that, they quickly ran back to their assigned posts.

"Looks like I will need to be more stringent with them normally." Chen Ge returned to the staff breakroom to arrange his information. Then, he came up with a list of all the employees that he could bring with him. The crew of the Left Oculus was a trial; the real test was the School of Afterlife.

After giving it some thought, Chen Ge came up with a more reasonable plan of action. When he exited the staff breakroom, the sun was already setting. The theme park closed at 6 pm. After sending away the last batch of visitors, Chen Ge closed the gates.

“Thank you for your hard work today, you can go home now.” Chen Ge had something else to do, so he urged for his workers to leave.

“Boss, are you planning on going out again tonight?” Xiao Gu seemed to have read Chen Ge’s mind.

“You’re not going to understand even if I explain it to you. In any case, it is about work.” Chen Ge hurried for them to leave. Scissors and Zhang Jingjiu did not think much about it. Xu Wan appeared like she wanted to say something, but she did not voice it.

The setting sun burnished the Ferris Wheel. The sound of laughter faded away, and Chen Ge stood at the entrance alone. He studied the theme park around him for a while before turning back to the Haunted House. “It’s time to move after the sky has fully darkened.”

Returning to the staff breakroom, Chen Ge lay in his bed. His eyes kept wandering to the picture on the table; this was the first birthday that he would spend without his parents.

“Shall I go buy myself a cake? Nah, the money spent on the cake is enough for me to buy half a mannequin.” Chen Ge patted his own face and stretched lazily before reaching under his bed. “Where is my backpack? Did the cat drag it away?”

Chen Ge looked below his bed; there was no backpack. Even Xiaoxiao and the white cat were missing.

“This cat has grown much smarter now! It sensed that I am about to bring it out with me, so it hid the backpack from me.” Other than Chen Ge, only white cat and Xiaoxiao would enter the staff breakroom, so Chen Ge’s suspicion landed on the cat immediately. Holding a pack of cat food, Chen Ge opened the door and ran all over the Haunted House’s aboveground scenarios, but he failed to find the white cat.

“Has it run underground? It dares to go there alone when it’s so easily scared?” Pushing open the iron gate that led underground, Chen Ge stepped into the tunnel that seemed to lead into the darkness. He only took a few steps when he sensed that something was wrong. The place was a bit too quiet.

“Xiaoxiao? Ol’ Zhou?” He called a few workers’ names, but there was no response. Chen Ge walked down the dim street alone. Dim, dark, depressing, and narrow, it was like the route that Chen Ge had chosen for his life. There was no light around him, and he strode into the darkness on his own.

He walked past the broken windows that provided glimpses of the different scary scenarios. Behind him was a world of darkness, and before him was an abyss of darkness.

Walking past the empty classrooms, Chen Ge finally stopped at first junction inside the Mu Yang High School scenario. He stood there alone, studying the split in the road. Just as he was deciding which turn to take, his phone suddenly vibrated.

Taking it out, he opened the message to take a look. It was a message from Tong Tong. “Boss, Happy Birthday!”

Before Chen Ge knew what was happening, the split that he was standing at was lit up by a host of spiritual fire. With a resounding boom, the bathroom door next to him was shoved open, and a group of student mannequins squeezed out holding a blackboard!

The blackboard of the sealed classroom had been taken off its hinges, and a picture had been drawn on it. It was a picture of a bunch of small figures dancing about. They had different expressions and postures, and standing in the middle of them was a man dragging an iron hammer.

Perhaps they had limited drawing skills—they were unable to fully represent the man in the middle. Instead, they wrote down many nouns around him, terms like sunny, righteous, kind, gentle, and all of them had arrows that pointed to the man in the middle. After they saw Chen Ge, they turned around at the same time, wishing to show him the other side of the blackboard.

They were unable to coordinate perfectly, so some of the mannequins had their arms and necks turned 180 degrees. They maintained this strange posture and showed him the other side of the blackboard which said—“Happy birthday!”

The two words were colored in with chalk. The students of Mu Yang High School smiled at him with their strange smiles. Some of them wanted to get close to Chen Ge, but others thought that the work was better appreciated from a distance, so they stayed put. Due to the difference in opinion, the group of mannequins soon collapsed on top of each other, but their intention and hard work was clearly understood.

A dry cough came from the left corridor. The ghost fire switched off in the other lanes, and only the ones in the left corridor remained. Harrowing singing came from deep inside the scenario. It was intermingled with scary laughter and the sound of static. The doctors from the underground morgue were slowly pushing out a trolley.

“Happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you...”

The trolley was filled with birthday cards, all made from different materials. Some were made from patient’s records, others were promotional flyers, and some were directly yanked out from clothes and bedsheets. Even though the materials were all different, most of the handwriting was the same. The Pen Spirit probably had helped most of them write their well wishes.

In the middle of the trolley sat an object about four tiers tall, constructed from models and clay. It looked like a cake.

The edges of the cakes were decorated with very unique icing. Only the extremely talented Yan Danian had the ability to make cake icing look like flowing blood.

“Chen Ge, happy birthday.” The few doctors placed the trolley before Chen Ge. Yan Danian, Ol’ Zhou, and the rest walked out from behind the trolley. Bai Qiulin had a recorder in his palm, and the bloodied tape inside was playing a soft, cheerful tune.

“You...” Chen Ge looked at all the ‘people’ before him.

“Shush, don’t speak. Light the candles and make your wish.” Wei Jiuqin waved behind him, and a white cat that was much larger than a normal cat walked out from the classroom, biting a backpack in its mouth. It returned the backpack to Chen Ge. Opening the backpack, he saw Xiaoxiao hugging a pack of candles that were wrapped in paper.

“So, you’re here.” Chen Ge picked Xiaoxiao out and placed her on his shoulder. Holding the few handmade candles in his hands, he said, “Who told you it is my birthday today?”

“It’s the guys that you had us meet this morning. They said that it was a female employee who told them about it.”

“Understood.” Chen Ge nodded. He turned to the ‘candles’ in his palm. “Must I light them?”

“Of course, there is a ceremony to life. You light up the number of candles that correspond to your age, or your wish won't come true," Elder Wei said strictly. Chen Ge nodded. He took out the lighter from his backpack, lit up the candles one by one, and placed them on the model cake. The warm light chased away the cold. Ghosts were most afraid of light and fire, but none of them shied away.

"Boss, it's time to make your wish!"

"Make a wish! Make a wish!"

"What kind of wish do you think the boss will make?"

"Shush, if he tells us, the wish won't come true anymore."

He scanned the faces of his workers, and Chen Ge rubbed his eyes. He voiced his wish silently and then proceeded to blow out all the candles. The underground scenarios returned to darkness, but the silence was shattered. All the employees were gathered together; some were singing, and some were laughing, like a real family.

"Thank you." Standing in the dark, even though Chen Ge was the only living human in the Haunted House, he did not feel alone at all. Kindness and grace would never be vanquished by a scary exterior.

He saw in these 'people' sincerity that was not valued much by human beings these days, pride that made them stand tall, and kindness that was etched into their souls.

"It is my good fortune to have been able to encounter all of you."

The party continued into the night. It was not until midnight that Chen Ge realized that he had something important to do. He grabbed the backpack and shoved the white cat inside it before it realized what was happening. "Come, the night is only starting now. For the next phase, we're taking this outside!"

...

Walking out from the underground, Chen Ge carried the heavy backpack and returned to the staff breakroom.

When he opened the door, he was briefly stunned.

There was an actual cake left on his table, and next to it sat a greeting card and a key.

Chen Ge walked to pick up the card. It was written with Xu Wan's graceful handwriting. “Boss, I don’t think I need this spare key because I trust that you will always be around. I shall hand this key back to you, and finally, I want to wish you a happy birthday! Remember to live every day with joy!”

Chapter 710 - Birthday Cake

Chapter 710: Birthday Cake

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Putting down the greeting card, Chen Ge picked up the key from the table and studied it quietly. After his parents disappeared, the visitors that came to the Haunted House gradually dwindled, causing the Haunted House to face the threat of closing down. At that extremely dangerous time, Xu Wan had chosen to stay behind. She was the only employee who was recruited by Chen Ge's parents and chose to remain until the end.

"Is it possible that the girl has sensed something?" Chen Ge put the key away and opened the cake box. Compared to the box that it came in, the cake inside could only be described as an unmitigated disaster. The middle part was sinking, and there were black spots from leaving it in the oven for too long. The whole thing looked so wobbly that it might crumble with a touch.

But one could see how attentive the baker was. She used cream to evenly slather the cake's surface to try to cover up the flaws. During this process, the cake probably crumbled once, so the cream acted as both the decoration and the glue holding the whole thing together. It seeped deep into the cake. Just looking at this cake, the image of Xu Wan baking it appeared in Chen Ge's mind.

"No wonder she is my employee. Even baking a cake can be made into such a horrifying experience." Picking up the knife inside the box, Chen Ge cut out a small piece and took a bite. "Hmm, the texture is horrendous, too hard on the outside, and the inside appears to be undercooked. It sticks to the teeth, and it's so oily. As I suspected, this would benefit from a longer time in the oven with a lower temperature so that the outside wouldn't be charred, and the inside would be cooked. Wait a minute, she used bread flour? Doesn't she know baking a cake requires cake flour?"

Even though Chen Ge kept criticizing it, he still finished almost half the cake in record time. Seeing how much Chen Ge was enjoying himself, the white cat was curious, but as it poked its head toward the cake, it was shoved back into the backpack. “Cream is not good for you. When it’s your birthday, I’ll make you a cat food cake instead.”

Ignoring the cat’s protest, Chen Ge wiped his lips, lugged the backpack, and left the staff breakroom. The birthday party took up some time, but that did not cut into Chen Ge’s plan for the night too much. He had already searched for everything that he could on Left Oculus, and he planned to go take a look that night.

Leaving New Century Park, Chen Ge waited at the roadside for a long time, but no taxi passed. The taxi drivers in Jiujiang seemed to have come to a consensus—do not approach New Century Park after midnight, and do not pick up any passengers from that place.

“Unfortunately, my bus is now stuck behind the door in Li Wan City.”

After walking two more streets, Chen Ge finally encountered a taxi. After he got into the car, he gave the address. “Sir, I want to go to Yong Ling Mountain’s bungalow.”

“Yong Ling Mountain?” The driver was briefly confused. “There’s a bungalow there?”

“Why don’t you open the GPS to take a look?” Chen Ge was not sure either—that was simply what the internet said.

“What is the full name of the location?” The driver keyed in the term Yong Ling Mountain, but the GPS did not show any place that resembled Yong Ling Mountain Bungalow.

“The full name...” Chen Ge narrowed his eyes. He focused on the few names that appeared on the GPS—Yong Ling Mountain Petrol Station, Yong Ling Mountain Flower Market, Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa. “Then we’ll go to Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa.”

“Huh? Your destination is decided so casually?” The driver glanced at Chen Ge through the rearview mirror. He felt like Chen Ge look quite familiar, and the ghost stories that had been making its way through his colleagues entered his mind. The engine started, and they drove for half an hour before the light of the city faded away. There was a large shadow at the end of the road, and that would be Western Jiujiang’s Yong Ling Mountain.

According to the GPS, the taxi should be arriving at the destination soon. The driver gripped the steering wheel tightly. A few times, he opened his mouth to chat with Chen Ge, but every time, he gave up at the last minute. He did not really know why—perhaps the man in the back appeared much too unapproachable.

After the taxi climbed the mountain, the lights around them disappeared completely. People would rarely go to that place at night, so the place was deserted. After driving for another five minutes, the GPS app on the driver's phone said, "We've arrived at the destination."

The car parked by the road, and there was only darkness around them. One could see the blurry shadows of branches swaying in the dark and the rustle of the leaves as the wind blew. The driver's hands that held the steering wheel were drenched in sweat, and his face was pale. This 'journey' had not been enjoyable for him at all.

"We're here. The GPS says that this place is Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa." The driver turned his head awkwardly around to look at Chen Ge. His eyelids kept twitching; he was afraid that this suspicious character in the backseat would suddenly pull out a weapon to take over his car.

"This is the holiday villa? There's not even a building around; it is a complete wasteland." With his Yin Yang Vision, Chen Ge could see through the darkness. He realized that they were surrounded by woods. "Are you sure that you are not lying to me? You drove me to middle of nowhere in the middle of the night?"

"Why are you doubting me? Boss, I was just following the GPS!" The driver turned all the lights on, but the light still could not banish the fear in his heart.

"Okay then." Chen Ge paid his fare, grabbed his backpack, and got out of the taxi. He activated the flashlight on his phone. He walked down the road and saw a small path that was overgrown with bushes cutting through the forest. "I need to go in deeper, do I? Is Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa inside there? How come it feels like the place has been abandoned for a long time already?"

Chen Ge turned back, wishing to ask the driver about it. But when he turned, he saw the driver already turning the car around and speeding down the mountain with his foot firmly on the gas pedal.

"Is this place that scary?"

Unable to rely on others, Chen Ge had to trust in himself. He raised his phone and walked down the path. He trekked for a few minutes before his sight opened up. Chen Ge was greeted by a line of low walls and a few buildings with strange architecture.

“The holiday villa? Who would come here for their holiday? This place looks more like my Haunted House than anything.” Holiday was for relaxation, not a heart attack. The more Chen Ge walked toward the place, the more confused he became.

“The location is recorded on the GPS, but it feels like this place has been forgotten by the locals for a long time. I wonder if it’s still open for business.” The road was filled with holes and cracks. The trees on the sides were wild and slanted; they desperately needed a good trim.

The walls were overgrown with vines, and they covered up the words on the wall. Chen Ge explored for a long time before he found the entrance to the villa about ten meters away. On the rusted iron gate hung a sign that said no entry, and next to it was a dark-brown, wooden mailbox.

“Do people still use mailboxes these days?” The wooden sign and mailbox were both handmade. Their craftsmanship was rough and did not match the overall style of the place at all.

“The words on the signs can be read easily, and the iron wires that hold it to the gate aren’t rusted. So, these should be new.” Chen Ge tried to push the iron gate. The hinge creaked noisily, and as he pushed harder, the iron gates fell away under his force.

“It’s not even locked?” Chen Ge pushed the iron gates open further. Before him was a two-story building with a strange architectural design; it was hard to imagine that such a place existed in the middle of the forest. “A new mailbox is hung on the gate, and behind the gate are some red buckets filled with drinking water. There is also laundry left to dry at the back, so someone must be staying here.”

Afraid of scaring the local ‘citizen’, Chen Ge waved his phone in the dark, knocked on the door, and called, “Is anyone home?”

The only response was silence. He waited ten seconds, and when Chen Ge was about to give up, the door of a nearby building was pushed open. No one spoke, and after a silent communication, a rusty voice croaked from behind the door, “Who are you looking for?”

Based on the voice alone, it was impossible to tell the person’s age. Chen Ge studied the building from afar and did not just go toward it recklessly. When a normal citizen saw a stranger in the vicinity of their home in the middle of the night, their first reaction would be to switch on the light and not to open the door. However, the voice’s owner acted abnormally. After ten seconds of hesitation, he pushed the door open a little further.

“I’m sorry, but is this Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa?” Chen Ge was very polite. No matter the time, no matter what he ran into, he believed that politeness could open many doors.

“How can I help you?” The person did not answer Chen Ge directly, but from his tone, he had already confirmed the answer.

“It’s like this. My friend said that he’s staying at Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa and told me to come find him tonight. However, my GPS cannot find a location with that name, so I came to ask for direction.” Chen Ge was not lying. He was indeed looking for a friend, but once the person behind the door heard Chen Ge’s answer, there was an audible gasp. “Your friend is staying at Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa?”

The man’s voice was strange. He sounded like his throat was parched, and he mumbled over his enunciation.

“Yes, do you know where Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa is?” Chen Ge took a few steps forward, interested in the man behind the door.

“Of course I do because you are at Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa.” When the man heard Chen Ge’s approaching footsteps, he closed the door again. “Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa is constructed from the villas at Yong Ling Mountain. Back then, something happened here, and most of the citizens chose to migrate. Later, due to certain reasons, the management was forced to abandon the holiday villa as well, and I am the only one who remained to look after this place.”

The man paused before continuing through the door. “I am the only resident here. You should have been lied to by your friend; he couldn’t be staying here.”

“That shouldn’t be.” Chen Ge continued casually. “Some time ago, there was a film crew that came here for a shooting, and he was one of the film crew. He invited me here tonight because he said that he chanced upon an important discovery.”

“Stop, it’s dark already, please watch your words.” The man cut Chen Ge off quickly; he did not want Chen Ge to speak further.

This strange reaction was what Chen Ge was waiting for. Instead of stopping, he continued to mumble to himself, “I’m afraid it was because of his film crew that this place was turned into a holiday villa. I heard that many strange things happened when they were shooting the movie. The movie, I believe, is called... Left Oculus?”

“Stop it!” The man shoved the door open, and he was looking quite agitated. Now that the door had opened fully, Chen Ge got a better look at the speaker. The man before him was around forty with a short body and a severe hump. His face was white, and the most conspicuous feature was that his eyes were both closed—he appeared to be a blind man. Chen Ge waved his hand lightly before the man’s face, and the latter did not react in any way. “I’m so sorry, I don’t mean any offense. I was merely repeating what my friend told me.”

“Your friend said that he’s part of the crew? What does he look like?” The man seemed to have calmed down.

“What does he look like?” Chen Ge was confused. A blind man asking for a person’s appearance, that did not sound quite right. After a moment’s consideration, Chen Ge provided Lee Changyin’s appearance.

The man frowned before waiting for Chen Ge to enter the building. “Don’t just stand out there, come in.”

The building was dark. The light switch on the walls had been removed, and only an exposed base remained. The man seemed to have gotten used to the darkness. He strode into the living room and sat on the sofa; he did not bump into anything along the way. Running into a strange-looking blind man in the middle of nowhere, another person would not have dared to follow, but Chen Ge was an exception.

“I don’t know what your friend told you, but there is one thing that I can be sure of—you have been lied to.” The man reached out his hand to search for a plastic cup on the table. He picked it up and took a sip.

“Why do you think I will trust you and not my friend?” Chen Ge noticed that the man’s hand was shaking slightly when he picked up the cup.

“The crew for Left Oculus will not return; this place is the source of their nightmare. After escaping with their lives barely intact, why would they return?” The man’s voice had returned to normal and calmed down.

“Brother, it sounds like you know some inside details.” Chen Ge sat across from the man. There was little light in the room; moonlight streamed in from the window, casting a white pall on the coffee table.

“I am just a guard. I have no exact clue what happened with the crew, but I know that House 744 at Yong Ling Mountain was mowed down completely because it was used for their movie set.” The man had his eyes closed, but his face was turned toward Chen Ge. “After this place was turned into a holiday villa, the boss built a private showing theater on the site where House 744 once stood...”

When the man mentioned a theater, the black phone in Chen Ge’s pocket suddenly vibrated. Chen Ge was curious, why would a message arrive on the black phone at a moment like that?

He took out his phone and clicked open the new message.

“This mission is made up of three parts. Please arrive at the dead’s showing theater in the next half an hour and enjoy the full-length movie!

“After this task is completed, the next task will be given!”

Looking at the words on the screen, Chen Ge’s eyes narrowed. “There’s a mistake, right? Shouldn’t it be the private showing theater?”

“Hey, are you listening to me?” The man called after Chen Ge.

“Sorry, I was merely stunned, please continue.” Chen Ge glanced at the time and put the phone away.

“What happened later is quite scary. Be it morning or night, the theater feels weirdly eerie whenever you enter it. Many visitors also said that when they were watching their movies, they would see figures that were not related to the movie in the films.”

Chapter 712: Private Showing Theater

“What do you mean by that?” Chen Ge was going to the private theater in a bit, so he wished to get to know as many things as he could about it.

“Many tenants chose to use the theater at night, and they all encountered this extra scene in the movies. It was that of a girl. She was around twenty with long black hair and a blurry face.

“Initially, the tenants didn’t mind it that much, thinking that it was the shadow of the worker or something wrong with the tape. That continued until a family of four came to stay here. Once their youngest daughter stepped into the theater, she started bawling. Left with no other choice, the wife carried the daughter away, leaving behind the husband and the son.

“They were watching an animation movie that day, but halfway through the movie, the boy suddenly turned to his father and asked, ‘Why is there a big sister standing at the corner of the stairs?’

“The man did not think much of it, but after a while, the boy asked again, ‘Why does the big sister keep looking at us?’

“The endless questions from the child managed to annoy the man, but since they were in public, he suppressed his fury and warned his son to stay quiet.

“The son felt wronged, but he did keep quiet after that. However, that did not last long. About twenty minutes later, the boy suddenly cried for no reason. This threw the man for a loop; he tried his best to console his son, but the boy cowered with his face buried in his chest, and he refused to stop crying.

“The boy’s father started to notice that something was wrong. He realized that his son seemed to be afraid of lifting up his head like there was something very scary on screen.

“He made a mental note of this, and after the movie was over, he carried his son back to his wife and then returned to theater to get to the bottom of the matter...”

The story drew Chen Ge in, but suddenly, the man stopped. “What did the father find?”

“The boy’s father disappeared. The surveillance showed him enter theater alone, but he never walked out.”

“How could a person disappear just like that? You’re not pulling my leg, are you?” Chen Ge stood up. “Where is this theater? I wish to take a look for myself.”

Hearing that, the man’s lips quivered. His intention was to scare Chen Ge off, but the man seemed to be more interested after hearing the ghost story.

“No, absolutely not!”

“If you’re unwilling to lead the way, then I’ll go on my own. After all, this place is only so big.” Chen Ge grabbed his backpack. He studied the man before him. Whether the villa was abandoned or not, he did not think that the management would have a blind man act as the guard.

“I really don’t understand. Why do you insist on going there? Didn’t you say earlier that you’re here for a friend?” The man was anxious as he tried to stop Chen Ge.

“Yes, I’m here to find a friend. Before he disappeared, the last message he sent me said—I am at Yong Ling Mountain Holiday Villa.” Chen Ge said that with such sincerity and affirmation that one could not tell that he was lying.

“Your friend went missing around here?” The man went silent. His hands gripped together, and he came to a decision after some hesitation. “Okay, I’ll show you over there, but if your friend is not there, we’ll leave immediately.”

“Thank you.” Chen Ge went to help the man, but as his touch landed on the man’s skin, the man shoved his off harshly. He was like a scared pigeon. Chen Ge did not expect such a huge reaction. “I’m sorry, I just wanted to help you up.”

Even though his eyes were close, it somehow felt like he could see his surroundings perfectly. He navigated the room expertly, grabbed the blindman's cane next to the door, and left. Chen Ge followed behind him. The two walked past the many strange buildings.

"The people who designed these probably haven't considered how to make use of the land optimally, right?"

"What do you know? This is art."

"I really don't understand that. Mind sharing your explanation with me?"

The man was not in the mood to chat. He hurried away. He was familiar with the terrain and moved faster than Chen Ge anticipated. A few minutes later, the two stopped before a two-story building that was sealed.

"This is the private showing theater. The entrance is locked, and I don't have the key, but there is a small window on the second floor. You can look in from the outside."

"Okay, thank you, I'll have a look around then." Chen Ge walked to the door. He turned and saw the man was still standing there. "Do you have something else to do? Do you need me to walk you back?"

"That's alright." The man had this feeling that something bad was about to happen. He stood where he was for a long time before turning. However, before he took the first step, a loud crash came from behind him.

BANG!

The quiet night was shattered. The sudden boom almost cracked the man's eardrums. He jumped from the shock, and the cane slipped from his grasp.

"What is going on? What happened?" His hands searched blindly in the dark. He was panicking. Right then, a pair of warm hands held him in place, giving him support.

"There are other people here!" Chen Ge helped the man up, and his voice was slow and comforting.

"That's impossible! No way!" The man staggered backward. He was flustered, and his body was shaking. The cane was kicked away, and his lips were turning purple.

“How would you know that since you can’t see anything?” The dark clouds blotted out the moon. Chen Ge held the man in one hand, and he carried a scary-looking hammer in another. He stood next to the man and stared at the eyes that were squeezed shut. If another person stumbled across them, they would create a scary scene.

“If there is another person here, then it’s worse! It’s midnight, which means that it has probably returned!” The man wanted to hurry immediately. From his tone and expression, Chen Ge believed that he was not lying.

“Don’t panic, calm down.” Chen Ge looked at the phone. The trial mission only gave him half an hour to prepare. If he allowed the man to walk back on his own, it might lead to another accident. “The two of us had better stay together, just in case.”

Chen Ge picked up the cane and handed it back to the man. Supporting him, the two entered the private showing theater. One would not have imagined it from the decrepit exterior, but the interior was surprisingly clean like it was still cleaned daily.

Chen Ge studied the equipment on the projection table. There was barely a speck of dust. To be able to maintain such a degree of cleanliness, it was not the work of a blind person.

Staring at the man’s eyes that had not opened since they met, Chen Ge tightened the grip on the hammer.

“Now that we are inside theater, do you know how to operate this equipment?”

Chapter 713 - Deskmate

Chapter 713: Deskmate

“Why would you be asking that?” The man held the cane and wished to maintain some distance from Chen Ge, but he was too weak and unable to struggle away.

“My friend disappeared at the theater, so I wish to retrace his steps and see if there are any clues.” Chen Ge employed a casual tone as he stood in the darkness and scanned the whole theater. The rows of seat had uneven heights, looking more like shadows that were standing or squatting.

“Have you lost your mind? You come here at 2 am and want me to play a movie for you?” Even without those scary rumors, the man did not believe that any normal person would act like Chen Ge, which was to come to an abandoned theater at night to watch a movie.

“I have not lost my mind and know full well what I’m doing.” Chen Ge shone the flashlight on his phone on the various equipment. “If it’s that inconvenient to you, why don’t you teach me how to do it, and I’ll do it myself?”

Chen Ge was a hard learner; he would not waste the opportunity to learn new knowledge, and that was why he possessed so many ‘skills’.

“You seriously need to consider what you’re doing. The things that I told you earlier aren’t just a tale—they’re real.” His eyelids trembled—the man was conscious of his situation. He placed the cane to the side and started to search blindly on the table. The man moved very slowly, and no one knew what he was doing. Chen Ge stood to the side to watch him, and the more he studied the man, the more he felt like there was something off about him.

His hands were too agile. His eyes were closed, but he knew where all the equipment and buttons were. There were only two explanations to this situation.

One was that before he went blind, or even after he went blind, he went to the theater often to repeat those operations, and over time, the actions became muscle memory, and he was able to operate the machines smoothly even with his eyes closed.

The second possibility was that he was never blind to begin with.

After the man connected all the circuits, he sought out the power source for the power box. He tried it several times, but it failed to activate. “The lever for the main power switch is on the second floor. Do you mind activating it for me?”

“The second floor?” Chen Ge lifted his hammer and walked out from theater. He walked up the stairs to the second floor. However, he did not enter it but stood at the top of the stairs and looked at theater entrance.

About five seconds later, a man’s face poked out from inside theater. He listened for the sound, and after realizing there was no strange activity, he immediately ran into the darkness. Two footsteps echoed in the dark, and before the man managed to get away, someone pressed on his shoulders.

“How can you leave me here alone?” Chen Ge’s voice entered the man’s ears, and the latter jumped from fright like he had been struck by lightning. “I was unable to find the location for the main power switch. Let’s go together.”

Chen Ge helped the man get up to the second floor and flipped the switch on.

Following a boom, all the lights in theater flickered for a moment.

“I just want to see a movie here and find my missing friend. That’s all. If you insist on standing in my way, I will have no choice but to believe that you are somehow related to my friend’s disappearance.”

After the power was switched on, the projector started to move on its own. The man opened the reel slot. After everything was loaded in place, he lifted his head to say, “You can choose which movie to watch yourself, but I have to give you one last warning—do not pick a horror movie, or there will be serious issue.”

Watching a movie at the theater was the first part of the Left Oculus mission. It was already 2 am. If he did not finish this part of the mission soon, he might not be able to complete the succeeding missions that night. With that in mind, Chen Ge scanned the list of titles, and he aimed to pick the one with the shortest screen time.

The black phone only requires me to sit through a movie here, and it did not specify what type of movie.

Chen Ge was not going to purposely increase the difficulty of the mission. He looked for a warm, artistic film or animation, but as he clicked on the movie list, he realized that none of them could be played, saying that the movies lacked the source and needed to be downloaded again. After a long time of browsing, Chen Ge realized that only horror movies could be played.

Connecting that to what the man said earlier, Chen Ge became suspicious. Is someone behind this, or has something else ruined the source for the other films?

Looking through the list, he discovered yet another strange point. Chen Ge ran a Haunted House, and to seek inspiration, he often watched scary movies, but he did not recognize any of the movies on the list.

These horror movies are different from the ones on the market. Both the producers and the directors of these flicks have the same name.

Chen Ge clicked on one of the titles and memorized the director's name.

Chang Gu? Is that a fake name or a real name?

"Have you picked your movie?" The man's hands kept shaking. The surroundings had not changed, but he looked more unsettled, like the more he stayed here, the more likely something would follow him home.

"Alright, I shall pick this one with the shortest screen time." Most horror films were around one and a half hours long, but Chen Ge spotted one that was only twenty-five minutes long. The name of the movie was 'Deskmate'.

There was five minutes until the end of the mission. The movie started to play, and the lights in theater dimmed as a blurry picture appeared on-screen.

"I can't see anything anyway, so I think I'll leave. This is my phone number. After you're done, give me a call, and I'll come back to clean up the place.” The man rattled off a number. After Chen Ge keyed in the number, he gave it a call. The sound of vibration came from the man’s pocket, so he was not lying.

With his experience of dealing with scared visitors, Chen Ge could discern that the man’s fear was not faked. After knowing that, he was even more unwilling for the man to leave. He must have known some insider details, but he was unwilling to share them with Chen Ge.

“There’s no need to hurry to leave. The two of us should stick together, so if there’s an accident, we can watch out for each other.” Chen Ge held the man and pulled him to the seat firmly. Considering the issue of security, Chen Ge chose the seat closest to the exit.

“Thank you, but...”

“Shush, the movie is starting.”

Watching a horror movie at the theater was a different experience from watching it at home. That feeling of being enveloped by darkness and being there in person could not be replicated at home.

A heart beat next to the ears, and then came a heavy breathing. A large eye slowly opened on screen, and from the black pupil, the silhouette of a woman could be seen. The camera slowly panned up to focus on a study table. The alarm clock said that it was 4:30 pm. Outside the window, the clouds were dark and oppressive.

A storm was coming.

The movie was shot from the first-person view, and the audience was seeing what the main character saw.

“Qiu Mei!”

Someone kept calling this name from downstairs. The camera moved again. The main character crawled out of bed and walked to the window. She opened the window and seemed to lean her head out. The camera showed what was below.

A girl in a red jacket was waving at the main character.

“Qiu Mei, come out and play!” The girl downstairs waved happily. The smile on her face was bright and excited like something great had just happened to her. The main character did not reply. The screen fixated on the same image for a whole second, expressing a hollowness and even chilliness, before the main character moved to close the window.

The somber feeling did not dissipate after the windows were closed. Instead, it crawled around the main character. It was hard to tell how the director managed to capture this feeling. Just this feeling of claustrophobia and being trapped alone already made this short movie yards better than the offerings on the market.

The small room was like a cage, and after the windows were closed, it felt as if a cold sea poured into the room to submerge the main character. The camera tittered aimlessly around the room before the girl’s voice came from behind again.

“Qiu Mei! Qiu Mei!” The camera slowly turned around. The girl’s face was squeezed right up to the glass. She was pushing so hard that her facial features were squished beyond recognition—it felt as if she was trying to use her face to squeeze through the glass.

“Qiu Mei, come out and play!” The redness of the jacket was eye-catching, and it formed a strange contrast and compliment to the gray sky in the background. The main character lived on the fourth floor. When she looked out earlier, the girl had clearly been standing on the ground.

However, with this strange occurrence, the main character did not seem shocked. It felt as if she had gotten used to this already. The camera very calmly moved to another direction. Since this was shot in first person view, the camera represented the main character’s scope of sight. Scanning past the cluttered table and the dirty clothes that piled on the floor, it landed on the bedroom door.

“Qiu Mei, come out and play!” The girl’s face stuck close to the glass on the window. The red jacket smothered the glass until the light that filtered through it turned red as well. Her breathing became ragged, and the main character suddenly picked up the scissors on the table and raised them high.

Since this was shot from the first-person angle, it gave the impression to the audience that the main character was going to use the scissors to stab herself. Everything happened so fast that the transition was very hard to grasp.

Pa!

The bedroom door was slammed open, and a middle-aged man rushed in. He grabbed the main character’s wrist and snatched the scissors away.

“What are you doing?” The camera tilted to the side and spun. The main character was pushed down the side of the table.

“Life is already not easy for your mother and me. Can you please stop torturing us?”

The audience was unable to see the expression on the main character’s face, but they could discern the main character’s current status from the middle-aged man’s demeanor and expression. Human beings were special, and this kind of connection seemed to be inherited in every member of the species.

“What happened?” Footsteps hurried to arrive, and a middle-aged lady jogged into the room. She looked haggard, and once her eyes landed on the main character, they reddened almost instantly. Without saying anything else, the lady squeezed past her husband to squeeze the main character in a hug.

“You saw her again?” The woman was facing the camera, but the audience knew that she was talking to the main character. From this angle, the audience could clearly see the micro-expression on the mother’s face. There was pain, anxiety, agitation... but more than that, there was heartache.

Without getting a response from the main character, the mother already knew the answer, and she hugged the main character harder.

“Why are you the one that’s punished? What can we do to cure this illness?” The camera moved away from the mother and returned to the sky outside the window. The dark clouds hung low in the sky like they were about to fall to smother the world. The eye slowly closed, and the theater returned to darkness.

The man appeared very nervous. His legs were squeezed together, and he asked Chen Ge softly, “Why isn’t there any sound now? Is the machine broken?”

Before waiting for Chen Ge to answer, strange music circled the room. The eye flickered before it opened again. The camera moved, and the main character was lying in her bedroom. Next to her stood her parents and a man, one the audience had not seen before.

This man had his back stooped, and he stood facing away from the main character. Since the movie was shot from the main character’s perspective, like the main character, the audience was not granted a view of the man’s face.

“Doctor, what kind of illness is Wenyu suffering from? How come she keeps saying that she can see these strange things?” The main character’s mother had worried lines crawling all over her face.

“Yes, doctor, what’s wrong with my daughter?”

“I am not a doctor, merely someone who has done quite a bit of research on this. Do not worry for now; I’ve had a basic grasp of the situation.” The man who was referred to as the doctor had a voice that was familiar to Chen Ge. This was a very strange feeling because Chen Ge did not think any of his acquaintances had acted in a movie before.

The doctor signaled for the parents to sit down. “Her situation is very unique, and I will share my preliminary thoughts with you.”

The doctor took out a black note from his bag. “You should know that human beings live in the third dimension, right?”

The parents shook their heads. They had no idea where the doctor was going with this.

The doctor flipped through the note and found the page that he had torn out from another book. “To put it simply, the third dimension is this world that we humans occupy; there is the concept of length, width and height. The fourth dimension adds the concept of time onto the basis of the third dimension. Actually, the condition that forbids us from entering the fourth dimension is 'time'. Due to the presence of time, human beings in the third dimension are doomed to make a singular choice at a certain point in time, and this choice will be a completely isolated choice. In other words, every human experience is an isolated three-dimensional world, and if you place all the three-dimensional worlds on the axis of time, then you'll have created a four-dimensional world."

Not only were the main character's parents confused by the doctor's words, even Chen Ge in the audience was led in circles. However, the blind man next to him suddenly became silent and settled down.

"What does that have to do with my daughter's illness?" The mother was not really paying much attention to the doctor's theory. She just wanted to cure her daughter.

"I will tell you again, your daughter is not sick. There are many accidents happening in the world daily from as small as subatomic collision to as big as space expansion. There are many things that we temporarily cannot explain..."

"Doctor, why don't you just tell us straight, can our daughter's situation be improved or not? What kind of medicine is available? Our family's condition might not be that good not, but for our daughter, we are willing to do anything." The girl's father cut him off directly. Their acting was so real that it did not feel like a movie but some kind of documentary.

"Your daughter is not sick; her eyes are merely an accident." The doctor was still facing away from the character. "The three-dimensional worlds that are arranged on the axis of time might occasionally overlap, and your daughter, Chang Wenyu, is the point where the two worlds overlap. Thus, she is unable to see things that you can't!"

The movie was still playing. Chen Ge was there for a mission, but he was drawn in by the plot of the movie.

Why would the doctor and her parents call the main character Chang Wenyu? But the ghost outside the window calls her Qiu Mei? Also, this doctor's explanation is quite interesting. I think I should memorize it. Even though I don't quite understand it, it might prove useful in the future.

In the movie, the main character's parents did not put much weight behind the doctor's words, and the disappointment in their eyes could not be hidden.

"Trust me, your daughter is really not ill. What happened to her eye was merely an accident. If possible, I wish to bring her to Xin Hai City with me, where I can give her a more thorough examination." The man did not appear like a con artist. He sounded very sincere, but unfortunately, the parents did not believe what he was peddling.

...

"If there's a chance, I'll bring her, but Wenyu still needs to go to school." The mother rejected him in a roundabout way. The doctor sighed. He gave the mother his card and stood up to leave. Throughout the whole process, the doctor kept his back to the main character and thus kept his face hidden.

After the door closed and the doctor left, the mother softly complained, "I was wondering why he was willing to examine Wenyu for free. He's a conman. After we arrive in Xin Hai, he will probably start charging us money on various pretenses."

"I also doubt that the doctor is reliable. Perhaps he's not even a doctor. But there has to be a reason behind this sickness. This has never happened to Wenyu before, so how did she fall ill so suddenly?"

"You're right, the girl has been fine for the past few months, but since that night, no, since that afternoon when she came back from school, she has been acting strangely."

The frown was deep on the parents' faces, and heartache laced their voices. The camera emotionlessly recorded everything, and it gave the feeling that the main character was observing everything without even a twitch of emotion. The eye slowly closed, and the strange music resumed.

Different from watching a horror movie at home, the sound system at a theater was surround sound. It could give the impression of footsteps coming from a distance or something moving around the audience. The producer poured great effort into this short flick, and that was observable from the sound effects alone.

The background music was mixed with a heartbeat and heavy breathing, like someone was struggling in a nightmare. Everything was dark, and one struggled for life, but one could not grab anything for support.

As the audience was drawn into the main character's predicament and held their breath, a crisp ringing sound cut through the background music. The eyelids twitched. The main character seemed to have been woken up, and she peeled open her blurry eyes.

A new scene appeared on screen. The camera was no longer inside the bedroom but a simple-looking tuition center. The glaring sunlight showered down on the main character through the window, and the camera captured the girl's shadow, which was elongated on the ground. She was leaning on the table at the last row in the class, and her head was heavy with sleep.

The movie has gone through one third already, and I've only just seen the main character's shadow. The director sure is a genius.

Chen Ge had seen many shadows in his life, and in his professional opinion, the shadow in the movie could not have been more normal.

The sunlight dulled the nerves in her mind, and the sound of a fan spinning buzzed in her ears. There was also the sound of pages being turned as well as the sound of distorted music coming out from a nearby student's cheap earphones.

A long shot showed everything in the classroom. The cooperation between the director, cameraman, and the actors was flawless.

BANG!

Just as the audience was lulled by the sense of peacefulness, the peace was suddenly shattered. The door was shoved open, and a girl with an exaggerated hairstyle burst into the room.

“He Qiumei! Be quiet, don’t disturb the other students!” A man wearing glasses with his hair cropped short walked in behind the girl. He held his phone in one hand and a textbook in another. The man appeared to be the tuition teacher, and he seemed to be familiar with the student who had just walked in.

“Fine, fine.” The girl with red hair chewed on the gum in her mouth, and she mumbled her response.

The male teacher knew the girl’s personality, so he scratched his head with some exasperation, wiped the sweat from his face, and clapped his hand softly. “Class, may I have your attention please? This is the new student who will be joining our class today, He Qiumei. Due to her family condition, she deferred for a year, and she’s here to catch up on her study progress. I hope that all of you will help her.”

The teacher gave a simple introduction and had her sit at the back of the class. Coincidentally, she chose to sit next to the main character and thus became her deskmate. The camera zoomed in on He Qiumei. The girl had faded red hair. She leaned against the wall and tossed the bag casually on the table.

“What are you looking at?” The girl noticed that the main character had been staring at her. Her personality was like a fire; it was not that she was not a good person, but she had the tendency to accidentally scorch others. Being yelled at by the girl, the camera that represented the main character’s eyes turned away, but moments later, the camera turned back to He Qiumei. Obviously, the main character was interested in her new deskmate.

The bell rang, and once the teacher left the classroom, the main character was about to stand up when Qiumei suddenly jumped up. Angrily, she slammed the book on the table, spat the chewing gum in her mouth out, and turned to the main character. With her furious eyes and explosive temper, just as all the audience thought that she was a gangster and was about to bully the main character, the girl by the name of Qiumei opened her lips to say, “Do you understand what Ol’ Cao said earlier? How come I don’t get it at all?”

The main character shook her head, and this was the first time that the audience had heard her voice. “I... fell asleep...”

“How can a person who looks so studious be a bad student? That won’t work!” Qiumei scanned around the room, and to her disappointment, there was not one student in the class that looked barely reliable. “The exam is coming, and if I fail again, I’ll be held back another year, then when will I graduate?”

“You... wish to graduate that much?”

“No one wishes to grow old, but I don’t want to be treated as a child anymore. You won’t understand it anyway, but I have to graduate this year.” Qiumei shoved all the books into her bag and picked up her notebook to study. This studiousness was completely against her get-up and personality, but it did not feel out-of-place being portrayed by the actor.

The students filed out of the classroom, and Qiumei became more and more annoyed. Finally, she slammed the notebook on the table again, as if with each slam, the knowledge would be shattered and thus more easily digested.

“Gah, guess I’ll start getting serious from tomorrow.” After Qiumei packed up her stuff, she walked out of the classroom alone. The camera followed Qiumei’s back before it also moved to follow Qiumei out of the classroom.

“Mr. Cao, considering that we have been neighbors for so many years, can you please help me?”

An old lady’s voice came from the corner of the stairs. The camera looked down, and it saw an old lady with graying hair holding onto Mr. Cao’s arm. She attempted to hand a basket covered with black cloth over to Mr. Cao.

“My physical condition is worsening by the day, and I have no idea when Qiumei’s father will be released. If something happens to me, what will she do? If this is allowed to continue, I’m afraid that she might end up like her father.”

“Auntie He, please keep your stuff. I will try my best to teach Qiumei, but studying is not a one-directional effort. I won’t give you any guarantees, but I promise to help you look after as best as I can.” Mr. Cao did not accept the old lady’s basket.

“Thank you, Mr. Cao.” The old lady left after thanking Mr. Cao profusely. The latter frowned as he headed up the stairs. The main character wanted to act as normally as she could, but just as she straightened herself, she bumped into something behind her.

The camera panned around, and Qiumei’s face filled up the screen!

This cut reminded the viewer of the scene that occurred at the start of the movie.

“Isn’t it fun to eavesdrop on others?” Qiumei said coldly. “That was my grandmother, a stubborn old coot.”

“It... feels like she treats you well.”

“That’s just an appearance. You have no idea how hard it is to communicate with her. Let me tell you, I can take care of myself just fine. Originally, the plan was to stop schooling and find a job to feed both of us, but she denied me outright, insisting on me graduating first. I was forced to agree because you saw how stubborn she can get, and here I am.” Qiumei took out a small mirror to examine her face. She was quite a beautiful girl if a little resentful of the world.

The moment that Qiumei took out the mirror, the camera moved backward instantly. It gave the feeling that the main character was afraid of looking at herself in the mirror.

“What are you doing?” Qiumei noted the girl’s strange reaction. “You’re a weird one, but let me tell you, do not tell anyone about my grandmother’s visit to the school.”

“Okay...” After a pause, the main character added, “You wish to graduate soon so that you can find a job to support your grandmother?”

Putting the mirror away, Qiumei leaned close to the screen and pushed the main character lightly. “Who are you to care about my business? The only thing that you need to care about is your mouth.”

Qiumei grabbed her bag and walked downstairs. When the two girls brushed past one another, the main character whispered softly, “You won’t be able to care for her. She is going to die soon.”

“What are you grumbling about?” Qiumei could not hear her clearly nor was she trying to.

The camera stayed on Qiumei as she walked away. Once more, the main character uttered more clearly, “You won’t be able to look after her; my left eye has seen everything.”

Chapter 716: Come and Play! [2 in 1]

The camera moved away from Qiumei and fell on the old lady holding the basket. The last ray of the sun fell on the old lady, and as she walked away, the camera locked onto her shadow that seemed to be cut in half.

Seeing this cut, Chen Ge was already shaking in his seat. He had no idea how the director managed to shoot a scene like this. Deskmate, according to the details on the list, had been shot a long time ago. Back then, the special effect was not as impressive as those today, but the scene in the movie appeared as real as could be.

...

Or is it possible that this is not a special effect?

One's shadow was deeply connected to one's life, or at least, that was what Chen Ge believed.

The main character's left eye could see the changes to a living human's shadow, right? When the movie started, did the main character's parents possess shadows or not?

The earlier images of the movies crossed Chen Ge's mind. The main character's parents and even the doctor, none of them had a shadow, but that could have been due to the bad weather outside the window.

When the movie started, the sky was dark and gray with thick rain clouds blocking out the sun, so it was perfectly normal that one's shadow could not be seen. After Qiumei and the old lady left, the main character returned to her own home. She took out her key and opened the door.

"Wenyu, is that you? Why did you come home so late today?" Wenyu's mother rushed out from the kitchen. The expression on her face when she saw Wenyu was a mixture of sadness and a strange emotion that Chen Ge could not describe. In any case, it was certainly different from how a normal parent would greet their child—Chen Ge had only noticed that after he was so far into the movie.

The main character did not respond. Once she stepped into her home, it felt like she had walked into the sea. Her movement became sluggish, and even her breathing turned uneven. Pushing open the door to her bedroom, she slithered into it.

“This girl...”

“I’ve asked for some professionals’ opinions, and I believe our daughter might be sick.” The main character’s father put down the copy of newspaper. He pointed at his own head and continued in a low whisper. “I’ve already contacted the doctor. This coming weekend, I will bring him here to take a look at our daughter.”

“How much will it cost?”

“Now, curing our daughter is more important. You would not want our daughter to continue like this, right?”

Her parents’ voice came from outside the door, but the main character did not care about what they were saying. The camera that represented the main character’s point of view moved from her parents to the ceiling. Then the screen turned black; the main character had closed her eyes again.

“This movie seems to be a recording of some stuff, but if all this is real, the timeline does not seem correct.” Chen Ge nudged the blind man’s shoulder. “What do you think?”

“I can’t see anything. If you’re done, we should go as soon as we can. I don’t want to stay here a minute longer. Brother, from the way you talk, you do not sound like a bad guy. Can you please let me go and stop torturing me?” The blind man’s back was drenched. He kept his eyes closed, but just from his voice, one could tell how scared he was.

“Half of the movie is already over. I am sure it will end soon. Please be a little bit more patient.” Chen Ge turned back to the screen when it turned bright again. Similarly, this was shot from the main character’s perspective. It mainly recorded the things that happened between her and Qiumei.

The main character was a girl of few words; she rarely opened her lips, and if she could get away with not speaking, that was what she would do. Qiumei's personality was the complete opposite of the main character. She was like an open book and would rarely take offense at what other people said.

She was a reckless person and often did things without considering the consequences. However, it was often said that opposites attract. As the time they spent together increased, the relationship between the main character and Qiumei grew tighter and tighter. Even though they were polar opposites in terms of personality, they became good friends.

Even more surprisingly, both of their studies kept improving, and this was something that even Mr. Cao did not expect. Initially, he was merely doing his old neighbor a favor, but to his surprise, the two female students with the worst marks in his class had such a drastic 'change' after they became deskmates.

The color of the screen felt even more vibrant, and the style of the entire movie seemed to have changed with it. It was supposed to be a horror film, but Chen Ge felt like he was watching a coming of age movie.

This director can handle many different styles—this is not bad.

Chen Ge made a mental note of the movie's progress; eighty percent of it had already passed. Other than the ghost that he saw at the beginning of the movie, for the rest of the movie, there was not even a plot point that was remotely scary, much less an actual ghost.

A horror movie without a ghost?

The scary movies on the market would have the presence of an 'unknown', and this unknown was often used to create a sense of mysterious and horror in the audience's hearts. However, this movie seemed to be the exception. It was shot fully from the main character's perspective, and she did not witness anything that was truly scary.

Chen Ge felt that the director was building up for something horrifying. He knew that the movie was not going to be that simple. As the movie drew to its close, he felt like the truly scary thing was approaching.

The relationship between Qiumei and the main character grew closer and closer, but there was something that was worth noting. During the period when Qiumei and the main character became friends, Qiumei's bubbly laughter appeared several times in the movie, but the main character had not laughed, not even once.

There was only a short time left until the arrival of the final exam. With Qiumei's current results, graduating successfully would not be a problem. She had found a good friend at school, she was about to complete her promise to her grandmother, and this was probably the happiest moment of Qiumei's life.

However, even though Qiumei was very happy, as the audience, Chen Ge was able to see the anxiety hidden behind the happiness through the main character's perspective. Qiumei's grandmother's shadow grew shorter and shorter, the worry on the main character's parents' shoulders grew heavier and heavier, and the rate of change between the cuts grew more rapid and more constant like the main character had gained the habit of blinking constantly.

There was a huge whirlpool hidden underneath the peaceful life, and it was set to drag everyone who was near down into the deep abyss. After the final exam was over, at the class party, Qiumei and the main character stayed out very late before they left. The night was exceptionally quiet. Qiumei hummed a pop tune on her lips. Her biggest wish for the past few months had just been completed, and she could not have been in a better mood.

"Deskmate, why aren't you talking? We can finally relax; we do not need to go and see Ol' Cao's face day after day now." Qiumei hugged the main character's and pulled her close. The camera studied Qiumei from this close distance. The girl had dyed her hair back to its natural color, which was black, and she looked gorgeous. After a while, the main character moved her eyes away. She had her head lowered, and the camera focused on the darkness, which appeared like a road that had no ending.

"You don't look that happy." Qiumei's face squeezed into the frame again. The main character looked at Qiumei quietly, without saying a word, and then she walked ahead on her own.

"Is it because of your family? I don't think I have ever heard you mention them before." Qiumei ran to chase after her. "Actually, my family can be quite annoying as well. My father is now behind bars, and it's my grandmother who raised me, so I have chosen to adopt my grandmother's surname."

The main character did not slow or stop. Qiumei followed closely behind her until they reached a junction. Qiumei's home was on the left, and the main character's house on the right—it was where they usually parted.

“Wenyu? What is going on with you today?” The main character did not stop to answer. She continued to walk down the road, and at a certain point, she turned to utter flatly to Qiumei, “Actually, that is not my name.”

“That is not your name?” Qiumei wanted to ask for more details, but the main character had already walked ahead. Due to the unique circumstances that she grew up in, Qiumei had a different personality compared to other girls her age. She did not ignore the main character but made to follow her. She chased after the main character and called after her.

The lights from the roadside became less and less. Finally, the two girls stopped in front of an old apartment building. This building was located in the most secluded part of the city. The whole building was dark like there was no one who was staying there.

“Wenyu? Your home... is here?” There was still no answer. The main character suddenly jogged up the stairs. She fished out the key from her pocket, and after some hesitation, Qiumei turned to follow her. There was no light installed in the corridor. Qiumei tripped on some debris on the corridor and almost slipped a few times.

The door of the room opened, and the main character walked through. The light of the living room was not open, and the heavy curtains were pulled shut; the whole place was submerged in darkness. Yet, even in such conditions, in the camera, the door to the kitchen was pulled open, and the main character’s mother walked out from it.

“Wenyu, is that you? Why have you come home so late today?” A familiar voice, a familiar environment. The familiar-looking figure standing in the dark was none other than the main character’s mother.

The scenario that could not have looked more normal in the day, when it was replicated at night, brought the audience a horrifying feeling that could not be described in words.

“I will not return here anymore.” The main character’s voice started to change. This time, she did not run to hide inside her bedroom but stood in the living room.

“Wenyu! Who are you talking to?” Qiumei stood at the entrance, looking into the dark living room. Her face was blanched. It seemed like she was looking at a different scene compared to the main character. “This place is so old, the furniture is ruined, and the tiles on the floor are cracked. Wenyu, what are you doing here? Let’s go home already?”

“Go home?” The main character reached out to place her hand on Qiumei’s hand before yanking her into the room. “But... we are already home!”

The light on the screen slowly dimmed until it became a slate of darkness. The director did not show what happened inside the room, probably because he did not know what happened either.

A scream echoed through the darkness. The eye flipped open, and the main character was still lying on the bed in her bedroom. The camera looked out the window. Outside the window, the clouds were dark and oppressive.

This scene was a replica of the movie’s starting scene. It was the same sky outside the window. It gave the impression that all that had happened earlier was merely a nightmare. The main character glanced at the clock on the table. She took out her phone to read the messages, and then she dragged her tired body into the bathroom.

She kept her head lowered, so the camera could only see the ground. After she brushed her teeth and cleaned her face, the phone started to vibrate. The camera shifted around, and the main character took out the phone from her pocket.

“Wenyu, do you want to go to the movies tonight? It will be a celebration for you having gotten rid of that madwoman.”

“Qiumei is not mad. She has never once bullied me.”

“It is because you are too kind-hearted that Ol’ Cao had her sit next to you. Do you know that both of her parents are in prison? Who knows what she could have done to cause her disappearance? In any case, you shouldn’t associate yourself with her anymore.”

“Okay, I understand.” The main character’s hand that gripped the phone increased in strength. “By the way, deskmate, after watching the movie later tonight, do you want to come over my place to play? I want to show you something very interesting.”

“Okay, no problem!”

“Okay, I’ll see you later.” After hanging up, the main character slowly raised her face. The camera moved to the mirror, and this was the first time that the audience had been given a chance to see the main character's face since the start of the movie.

A thin body, tattered clothes, and long black hair—the main character had a face that appeared to be sewn together from pieces of different women. All the women had different facial features, but their left eye looked identical.

The left eye gave the audience the feeling of being a long needle, and it nailed the innumerable faces together.

Chapter 717 - Employee's Privilege [2 in 1]

Chapter 717: Employee's Privilege [2 in 1]

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

The camera stopped on the mirror before the main character's face—it felt the main character was carefully examining herself in the mirror as well. The ending score began, and the camera then signified that the main character's point of view stopped in front of the mirror.

The woman in the mirror slowly reached out her hand and caressed the face in the mirror as her body gradually leaned toward the mirror. The entire screen was dominated by the woman in the mirror, and thus, the audience was given a better view. As the main character's hair parted, the woman in the mirror exposed her left eye.

When her left eye slowly increased in size, the camera suddenly pulled back!

The camera seemed to have abandoned the main character's perspective. The camera continued to retreat. It captured the main character's back as well as the woman inside the mirror.

As the camera retreated, the main character who stood in front of the mirror turned her body around and looked toward the camera. Her face was as pale as white paper and strangely different from her reflection in the mirror.

At that moment, the scariest thing happened.

After the main character turned around, the woman in the mirror maintained the same posture. She did not move!

She and the main character both looked toward the camera and exposed an expression that could not have been stranger.

The music was suddenly cut off, and the screen went black. Perhaps because this private showing theater had not been used for so long, even after the movie was over, the lights in theater did not come on automatically, and the surroundings were still shrouded in darkness.

The darkness caused a certain degree of anxiety. Chen Ge remained in his seat and did not move around; he kept his eyes glued to the movie screen. He had a rough idea about the movie that he had just watched. The director used a flashback with the middle of the plot showing the main character's memory.

The 'Left Oculus' grew in a girl by the name of Wenyu, but the thing that was controlling the body of the girl was no longer Wenyu herself. The director merely chose to highlight on a singular part. At the start of the movie, the female ghost kept referring to the main character as Qiumei, which meant that since then, the soul inside the main character's body had already turned into Qiumei.

The parents and doctor that appeared later were all ghosts, or perhaps they only existed in this world that was mainly visible through the left eye. That could explain why Wenyu treated her parents with such aloofness. In reality, they were not her family, but they were the lingering spirit of Wenyu's family.

The middle of the movie could be viewed as Qiumei's memory; it described how Qiumei got transformed into Wenyu. After the memory ended, the movie moved back to reality. Qiumei made a date with her good friend. After the movie that night, she would invite her 'friend' to visit her 'home', and the cycle would begin again.

The nightmare was not broken, and the next girl who had the unfortunate destiny of inheriting the left eye should be Qiumei's friend.

The scariest and most horrifying ghost of the movie was none other than the main character; this was also the first movie that Chen Ge had seen that was taken from the perspective of the ghost.

Other than that, there was a part inside the movie that piqued Chen Ge's interest. Right as the movie was about to end, the method of shooting had suddenly changed. It changed from a first-person view to a third-person view. At the time, there had been no other person in the room. Could it have been that the last camera was taken from the perspective of the audience?

Both the main character and the ghost inside the mirror turned to look at the audience beyond the screen. Chen Ge remembered very clearly that their left eyes were open.

It feels like they might just crawl out of the screen at any second.

Even for Chen Ge, his heart was beating a bit fast after finishing the movie. It would be an exaggeration to say that he was afraid—he merely felt somewhat creeped out. Opening the backpack, Chen Ge allowed the white cat to escape. Scratching the cat's head, he slowly calmed down.

The horror in the movie was manufactured by the director; this is completely different from the ghost stories in real life. If there is a chance, I would like to sit down and communicate with the director.

The screen had been dark for almost three minutes already, but the black phone did not ring with the message that the mission had been completed. Honestly, Chen Ge had no idea where things had gone wrong.

Is it because the movie is too short, so the black phone does not approve of it?

He stood up and stared at the darkened screen. Then a different possibility surfaced in his mind.

Or is it because the movie isn't over yet?

The movie was only twenty minutes long, but if the ghost had escaped from the movie then the movie had not really ended. A light scent of mildew permeated the private showing theater. Looking around, the rows of seats had the appearance of squat tombstones. The more he studied them, the scarier they became.

The girl with the 'left oculus' could be hiding anywhere in this theater.

Chen Ge was there to complete the mission given by the black phone, and should the movie never end, then his mission would never be completed.

Do I really need to wait here until dawn?

Chen Ge was a very calm and collected person. He was familiar with his strength, and he understood his weakness. Zhang Ya was still hibernating, and it was unknown when she would be able to awaken. Xu Yin was left at the Haunted House, being treated by the red high heels. Currently, the strongest employee that Chen Ge had with him was Bai Qiulin.

With Xu Yin's aid, Ol' Bai had consumed Xiong Qing's heart and evolved into a Half Red Specter. However, he was essentially a Specter who had been forced to become a Half Red Specter. In a real battle, he definitely would not be able to defeat a real Half Red Specter that was covered in resentment.

Left Oculus looks quite powerful. If she suddenly decides to pop up, the white cat and I might not be able to handle it.

Chen Ge had always been careful. If it was not truly necessary, he would not have taken any risk in his life.

The blind man lifted his head to ask Chen Ge, "Brother, it has been quiet for so long already, I believe the movie is over now, right? Can I go now?"

"Since you've called me brother, then I will not spin yards around you and tell you the truth. The female ghost in the movie that we just saw has escaped into the real world."

"The ghost has escaped from the movie?" The blind man's reaction was more than a bit agitated.

"Don't panic. I have good news and bad news to share with you." Chen Ge reached his hand into the backpack and flipped open the comic.

"How can you still be in the mood for jokes?" The blind man was curled in his seat—it was clear that he was really afraid. "Tell me the bad news first then."

"The bad news is that the female ghost appears to be very dangerous, and she seems to be looking for a scapegoat. We are just unlucky enough to have run into her." Chen Ge provided his analysis calmly.

"This bad luck is forced upon me, okay? Brother, let's not stay here anymore. Let's hurry up and leave, please?" If he had not known that he would not win in a fight, the blind man would have used his cane to fight it out with Chen Ge.

"It is a bit too late to run now. The eye has already seen us both, so she is not going to let us go so easily."

"Fine." The blind man collapsed back into his seat weakly. "Then what is your so-called good news?"

“The good news is I have called many of my friends to join us, and we have a clear advantage of numbers.” The sound of pages being turned entered the blind man’s ears, and Chen Ge called out the names one by one.

A faded smell of decay filled up theater. In fact, it was strong enough to have overpowered the previous mildew scent.

“Did you smell something? Something is coming!” The blind man gasped in shock.

“Sit where you are and do not panic. Try not to bump into anyone else.” Chen Ge already flipped the comic to its last page.

“Those are your friends? When did they arrive? Are they in the room now? How come I didn’t hear the door open at all?” No one was there to answer the blind man’s questions. If he opened his eyes then, he probably would have fainted on the spot. The originally quiet and empty private showing theater was now bustling with activity.

The boy with the stink was pushed by the hanging man to the corner of the room, and he rubbed his belly with a sad expression on his face. The students from the sealed classroom at Mu Yang High School raced all over the place joyfully. Ol’ Zhou ‘tricked’ Duan Yue to share a seat with him at the back of theater with a serious expression. They sat apart from the rest.

Elder Wei and the doctors were standing behind the blind man. They softly discussed among themselves the possibility of conducting an operation to help the man see again, and occasionally, professional terms tumbled out of their lips.

The water ghost sat on the front row. She was the sacrifice for bury seed, and this was the first time in her ‘life’ to have entered a movie theater, so she had an unbridled curiosity about everything. If she could have crawled into the screen, she would have already done so.

Yan Danian was the last who came out from the comic. With unwillingness, he took up the seat at the corner. The Pen Spirit hugged Xiaoxiao, and they sat down next to him. Chen Yalin appeared to have some questions for him about comics.

“Today is my birthday, so I’ll treat everyone to a movie. I suppose this can be viewed as one of the employee privileges. This theater is rather small, but I hope you don’t mind. When we have enough money, I’ll rent an entire IMAX cinema hall for everyone to enjoy.” Chen Ge stood up and walked toward the broadcasting room. Bai Qiulin and Elder Wei moved to follow closely behind him.

The blind man sat obediently in his seat. He knew that there were many things around him, but there was an indescribably strange feeling in his heart. Opening his lips, he extended his hands to feel the seat where Chen Ge should be. After realizing that there was no one there, he obediently closed his lips. He did not dare to move or even ask any questions.

“Are there any movies that you would like to watch?” Chen Ge opened the movie list. He was there to complete a mission, but it was different for the employees at the Haunted House, especially the students from Mu Yang High School, who were only allowed to leave their item of possession for a short period of time, so they definitely would not let this chance go to waste.

Going to the movie was a very common experience for a normal person, but for these students, if not for Chen Ge, they would not have experienced this again. There were only several ghost movies in the list, but there was a surprisingly heated argument among the workers. In the end, the majority voted to watch the movie called ‘Name’. It seemed to be a movie related to someone’s name. Chen Ge glanced at the cover. The director was still Chang Gu, and the main character’s face looked about eighty percent similar to Wenyu.

“Alright, get back to your seat now. Do not wander about after the movie has started. Also, pay attention to your surroundings. Someone extra might appear because this theater is apparently haunted.”

Looking at theater filled with ghosts, Chen Ge felt like it was rather preposterous saying something like that.

A group of ghosts watching a horror movie at a movie theater, I wonder if this is like watching a documentary for them.

The employees heeded Chen Ge’s advice. They quickly shuffled back to their seats, and they were kind enough to leave two empty seats in the middle.

“Why are you guys leaving two empty seats here?”

Chen Ge pressed the play button, and the background music came out from every corner of theater. The music circulated in their ears, and it created the feeling that they were there in person. Even though this movie theater was rather old, the equipment was the top of the line.

After all, it had once been used to serve the visitors at a high-end holiday villa.

The music accompanied the appearance of the images on screen. Those workers who had not experienced much in the way of the world and those who had perished way before their prime were feeling excited already. Some shrieks and howls echoed through the audience—the sounds that they made were even scarier than the sound effects of the movie itself.

What if they're scared by the movie? Normally, they're the ones scaring others.

Chen Ge could not worry about that much anyway—he just wanted to complete the mission given by the black phone as soon as possible.

Moving to the seat that the employees had reserved for him, Chen Ge had Bai Qiulin sit next to him while the blind man took up the seat on the other side of him. He had gained entry due to the blind man's help, but the least he could do was guarantee the man's safety.

"Brother... have you returned?" With Chen Ge's support, the blind man was led to the middle of the theater. His legs were shaking, and it felt like he was walking on cotton candy instead of firm ground.

"Hmm, it's okay now. You are very safe. There is no need to worry." Chen Ge hugged the white cat. "You can stay and watch this movie without worry. After this movie is over, I will personally escort you back."

"Are you sure it is safe now? My heart is racing, and I suddenly feel so cold like I have been shoved inside a fridge." The blind man hugged the cane, and his eyelids kept twitching. It was as if he was losing control of his ocular muscle, and they could flip open at any moment.

"You're just imagining things." Chen Ge gave the blind man a few words in consolation. With his hand scratching the white cat's chin, his back leaning against the cushion, he enjoyed the movie with maximum comfort.

"That's impossible! I'm not imagining stuff! Are you sure your friends are all here? How come I feel this place is scarier and creepier than before?" A cold breath escaped from the blind man's lips. "Brother, are you even listening to me? Don't you feel even a bit unsettled at all?"

“I could not have felt more comfortable. In fact, if possible, I wish to order some snacks like coke and popcorn.” That idea really did cross Chen Ge’s mind earlier. Since they were there to party, food and drinks were required, but taking the mental elasticity of the takeout courier into consideration, Chen Ge abolished that thought from his mind. “It is your mind playing tricks on you. Just relax and it’ll be fine.”

The movie officially started, but the atmosphere was completely different from before. The lighting and sound effects did not change—the only thing that changed was the audience.

Chen Ge was deeply drawn into the movie; he combined all the information that he had managed to find on Left Oculus online, and the movies that he had seen that night and somewhat of a clue showed itself.

The movie, Left Oculus, had been destroyed already, but the private showing theater preserved all the other works by the director, Chang Gu, and the works were all somehow related to Left Oculus.

Why would this director keep focusing on this theme of Left Oculus?

A part of the plot from Deskmate crossed Chen Ge’s mind. Wenyu’s father once called her by her full name, and the girl’s name was Chang Wenyu—she shared the same surname with Chang Gu.

Could the girl with the left eye be Chang Gu’s sister?

In Deskmate, at Wenyu’s home, one would occasionally see the parents or the doctor, but there was definitely not a character who could be Chang Gu.

If Chang Gu really was Chang Wenyu’s family member, then it could have indirectly explained that, during shooting, Chang Gu was still alive, but due to some reason, she did not show up on screen.

Chen Ge was suddenly reminded of the last scene of Deskmate.

With the change in perspective, is it possible that Qiumei and the ghost in the mirror weren’t looking at the audience but Chang Gu behind the camera?

Chapter 718: Non-Existent Man

The difference between Name and Deskmate was obvious from the first shot; this movie was shot from the normal third person view. The difference between the two movies was so drastic that they did not appear like they came from the same director.

The start of Deskmate focused on a dim sky, a home that resembled a cage, and a monster that might show up anytime. The start of Name was very warm. A cup of coffee was placed on the table, and next to it was a notebook and a bunch of study material.

...

The camera slowly panned forward, and it finally landed on the notebook, which was a diary. On the cover was a name written with red pen—Qiumei.

This time, the main character is Qiumei?

Chen Ge knew that the few horror movies were interconnected somehow. His previous speculation was that each movie recorded the story of the left oculus' victims, but the reality seemed to be different from what he had imagined.

“Wenyu! Wenyu!” There was incessant knocking on the door. A middle-aged woman was calling Wenyu's name, and the woman's voice was conspicuously different from the voice of Wenyu's mother in Deskmate.

“It is not Wenyu's mother who is outside the door, so why is she calling Wenyu's name?”

The camera turned. The girl, who was playing on her phone in bed, jumped up from bed. She ran to the table, shoved the diary into the drawer, and locked it up. After dealing with all that, she went to open the door.

“What are you doing hiding yourself in the room? You respond so slowly whenever I call you.” The camera moved to the lady outside the door. She was very large, probably bigger than two of Wenyu combined. She had a thick layer of make-up, and the smell of smoke seemed to follow her. “I heard from the boss that you have quit the job?”

“Yes, Sister Fang, I have something else to attend to.” The young woman raised her head to the camera. The actor was very pretty, and she looked somewhat similar to Wenyu in Deskmate. She was like an untainted flower, but after staring at her for a long period of time, there was something that did not feel right.

“Is this thing you mentioned returning to school? Going to night school?” Sister Fang squeezed into the room without asking for permission. “Do you know how hard it is to find work these days? You were given such a good chance, why didn’t you appreciate it?”

“Sister Fang, thank you for your help. One day, I’ll treat you to a meal.” Wenyu disliked people entering her room.

“Why wait?” Sister Fang placed her hand lightly but firmly on Wenyu’s wrist. “Last time, I introduced my nephew to you, right? What do you think? The child really fancies you a lot. I guess you can call it love at first sight... Don’t push me! Hey! Open the door!” The door slammed shut, and Sister Fang grumbled for a while outside the door before giving up and leaving.

“So noisy.” Wenyu subconsciously touched her left eye, and she returned to the table. She put down her phone. Then moved all the materials and books on the table into a bag. When she was arranging the stuff, the camera captured her phone, and the screen showed what that she had been looking at earlier.

“What are the reliable night schools at Jiujiang? How about Jiujiang Private University at Western Jiujiang?”

There were a few answers underneath her question.

My Old Home Is Here: “Thanks for the invite. I’m from the Philippines, just landed at the airport. I’m a graduate from the International Navigation and Aviation University. I do not suggest attending Jiujiang school any night. There are too many problems, and it won’t be of much use. You might as well spend a little bit more and attend a more official private university in Xin Hai.”

Cheng De Tertiary Education: “If OP wants to know more about tertiary education, please click on my profile. Cheng De Education is the most professional university in Jiujiang. We are able to help you enter the elite circle. We provide traditional system management education and help our students explore their maximum potential...”

Non-Existent Man: “There are so many night schools in Jiujiang, and you are interested in the one that is most unreliable. I will give you some free advice—register at any night school that you want, but avoid Jiujiang Private University.”

Under these three comments, there was a follow-up conversation between Wenyu and the Non-Existent Man.

Original Poster (OP): “Why can’t I go to Jiujiang Private University? Is this place a scam?”

Non-Existent Man: “This place is not a scam; you’ll get your graduation certificate as long as you manage to survive until graduation. Where did you manage to find information on this school? Based on my knowledge, this school should be closing down soon.”

OP: “I have a student pass from this school, and my name is written on it, so I should be a former student at this school.”

Non-Existent Man: “Impossible.”

OP: “It’s real. I’m not lying to you. I cannot remember what I saw at the school, but ever since I left the school, my left eye has managed to see things that I will never forget.”

Non-Existent Man: “I don’t have the time to listen to your stories, gtg.”

OP: “I’m not making up stories!”

OP: “Hello? Are you still there?”

OP: “Fine, looks like you’ve really gone already. I am telling you the truth. Ever since I left the school, my life has completely changed. The school initiated the change to my life, and now I wish to return to that school to find out the truth.”

Non-Existent Man: “Is the truth that important?”

OP: “Oh, you’re still here.”

Non-Existent Man: “If you are not lying, then there is more reason for you to not go to that school.”

OP: “Why?”

Non-Existent Man: “Do you know the school has an alternative name?”

OP: “What name?”

Non-Existent Man: “It is also called School of the Afterlife.”

Seeing this, Chen Ge jumped up from his seat. His pupils narrowed as he focused on the screen.

School of the Afterlife!

The term on the phone reflected in his eyes. Chen Ge did not expect to encounter a clue about the School of the Afterlife during the Left Oculus mission. He understood what this term represented. School of the Afterlife was a four-star scenario—it represented a Greater Red Specter at least!

Chang Wenyu brought the left eye out of the School of the Afterlife? Why would she possess the student pass at this school?

The left eye lived in Chang Wenyu’s body, but the soul that took control of the body had changed again and again. The real Chang Wenyu had already disappeared—perhaps her soul had already dissipated.

Based on the introduction in the movie, School of the Afterlife was a private university. When Wenyu first obtained the left eye, she was obviously still underage, so how did she end up at a university? If her presence there was a total accident, then how did she manage to escape?

Initially, Chen Ge had been watching the movie because the black phone told him to do so, but after the mention of the School of the Afterlife, his attitude changed.

This shouldn’t be just a coincidence—just the change to the left eye caused the formation of a two-star scenario, so how scary will the entire School of the Afterlife be?

Chen Ge thought back to the introduction for the School of the Afterlife on the black phone. There were nine pre-missions, including the one for Zhang Ya.

The time limit for this mission is almost up. Perhaps this movie will provide me with some information that I need.

Chen Ge continued watching the movie. On the screen, the phone left on the table suddenly vibrated. There was an incoming call, and the caller ID was very strange indeed—Non-Existent Man.

The phone in the movie vibrated. Qiumei stopped arranging her stuff and picked up the phone. Without seeing the caller ID, she answered the call directly. “Hello, who is this?”

“We just chatted on the internet. I saw that you’d left your phone number on your personal page, so I thought I’d give you a call.” A man’s voice came from the other end. The person did not sound that old because his voice was still settling into puberty.

...

“We just chatted on the internet?” Qiumei pulled back the phone to look at the screen. “You are the Non-Existent Man!”

“That is my online ID.”

“Why would you use a name like that?”

“That is not important. The important thing is that I have managed to reach you.” The boy purposely lowered his voice, as if it could make him sound more mature and mysterious.

“The number I left on my page is real, so is it really that surprising that you can make this call? Have you called other girls on their number before and ended up being catfished?” Wenyu did not treat the boy seriously.

“I am talking to you via a dead person’s phone. The fact that you are able to answer the call means that part of what you said is real.”

“You sure have a strange way of clarifying people’s claims.” Wenyu’s attitude turned chillier. Strangely enough, she was not surprised by what the boy said. “Speak, why are you calling me?”

“I simply wish to save your life—I’m afraid that you might go on a suicide mission.” The boy did not sound old, but he seemed to have lived through a lot.

“Suicide mission?”

“Why would you want to return now that you have managed to escape? I know you won’t remember many things, but have you ever considered that the memory is the cost you paid for your escape?” The boy tried to persuade her. “For the sake of escape, even your memory has been surrendered. However, to regain the lost memory, you’ll voluntarily return. Have you heard of anything stupider in this world?”

“I am not going back to search for my memory; I am going there to search for a person.” Wenyu unlocked the door and studied the notebook inside. “Wenyu is the name of this body, but that is not my name.”

Her finger slid across the cover of the notebook, and it glided over the name Qiumei.

“I don’t care why are you returning, but I don’t suggest returning to this place. Remember! Do not go back there!” There was the sound of something heavy being dragged coming from the other end of the phone, and with that, the call was hurriedly ended.

“I know that the place is very dangerous, but certain things cannot be avoided.” The main character placed the arranged information by the headboard, and then she crawled into bed, hugging the phone. She tried to contact the Non-Existent Man, but there was no reply.

“Of all the information that I can find on this university online, they say that it is a private school and built by a private donor. But based on the pictures online, the scale is way beyond that of a normal school. Its size is even bigger than a normal university.”

Wenyu planned to visit this school. She took out paper and pen and recorded all the information she could find on the phone.

“Some of the pictures have watermarks on them, so they might be fake, but how come some of the other pictures just look so strange?”

Perhaps it was the angle of the camera or an issue with the buildings, but in some of the pictures, regardless of whether it was day or night outside, the room had this dim, eeriness to it. The girl turned the bedroom light off but left the bedside lamp on. She lay in bed and started to do her homework. Seeing the girl on screen, Chen Ge was reminded of himself. Before the start of any mission, he would often gather and analyze information like Wenyu.

“This ghost story reminds me of myself too much.” The time ticked away, and Wenyu gradually fell asleep, lying in bed. The pen slipped from her hand, and it landed on the ground. It rolled away until it stopped right at the bathroom door.

She had to work in the day and study at night. Wenyu was very tired, and she slept very soundly. The camera pulled back, and it focused on the sleeping Wenyu. It was hard to tell what the director was going for. He used a ten-second cut to focus on a sleeping Wenyu.

Chen Ge’s employees were not treated to a night at the movies often. They stared at the screen with open curiosity. Their attention was rapt, and they tried their best to follow the director’s rhythm, attempting to understand his perspective.

“I admit that the girl is rather pretty, but hasn’t this scene dragged on for a bit too long already?” Bai Qiulin finally voiced his thoughts. “When her eye was open, there was an air of resentment around her, but weirdly enough, after she closed her eye, the air disappeared completely.”

“This director is good at his job. From his previous short film, I know that he would not waste a single cut. There has to be a purpose to this.” Chen Ge waited patiently, and after some time, he noticed something. “The bottom left corner of the screen. Yes! There, the spot where the pen fell and stopped earlier.”

The door to the bathroom was left open, and the pen stopped right next to it. The only light source in the room came from the bedside lamp. Due to the camera angle, one realized that the bathroom was not completely dark, and a streak of weak light fell on the bathroom mirror.

The movie seemed to have stopped with the main character soundly sleeping, but as one studied it further, the feeling of something being not right grew. The reason was because the scene had not fully stilled. In the corner of the screen, inside the bathroom, something was moving!

The image on screen looked warm—the soft yellow light, fluffy mattress, and a sleeping beauty. However, once their gazes wandered to the corner of the screen and saw what was happening inside the bathroom, the sudden contrast would cause the audience’s hair to rise.

Inside the dim bathroom, a woman in a red outfit was standing before the mirror. She twisted her neck, but she kept her eyes glued to the camera!

The face was hidden in the dark, and when the audience chanced upon it, it would feel like the face was staring at them through the screen.

“I knew something is not right!”

No matter what kind of style the movie adopted, at the end of the day, it was a horror movie. The pen on the ground moved on its own. The woman in the bathroom had already disappeared from the mirror, and one was given a glimpse of a woman in a red outfit moving in the room.

The majority of the scene had not changed; the only thing that changed was the reflection of the mirror in the bathroom.

The rental room was only so big. There was no living room, and the bedroom was attached to the bathroom. The scene maintained its warmth with the occasional strange sound.

The pen rolled on the ground, and the lizards on the wall crawled away. The light from the bedside lamp cast a shadow, but the shadow did not belong to the room owner, who was sleeping.

The papers on the table were flipped through, and the lock on the drawer jangled like someone was trying to open it.

Moments later, everything returned to silence, but then the scariest scene appeared.

The pillow on the bed indented downward like someone had lain down next to the main character.

Chapter 720 - His Name

Chapter 720: His Name

Under the dim light, there shadows were showing on the wall, but there was supposedly only one person in the room. The two sides next to Wenyu's body creased downward as her hair spread like a halo—it felt like something was pressing down on her.

“Qiumei, Qiumei... Qiumei!” Wenyu suddenly jumped up from her sleep. She inhaled greedily and looked around with a lost expression on her face. The dim light from the bedside lamp shone around the room, giving it an intimate atmosphere. Most of the furniture was where it was supposed to be—there was no sign of anyone else having been in the room.

“Worse thing than having a nightmare is waking up in the middle of the night and realizing that the night is still long.” Wenyu picked up the documents on the bed and looked around. “Where's the pen?”

She climbed out from bed to grab the pen, which had fallen away. Then she placed the pen and the papers that she had gathered into the folder inside her bag.

“Time to go back to bed. When the sun rises, I'll go to the school to take a look.”

Climbing back into bed, Wenyu switched off the bedside table. Just as the room submerged into darkness, the camera caught a woman in a red outfit standing in front of the mirror in the bathroom.

When lights went off, she walked out of the bathroom again. She was still inside the room, but since the room was now completely shrouded in darkness, no one could see her.

The way that this movie portrays ghosts is quite interesting. Perhaps my Haunted House can take inspiration from it, to give the visitors a new sensation through a clever use of contrast.

The desire of Chen Ge to meet the movie director grew. If he cooperated with the director, Chen Ge had a feeling that he could raise the horror level at his Haunted House to new heights.

The screen was dark—one could barely see anything. However, this also gave the audience plenty of room for imagination because everyone knew, in the darkness, other than the sleeping main character, there was a ghost in a red outfit. The whole scene was captured in one shot; there was no editing, and that lent the movie a sense of authenticity.

Several seconds later, the scene ended, and the sun rose. Everything in the room was the same. The main character did not sense anything out of place, as if the memory from the previous night was truly just a nightmare.

“I broke out in cold sweat, worried about the girl.” Ol’ Zhou patted his chest lightly.

“Can you even break out in sweat?” Duan Yue rolled her eyes at him.

“If you don’t believe me, why don’t you touch my palm to find out?” Ol’ Zhou extended his hand to Duan Yue, but the latter saw through the old trick, and she slapped his hand away.

The employees were greatly enraptured by the movie, but Chen Ge alone was thinking about something else. He had watched Deskmate earlier, and after comparing both Deskmate and Name, he noticed many problems.

“Both main characters are called Wenyu, so they should be about the left eye. However, the difference is, in Deskmate, the main character is still underage, but in Name, the main character is already working. These two movies depict different periods in life for the same character.

Based on the introduction on the left eye in Deskmate, Wenyu’s body should have played host to the souls of several girls already, but that would mean that the many details in Name would not match up.

At the start of the movie, the name on the main character’s diary was Qiumei, but when the female ghost appeared and pressed herself against the main character, it was also Qiumei’s name that was called.

Now the soul trapped inside Wenyu’s body seems to be Qiumei’s as well.

At the end of Deskmate, Qiumei had answered the call from her new Deskmate, and she had invited her over to place, so theoretically speaking, a new cycle would have started already. However, after watching Name, Chen Ge realized that things were not that simple.

Qiumei doesn't seem like she found a scapegoat and continued the cycle. Over so many years, she has been suffering everything brought upon her by the left eye alone.

The few movies shot around the left eye seemed to star Wenyu, but in reality, the main character was Qiumei, who was controlling Wenyu's body. The body was Wenyu's, but the soul was Qiumei's.

Chen Ge found that out from watching the beginning of Name. Even though he was not technically a genius, he was a person who paid attention to details. He had a pair of eyes that could look through the surface to find the truth.

The movie continued. The room in the morning was bright and clean. Who would have thought this place had played host to a ghost? The main character handed in her resignation. With the new day, she did not head to work but carried her bag loaded with information and took the bus to Western Jiujiang, following the address that she had found online.

"Is this Jiujiang Private University?" From searching for the whole morning, Wenyu finally arrived at a hospital. "I'm looking for a school, but how come the address on the internet led me to a hospital?"

The buildings around looked quite old. Even though Wenyu was a local of Jiujiang, she had no idea such a hospital existed in Jiujiang.

"Is anyone in?" Wenyu tried to open the door and discovered that the door was locked from the inside. She leaned on the glass and peered into the hospital. The tiles were gleaming, and the chairs were dustless. The walls were white and new. Other than the strange silence, this place looked no different from a normal hospital.

"This hospital doesn't even have a name. I couldn't check it online even if I want to."

Wenyu walked to the other end of the hospital, and at the backdoor, a man wearing a mask and white coat was walking out.

"Doctor, can you help me?" Wenyu ran over, but after the doctor heard her voice, he did not stop but instead walked faster.

“Doctor?” Wenyu was confused by this reaction, and she ran forward to block his way. The man grunted with impatience. He was about to turn the other way when something seemed to dawn on him. His body froze, and he looked intensely at Wenyu.

The man was 1.8 meters tall and very handsome with an even build. However, there was a dark cloud between his brows, and his gaze was chilling. He had a presence around him that would deter others from getting too close to him.

Wenyu felt discomfited from his state. After a long time, she asked, “Hi, I’m here to register at Jiujiang Private University. I’ve brought the relevant documents and information, but I cannot find the school. However, the address given online has led me here.”

“Jiujiang Private University?” The doctor’s eyes had not moved away from Wenyu’s face. “That school has been shut down already, so you’d better go find a different school.”

The doctor then prepared to leave. Wenyu scratched her head and then called out with some hesitation. “Wait a minute, have we seen each other somewhere before?”

The doctor continued to walk away like he could not hear her.

“Your face is very familiar. I am sure I have seen you before!” Wenyu chased after him. “What is your name?”

Being chased relentlessly by Wenyu, the doctor finally stopped moving, and the camera gave him a close-up. With his brows creased together, the doctor stared at Wenyu, and he uttered in a whisper, “My name is Chang Gu.”

Chapter 721 - Lies

Chapter 721: Lies

Translator: Lonelytree Editor: Millman97

Hearing that answer, Chen Ge trained his focus to study the man further. The director's name is also Chang Gu. Looks like these movies are recordings of events that he's experienced.

Studying the man's face in the movie, Chen Ge scratched his chin. In the movie, he portrayed himself as aloof and handsome, which gives me a new understanding of the man.

After studying the man's face for so long, Chen Ge felt like he looked strangely familiar. He suddenly turned to look at the blind man sitting next to him. Their size and frame could not have been more different, but the gloom around the eyes was startlingly similar, and there were some similarities in the facial features as well.

Are they the same person?

On the screen, Chang Gu was tall, handsome, and collected, but the blind man next to Chen Ge was old, ugly, and malnourished like he suffered from a serious illness.

According to the internet legend, Chang Gu might have perished in a fire or been trapped inside his movies...

Chen Ge thought back to the information that he had found online, and his eyes fell on the blind man's eyes, which were screwed shut.

Is it possible that it was the man himself who started these rumors? He wanted to disappear from the public eye?

Hugging the white cat, Chen Ge considered everything calmly. Whether the blind man was Chang Gu or not, it did not matter. After all, he had booked the entire private showing theater. In the movie, Chang Gu was tall and handsome, a completely different person from the blind man next to him. If not for Chen Ge's attention to detail, he would not have made the connection.

The movie was still going. Wenyu followed Chang Gu. Perhaps it was a woman's instinct or something else, but she had a feeling that Chang Gu was someone very important to her. However, Chang Gu obviously intended to stay away from Wenyu. From the man's various reactions, it was not because he hated her.

The expression that he had when looking at Wenyu was very strange. Most of time, it was the detachment of a stranger, but occasionally, there would be a rare show of gentleness. The two stood at the hospital backdoor and spoke. They barely shared a few words when footsteps came, and a slightly fat middle-aged man ran out.

Seeing the man, Chang Gu shrugged off his coat, tossed it aside, and then rushed down the nearby alley. No matter how much Wenyu called after him, he did not turn around.

"Did you see a tall, thin man run this way?" After the middle-aged man came out from the backdoor, his eyes zeroed in on the white coat on the ground.

"What's wrong?"

"That man is a thief, a repeat offender at that! He always sneaks into our hospital!" the middle-aged man hissed through his teeth.

"Thief? He... he's not a doctor?" Wenyu studied the coat the man was holding, and she was shocked.

"Don't trust a word out of his lips. The man is a common thief, a liar, and somewhat crazy. To be safe, you'd better stay away from him." The middle-aged gave the warning and planned to leave.

"Wait a moment." Wenyu held the doctor back. "I'm here to register for the university. Have you heard of Jiujiang Private University? The online address I got pointed me to this place."

"There was a university here in the past, but it has been abandoned already. The flyer you saw is from probably from a few years back." The middle-aged was quite a friendly person. He stopped to answer Wenyu's questions.

"Abandoned? Then, do you know why it was abandoned?" Wenyu finally found a reliable person, so she continued with her questioning.

"I'm not so sure, but you can find out more by going to Yong Ling Mountain. Back then, Jiujiang Private University was split into two campuses, the normal campus and the night school campus.” The doctor did not hide any information and shared everything that he knew. “The normal campus for the graduate students and our hospital was a repurposed of part of the original campus. It was no different from a normal university.

“Opening the night school was a desperate move. Jiujiang was only so big, and thus, there was a limited number of available students. Students from outside the region would rarely go over the state line to enroll at a private university that was not so popular. With the low number of students, a large piece of land remained unused, so the admin decided to turn it into a night school.

“The night school campus was just adjacent to the normal campus, but it was closer to Yong Ling Mountain. Jiujiang Private University’s night school mainly recruited adults who wished to further their studies and young adults who wished to come back to school after dropping out.”

After the doctor gave the explanation, he walked into the shadow that the sunlight could not pierce. “I can’t remember the further details, but you should be able to read them in the hospital’s filing room. We don’t have many people around now, so I can bring you there to read.”

“You want to bring me to the filing room?” Wenyu looked at the empty hospital. The interior was very clean and very quiet like there was not even one person around. “Okay...”

Before she finished, Wenyu reached out to cover her left eye. At that moment, it felt like a needle prick her eye, which had not happened for a long time.

“I’m sorry, but I’m not feeling so well. I’ll come back next time, but I thank you so much for your help.” Wenyu held her left eye and thanked the doctor.

“You’re welcome.” The middle-aged man smiled and turned back to the hospital.

“There are still many good people in the world.” Wenyu glanced at the narrow alley. Something did not feel right. It was noon, but there was no one around; it was as if the people that stayed there knew to give this place a wide berth.

“The night school is just ahead, but since the doctor didn’t give me the exact location, I'll have to keep moving forward." With some suspicion, Wenyu walked down the alley. After she took a few steps, someone called her name from the corner.

"There's no need for you to go any further—you won't be able to find that school." Chang Gu was leaning on the wall. The middle-aged doctor had just told Wenyu that Chang Gu was a liar and madman. So, when she saw Chang Gu appear, she had trepidation of getting too close to him.

After all, this man did not appear to be more trustworthy than the middle-aged doctor, and what Chang Gu had done so far was indeed suspicious.

Seeing Wenyu's change of attitude, Chang Gu narrowed his eyes as he walked toward her. "The thing that came out of the hospital earlier, what did it tell you?"

"That thing?" As Chang Gu approached her, Wenyu took a step back. "He said you are a thief."

"Are you going to believe a ghost or a living human?" Chang Gu stood before Wenyu, and he looked kind of similar to Wenyu.

"Ghost?"
